The tendency, in many, is to look backward; which is wrong, for we want to advance, and to do so, we must look forward. "Let the dead past bury its dead." Fling off the remembrance of everything in the past that has annoyed you, everything bringing regret; everything you have mourned over. Nothing in nature goes backward, the world is better and brighter today than ever before. We may sometimes be carried back to past experiences with profit, by contrasting them with the present, or to show us the cause of certain conditions in which we find ourselves, for our present condition is but the result or effect of our past, therefore we are the makers of our own destiny.—Mrs. M. E. Hartis in Religio-Philosophical Journal.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper 1891 has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

ON TUESDAY EVENING June 27, Ida Craddock, late of Philadelphia will deliver an address at 507 Carroll Ave, on the physiology and psychology of sex. Honest seekers after saving truth on this class of subjects are cordially invited. Admission free.

Love and Law.

In the New York "Journal" of June 16 appears a double column, double headed article entitled "Ella Wheeler Wilcox on the Recent Divorce Epidemic—'Don't Railroad Cupid to the Tomb but if He is Really Dead Then Bury Him Speedily.'"

"A woman, who evidently feels intensely on this subject, writes the "Journal" a long, bright letter, in which she says:

"'Is there not mixed up with the present so-called "Holy Matrimony" an inheritance of superstition, bigotry, and prejudice? Is there not too much that is one-sided and not enough that is practical and fair? Is there any business more important to human happiness than that transacted with the golden coinage of the heart? Yet what other partnership is there that cannot be broken by mutual consent, or by a demand for an accounting by either, to say nothing of a case involving self-respect, and even personal purity itself?'

"The lady is quite right. There is no subject before the public today, not even the broad, deep subject of the relations of labor and capital, of such momentous interest to the world as that of the relation of the sexes. The writer of the letter is correct, too, when she says:

"'Uncongenial marriages should be annulled when it is found that the differences are irreconcilable.'

"But she is absolutely wrong in her premises when she goes on to say:

"'For I think that after one bitter experience there would be more deliberation about making another choice.'

"Observation of humanity does not correspond with the supposition. Once let a woman get the divorce habit and she is hard to cure.

"To make a poor marriage seems to be an ever recurring malady with some women like hay fever. They jump from one bad bargain to another as easily as the proverbial unmentioned quantity—leaps from the frying pan into the fire. But I do not know that this should be considered an argument against divorce. The woman of little sense and judgment, no matter how numerous she may be, must not influence one's judgment of a matter which affects all the sex.

"The 'Journal' correspondent proceeds to say: 'Denying unhappy couples freedom by divorce will not remedy the condition of things; it will not make uncongenial marriages congenial, reconcile difference nor make natures unadapted suitable to each other. I have no patience with those eminent divines who say that divorce is never excusable. I, for one, care nothing for Cardinal Gibbons' opinion; he is only a man, after all, and his opinion is of no more worth than that of any other man of like inteligence or experience. If he or any of his kind who take the one-sided view of this subject had to live a lifetime with a partner whom they could not love, and lived a life of heart hunger, as many have to do, they would think differently and wish it were less difficult to obtain release from so unholy and, under certain circumstances, repugnant a relation; for there is nothing holy about a marriage contract which holds two people together where there isn't mutual love."

"Certainly there is nothing holy about such a marriage. It is far more unholy than a great love binding two free people together without marriage. Yet were people left to be guided by the law of love without legal restrictions society would go to pieces as surely as a ship which is left to the winds without a pilot goes eventually.

"The one important thing for a woman to do before she decides on a separation from her husband is to give herself a thorough self-analysis. Let her put herself upon spiritual dress parade and inspect her conduct from the hour she took the marital vows to the present time. Let her ask herself if she has been all she promised to be on that hopeful day, or if she has not in a score of small matters led up to the large difficulty which she now faces. Let her recall the early days of love and confidence, and see if they cannot be renewed.

"Before a drowned person is pronounced dead every possible effort is made to restore life. The same effort should be made to resuscitate dying Cupid before his requiem is pronounced.

"In these days of 'quick divorces while you wait' he is oft times railroaded into his tomb while he yet lives.

"But once positive that he is absolutely dead—then let him go to his last rest, and do not keep the decaying corpse in public view to become an offence to all who see it."

The prominence given to a letter upon such a subject by a paper so widely read as the New York "Journal," would seem to argue that the general public is waking up to a sense of the importance of a better understanding of the rights and the wrongs involved in the "relation of the sexes." That our readers may see and judge for themselves the letter is here reproduced entire:

From her comments on the "long bright letter" of "a woman who evidently feels intensely on this subject," Ella Wheeler Wilcox shows herself an admirable diplomatist. She believes that there is "nothing holy about 'holy matrimony'" when love is lacking, and yet she is not willing to trust everything to the "law of love." The law of love is freedom—freedom unrestrained or unrestricted by anything except the natural consequences of one's own acts. Ella Wheeler believes in freedom but freedom "with a string tied to it," to use a colloquial phrase. Her Cupid is a sort of jumping jack. He can freely go his own way till he reaches an invisible line drawn by conventional moralists, then he finds himself suddenly jerked back to conventional propriety by an invisible cord pulled by an invisible magician.

But Ella Wheeler is eminently in the right when she says, "Yet were people left to be guided by the law of love without legal restrictions society would go to pieces." "True O, Queen"—queen of the American poetic lyre! Society, as we have it now, could not long survive the inauguration of the law of love, as the only guide in the relation of the sexes. When no children are born except "love children," where, O, where would be the men and women who live a vampire life upon the earnings of others? Where would be the social distinctions that make the warp and the woof of modern society—the distinctions between the rich and the poor, the cultured and the uncultured, the fashionable and the unfashionable, the black and the white, the titled and the untitled? Where would be our warriors, our Deweys, our Hobsons,—where our politicians, our McKinleys, our Hannas, our Shermans,—where our Rockefellers, our Comstocks—where our Railway Kings, our "trusts" and combines generally, by which labor is kept in perpetual vassalage and destitution in the midst of abundance of all the good things that make life desirable?

If the law of love could once supplant the law of hate—of indifference or disgust—that is the logical and necessary product of the legal restrictions in regard to marriage and divorce—if children could be conceived only in love, gestated, born and reared in an atmosphere of love, of respect and of concord, of mutual affection and good will, where then would be the needof our expensive, our dilatory, our autocratic and often venal courts of justice—falsely so called? Where would be the need of our enormously expensive penitentiaries, jails, work-houses, poor-houses, asylums, our charitable institutions—falsely so-called? Where the need of our enormously expensive hierarchies with their millions and billions of church property, church salaries and perquisites, all wrung from the ill-paid toil of the disinherited masses?—disinherited of their natural right to be born well. In fine, where then would be "society" as we have it in the closing years of the nineteenth century of the so-called Christian Era?

Ella Wheeler is doubtless building wiser than she knows. There is so much of the new, the true and the good in her writings that we can well afford to overlook an occasional lapse to the old, the false and the reactionary. M. H.

Our Brethren of Darker Hue.

BY LILLIAN HARMAN.

One of the the most distressing and disheartening problems with which our present-day "civilization" has to deal, is the race prejudice and antagonism which is so cruelly manifested in the south. And it must be admitted that only in a lesser degree is the feeling cherished by many in the north. A man or woman in whose veins flows even an infinitesimal proportion of negro blood is "only a nigger;" and as such is cursed for being "low" and "ignorant," or, if in spite of disadvantages, he or she has acquired, education and refinement this fact is resented. The negro is thought to be fit ouly to be the slave, the servant, of the white man. He is an upstart, an interloper, he "doesn't know his place," if he aspires to equality of opportunity with his white brother. "Knock him down, and kick him for falling," is a slang expression sometimes heard. And this seems to be the settled policy of the white man (as a race) in dealing with his dark-hued half brethren.

But the white race owes to itself, as well as to its brothers, encouragement of their development in every way in its power. The negro race has been held down for generations; humility has been considered a negro's highest virtue, and self-respect his greatest crime. On the contrary, we should help him to help himself; he should be encouraged to feel a healthy self-respect, and to develop a selfhood worthy of respect. If, as we are so loud in boasting, we are the "superior race," we should show our superiority by uplifting our weaker brothers. To crush them down is not an evidence of our superiority.

* * *

Now that the attempt is being made to force the negro back into a condition worse than slavery, it seems to me all who believe in human brotherhood, in equality of opportunity for all, should add their influence, be it little or great, to the movement for justice.

Actuated by these feelings I attended, on Monday evening, June 19, a meeting of colored people held at Quinn Chapel, this city, and listened to speeches by Ida Wells-Barnett and others, and the reading of the second report of Le Vin, the detective, who has made another trip to the south, and has secured additional evidence relating to the outrages on negroes. This report is very interesting, and will soon be published. The report of his first trip, which was made two weeks ago, is now published. In the same pamphlet are given newspaper reports of the outrages. From the preface to the pamphlet I quote as as follows:

"During six weeks of the months of March and April just past, twelve colored men were lynched in Georgia, the reign of outlawry culminating in the torture and hanging of the colored preacher, Elijah Strickland, and the burning alive of Samuel Wilkes, alias Hose, Sunday, April 23, 1899. . . .

"Of the twelve men lynched during that reign of unspeakable barbarism, only one was even charged with an assault upon a woman. Yet Southern apologists justify their savagery on the ground that negroes are lynched only because of their crimes against women.

"The Southern press champions burning men alive, and says, 'Consider the facts.' The colored people join issue and also say 'Consider the facts.' The colored people of Chicago employed a detective to go to Georgia, and his report in this pamphlet gives the facts. We give here the details of the lynching as they were reported in the Southern papers, then follows the report of the true facts as to the cause of the lynchings, as learned by the investigation. We submit all to the sober judgment of the nation, confident that in this cause as well as all others, 'Truth is mighty and will prevail.'"

Believing that all sides should be given a fair hearing, I ask the readers of these lines to send to Ida Wells-Barnett, 2939 Princeton Ave., Chicago, for as many copies of "Lynch Law in Georgia" as can be judiciously used. No charge is made for the pamphlets, but if it is convenient to send money with the order, the money will be used to pay for printing more pamphlets, and in giving them a wider circulation. Copies of the pamphlet are in Lucifer office, also, and will be forwarded on request.

* * *

Ida Wells-Barnett is an unusually intelligent young woman and by nature and training fitted to be a credit to any cause which she may champion. She is a calm, deliberate, forceful speaker, speaking extemporaneously, yet her every word is well chosen, showing that she "knows what she wants to say, and says it." She continually speaks of "my race," meaning the negro; yet she is really more closely allied by blood to the Caucasian than to the negro, though perhaps she feels, with Fred. Douglass, that there is no cause for pride in the fact. She is doing a great work for the "colored" people. We expect to give our friends an opportunity to hear her in behalf of her people, at our home, in the near future.

I believe that we should give all sides a fair, respectful hearing, regardless of the race, color, sex, or religion of the speaker. For I agree with a dear, Methodist aunt who used to say to me in explanation of the fact that her affection for me was unchanged by our difference of opinion religiously and socially, "There's room in the world for all of us, if we don't stick our elbows out!"

Reaction in Kansas.

The state, or geographical division, called Kansas, in the middle western part of the United States of America, has been for some years a battle ground for the contending forces in the field of politics, of economics, in educational methods, and in what are called moral reform movements. It was there that "populism" as a political reform achieved its greatest triumphs, and now we read that ex-Senator Pfeffer, once a leader of that political faith, has written a series of articles for a leading Chicago daily, to show that populism is now dead and buried. It is in Kansas that the battle between the champions of paternalistic prohibition of the liquor traffic, on the one hand, and the advocates of the right to manage one's own affairs, has been fought out with a persistence and determination never perhaps witnessed elsewhere. In educational matters, likewise, the the conflict for mastery between the forces of evolutionary progress and of reactionary or medieval methods and principles, has been persistent and determined. One of the leaders on the side of reason and of progress has sent us a letter containing the following paragraph concerning this ages-old and world-wide conflict as it is now witnessed in the Sunflower State:

"The reaction in Kansas goes merrily on. The splendid work, comprehensively radical, being done at the Kansas State Agricultural College is being undone in a ruthless and illegal manner by the party now in power.

"Leedy, the Populist governor, appointed a board of regents of that institution containing some really progressive men, among them C. B. Hoffman known to many of our readers.

This board infused vitality into the preacher ridden school. It extended the course of Agriculture and Mechanics and also had the temerity to devote more time to the study of history, sociology, and political economy.

"Progressive men, Parsons of Boston, Bemis of Chicago, Ward of New York, Will of Wisconsin, and others like them were employed. Students were encouraged to think for themselves. Books of even radical tendencies were examined and discussed; the search for truth, no matter where it might lead, was made the prime object. Professors who under the intolerant spirit which generally prevails at our institutions would have kept still as mice on religious, economic and sociological subjects, gradually came out of their shells and gave expression to ideas which were shocking to the plutocrats and to their most efficient allies, the orthodox preachers.

"Thus when the Republicans carried the state last fall and put into the governor's chair a canting, shiveling, goody-goody Sunday School teacher, the reaction set in. In order to get control of the board of regents it was necessary to remove two of the regents. To do this it was necessary to commit perjury, override law and violate every decency. But such small matters would not lie in the way of the patriots. So Hoffman and Limbocker were removed and subsequently the 'redeemed' board dismissed President Will and Professors Parsons, Bemis and Ward. These men have legal contracts of employment for a period extending to July 1, 1901. The bosses however do not care for contracts, they being in control of the state government and the courts, and can hence soon wear out private individuals who undertake to defend their rights in the courts.

"Other dismissals will no doubt follow, as many of the professors are heretics in religion and politics. The preachers of Manhattan waited in a body upon the board and demanded the removal of Ward, Parsons, Emch, Will and others, on the ground that these men did not believe in the divinity of Jesus.

"It is also proposed to change the course of study by cutting out much if not all study of sociology and political economy. According to the bosses the farmers' and mechanics' sons and daughters have no business to know anything about the laws that govern society and economics. They should be taught how to produce cheaply and effectively, so that we can compete in the world's markets with rat-fed Chinese labor on the one hand and make millionaires on the other. Thus in the closing days of the Nineteenth century do the forces of darkness and reaction raise their reptile heads and show their poisonous fangs.

Let the Liberals of Kansas and of the nation stand together as a man to destroy the theo-plutocratic party led by such hypocrites and weaklings as McKinley and such bosses as Hanna and Quay."

The Kansas State Agricultural college is one of the largest, and has long been considered one of the most successful schools of its kind in the United States, or in the world. Having been an occasional visitor at that institution, while a citizen of Kansas, I much regret to learn that the good work of the friends of the newer and the truer educational methods is now being nullified by the political leaders elected to office last November. It is sincerely to be hoped, however, that the the admonitions of our correspondent will not pass unheeded, and that the "Liberals of Kansas and of the nation will stand together as one man," and will continue the fight until victory perches upon the banner of reason and right. M. H.

We shall be very glad if any who are interested in the cause for the advancement of which Lucifer is published will send us something to help pay for the sample copies we must send out in order to obtain subscribers. To a radical paper, depending almost entirely upon its subscription list for support, the outlay for sample copies is a heavy drain. We are always glad to receive addresses to which to send sample copies, whether accompanied by money or not.

A Misconception.

Seeing in Lucifer No. 763 that C. L. James advises young journalists to take me "for a standard of all they would not resemble," I am slightly curious to learn what is the system of journalism recommended or taught by Mr. James. To judge by a former criticism of Mr. James', an attentive reading of the matter which he sees fit to criticise is not his invariable practice.

In No. 592 of Lucifer he quoted my assertion that "all voluntary acts, including a certain class of acts popularly but erroneously called non-voluntary, are caused by motives acting on the feeling and reason of the Ego."

Mr. James announces his disbelief in the dogmatical assertion and proceeds: "The study of evolution teaches me that the actions of the least evolved animal are automatic (non-voluntary). It teaches me that most human actions are automatic. I am sure Tak Kak does not breathe in consequence of motives acting upon his feeling and reason. He breathes because he cannot help it," etc.

I leave it to the readers of Lucifer whether Mr. James does not display a lack of common sense. I perfectly agree with his affirmative above quoted and more which he writes in the same strain. In the article I wrote for "Egoism," after discussing voluntary acts, I discussed involuntary acts and used expressions somewhat similar to those since employed by Mr. James, and of the same purport regarding automatic acts.

Even if Mr. James had read only a fragment of my writing —only the words which he quotes— I think he is the only person who can so utterly mistake their meaning. Let us analyze:

The expression "all involuntary acts" implies to me and to every reader, that there is another class of acts.

The circumspection shown in the clause immediately following would of itself warn the intelligent reader that really involuntary acts were not meant. The words are: "a certain class of acts popularly but erroneously called non-voluntary."

It is doubtless true that I could have been more explicit just there by saying "including acts done under duress." But, while leading the readers of "Egoism" to think on the subject, I wished on that page to hold their attention to representative voluntary acts.

The word non-voluntary was selected for reasons which may now appear to any reflecting person fairly conversant with the language. The man who signs a paper in a reverie will say he did it involuntarily meaning unconsciously. The one who signs under threats will say he did it against his will. This latter is the popularly alleged non-voluntary act. Philosophically it is a voluntary act, though legally it is not.

TAK KAK.

"Cuba's Fight for Freedom and the War With Spain."

However much the readers of Lucifer may differ in regard to the rightness or the unrightners of the part taken by the American government in the war of "Intervention" in Cuba's behalf, we are all interested in the past history and the future prospects of this "Queen of the Antilles," as this famous island has often been called. A friend has donated for Lucifer's benefit a few copies of a large and handsomely bound volume with the above title. The book claims to be: "A Comprehensive, Accurate and Thrilling History of the Spanish Kingdom and its Latest and Fairest Colony; the long struggle of Cuba for Freedom and Independence; the Intervention of the United States and the Fierce War with Spain that Followed; A Record of Oppression and Patriotism, of Cruelty and Valor, and above all of the Triumph of the Stars and Stripes. Profusely illustrated. Written and edited by Henry Houghton Beck, author of 'Famous Battles,' the 'Greco-Turkish War,' etc., etc. Published by the Globe Publishing Co., Philadelphia.

The book contains 569 pages, heavy paper, excellent print; price in half Morocco, with marbled edges, $2; same in cloth, $1.50. On receipt of price and 17 cents for postage, we will send by post or express one copy of this handsomely bound and profusely illustrated volume—including a twenty-inch map of Cuba and Porto Rico, and Lucifer one year. As our supply of this book is quite limited, those who wish to avail themselves of this liberal offer will do well to send in their orders soon.

VARIOUS VOICES.

O. O., Mont.:—I enclose a dollar to extend my subscription a year from the time it expired. I trust you are feeling much better since your trip, but like the rest of "our" folks I think you should have spent your time resting. I shall be very glad indeed to see assurances from time to time in the Light-Bearer that you are steadily improving in health.

C. L., Ore.: I would like to get a copy of Spencer's "First Principles." Please let me know if you have any more on hand, and what is the price. For the inclosed stamps please send me Austin Kent's pamphlet on "Free Love."

[We can still fill orders for "First Principles." Price, 50 cents and 12 cents for postage. Printed on good paper, gilt tops and lettering, and bound in maroon cloth.]

Ida Wells Barnett, 2939 Princeton Ave, Chicago:—Mrs. LILLIAN HARMAN, Dear Madam: I received your letter yesterday and write this to thank you not only for the splendid newspaper article which you kindly sent me but also the personal assurance that you are interested in this great question of the hour. It is a true friend who will risk criticism by espousing a cause by taking its unpopular side. There is no doubt that the Southern people by their shameless slanders have gained the public ear to the great injury of our race. We therefore feel inexpressibly thankful when one not allied to us by ties of race kinship, is just and fearless enough to demand the same fair treatment that all other people of all other races receive.

S. A. Shaw, Auburn, Maine:—Leclose $1.25 for Lucifer and the "Light-Bearer Library" for one year. I wish to become acquainted with liberal-minded people, and if you have a list of a few in this vicinity you would do me a favor by sending the same to me. I have just been reading your "The Regeneration of Society. You voice my sentiments, and I think you are doing a good work. You cannot put matters in too clear a light, nor use too strong language. The people need all the light and truth that Lucifer can bear and Lillian can can utter.

["The Light-Bearer Library" is no longer published. We do not like to give the names of readers without their permission. We hope the subscribers to Lucifer who are willing to be known as such, will communicate with the inquirer if living in his vicinity. L. H.]

B. T.:— I live in one of the many villages that make up this cosmopolitan city, and there was a marriage a few months ago a few doors from where I live that caused some comment. The German groceryman whose wife had been dead only a month married the daughter of a German farmer, and talking with the station-master explained his haste. He had three little children and had to pay the nurse and housekeeper $4 per week. By marrying he not only saved the $4, and other expenses, but he got some one to wait on the store. The poor girl would have been better off if she had been sold into slavery. The law compelled the master to treat the slave better than it compels the husband to treat the wife.

Do you know what is the matter with the Lucifer Circle—and all your Circles? They are too serious. They take things too seriously. They argue—logically and soundly. They lack levity. They should laugh where they cry—because they should see the absurdities of marriage where they see only its problems. "Laugh and the world laughs with you." Levity is the soul of wit—not brevity as the Greek sage supposed—and it is wit that rules the world, not reason. Forgive my preaching—when I begin that it is time for me to stop.

N. H. Harman, Inglenook, Cal.—Cousin Moses: I hope you are in much better health than when you left home for a vacation. Yet I do not think that it was a vacation in fact. You are so constituted that work you must, or lie down for good. I feel that way myself. I cannot be idle. When I was a child, my teacher, as a punishment, made me stand still for five minutes. Before the time was up, I fell fainting to the floor.

Well, I can not see any prospect of change for the better for mankind so far, except in one particular, and what that would lead to I cannot yet tell. I refer to the movement towards public ownership of the public utilities. The American people go by spurts and jerks too much to enable us to count on any movement being productive of lasting good. Yet there must come a time when the great masses will awake and assert their rights under the government that they support with their toil and their blood. But will this change come in peace or in war? The great heart of humanity wants peace, love, and fair treatment. For such it hopes and waits. Will its hope be realized?

I tell you that there is too much of the hog in mankind, and so long as we continue to raise children under the present system of grab-all-in-sight, a system in which mothers are compelled to bring children into the world under protest, feeling and knowing before the child is born that a state of slavery awaits it, we cannot hope for any real or lasting improvement in our present social and governmental conditions.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Persons Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 25 cents. Address, Moses Harman, 107 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Women in Marriage Slavery

Will find in HILDA'S HOME a story exposing the horrors of their condition as faithfully and as fearlessly as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" exposed the horrors of Negro slavery in the South. The story is more entertaining than many modern works of fiction and the plain truths it tells will find responsive echoes in the aching, bursting hearts of many women who know the galling effects of marriage thralldom.

The book contains 435 pages. Price handsomely bound in cloth, $1. In paper cover 50 cents. Send in your order NOW—especially if you want extra copies for distribution among your friends.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION.

A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments on both sides of the question. Price 10 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

Government Analyzed.

By John H. Kelso. The chapter headings are: "Derivations and Definitions of Political Terms; Various Forms of Government; General Principles of Government; Functions of Government; Origin of Government; Declaration of Independence; Articles of Confederation; Defects of the Confederation; Formation of the Constitution of the United States; Constitution of the United States; Taxation; Tariff or Protection; War; Punishments; Marriage; Religion; Inheritance; Money; What a Government Should Be." 320 pages. Price reduced to $1.00.

With Lucifer one year to a new subscriber, $1.50.

Health Hints

and ready recipes. Dr. E. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; receipts for preparation of nutritious dishes for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

"Loma—A CITIZEN OF VENUS," by Prof. Wm. Windsor.

A story of surpassing interest, largely devoted to Sociologic and Sociologic problems. Like Bellamy in his "Looking Backward," the writer of "Loma" believes in the "state," as a factor in social evolution, but individualists will probably forgive this feature for the sake of the radically revolutionary ideas in regard to popular theories—exclusive, theosophic, cosmologic, etc. Substantially bound and artistically bound. Price, post-paid, $1.50. Address this office.

Some Problems in Social Freedom.

Presidential address delivered by Lillian Harman before the Legitimation League, at Holborn Restaurant, London, "Freedom in Social Relations;" "The Ownership of Women;" "Where Draw the Line?" "What Would Become of the Family?" "Marriage a 'confidence game';" "How Society Protects Children." Price, 5 cents. For sale at this office.

765.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

Songs of the Unblind Cupid.

Under the title "Songs of the Unblind Cupid," an edition de luxe, in red and black, of a few hitherto unpublished poems by the liberal poet, J. Wm. Lloyd, is just issued.

The verses are printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle-edged, hand-made paper of cerulean tint. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red, and an initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors.

Mr. Lloyd, as author of "Wind Harp Songs" and the "Red Heart in a White World," needs no introduction to the liberal public. These few new poems of love, liberty and nature are here preserved in the highest style of the printers' art, and should find a place in the collection of every friend of freedom, every lover of poetry and every admirer of choice and dainty publications.

Edition limited to 650 copies. There will be no second edition.

Price per copy, 30 cents. Sent postpaid upon receipt of price by M. Harman, 507 Carroll Avenue, Chicago.

THE BALLAD OF READING JAIL. BY C. 3.3.

This powerful poem of more than 600 lines, is the work of OSCAR WILDE C. 3. 3. having been the poets prison number during his confinement in Reading Jail. It is dedicated to the memory of a trooper of the Horse Guards who was hanged in the jail at that time, and it depicts the terrible sensations of the author and his fellow prisoners before and after the execution.

Just issued; price, in cloth, blue, vellum back, beautifully printed from large type on hand-made antique paper, deckle edges; reading matter on one side of the paper; a sumptuous book of 90 pages, 7 inches by 5. $1. In paper, 64 pages, 10 cents. Mailed postpaid on receipt of price, by M. Harman, 507 Carroll Avenue, Chicago.

THE WORKS OF A PIONEER SHOULD NOT BE OVERLOOKED.

The following by WILLIAM DENTON, pioneer Freethought and Spiritualist lecturer, and naturalist, who died while on a journey of scientific research in the wilds of Australia some fifteen years ago, are of as vital importance now as when they were written:

Sermons from Shakespeare's Text:
"Tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones and good in everything."

Orthodoxy False, Since Spiritualism is True.
The God Proposed for Our National Constitution.
What is Right?
Man's True Saviors.
Christianity No Finality or Spiritualism Superior to Christianity.
Who are Christians?

Sent to any address for 10 cents each, by M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.

This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be FREE; must enjoy the full privilege of soliciting the love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrially."—Page 265. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CITYLESS AND COUNTRYLESS WORLD," by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 450 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Free Love; A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of connubial love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 1874, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence. 140 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.

"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.

"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.

Sample pages free. Prepaid $1.00. Address this office.

Books Worth Reading FREE!

Send us twenty-five cents for a thirteen weeks' trial subscription to Lucifer and we will present to you your choice of the following books, to the value of 25 cents. Read the list carefully. Every book is interesting and thought-inspiring.

John's Way; a domestic radical story, by Elmina D. Slenker,	.25
Human Rights; J. Madison Hook,	.10
Vital Force, Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation, by A. Chavannnes,	.5
Practical Co-operation; by E. C. Walker,	.10
The Revival of Puritanism; " "	.10
Love and the Law; " "	.05
Digging for Bedrock, by Moses Harman,	.10
In Hell and the Way Out; H. E. Allen,	10

RIGHTS OF WOMEN IN THE SEXUAL RELATIONS,

By Karl Heinzen. A new edition together with the startling letters of "Louise Mayer" on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German women at Frauenstadt. A book of 306 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Price paper bound, 50 cents; cloth, $1

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW. A primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. A valuable compendium on Sex Ethics. Startling and Scientific Price, 10 cents.

LOVE AND THE LAW, By E. C. Walker. A clear, concise statement of social liberty in contradistinction to the much lauded legs bondage now almost universally upheld. An excellent missionary document. Two copies, 5 cents; 30 cents per dozen.

The Outcome of Legitimation. By Oswald Dawson. This address was to have appeared in the January "Adult," but the printers of that number played Bowdler on a small scale, and refused to print it, alleging that the matter which they did print was "bad enough, but we are printing that and decline to print more." The lecture deals with some problems arising from the practicalization of the theories of free love. Price, 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

The Story of An African Farm. Olive Schreiner's masterpiece. A story of the struggle for light, the search for truth, the yearning for happiness of bright young English and German people, among the ignorant and coarse Boers and Kaffirs of South Africa. This is a work of art, and of truth. Well bound in cloth. 286 pages. Price, 40 cents, postage 10 cents. For sale at this office.

HUMAN RIGHTS; By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races." Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III., Co-operation; Chapter V., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, ten cts.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

Love Ventures of Tom, Dick, and Harry. A Novel with an Affidavit. And they were naked and not ashamed (Gen. ii, 25. 16 full-page French-Art Illustrations. Illuminated covers 12mo 220 pp. paper, 25c.; boards, 50c.

Elective Affinities. A novel by Goethe. Illustrated. 340 pages, well printed on heavy paper. Price, postp'd 5 c.

Personal. Readers of Lucifer who would like a quiet, home like room in a private family when visiting Chicago, should communicate with X. Y. Z., care of Lucifer, 507 Carroll Ave.

Personal: A radical gentleman desires to make the acquaintance of a radical lady with a view to meeting and comradeship. I want one who would like to visit and work in New England. I would assist the right one to come here. Please send recent photo and personal description in first letter; also full particulars. Address G., care of Lucifer.

Wanted. Subscribers to "Little Freethinker." The only liberal paper published for the young. 25 cents a year. Also names of liberal women who want correspondents. Address Elmina Drake Slenker, Snowville Pub. Co., Va.

Liberal Home. Those who wish to join in such a home that is now well established, please address with stamp, A. M. Covey, Electra, Marion Co., Fla.

Socialists: Ten cents pays for "Weekly Commoner" trial month. New radical socialist magazine; able writers; eight pages. Spicy and up-to-date. Box 309, Portland, Oregon.

LIBERTY: Political, Religious, Social and Sexual. An essay towards the formation of an anti-persecution society. By A. F. Tindall. Price 5 cents.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 25. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, JULY 1, E. M. 299. [C. E. 1899.] WHOLE No. 768.

Why Truth Goes Naked.

List to a tale well worth the ear
Of all who wit and sense admire:
Invented, it is very clear ——
Some ages prior to Matthew Prior,
Falsehood and Truth, "upon a time,"
One day in June's delicious weather,
('Twas in a distant age and clime:)
Like sisters took a walk together.

On, on their merry way they took,
Through fragrant wood and verdant meadow,
To where a beach beside a brook
Invited rest beneath its shadow;
There, sitting in the pleasant shade,
Upon the margin's grassy matting
(A velvet cushion ready made)
The young companions fell to chatting.

Now while in voluble discourse,
On this and that their tongues were running,
As habit bids each speak—perforce,
The one is frank, the other cunning;
Falsehood, at length impatient grown,
With scandals of her own creation,
Said—"Since we two are quite alone,
And nicely screened from observation,

Suppose in this delightful rill,
While all around is so propitious,
We take a bath?"—Said Truth,—"I will—
A bath, I'm sure, will be delicious!"
At this her robe she cast aside,
And in the stream that ran before her
She plunged—like Ocean's happy bride—
As naked as her mother bore her!

Falsehood at leisure now undressed,
Put off her robes her limbs that hamper,
And having donned Truth's snowy vest,
Ran off as fast as she could scamper
Since then the subtle maid, in sooth,
Expert in lies and shrewd evasions,
Has borne the honored name of Truth,
And wears her clothes on all occasions,
While Truth disdaining to appear
In Falsehood's petticoat and bodice,
Still braves all eyes from year to year,
As naked as a marble goddess!

—John G. Saxe.

Irene of Constantinople.

BY C. L. JAMES.

(Concluded from last week.)

Irene, from the moment of her restoration, 762 A. D. pursued her usual double policy. The multitude were dazzled by her position as empress in her own right; those who had a grievance were taught to lay it upon Constantine, who had whatever his mother told him. The Armenian guards, who had headed the revolt against her, were put under stern discipline,—but Constantine was a tyrant—Irene had always been forgiving. Constantine, no doubt by Irene's advice, put away his wife and took another, against the laws of the church—but what could he expect of an Iconoclast? No one doubted either the virtue or the orthodoxy of Irene. Constantine was thus so convenient a screen for Irene that I can hardly believe she really meant to thrust him away; though with characteristic prudence she had him closely watched. But he was made to think she proposed his deposition, or perhaps induced again ot meditate hers. On a sudden he fled from Constantinople to Scutari, where he announced his intention of calling the provincial generals to arms against his mother. The promptness of Irene averted an unnatural war. She wrote to the double dealing spies who accompanied him, that unless they secured her power she would publish enough to destroy them. They judiciously deemed her cause the safer to embrace; and Constantine was brought back a captive to the apartments where he first saw light. Here some of Irene's partisans inflicted that mutilation which according to custom effectually excluded a prince from restoration. As usual she profited by a crime which she disclaimed; but its horrible character raised a storm of undiscriminating indignation from which her memory, beyond all question, has suffered more than she deserves.* Any impartial reader must see that she really was forbearing; and a person so weak as Constantine, even if he had not been her child, was little likely to provoke her into ordering extreme measures. It may be added that at the time, when all the facts were best known, there is no sign of her having been accused; it is later writers who tell us that the sun deserted the heavens at this Thyestean tragedy. To her piety and ambition, between them, Irene had, however, sacrificed all those charities which unite to the species and insure the assistance of others. Neither husband nor adopted son could be expected to love and cherish one who had given such tremendous proof what good care she could take of herself. Orthodoxy indeed proclaimed her a saint; but it could not be difficult to find another sovereign as orthodox as she. The applause of the majority among an enslaved people was poor security against the fickleness of a treacherous army. On the giddy height which she had scaled, she could have no safeguard but her own watchful eye and ready hand. For a moment it seemed as if she might seek one in leaning upon a higher power.

Constantine was blinded in 797 A. D. On Christmas day, 800 A. D., Charlemagne, whose victory over the Avars had brought his territory into contact with Irene's, was crowned at Rome as Emperor of the West. His marriage to the Eastern Empress would have restored that kingdom which lay shattered on the tomb of Theodosius. But even if Irene were willing to give herself a master, she could not give Constantinople a foreign one. The favorites through whom she administered the different departments were probably her paramours; it is still clearer that they were alike flattered with hopes of sharing her throne; their numbers and rivalry afforded an apparently good security against the ambition of any one; and with characteristic preference for the power of love over that of terror, she chose some of them from among former conspirators against her. For a last security, she watched them all through the eunuchs, who constantly surrounded her person and had always been devoted to her interest.

*An ambiguous expression of Theophanes persuaded Baronius that Constantine perished by order of his mother and the authority of a cardinal, inclined to favor Irene on account of her zeal for images, has prevailed with most Protestant historians against decisive evidence that the unfortunate prince was living at a much later date. See Schlosser B. S. Kaiser; and Milman's notes to Gibbon. It must be acknowledged, however, that a different account of the whole affair has been given. Constantine, returning from war with the Saracens, was, it is said, attacked by assassins. He fled to Phrygia; Irene lured him back to his fate. I do not know the original authorities for this story. (V. Mignot's Histoire de l' Imperatrice Irene.) The other seems to me more probable for reasons already given.

Oriental policy considers these unfortunates the most reliable of servants; and their habitual association with women peculiarly fits them to be the confidants and agents of a female sovereign. Thus Irene's position, while it must have been a solitude to the heart, appeared outwardly secure and glorious. "The Roman world bowed," says Gibbon, "to the government of a female; and as she moved through the streets of Constantinople, the reins of four milk white steeds were held by as many patricians, who marched on foot before the chariot of their queen." But the foundations of the pageant were like those of the earth in the Asiatic speculation—the tortoise which supported the elephant was itself supported by something unaccounted for. Self-interest was the only means which Irene's aspirations had left her of controling any one; the chief instrument of self-interest was confided to the care of her treasurer Nicephorus; and her own money corrupted the eunuchs and the church. Nicephorus was secretly invested with the purple and crowned at St. Sophia by the venal patriarch; and Irene awoke to find her power at an end. With touching dignity she reminded the ungrateful usurper that he owed his life to the unsuspicious clemency of one who had been so great and formidable. She deplored the selfish passion to which her own children and those of Copronymus had fallen victims; avoided mentioning the excuse of a pious purpose which others were ready to make for her; and requested that, as she had at last been defeated in the game of political intrigue, she might be allowed to retire with a remnant of her former state. This reasonable petition was denied by the avarice of Nicephorus. She was banished without any provision, to the island of Lesbos; where she is said to have supported herself by spinning during the remainder of her life, which was not long. Had her courage been equal to sustaining this blow, more unlikely things than her restoration might have happened; for though she is spoken of as advanced in years, a comparison of dates will show that she can scarcely have been fifty; and the contemptible Nicephorus soon fell in battle with the Bulgarians.

They made, after their fashion, a drinking cup of his skull, and if they were as doughty revellers as is said, I should think they might have emptied it repeatedly without danger of intoxication.

The last recorded words of Irene comprise the tragedy of her life; her bad angel was an ambition which would obey no gentler sentiment; her good angel was the essentially feminine temper which no inferior temptation had ever been able to overcome. Though her end was so unfortunate, she succeeded to a very considerable extent. The idolatrous instinct, in which her whole sex at that time sympathized with her, owes her its most signal triumph. Her sanctity is still recognized by the Greek church; and because she was the patroness of image-worship, the Roman inclines to extenuate her crimes; the precedent of her reign was remembered; and after her there were found several women who without a spark of her talent were able to administer on their own account the authority of that military despotism among whose maxims hitherto had always been the entire subordination of females.

The time is ripe, and rotten-ripe for change;
Then let it come: I have no dread of what
Is called for by the instinct of mankind;
Nor think I that God's world will fall apart
Because we tear a parchment more or less.
—James Russell Lowell.

Combines.

BY EDGAR D. BRINKERHOFF.

In Lucifer of June 10 R. B. Kerr claims that monopolies and combines can prosper as well in a country of free money, free trade and free land as in a community where monopoly law exists.

Not to discuss general principles at this moment, let us see how some of Mr. Kerr's illustrations come out. He says, "That men should cut one another's prices when they can fix high prices by combination is a form of insanity which the world will never see again." But why do not combines fix still higher prices? This is a very innocent looking question but an attempt to answer it will remind Mr. Kerr that there is something that has a tendency to fix prices besides the will of the would be monopolists.

Again, he says, "Had railways the power to boycott individuals they would either starve every independent man to death or drive him from the country." But the railway's income is derived from live men in the country, not dead men out of the country. Railways would not do this starving and driving without an object. Under freedom the same object would not exist. The object of the railway is now to kill (figuratively) the South Dakota farmer who "denounces the extortion of railway companies" not for his denunciation but because he is threatening to move a legislature to interfere; and in this fight I am on the side of the railway and against the man who invokes legal restraint upon trade. In a free country the railway could afford to let the denunciator talk, while, on the other hand, it would be unable to afford to lose his traffic between talks. Such railway would be earning no interest, no rent, no profits, only wages, and could not afford to dissipate its wages in killing towns or fighting anybody.

The case is the same with the little railway which Mr. Kerr says "must join the trust or be ground into powder." The great railway could not afford to fight the little one but would welcome it as extending its own traffic. Or, perhaps Mr. Kerr means that the little railway would be a parallel line built to compete with the giant. But are men such fools as to build a parallel road that does not run to a market center? If not what becomes of Mr. Kerr's contention that the giant road would refuse to make connections? Besides the railway trust would be careful not to collect extortionate rates for fear of rousing some one to put through a parallel road which would be so easy to build in a country abounding in wealth and money. It will not answer to say that the new road would pool issues with the trusts and the public would still pay the extortionate rates for this is a situation that would not arise because the trust is not anxious to divide income with a parallel road and will keep its rates down to prevent the building of one. In fact the trust road would not only have to face the prospect of dividing receipts with a new parallel road, but it would perceive that it must forego receipts almost entirely as the public would certainly boycott the trust road. Notice also, that the prospect of the pooling of issues is thus prevented, for the new opposition road would not pool with the old road while receiving ten times the traffic of the latter.

Mr. Kerr will not venture to attack any of the general principles I have here assumed as the existence of each law is too well established to admit of successful controversy,

If the railways really bother Mr. Kerr, let him dismiss this little difficulty at once because air ships will take the place o railways whenever necessary, long before free land and free money are conceded.

The success of trade union combines does not illustrate the effectiveness of mere free combines as there is always a threat of violence back of a strike.

"What a wretchedly dark hole this is, now!"

"Do you think so? Before we were married, you always said it was the most delightful in Brighton—so few lamps."—Ally Sloper.

The Over-Sexed Human Female.*

To make clear by an instance the difference between normal and abnormal sex-distinction, look at the relative condition of a wild cow and a "milch cow," such as we have made. The wild cow is a female. She has healthy calves, and milk enough for them; and that is all the femininity she needs. Otherwise than that she is bovine rather than feminine. She is a light, strong, swift, sinewy creature, able to run, jump, and fight if necessary. We, for economic uses, have artificially developed the cow's capacity for giving milk. She has become a walking milk machine, bred and tended to that express end, her value measured in quarts. The secretion of milk is a maternal function,—a sex-function. The cow is over-sexed. Turn her loose in natural conditions, and, if she survive the change, she would revert in a very few generations to the plain cow, with her energies used in the general activities of her race, and not all running to milk.

Physically, woman belongs to a tall, vigorous, beautiful animal species, capable of great and varied exertion. In every race and time when she has opportunity for racial activity she developes accordingly, and is no less a woman for being a healthy human creature. In every race and time where she is denied this opportunity,—and few indeed have been her years of freedom,—she has developed in the lines of action to which she was confined; and those were always lines of sex-activity. In consequence the body of woman, speaking in the largest generalization, manifests sex-distinction predominantly.

Woman's femininity—and "the eternal feminine" means the eternal sexual—is more apparent in proportion to her humanity than the femininity of other animals in proportion to their caninity or felinity or equininity. "A feminine hand" or "a feminine foot" are distinguishable anywhere. We do not hear of "a feminine paw" or "a feminine hoof." A hand is an organ of prehension, a foot an organ of locomo ion: they are not secondary sexual characteristics. The comparative smallness and feebleness of woman is a sex distinction. We have carried it to such an excess that women are commonly known as "the weaker sex." There is no such glaring difference between male and female in other advanced species. In the long migrations of birds, in the ceaseless motion of the grazing herds that used to swing up and down over the continent each year, in the wild, steep journeys of the breeding salmon, nothing is heard of the weaker sex. And among the higher carnivora, where longer maintenance of the young brings their condition nearer ours, the hunter dreads the attack of the female more than that of the male. The disproportionate weakness is an excessive sex-distinction. Its injurious effect may be broadly shown in the Oriental nations, where the female is curtained harems is confined most exclusively to sex-functions and denied most fully the exercise of race-functions. In such peoples the weakness, the tendency to small bones and adipose tissue of the over-sexed female, is transmitted to the male, with a retarding effect on the development of the race. Conversely, in early Germanic tribes the comparatively free and humanly developed women—tall, strong, and brave—transmitted to their sons a greater proportion of human power and much less of morbid sex-tendency.

The degree of feebleness and clumsiness common to women: the comparative inability to stand, walk, run, jump, climb, and perform other race-functions common to both sexes, is an excessive sex-distinction; and the ensuing transmission of this relative feebleness to their children, boys and girls alike, retards human development. Strong, free, active women, the sturdy field-working peasant, the burden-bearing savage, are no less good mothers for their human strength. But our civilized "feminine delicacy," which appears somewhat less delicate when recognized as an expression of sexuality in excess,—makes us no better mothers, but worse. The relative weakness of women is a sex-distinction. It is apparent in her to a degree that injures motherhood, that injures wifehood, that injures the individual. The sex-usefulness and the human usefulness of women, their general duty to their kind, are greatly injured by this degree of distinction. In every way the over-sexed condition of the human female reacts unfavorably upon herself, her husband, her children, and the race.

*From "Women and Economics," by Charlotte Perkins Stetson. 340 pages. Bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale at this office.

Unwelcome Children.

Col. Robert Ingersoll, at the annual meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston, on June 2, spoke in part as follows.

For thousands of years men and women have been trying to reform the world. Why have they failed? I will tell you why. Ignorance, poverty and vice are populating the world. The gutter is a nursery. People unable to support themselves fill the tenements, the huts and hovels with children. They depend on the Lord, on luck, and charity. They are not intelligent enough to think about consequences, or to feel responsibility. At the same time they don't want children, because a child is a curse—a curse to them and to itself. The babe is not welcome because it is a burden.

These unwelcome children fill the jails and prisons, the asylums and hospitals, and they crowd the scaffolds. A few are rescued by chance or charity, but the great majority are failures. They become vicious, ferocious. They live by fraud and violence, and bequeath their vices to their children. Against this inundation of vice the forces of reform are helpless; and charity itself becomes an unconscious prompter of crime.

Intelligence is the only lever capable of raising mankind. The question is, can we prevent the ignorant and the poor and the vicious from filling the world with their children? Can we prevent this Missouri of ignorance and vice from emptying into the Mississippi of civilization? Must the world forever remain the victim of ignorant passion? Can the world be civilized to that degree that consequences will be taken into consideration by all?

Passion is and always has been deaf. These weapons of reform are substantially useless. Criminals, tramps and beggars and failures are increasing every day. The prisons, jails, poorhouses, and asylums are crowded. Religion is helpless. Law can punish but it can neither reform criminals nor prevent crime. The tide of vice is rising. The war that is now being waged against the forces of evil is as helpless as the battle of the fire-flies against the darkness of the night.

There is but one hope. Ignorance, poverty and vice must stop populating the world. This cannot be done by moral suasion. This cannot be done by talk or example. This cannot be done by religion or law; by priest or hangman. This cannot be done by force, physical or moral.

To accomplish this there is but one way. Science must make woman the owner, the mistress, of herself. Science, the only savior of mankind, must put it in the power of woman to decide for herself whether she will or will not become a mother. This is the solution of the whole question. This frees woman. The babes that are born will be welcome. They will be clasped by glad hands to happy breasts. They will fill homes with light and joy.

I look forward to the time when men and women, by reason of their knowledge of consequences, of the morality born of intelligence, will refuse to perpetuate disease and pain—will refuse to fill the world with failures. When that time comes the prison walls will fall, the dungeons will be flooded with light, and the shadow of the scaffold will cease to curse the earth.

A girl told me today that a rude man annoyed her by staring at her in a public conveyance. It never occurred to her that it takes four eyes to make a stare annoying.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

ALBERT CHAVANNES, of Knoxville, Tenn., author of "In Brighter Climes," "Vital Force," and other sociologic works, will meet the Chicago Social Science Club, next Sunday, July 2, at 3 P. M., in Humboldt Park, near the north-east entrance. Subject of discussion "Economic Progress."

A GOODLY-SIZED audience listened with close attention to the address of Mrs. Ida Craddock on Tuesday night of this week, at Lucifer's rooms, 507 Carroll avenue. The subject, "Physiology and Psychology of Sex," was treated in a candid, earnest and philosophic manner, and yet with such delicacy and refinement of expression that no offence could be taken by any one except by the grossly ignorant or by those whose minds had been depraved by bad associations.

On Tuesday eve July 11, Mrs. Anna Ballard will deliver an address at the same place; subject "Domestic Life in Burmah." Mrs. Ballard has spent some years in Burmah and has had good opportunities for observing the social customs of a people called "barbarians," and "heathens," by our Anglo-Saxon Christians.

Women and War.

"Emperor William thinks it is useless to talk of peace when the love of militarism is so universal among women. The kaiser makes a good point, and one which has been overlooked by the women who have sent such strong appeals to 'The Hague.' It is one of the inconsistencies of the fair sex to hate war and yet to encourage it by loving the warrior."—Chicago Daily News."

In her book entitled "The Minister's Wooing" Harriet Beecher Stowe wrote, "We women are born worshipers—hero worshipers." The distinguishing qualities of the hero are strength and courage—valor, bravery, prowess, daring, recklessness of personal safety for the general good, or in defense of innocence and helplessness. Women admire and worship men of strength and courage because they themselves, as a sex, are consciously deficient in these qualities. That many women have exhibited and do exhibit these traits in rare perfection is readily conceded, but so also do many men exhibit the opposite, the feminine traits—timidity, lack of self-poise, desire for a strong arm to lean upon. Shakspeare wrote, "They have more fears than wars and women have," thereby indicating that timorousness or lack of courage is a distinctively feminine trait.

The philosophic explanation of all this is the fact that in racial evolution nature has disqualified woman for deeds of daring, unfitted woman for the role of life requiring physical prowess, by putting upon her the burden of child-bearing and of caring for infant helplessness. The human mother while carrying a child, whether before or after its birth, is in no condition for war, offensive or defensive, or for fighting and conquering the asperities of nature, in the struggle for existence. Hence "loving the warrior," worship of the military hero, is a part of woman's nature, a part, a large part of her inheritance from her savage ancestry, when physical strength and courage were absolutely necessary to the preservation of life.

* * *

It is this same inheritance from their savage ancestry that causes so many women to take interest in prize fights. Speaking of the late exhibition of brute strength and courage in the prize ring, a western contemporary has this to say:

"The next morning everybody was reading the paper, the ladies quite as eagerly as the men. But surely the former were reading of art, music, the drama, of culture and kindergartens? Yea, verily nay, but were devouring the details of the fight with all the avidity of old time sports. You wonder that the dear creatures who at sight of a mouse would climb the side of a house and scream like the d——l while doing it, should be interested in a prize fight. If you knew, as many do know, how high bred dames, well cultured and well curried, chase after brutal prize fighters of the John L. Sullivan type, you would know that seeming gentleness too often lightly masks the lurking female savage, lineal descendant of those 'gentle maids and matrons' of old Roman days, who at gladatorial combats, mercilessly turned down their thumbs, not willing the game should end short of death to the vanquished."

* * *

Yes, the young "war lord" as Emperor William of Germany is sometimes called, makes a good point when he says, "It is useless to talk of peace when the love of militarism is so universal among women." "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." So long as women bestow their sweetest smiles, their warmest admiration, their kisses and their plaudits, upon the returning warrior, just so long will men be eager to go to war, no matter whether it be war for defense or for aggression or conquest.

* * *

Intimately connected with this view of the subject—woman's influence upon the war spirit—is that of pre-natal impression. Some years ago, at a public barging in Missouri an old physician remarked to an on-looker, "This is the saddest sight I ever saw."

"Why so? Don't you think the man is guilty of murder and deserves death?"

"That is not what I was thinking of. The man may be guilty or innocent. This is a minor consideration with me. But do you observe that this vast crowd of people is largely composed of women? Many of these women are expectant mothers. I am thinking of the effect upon the on-coming generation, and wondering how many murders and hangings will spring from impressions made upon the unborn by this days spectacle."

Even so in regard to national wars. The women, the prospective mothers—even those who are mere spectators of the warlike pageants, and of the honors bestowed on the returning warriors, or who read of their heroic deeds on distant battle fields, are all the while unconsciously sowing the seeds of future wars.

What then is the remedy? What the first and most important step towards ushering in the era of universal peace—the time when "nations shall learn war no more," and "peace congresses" be no longer needed? It would seem the little paragraph clipped from the Chicago "Evening News" suggests the true and only remedy. Let the women who now make such strong appeals against war, and in favor of peace, prove their faith by their works. Let them cease to give the lie to their professions by their acts. Instead of loving and honoring the warrior let women ignore and shun the man or the men whose hands are red with brothers' blood, unless the shedding of human blood be clearly and absolutely in self-defence, or in defence of helpless innocence.

In short, let woman awake to a sense of her responsibility. If she wants to put a stop to the horrors of war, let her cease breeding sons whose highest ambition is to be warriors. Let her do what she can to build up a public conscience that will render forever impossible such wanton butcheries, such wholesale slaughter of human beings as are now being perpetrated by the American soldiers in the Philippines. M. H.

If there is to be no marrying nor giving in marriage in heaven, that may account for its being heaven.—Sel.

Social Regeneration.

In last week's Light-Bearer, in commenting upon an utterance by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, clipped from the New York "Journal" the ground was taken that "society, as we now have it, could not long survive the inauguration of the law of love as the only guide in the relations of the sexes." The idea intended to be conveyed by this comment was that the fundamental cause, the underlying cause, of all the hate, the strife the oppressions, the robberies, the slaveries, that now afflict human society is to be found in the lack of love and the prevalence of hate, of indifference and disgust, of discord and oppression in the marital relations of women and men.

This statement has been criticized by two of our helpers. I have been told that to eliminate or cure our social ills something else is needed besides free motherhood or the absence of unwelcome children. That children born of love in freedom might and probably would become the oppressors of their weaker brethren and sisters much in the same way that children of conventional wedlock now become the oppressors of their kind.

Instead of replying directly and at length to these friendly critics I have made a selection from the address of Robert G. Ingersoll, lately delivered before the annual meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston. By reading the selection "Unwelcome Children", in this issue, it will be seen that the conclusions reached by the great Agnostic are substantially, if not in exact words, the same as those we have been iterating and reiterating in Lucier's columns for many years.

As when he says, "There is but one hope. Ignorance, poverty and vice must stop populating the world. . . . To accomplish this there is but one way. Science must make woman the owner, the mistress of herself. Science, the only savior of mankind, must put it in the power of woman to decide for herself whether she will or will not become a mother. This is the solution of the whole question. . . . I look forward to the time when men and women. . . . will refuse to fill the world with failures. When that time comes the prison walls will fall, the dungeon will be flooded with light, and the shadow of the scaffold will cease to curse the earth."

Has Lucifer's editor or its correspondents at any time made more sweeping statements or more extravagant claims for the power of love in freedom than are herein made by Col. Ingersoll—the man, the orator, the philosopher—who is often quoted as a valiant champion of orthodox marriage?

Verily, verily, the world "do move." M. H.

"Home, Sweet Home."

In a home out in the country, not far from town, we are informed, there may be seen quite a pile of sewing lying on the floor, nearly in the middle of the room, that has been lying there undisturbed for more than six months. At that time the head of the house wanted a chair, and seeing but one handy he dumped to the floor the sewing which lay upon it. His wife asked him to pick it up. He said he wouldn't do it. She told him as he threw it there it could remain until he got ready to pick it up. She would never touch it. And there it remains a memorial to an incompatibility of disposition.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

[We are told that the teachings of Lucifer will "break up the home." I wish they could break up every such home as that described above. The home in which dwell love and harmony do not need to be broken up—and they cannot be broken up by the teachings of liberty.]

From 'Dust and Ashes."

"There be but two things which the soul may find
On this sad earth, and, finding, should hold fast—
The soul of beauty which dwells in the mind
And hence in all things, for all things are cast
In our soul's proper measure; and the last
And best is love; love truly can repay
The heart's full sacrifice, for love, being past,
Leaves something with us that no fate can slay;
And if love linger till the end be here,
What cause have we for sorrow then, what cause for fear?"
—Robert Burns Wilson.

Another Judge Commends a Wife-Beater.

Under the heading "Unique Decision," the "Chronicle," (Augusta, Ky.,) gives the following. It is in error, however, in calling the decision "unique." Other "Justices" have rendered similar decisions. It shows the power of legal marriage to protect the rights of men. For if the man and woman had not been married, no judge would have said the man had a right to beat a woman for not returning to her home before midnight. If men were deprived of the marriage law which protects them, what could the poor creatures do? L. H.

"Unwritten law decisions were discounted by a ruling of Judge Riley in the Lexington Police Court, Saturday. The Judge decides that a man is legally justified in whipping his wife if she leaves her home at night to roam the streets until late hours. The decision was caused by the trial of a colored man, accused of wifebeating. The testimony went to show that the wife had left home early in the evening and did not return until after midnight, and then he gave her a good beating. Judge Riley said he acted perfectly proper in the matter, except that in the future he should take a cowhide and lay it on good and strong."

The World Moves, Even Among Calvinists.

I take the following from "The Congregationalist" for July 1896. Perhaps the writer had been reading Lucifer; he or she had caught much of its cardinal teachings at least. Take courage, friends, when Calvin's saints say so much for true modesty. JAY CHAAPEL.

"A FALSE MODESTY.

"I believe that married women in general and mothers in particular are unanimous in maintaining that a girl shall be led blindfold through life. She is guarded, shielded, restricted, and taught to suppress as unmaidenly the innocent and natural questions which must arise in her mind. Even the text book upon physiology which is studied is incomplete, misleading and utterly unscientific. If her curiosity is excited by this system o avoidance she may perhaps gain information indirectly, but it is a half-knowledge which is worse than ignorance, and she must still feign innocence before her mother. If tempted, her resistance is due merely to timidity and the strong instinct of maidenhood. If she falls, no one ventures to blame those who have kept her ignorant and helpless. On the other hand, if she marries, she enters upon her new life with no conception of the duties and responsibilities before her and but scant preparation for them.

"Is there not too much false modesty among us? However tenderly girls may be reared, is it not a cruel kindness to keep them in ignorance of facts which are regarded as unnatural and improper only because they are treated as mysteries? Certainly a more natural system of education would tend to develop womanliness in girls, and would save them from much unrest and many mistakes.

A frank, scientific treatment of the subject is equally essential in the training of boys. Parents should be ashamed to leave their children of either sex to receive from others knowledge which it is their duty and privilege to impart. Rightly given, such knowledge must tend to purity of thought and action and a deep sense of personal responsibility.

A Children's Paper.

A copy of Volume 6, number 1 of Elmina's "Little Freethinker" has been waiting a notice for some weeks. Among the good things it contains, is the following "Lesson for the Young", entitled "Self Dependence," a lesson that all would do well to heed whether young or old:

"Lean on yourself. Try and be self-dependent. If you want anything, try and earn it or make it for yourself. Don't pray to any god to send it or try to coax it out of others but get it for yourself, and you will feel the full value of it. Think you own thoughts. Do not believe a thing simply because others do, but think and reason about it; consider it from all sides. There is nothing more valuable than truth and therefore we should be cautious as to what we accept as truth. Keep trying, testing, and experimenting. Experience is the surest road to fact and truth. One fact is worth a bushel of fictions, fables and fallacies. Churches and creeds are weak and fallible. Seek truth in Nature; love the good, the true and the beautiful, and life will be full of hope, love and joy."

"Little Freethinker," as the name indicates, is a freethought journal issued expressly for the use of the young. For many years Elmina D. Slenker has labored hard and sacrificed her little patrimony and her earnings to keep alive this unique venture in the field of freethought journalism. That there is need of such a paper, or magazine, few freethinkers will deny. Most heartily does Lucifer wish success to the editor and publisher of "Little Freethinker." Subscription only twenty-five cents a year. Address the publisher F. W. E. Cullingford, Camden N. J.; or the editor, Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville Va.

Specimen Misrepresentation.

To advocate unpopular ideas is always to expose one's self to the misrepresentations of the defenders of conventionality. A striking illustration of this is the following sent to us by one thoroughly familiar with the history of the Oneida Community:

FICTIONS OF "THE INDEPENDENT."

"He" (i. e. Mr. George Cragin) "had conveniently escaped with his life when his wife was drowned by capsizing of the small boat in which the two were rowing or sailing on the Hudson; and he had shortly after joined a community whose practice . . . . was for many years a disgrace to the State."—Independent, September 2, 1897.

FACTS.

Mr. George Cragin's wife was drowned in 1851 by the sinking of the sloop "Rebecca Ford" in the Hudson River near Hyde Park. Mr. Cragin was not with her on the sloop, and therefore did not "escape with his life." Mr. Cragin did not join the Oneida Community "shortly after," but was on the contrary one of the original members of that Community at the time of its inception in 1848—three years before the fatal accident referred to. The practice of the Oneida Community was not a disgrace, but on the contrary an honor to the State of New York, to the United States, and to the world.

For Young Unmarried People.

BY SARA C. CAMPBELL.

By request of the editor I write my best thoughts in regard to our young unmarried people.

To begin with, let them remain unmarried. But you say people will, in spite of every thing, be together in the most intimate relations of life, and it is right they should be, and in freedom no bad results will follow. But for the present, with an unenlightened public conscience against every movement towards freedom, let young people be fully and thoroughly instructed concerning the right use and the abuse of the sex nature.

Let them know that sex is the cause of attraction; that marriage means nothing more nor less than license to abuse the sex nature; that abuse is wrong; that there are two right uses for the sex relation.

First, and chiefly, the love relation, which when performed as taught in "Sex Ethics," "Talks on Nature," "Karezza," etc. results beneficially to the participants and does not create a new being. And the public conscience should, and in time will recognize this relation as right for all who have arrived at the age to so desire.

Second, the procreative relation, which in the past was the only sex relation known, except to a few. This relation should be used only for procreation. The two distinct relations are both right when not abused. But to use the procreative relation for pleasure is abuse, is exhausting and liable to result in undesired children and should never be used except for procreation may, with beneficial results be used when mutually desired, and does not produce offspring.

Sociologic Lesson. No. 86.

BY H. M. PARKHURST.

MODE OF DISTRIBUTION. A low rating tends to reduce the time spent at that rate. Consequently the average rating should be reduced a little below 1.0. Experience will determine very nearly how much below. When the several ratings have thus been proportionally reduced, it is only necessary to multiply the number of hours by the three ratings, that of the serie, of the group and of the member, to determine what is due to each one in franks; the frank being the money equivalent for an average hour's labor in this association.

For the reason above stated, the frank will not precisely represent the average payment per hour for labor. At the end of the year, the entire payment in franks and the total number of hours worked, may be ascertained; which will give the precise difference, and serve as a guide in future adjustments, and in computations based upon the productiveness of labor.

The value of the frank may thus be accurately adjusted to the time spent in labor. An equally important element is its accurate measure in the products of labor: for if prices are not accurately adjusted, those who purchase articles estimated too low will have an unjust advantage.

VARIOUS VOICES.

C. M. M. Spokane, Wash.—Have just read the letter of A.C., Iowa, in No. 765 and will say I admire the grit she has displayed in breaking the chains of sexual slavery. I would have sent a dollar now to pay for her Lucifer but there was not a dollar bill in the house tonight. However, she must not miss a single copy of the best reform paper we have, and I will send the first dollar bill that gets into the establishment. I enclose a few stamps to extend my own subscription.

J. Allen Evans, Ruddick La:—No. 765 of Lucifer to hand and is good as it always is. I am much interested in Leona R. Mathers whose friendly criticism of Mrs. ——'s article pleases me; I have to laugh every time I think of Mrs. —— signing herself "Alfreda" to hide her identity from "Peeping Toms"; it always reminds me of the ostrich with his head stuck in the sand. There is not a man, woman, or child in or about R——that would not recognize Mrs.——as Alfreda if they got hold of a Lucifer, and she has nothing to fear from the general readers of the Light Bearer.

Frank Harman, Shannon, Tex.—The reform you are working for is the most important of all reforms. When women are emancipated from sex slavery the first and most important step will have been taken to free all the people from all other slaveries. When will the stupid masses see how infinitely superior the free woman's position is to that of the married woman? When will they see that the main point of difference between the new woman and the old is that the old are prostitutes and the new are not. When will they see that to sell onesself for a lifetime is no less prostitution than to sell onesself for a night?

E. Bordwell, Hartington, Nebraska:—I see by the numbers that my subscription to Lucifer has expired, and for fear of missing a copy will forward herewith the almighty $ which will insure its weekly visits for another year. I also want No. 1 of Free Society Library. (The Chicago Martyrs) for which I enclose 25cts. In No. 762 "Alfreda" suggests that Lucifer would be able to do better work if the articles were toned down so as not to shock the modest. Influences must reach backward to affect the masses. You can't get behind them and push them forward but the few in advance must gradually draw them forward, and that without either party realizing it; but the advance are the ones who need the solid food. Enough crumbs will fall from them to satisfy the masses. Lucifer should not be content to be a crumb but should continue to be solid food for deep thinkers and its influence will reach farther than we think. Let its good work grow better and stronger instead of weaker, that it may become even more of a power to arouse the radicals. If it is principle we wish to establish, policy plays a poor part, if it is favors we are after—either political financial or social—policy plays a very important part.

E. W. Chamberlain, New York:—This morning's papers report the death of that depraved judge who played his lewd pranks upon you. "The memory of the just is blessed, but the name of the wicked shall rot." With every opportunity and inducement to be just Judge Foster of deliberate choice elected to be wickedly oppressive and tyrannically unjust towards you. In the history of the yet unended struggle for liberty his name will ever henceforth stand as a rotting blight.

[The language of Friend Chamberlain seems to me somewhat severe, not to say uncharitable. Cassius Gaius Foster was a physical wreck, and to a great extent, as I think, a mental wreck, for the last eight or ten years of his life. I pitied far more than I blamed him for the part he took in sending me to prison. I recognized and still recognize that he was, like all the rest of us, the product of heredity and environment. Hence I think it unphilosophical to cherish hard or revengeful feelings toward him, whether living or dead. While it is true that bad laws would be powerless for evil if no man could be found unmanly enough to enforce them I think it more rational to work for the abolition of such laws than to fight the men who are weak enough or vicious enough to become the executors of such laws. M. H.]

John H. Liening, Colusa, Cal.:—In the last issue of Lucifer I read with interest the investigation of a private detective into the burning of Sam Hose, and the crime for which he was burned. I would like to have further particulars of this investigation. What can you say for the truth of this detective's statement. Another interesting article in this same number was the article concerning the ancestry of Abraham Lincoln. Please inform me where I can get the volume entitled "The Genesis of Abraham Lincoln," by James H. Cathey of North Carolina. Do you know anything of the veracity of this writer? I would like to know where he procured such information.

[I have sent Mr. Liening a copy of "Lynch Law in Georgia," which contains the detective's statement. As to the veracity of the detective, I know nothing. Le Vin is the manager of a detective agency in this city. When asked if he could send a reliable man down to Georgia to investigate, he said he would himself go, and would make no charge except for his expenses. The fact that he sympathised with the negroes may be taken as evidence for or against the honesty of his investigation.

In regard to the story of Abraham Lincoln's parentage, "Bill Arp" gave the names and addresses of author and publisher of the book, but I neglected to make a note of them. It is probable that a letter addressed to "Bill Arp," in care of the "Atlanta Constitution" would reach him and procure the desired information. L. H.]

W. G. Markland, Sherwood, Tenn.—Am glad to know that your vacation gave improvement to health. It could hardly do otherwise for it is a stern fact of life that change is essential to the preservation as well as to the restoration of health. In this age of X rays and liquefied air we may expect some wonderful discoveries in the therapeutics of magnetism.

In regard to the suggestion of a colony I think the recognition of a few inexorable facts essential to practice. Your logic in regard to the superior importance of sexual reform is sound, but the facts are against you. Whether we posit evolution as an intelligent or non-intelligent, non-designing force, the fact remains that it is pushing economic reform to the front and no power can stay it until it has worked out its potencies, there being no other power. Sexual reform is now but a satellite influencing and reflecting light but may be merged in the economic planet, in time.

To preserve life, food and its congeners are and ever must be, of first importance. Preservation of life precedes reproduction of life.

The battle now joined is for the preservation of life on a humane basis, and until that battle is won the reproduction of life must be a reserve issue.

I think the colony plan for libertarianism is unwise for this reason. The ubiquitous priest will spy it out and use the bestial concensus to persecute and destroy. Groups of say ten or less adults are safer and a group of groups say ten miles apart would be better than to be in one body.

The tendency toward dissension would be weaker and the opportunity for a change of exchanges of the magnetism would be better. For manufacturing purposes concentration is essential but in soil culture groups would be better, safer, and I think happier.

I had some varied experiences in my puny attempts at colonization. Had a large correspondence and the chief obstacles were poverty on the part of those who would, and indifference on the part of those who could. My satisfaction in the effort is that it added a modicum to the ferment.

We will watch for such moves with anxiety, hail with gladness and join if possible.

[Brother Markland's idea of many small groups of libertarian reformers is a good and practicable one, as I think. As to what the "facts" teach in regard to the comparative importance of sexual or economic reforms, there will probably always be differences of opinion. Col. Ingersoll, for instance, as quoted elsewhere in this issue seems to agree substantially with Lucifer's teaching that the "solution of the whole question" lies chiefly in making "woman the owner, the mistress of herself," and thereby putting a stop to production of "unwelcome children," a stop to the production of "failures." Until this is done neither the economic problem nor any other societary reform can be settled right. M. H.]

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Persons Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 20 cents. Address Moses Harman, 107 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

Government Analyzed. By John E. Kelso. The chapter headings are: "Derivations and Definitions of Political Terms; Various Forms of Government; General Principles of Government; Functions of Government; Origin of Government; Declaration of Independence; Articles of Confederation; Defects of the Confederation; Formation of the Constitution of the United States; Constitution of the United States; Taxation; Tariff or Protection; War; Punishments; Marriage; Religion; Prohibition; Money; What a Government Should Be." 320 pages. Price reduced to $1.00.

With Lucifer one year to a new subscriber, $1.50.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. E. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

"Loma" —A CITIZEN OF VENUS," by Prof. Wm Windsor. A story of surpassing interest, largely devoted to Sexologic and Sociologic problems. Like Bellamy in his "Looking Backward," the writer of "Loma" believes in the "state," as a factor in social evolution, but individualists will probably forgive this feature for the sake of the radically revolutionary ideas in regard to popular theories—sexologic, theologic, cosmologic, etc. Substantially printed and artistically bound. Price, post-paid, $1.50. Address this office.

Some Problems in Social Freedom. Presidential address delivered by Lillian Harman before the Legitimation League, at Holborn Restaurant, London. "Freedom in Social Relations;" "The Ownership of Women;" "Where Draw the Line?" "What Would Become of the Family?" "Marriage a 'confidence game';" "How Society Protects Children." Price, 5 cents. For sale at this office.

768.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

Songs of the Unblind Cupid.

Under the title "Songs of the Unblind Cupid" an edition de luxe, in red and black, of a few hitherto unpublished poems by the liberal poet, J. Wm. Lloyd, is just issued.

The verses are printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle-edged, hand-made paper of cerulean tint. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering.

Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red, and an initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors.

Mr. Lloyd, as author of "Wind Harp Songs" and the "Red Heart in a White World," needs no introduction to the liberal public. These few new poems of love, liberty and nature are here preserved in the highest style of the printer's art, and should find a place in the collection of every friend of freedom, every lover of poetry and every admirer of choice and dainty publications.

Edition limited to 650 copies. There will be no second edition.

Price per copy, 30 cents. Sent postpaid upon receipt of price by M. Harman, 507 Carroll Avenue, Chicago.

THE BALLAD OF READING JAIL. BY C. 3.3.

This powerful poem of more than 600 lines, is the work of OSCAR WILDE C. 3. 3. having been the poets prison number during his confinement in Reading Jail. It is dedicated to the memory of a trooper of the Horse Guards who was hanged in the jail at that time, and it depicts the terrible sensations of the author and his fellow prisoners before and after the execution.

Just issued; price, in cloth, blue, vellum back, beautifully printed from large type on hand-made antique paper, deckle edges; reading matter on one side of the paper; a sumptuous book of 96 pages, 7 inches by 5, $1. In paper, 44 pages, 10 cents. Mailed postpaid on receipt of price, by M. Harman, 507 Carroll Avenue, Chicago.

THE WORKS OF A PIONEER SHOULD NOT BE OVERLOOKED.

The following by WILLIAM DENTON, pioneer Freethought and Spiritualist lecturer, and naturalist, who died while on a journey of scientific research in the wilds of Australia some fifteen years ago, are of as vital importance now as when they were written:

Sermons from Shakespeare's Text:
"Tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones and good in everything."
Orthodoxy False, Since Spiritualism is True.
The God Proposed for Our National Constitution.
What is Right?
Man's True Saviors.
Christianity No Finality or Spiritualism Superior to Christianity.
Who are Christians?

Sent to any address for 10 cents each, by M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.

This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.10. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be FREE: love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrially."—Page 265. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CITYLESS AND COUNTRYLESS WORLD," by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 450 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Free Love; A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of connubial love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Almira Kent. Published in 1874, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence. 140 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.
"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology; thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.
"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.
Sample pages free. Prepaid $1.00. Address this office.

Books Worth Reading FREE!

Send us twenty-five cents for a thirteen weeks' trial subscription to Lucifer and we will present to you your choice of the following books, to the value of 25 cents. Read the list carefully. Every book is interesting and thought-inspiring.

John's Way; a domestic radical story, by Elmina D. Slenker,	.25
Human Rights; J. Madison Hook,	10
Vital Force, Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation, by A. Chavannes,	25
Practical Co-operation; by E. C. Walker,	.10
The Revival of Puritanism; " "	.10
Love and the Law; " "	.05
Digging for Bedrock, by Moses Harman,	.10
In Hell and the Way Out; H. E. Allen,	10

The American Institute of Phrenology.

President Mrs. Charlotte Fowler Wells, incorporated 1866, opens its next session on September 5th 1899. For prospectus send (free on appliion) to the Secretary, care of FOWLER & WELLS CO., 27 East 21st St., New York

RIGHTS OF WOMEN IN THE SEXUAL RELATIONS,

By Karl Heinzen. A new edition together with the startling letters of Louise Mayer on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German women at Frauenstadt. A book of 356 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Price paper bound, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW. A primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. A valuable compendium on Sex Ethics. Startling and Scientific Price, 10 cents.

LOVE AND THE LAW. By E. C. Walker. A clear, concise statement of social liberty in contradistinction to the much lauded legal bondage now almost universally upheld. An excellent missionary document. Two copies, 5 cents; 20 cents per dozen.

The Outcome of Legitimation. By Oswald Dawson. This address was to have appeared in the January "Adult," but the printers of that number played Bowdler on a small scale, and refused to print it, alleging that the matter which they did print was "bad enough, but we are printing that and decline to print more." The lecture deals with some problems arising from the practicalization of the theories of free love. Price, 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

The Story of An African Farm. Olive Schreiner's masterpiece. A story of the struggle for light, the search for truth, the yearning for happiness of bright young English and German people, among the ignorant and coarse Boers and Kaffirs of South Africa. This is a work of art, and of truth. Well bound in cloth. 288 pages. Price 45 cents, postage 10 cents. For sale at this office.

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races." Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III., Co-operation; Chapter V., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, ten cts.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

Love Ventures of Tom, Dick, and Harry. A Novel with an Affidavit. And they were naked and not ashamed (Gen. ii, 25). 16 full-page French-Art Illustrations. Illuminated covers. 12mo. 208 pp. paper, 25c.; boards, 50c.

Personal. Readers of Lucifer who would like a quiet, home-like room in a private family when visiting Chicago, should communicate with X. Y. Z., care of Lucifer, 507 Carroll Ave.

Personal: A radical gentleman desires to make the acquaintance of a radical lady with a view to meeting and comradeship. I want one who would like to visit and work in New England. I would assist the right one to come here. Please send recent photo and personal description in first letter; also full particulars. Address G., care of Lucifer.

Wanted. Subscribers to "Little Freethinker." The only liberal paper published for the young. 25 cents a year. Also names of liberal women who want correspondents. Address Elmina Drake Slenker, Knoxville Pub. Co., Va.

Liberal Home. Those who wish to join in such a home that is now well established, please address with stamp, A. M. Corey, Electra, Marion Co., Fla.

Socialists: Ten cents pays for "Weekly Commoner" trial month. New radical socialist magazine; able writers; eight pages. Spicy and up-to-date. Box 359, Portland, Oregon.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 26. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, JULY 8, E. M. 299. [C. E. 1899.] WHOLE No. 769.

The "Rebels."

Shoot down the rebels—men who dare
To claim their native land!
Why should the white invader spare
A dusky heathen hand?

You bought them from a Spanish king,
You bought the men he stole;
You bought perhaps a ghastlier thing—
The Duke of Alva's soul!

"Freedom," you cry, and train your guns
On men who would be freed,
And, in the name of Washington,
Achieve a Weyler's deed!

Boast of the benefits you spread—
The faith of Christ you hold;
Then seize the very soil you tread,
And fill your arms with gold.

Go, prostitute your mother tongue,
And give the "rebel" name
To those who to their country clung,
Preferring death to shame.

And call him "loyal"—him who brags
Of countrymen betrayed—
The patriot of the money-bags,
The loyalist of trade!

Oh, for the good old Roman days
Of robbers good and true,
Who scorned to oil with pious phrase,
The deeds they dared to do!

The days before degenerate thieves
Devised the coward lie
Of blessings the enslaved received,
Whose rights their arms deny!

I hate the oppressor's iron rod,
I hate his murderous ships;
But most of all I hate, O God!
The lie upon his lips!

Nay, if they still demand recruits
To curse Manila bay,
Be men: refuse to act like brutes,
And massacre and slay!

Or, if you will persist to fight,
With all a soldier's pride
Why, then, be rebels for the right
By Aguinaldo's side!

—Ernest Howard Crosby.

Common-Law Rights of Women.

BY C. L. JAMES.

I never read Mrs. Gage's "Woman, Church, and State" but I suppose Mrs. Slenker's citations from it are correct; and I am sure some of them will not bear examination. Mrs. Gage, according to Mrs Slenker says: "While under the old Common Law, a husband was compelled to leave to his wife one third of his property, and could leave her as much more as he pleased, by Canon Law he was prohibited from leaving her more than one third and could leave her as much less as he pleased." I think I can see how these statements originated; but they are very loose and inaccurate. The general spirit of canon jurisprudence was unfavorable to the property rights of women (Maine, Ancient Law p. 158. Leckey, History of Morals Vol. II. p. 359) but I find no evidence of any such definite charge. What Mrs. Gage probably means is this. By Roman law a husband married in the manner called usus, (the only one practiced under the Empire) was not obliged to leave his wife anything. It was, accordingly, the universal practice for parents to give their daughters a dowry, which the law guarded so strictly that Justinian does not allow the wife herself to alienate it, "lest" he remarks, "the weakness of her sex should be her ruin."

But among the Germans a different practice prevailed. "The wife" says Tacitus "does not bring a dower to her husband, but the husband to the wife." This dower (more strictly called jointure) was, no doubt, the old fashioned price for a bride, (Greek, beedna; barbarous Latin, mundium) which, by a change natural in nascent civilization, came to be paid, not to her parents but herself. In England it was early decided that she had a right to a third. But though this antedates the Court of Chancery, it is plainly what lawyers call a judgment in equity.

I think also that Mrs. Gage is mistaken in supposing it earlier than the limitation. The jointure used to be paid the bride the day after marriage (when her purchaser had learned what she was worth,) and hence was called Morgengab. But the Germans made their appearance in the Roman Empire as mercenary soldiers, under a bankrupt government which had nothing to pay them in except land. Thus originated the holding of land by military service so important during the Middle Ages. In order to shirk the service, feudatories were wont to alienate their land, largely by transfer to their wives. The laws of feudal states are full of provisions against these evasions. Luitbrand limited the amount of the Morgengab among the Lombards to a fourth. The English limit was a third. It is also provided that the jointure must be given ad ostium ecclesiae which amounts to "before marriage" and that no such gift should be valid if made in the (bridal) chamber, or the bed of death, or any where, when the parties are alone together."

These statutes, I imagine, are what Mrs. Gage means by the Canon Law. They are much older than the decision that the wife is entitled to a third "by courtesy." This seems to have sprung from cases in which a stupid husband had meant to endow his wife, but had forgotten to specify what lands she was to have. It presupposes the custom of giving her a third. Here also is probably the origin of that matrimonial formula which we think so mendacious and absurd, "With all my worldly goods I thee endow." The meaning was that, to silence any cavil he endowed her with all he could alienate, which, at feudal law, was a third.

Mrs. Gage is also credited with saying that both by church and state, brides were held subject to the right of the feudal lord. The whole question about the "privilege of the first night" is involved in extreme obscurity. The two principal writers on the Middle Ages confess, one by silence, the other by ambiguity, that they can make nothing of it. Hallam does not mention it at all. Gibbon's expressions are unintelligible. It would doubtless be presumptuous to attempt explaining what they could not; but that certain guiding stars have been discovered since their time. We know, though they doubtless did not, that among savages at the earliest, women are the common property of men. When a chief introduced a captive into a tribe he had to redeem her by a fine from common use (our treat at marriage) and this as a rule, could only be done after she had been ravished, which was still the custom of the Sioux as long as they could maintain their independence. A relic of it, surviving in civilization, is the practice of kissing the bride. Kings as personification of the whole people, claimed this prior right, which had belonged to all. With other usages, this was imported into the Roman Empire by the German mercenaries; and is first heard of under half-barbarian emperors like Maximan. In the unsettled state of feudal customs, the tax on marriage, the immoral commutation, and the exaction of both, continued no doubt, to maintain an ambiguous existence which may well puzzle historians who have no data save contemporary allusions. But the privilege of the first night is not provided for by any extant code; and certainly was never sanctioned by the church, which has real sins enough to answer for without any such as are not real.

Evolution in Medical Science.

The following paragraphs are from the address of Prof. Edwin Burdick, of the Harvey Medical College, this city, delivered at the Commencement exercises of that now popular institution on Saturday evening, June 24. As indicated in this address the object of the Harvey Medical College is to furnish to all, women as well as men, the poor as well as the rich, the opportunity of acquiring a broad, liberal, scientific and up-to-date medical education:

Before the dawn of written history, man's ideas were shaped by the legends of heroes. As a simple thought would develop in his childish brain his wonder would attribute the source to some spectral vagary; when he told of it his fellows reverently listened and erected an altar to the crude imagery. Thus was established the priestcraft which for long ages presided over human thought. They claimed for themselves the best products, the richest treasures and the easiest existence. They posed as the fountains of wisdom. Their wrath was feared more than even death itself. In seed time or harvest, n the field or at the fireside, the home or the cradle, they claimed to be the nearest to the unseen powers which could help or harm. In sickness the oracle was consulted and its prescription was the only remedy; and when some one died the priest piloted the passing soul to an elysian beyond the tomb, or consigned it to the caverns of darkness.

Thus, placed in a position of luxury, they opposed every discovery which threatened to expose their craft or explain the mysterious actions of Nature. Wealth was lavished and intelligence palsied to glorify them and their countless temples. Imagination peopled the clouds with hideous monsters whose whims were human destiny, and the race bowed at this shrine of dream and fable.

It is unfortunate that the healing art was thus immured in a wall of superstition so dense that it stifled investigation for ages. About the middle of the fourth century before Christ, Pythagoras established a communistic school which withstood the vengeance of the priesthood for nearly a hundred years, and a little later Hippocrates parted the curtains of myth, and separated fact from fallacy, experiment from speculation. There was no real advancement, however, until the founding of the school at Alexandria; where, under patronage of the Ptolemies, dissection of human bodies was first legalized, and by degrees inspiration and oracle fell into disuse.

When Constantine was converted to Christianity the frenzy which had enthralled mankind under Pagan worship again burst forth in all its horrors. The followers of the meek and lowly Jesus submerged medical learning in a vagary far worse than in the days of mythology. Schools were abolished, learning disinherited, resort was had to charms of saints,—prayers, and the numerous other follies of religious superstition. The crusaders destroyed every vestige of learning upon which they could lay their hands, and had it not been for the liberality of the Caliphs the burning of the Alexandrian libraries would have been the funeral pyre of all ancient knowledge. Nestor, a bishop of Constantinople, was banished as a heretic, and his followers founded a clinical medical school, the first in history, at Edessia, Mesopotamia, where was preserved the wisdom of the ancients from the onslaught of the crusaders, whose venom covered Europe with ignorance and blood.

The church dignitaries were the tyrants of the time. Their word was law, and to doubt their tenets was the awful crime of blasphemy. All the cunning instruments of torture were invented for its punishment. Every scholar in Christendom was either slain or banished. Ignorance and sanctity held the rod of empire. To be ragged and filthy was to be held sacred, and for a thousand years no one took a bath. Plagues and epidemics nearly depopulated the land. Many times there was no one to bury the putrid bodies of the dead. Often the church or cathedral halls were strewn with the corpses of the penitents. In this misery and distress the people turned to the barbarians; the works of the Arabians were translated and science began to mingle with superstition. The sorcery of the alchemist was displaced by the discoveries of chemistry. Philosophy was again awakened from its stupor; medicine was separated from theology, and mankind began to get well.

Every new thought has been scarred by the traitor's lash. Every new discovery has run the gauntlet of cowards or knaves. Truth though non-aggressive has been a martyr at each turn in life's path. Those who sleep in the lap of luxury and who fear for the security of their couch hate progress. Their persecution has filled the world with pain and sorrow and the soil with the bones of the martyred dead. They are the vultures of every age.

At the archway of every science hall can still be seen the shadow of the fiend whose shrine is fed with human sacrifice. Paradoxical as it may seem competition fears a competitor. It is from this prolific womb that have come all the hybrid distortions of truth. Evolution has ever been pounding at the door of prejudice, battering down the walls of ignorance in each epoch of the past. It has destroyed the hatred of the church and forced guessing from the sick chamber.

Every theory which has challenged the attention of the world shows a struggle of class against sect. When the Moors were expelled from Spain by the Christians, it was a struggle between religious sects; when Michael Servetus, the discoverer of pulmonary circulation, was burned at the stake by that merciful protestant, John Calvin, it was theory and faith against science. And when the jealousy of the Galenites was opposed by other sects, it was science against experiment, but the great wars for liberty awakened the slumbering masses, and directed the opposition against he classes. It then became a question of caste. Labor has carried the chains which clanked a dismal dirge of bondage during the long centuries—the toilers were not considered capable of learning; their ambition was sleeping, their intellect was dumb. They were the serfs and did not deserve to be free, but now and then a genius would come forth, glorifying the slumbering monster and his past career, and another martyr would grace the gibbet or a felon's cell.

Like John Harvey, who doubted the theories of his time, and who demonstrated to the world the circulation of the blood, the founders of this college doubt that wisdom is the property or heritage of wealth, and listening to the well learned lessons of sorrow have established this college for those who toil,—for those young men and women who by their daily labor support themselves and perhaps their aged parents; for those who will sacrifice their time and pleasure for knowledge, for the doubting, discontented disciples of progress, these are our students. These have no parents who can claim financial success by commercial schemes, by federal decisions, by army contracts, or by cornering some necessity of life. No! They have made their own way by toil and sacrifice, and their diplomas will not be colored by Armour beef, or armor plate, nor will they have the odor of Standard Oil, but the sweet perfume of industry and labor.

In giving to such as these their degree we feel that we are answering evolution's latest call. We feel that we are giving to the future a wealth which cannot be measured, a power which will help to lift the race, and make the world purer, and clearer and sweeter; a brighter, cleaner, freer, better place in which to live.

The Maternal Duties of the Human Female.*

Because of her maternal duties, the human female is said to be unable to get her own living. As the maternal duties of other females do not unfit them for getting their own living and also the livings of their young, it would seem that the human maternal duties require the segregation of the entire energies of the mother to the service of the child during her entire adult life or so large a proportion of them that not enough remains to devote to the individual interests of the mother.

Such a condition, did it exist, would of course excuse and justify the pitiful dependence of the human female, and her support by the male. As the queen bee, modified entirely to maternity, is supported, not by the male, to be sure, but by her coworkers, the "old maids," the barren working bees, who labor so patiently and lovingly in their branch of the maternal duties of the hive, so would the human female, modified entirely to maternity, become unfit for any other exertion, and a helpless dependent.

Is this the condition of human motherhood? Does the human mother, by her motherhood, thereby lose control of brain and body, lose power and skill for other work? Do we see before us the human race, with all its females segregated entirely to the uses of motherhood, consecrated, set apart, specially developed, spending every power of their nature on the service of their children?

We do not. We see the human mother worked far harder than a mare, laboring her life long in the service, not of her children only, but of men, husbands, brothers, fathers, whatever male relatives she has; for mother and sister also; for the church a little, if she is allowed, for society if she is able; for charity, education and reform,—working in many ways that are not the ways of motherhood.

It is not motherhood that keeps the housewife on her feet from dawn till dark; it is house service not child service. Women work longer and harder than most men, and not solely in maternal duties. The savage mother carries the burdens and does all the menial service for the tribe. The peasant mother toils in the fields, and the workingman's wife in the home. Many mothers, even now, are wage earners for the family, as well as the bearers and rearers of it. And the women who are not so occupied, the women who belong to rich men—here perhaps is the exhaustive devotion to maternity which is supposed to justify an admitted economic dependence. But we do not find it even among these. Women of ease and wealth provide for their children better care than the poor woman can, but they do not spend more time upon it themselves, nor more care and effort. They have other occupation.

In spite of their supposed segregation to maternal duties, the human female, the world over, works at extra-maternal duties for hours enough to provide her with an independent living, and then is denied independence on the ground that motherhood prevents her working!

If this ground is tenable, we should find a world full of women who never lifted a finger save in the service of their children, and of men who did all the work besides, and waited on the women whom motherhood prevented from waiting on themselves. The ground is not tenable. A human female, healthy, sound, has twenty five years of life before she is a mother, and should have twenty five years after the period of such maternal service as is expected of her has been given. The duties of grandmotherhood are surely not alleged as preventing economic independence.

*From "Women and Economics," by Charlotte Perkins Stetson. 360 pages. Bound in cloth. Price, $1.60. For sale at this office.

The Peace Congress.

Our readers do not need to be told that there is now sitting at The Hague, in Europe, a convention or congress composed of Delegates from many nations and peoples, whose professed object is the disarmament of, or the reducing to comparatively, small dimensions, the vast military establishments of the world, and the adoption of peaceful arbitration for national grievances in lieu of the usual resort to the arbitrament of the sword, the bayonet or the machine gun.

If we could believe that the promotors of this international "peace congress" were sincere in this statement of purposes there would be good cause for rejoicing on the part of all who prefer peace and brotherly kindness to war and the horrors that war inevitably brings in its train. But taking the lessons of experience for our guide it is hard to believe that the "kings of the earth" really mean anything more than the amusement of the robbed and enslaved masses when they speak of national disarmament and arbitration of governmental disputes. Self-preservation is said to be the first law of nature, and these national rulers are not so stupid as to be ignorant of what disarmament would really mean. The following utterance credited to the "New York Voice," the leading champion of National Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic in this country, shows very clearly that the peace policy means the abolition of force, and the abolition of force in the settlement of disputes means the abolition of government.

Says the Voice:

"The truth of the matter is that not a government represented at The Hague, not even our own, dares to give any recognition to the fundamental idea underlying the Czar's appeal for peace. The argument against war, unless it be merely an argument based on expediency, is in its last analysis an argument against force, and every government rests upon force. We talk glowingly—at least our anti-imperialists do just now—about all governments deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; but what man ever gave his consent to be imprisoned for life, hanged, or electrocuted? If, then, a government's very existence depends upon the use of force constantly and inevitably toward its own citizens, what hope is there of inducing it to forego the use of force against another people when it sees a good chance of using it successfully? For instance, are we to pledge ourselves to arbitrate critical questions that arise with our Canadian neighbors, but when it comes to a Chicago strike to refuse all suggestion of arbitration and to shoot down all opposition to the government? If war is wrong—not merely inexpedient, but wrong—between us and another nation, is it any less wrong between us as a nation and a portion of our own people? In other words, this peace idea has in it dynamite enough to blow to pieces all the governments on earth. No wonder they touch it very gingerly there at The Hague".

"Bible Stories, No. I."

From the compiler, James H. Young, we have received "Bible Stories No. 1. The sacred Vedas as written by Manou, and the Genesis of Moses, or the Story of the Creation and the Fall; Three hundred stanzas, with an introduction and appendix." Mr. Young has generously donated copies of this work to be sold for the benefit of Lucifer. 180 pages. Price 25 cents. For sale here.

There is no law to prohibit fighting in the State of Matrimony.—Sel.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

ON SUNDAY afternoon, at 3 o'clock, near N. E. corner of Humboldt Park, this city, M. Harman will speak on Social Progress.

On Tuesday eve July 11, Mrs. Anna Ballard will deliver an address at 507 Carroll ave; subject "Domestic Life in Burmah." Mrs. Ballard has spent some years in Burmah and has had good opportunities for observing the social customs of a people called "barbarians," and "heathens," by our Anglo-Saxon Christians.

Fourth of July.

As I write these lines my ears are stunned and my nerves painfully battered by the continuous explosions of Chinese firecrackers, Roman candles, bombs and all the horrible inventions of a people who seem to be reverting to a state of primitive barbarism.

It is well known to ethnologists that one of the leading characteristics of barbarous, or semi-barbarous tribes of people is their love of harsh and discordant noises, in their recreations and especially when they go to war. It is now near seven o'clock in the evening, and this intensely discordant rattle and roar has been kept up, presumably all over the city of Chicago, in every street and alley, without one moment's cessation since a very early hour this morning, and will doubtless be kept up till a late hour tonight. Many tons of powder and many thousands of dollars are going up in smoke as offering to the God of war.

We dignify these Fourth of July demonstrations by the name of "patriotism" and "loyalty to the flag" but the sounds produced are the sounds of battle; the explosions of firecrackers are almost identical in sound with the report of small arms and the explosions of the larger bombs sound exactly like the discharges of cannon. And when the list of casualities comse in it will doubtless be found that, taking the country over, the number of killed and wounded will run up into the hundreds, if not thousands, to say nothing of property destroyed by fires ignited by the fireworks of various kinds.

But it is not by sounds alone that we are painfully reminded of the crude and primitive stage of civilization in which we are now living. The utterances of the daily press, that reflector of the average mental status, are equally significant. Take for instance, the following clipped from the editorial columns of the Chicago "Tribune," one of the chief organs of the "new imperialism," in this city:

"Americans have more solid reasons for celebrating the advent of Independence day in 1899 than in any of the previous 123 years of our national history. This Fourth of July brings more cause for rejoicing than the last, though the battle of Santiago and the destruction of Cervera's fleet had then just passed into history. Within the intervening year the full promise of those two victories and of Dewey's crushing blow at Manila has been realized. Spanish sovereiguty has ceased in the western hemisphere, and the American flag floats over the lands in the Orient and the Occident which Spain forfeited through its intolerable misgovernment. The United States is larger, stronger, greater, and more universally respected than ever before in its history. The eagle has every reason to scream."

The closing line of this typical utterance is specially significant. The eagle is the emblem of rapacity and cruelty. Its claws and its beak are fitted by nature for tearing and devouring the quivering flesh of hares and lambs and fawns, and this is just what the American eagle is now doing in the Philippines. The natives of those islands are as innocent of wrong towards the people of this country as ever was fawn or lamb innocent of wrong-doing towards the robber of the skies, the sea and the earth, the so-called "King of birds."

Later: I have just glanced over the morning "Tribune" July 5, and among the conspicuous headings is the following:

"Havoc of the 'Fourth.' Three Known killed; 1,074 injured; Fire Loss, $149,105. Statistics Showing Casualties Reported in Chicago and other Principal Cities—Toy cannons Fatal to One and Maim 113—Fire-crackers Wound 627—Explosions of Powder Burn 60—Sky Rockets Claim Victims, Stray Bullets catch 15, etc."

If such be the first and meagre report of the day's doings from Chicago and other principal cities, what would it be if full reports could be had from all the cities, towns and hamlets of the United States? The report adds "The number of those fatally injured is large. The cannon firecracker and the toy cannon claimed the most victims".

In ancient and semi-barbarous Rome the war spirit was kept alive by national amusements in which men were compelled to fight each other to the death, and sometimes by throwing prisoners to the wild beasts, but in America this same spirit is cultivated chiefly by the annual carnival called "Independence Day." M. H.

The Mother's Reward.

The following paragraphs in reply to what was said in No. 766 under the head, "Recognition and Reward for Motherhood," have been sent us by Friend Brinkerhoff:

"Having found myself fully in accord with his position so far as he had expressed himself I did not intend, in my remarks on 'The Mother's Reward' in Lucifer of June 17, to antagonize any part of the editor's Hammond letter; but in his reply in the same number there is one point which calls for protest. Mr. Harman says: 'No libertarian wants motherhood and its products to be commercial commodities.' I emphatically dissent. There is at least one libertarian who thinks that there must be commercialism or else the burdens of maternity must be unfairly distributed.

"The editor disclaims using the word reward in a commercial sense in the Hammond letter. Then I confess a mistake on my part in assuming that he meant support for the mother. I was hoping that the editor had in mind some change to propose to insure support for the mother without state aid. Even the fully quoted paragraph does not answer the question how the mother is to be equitably supported during years of gestation and lactation. But we confidently expect an elucidation of this subject from the editor's pen, for he concludes his remarks as follows: 'How the free exchange is to be effected, and what should be the man's part in the equitable co-operation, it is to be hoped will receive attention and elaboration in subsequent issues of the Light-Bearer'."

Our friendly critic is in the right when he says, "Even the fully quoted paragraph does not answer the question how the mother is to be equitably supported during the years of gestation and lactation." That is to say, the general statement that equitable co-operation must take the place of the wage-slave system, and the supplementary statement that "motherhood and its products should not be commercial commodities" do not explain in detail what is meant by recognition and reward for motherhood. But while the details are lacking I think the general outline sufficiently clear. To avoid repetition I ask those who take interest in this sexuo-economic question, this supreme and always "previous" question of "Rights of Women in the Sex Relation," to read again what was said of it in the issue of June 17.

Our friendly critic "thinks there must be commercialism else the burdens of maternity will be be unfairly distributed." A little attention to definition just here would perhaps be helpful. The original meaning of commerce and commercialism is an exchange of commodities. But the word has a modern or evoluted sense.

In its modern sense commercialism stands for nearly the exact opposite of free exchange, or of equitable co-operation. Commercialism as we now have it means wholesale robbery of both producer and consumer by means of those legalized fiends, those law-created despots known as corporations, and these legalized fiends depend for their power upon the anti-natural trinity known as interest, rent, and profit,

Commencing business the commercial speculator, the merchant or middleman between producer and consumer, takes into his calculation so much for "interest" on his investment, whether he works on borrowed capital or with his own money; so much for "rent"—not for the use of houses merely, but for ground-rent; so much for clear "profit"—after deducting all expenses, such as interest, rent, clerk-hire, insurance, taxes, etc., etc. If the prospect is that no margin of profit will be left after deducting all these he simply declines to go into the speculation.

Modern commercialism, like the corporations without which it could not exist, "has no soul"! Commercialism is greed or avarice personified. Commercialism crushes out all the nobler, all the finer sentiments of the human heart, all feelings brotherhood, of kinship among the different families or races of men. It is commercialism that has carried on the slave trade since before the dawn of history to the present time. It is commercialism that sent the British armies and navies to conquer the Hindoos—to defend the interests of the "East India Company," it was said. It was commercialism that forced the opium trade—at the cannon's mouth—upon the protesting Chinese. It was commercialism that has committed the unspeakable atrocities upon the South Africans and the South Sea Islanders, for the last four hundred years, and it is commercialism that is now butchering the patriots of the Philippines, in the name of humanity or of philanthropy. Some of the promoters and defenders of the Philippine war now openly acknowledge that its purpose is "markets" for our merchandise.

Such being the history and character of commercialism I for one want none of it in any relation or function of life, least of all in that most important of all human relations and functions—motherhood. It is largely because there is so much of the commercial in modern matrimony that I demand free motherhood. I have no fear that motherhood will not be properly supported when the commercial element is left out. I certainly advocate no scheme of "state aid" for motherhood or childhood. Voluntarism—individualistic and socialistic but not communistic, under equitable conditions—free land, free money, free exchange, free labor, free womanhood and manhood, will fill the bill. Commercialism and public charity—state aid—are alike the product of artifical conditions, of governmental denial of equal rights for all and special privileges for none.

As a general statement it seems to me this is sufficiently explicit. If more definite details are asked for I will try to give my views thereon, speaking for none but myself, and only for the present time. But this will require more space than can be spared in this issue. M. H.

We mortals, men and women, devour many a disappointment between breakfast and dinner-time; keep back the tears and look a little pale about the lips, and in answer to inquiries say, "Oh, nothing!" Pride helps us; and pride is not a bad thing when it only urges us to hide our own hurts,—not to hurt others.—George Eliot.

Woman and Economics.

Among the epoch making books of the now closing century, is one with the above title, written by that exceptionally bright and brave woman, Charlotte Perkins Stetson. I have not yet read the book, but from a partial examination am convinced that the fame it has already achieved is by no means unmerited. A few characteristic utterances are all that can be given in this notice. On pages 144—5 Mrs. Stetson says:

"A society whose economic unit is a sex-union can no more develop beyond a certain point industrially, than a society like the patriarchal, whose political unit is a sex-union, could develop beyond a certain point politically. . . . While the sexuo-economic relation makes the family the center of industrial activity, no higher collectivity than we have today is possible. But as women become free, economic, social factors, so becomes possible the full social combination of individuals in collective industry. With such freedom, such independence, such wider union, becomes possible also a union between man and woman such as the world has long dreamed of in vain."

Thus it is seen that our author thinks we must have a radical change in our marital or family ethics, in order that human evolution may make further advance.

Concerning motherhood and childhood a characteristic utterance is found on page 181:

"Human motherhood is more pathological than any other, more morbid, defective, irregular, diseased. Human childhood is similarly pathological. We, as animals, are very inferior animals in this particular. When we take credit to ourselves for the sublime devotion with which we face 'the perils of maternity,' and boast of 'going down to the gates of death" for our children, we should rather take shame to ourselves for bringing these perils upon both mother and child. The gates of death? They are the gates of life to the unborn; and there is no death there save what we, the mothers, by our unnatural lives, have brought upon our own children. Gates of death, indeed, to the thousands of babies late-born, prematurely born, misborn, and still-born for lack of right motherhood. In the primal physical functions of maternity the human female cannot show that her supposed specialization to these uses has improved her fulfilment of them, rather the opposite. The more freely the human mother mingles in the natural industries of a human creature, as in the case of the savage woman, the peasant woman, the working-woman everywhere who is not overworked, the more rightly she fulfils these functions."

By all investigators in the field of human ethics, and especially in the line of woman's normal place in nature, the work of Mrs. Stetson will be hailed with pleasure and read with interest and profit. M. H.

Commerce is King.

In a little book called "Anti-Imperialism," by Morrison I. Swift, one of the chapters is headed, "Our Crime in the Philippine Islands—The New Policy of Corruption." In this chapter Mr. Swift shows that the American administration is now following closely the footsteps of "Mother Country," England, in its policy of foreign conquest in the interest of its "merchant princes." Among others Mr. Swift puts upon the witness stand Mr. "Charles Denby, our one time minister to China, and now a member of McKinley's Commission to study the Philippines." In answer to the question, "Shall We Keep the Philippines?" Mr. Denby, in the "Forum" of last November, puts himself on record in these words:

"I am in favor of holding the Philippines because I cannot conceive of any alternative to our doing so, except the seizure of territory in China; and I prefer to hold them rather than to oppress further the helpless Government of China. I want China to preserve her autonomy, to become great and prosperous; and I want these results not for the interests of China, but for our interests. I am not the agent or attorney of China; and as an American, I do not look to the promotion of China's interests, or Spain's or any other country's—but simply of our own. . . .

"Dewey's victory is an epoch in the history of the Far East. We hold our heads higher. We are coming to our own. We are stretching out our hands for what nature meant should be ours. We are taking our proper rank among the nations of the world. We are after markets, the greatest markets now existing in the world. Along with these markets will go our benefi cent institutions; and humanity will bless us."

Here we have what seems to be the honest utterance of an honest imperialist. As a member of "McKinley's commission," it is reasonable to infer that he voices the object, the animus, of the "powers that be," in continuing the Philippine war. "We are after markets, the greatest markets in the world!" Elsewhere Mr. Denby says, "Commerce, not politics, is king. The manufacturer and the merchant dictate to diplomacy, and control elections."

Again this typical diplomatist: "I learned what I know of diplomacy in a severe school. I found among my colleagues not the least hesitation in proposing to their respective Governments to do anything which was supposed to be conducive to their interests. There can be no other rule for the government of all persons who are charged with the conduct of affairs than the promotion of the welfare of their respective countries."

And this is what diplomacy means; this is what government means. Truly it is a "severe school," an utterly heartless school. Diplomacy means commercialism, and commercialism means, "Get the better of your neighbor—do your neighbor or he will do you." M. H.

Life in the Tropics.

Several months ago we published extracts from a letter by Arthur Wastall, written at his present home on one of the Seychelle Islands in the Indian Ocean. The publication of these extracts has called forth many letters of inquiry. Mr. Wastall sends us a copy of one of his replies from which we quote the following:

The unconnected fragments of my letter to a friend of the Harmans published in Lucifer would give one a rather misleading impression of my real opinion of this part of the world. I was simply descanting upon the advantages of life in the tropics generally over that of the so-called temperate regions, and had previously written to the friend in question pointing out the unfavorable elements of life in the Seychelles in particular. In reading what follows, I trust you will therefore not allow any notion you may have formed of my disposition as being too optimistic to bias your consideration of this matter in a business light. I have travelled too much to be easily satisfied with any place I may locate in, and have too keen a sense of the responsibility of advice as to emigration not to place the cons before the pros in the presentation of my ideas about any country. Experience has taught me that indulgence in the very natural desire to see one's friends locate in the country of one's selection to be somewhat hazardous and unprofitable. The cause of course is not hard to seek, as in the vast majority of cases I suspect the adviser is injudiciously egoistic.

Now although the perfect climate exists nowhere to my cognizance, that of the Seychelles is very nearly all that one could desire, and this is chiefly what brought us here; after fifteen months residence I am even more satisfied with it than I expected to be. Here we know absolutely nothing of extremes, the mercury in our thermometer knows no greater range than ten, or at the most fifteen degrees from year's end to year's end; storms are exceedingly rare and cyclones never visit us, yet for a good eight months in the year the monsoon breezes are sufficiently strong to well fill one's boatsails. Nevertheless the term "Paradise" which L. Harman applies to our quarter of the globe is decidedly too eulogistic, it is perhaps only in a negative sense that it might justifiably be used. Barring the very positive good of an excellent climate our happiness chiefly consists in a series of negatives—the population not being as yet "properly civilized", and Mrs. Grundy and conventionalism consequently being held in light esteem.

To be entirely candid, as a place of residence I don't think Americans would ever feel properly at home here, and being a Cosmopolitan and fond of associating with go-ahead people of ideas and originality. I do not look favorably upon this archipelago as a suitable site for a colonization project. Indeed as to colonization schemes in general, I am only mildly in favor of them, and when formed on a thoroughly egoistic basis. I believe a scientific revolution such as Tripler would seem to be on the point of inaugurating will be the chief means in "saving the world"—by making all commodities and travel very cheap and human labor dear. All the same, a true science of economy undoubtedly exists, and this being so I cannot see why a practical illustration of its soundness cannot here and now be given to the world; given of course the men and women of the right caliber—a large order I admit. Instead of proselytizing or in any way trying to force our views upon others, I think those holding large views of life and believing in unqualified liberty along all the lines of its relations, should combine and endeavor to put their ideas into practical effect; then, should success favor them, there will be no lack of adherents and followers. . .

My wife is so enamored with his country that she has purchased this little island and intends to develop it to the utmost, indeed she says she will never permanently leave this part of the world. I am writing this in a little one roomed house with large verandahs which we have recently built down by the seashore. The interior, with its hurricane lamps at night is for all the world like a ship's cabin and the wash of the ocean almost at our doors makes one really feel aboardship—which I like, especially as it is without any of its attendant discomforts. Sunrise Bay is truly an ideal little spot, we jump out of our beds in the morning into the sea as it were, and revel in freedom and much relished privacy and solitude. We wear as little clothing as is compatible with convenience and comfort and so never know what it is to feel unduly hot, nor are we in the least troubled with mosquitoes or other insects so associated with tropical countries. I would like to enlarge upon my opinions concerning the habitableness of the tropics etc., but time and space forbid. I have numerous inquiries from others besides yourself anent this topic. From the interest elicited I am confident a strong gathering of the right sort of people could readily be got together on the lines already foreshadowed. . . . .

ARTHUR WASTALL.

Sunrise Bay, Ile Moyenne, Seychelle Islands, (via Bombay.)

Sociologic Lesson. No. 87.

BY H. M. PARKHURST.

VALUE OF PRODUCTS.—The first element in fixing the price which shall be charged for any article, is its estimated cost. This includes, cost of materials, award to labor, use of tools, machinery and buildings, storage, cost of superintendence, cost of transfer. These may all be computed or estimated in franks. Articles consumed by members, such as food and clothing, will usually be charged upon this basis.

Sometimes this is modified by the law of demand and supply. To save storage, articles may be sold for less than cost, diminishing the future supply by reducing awards for its production. In the mean time the loss falls on the whole association. On the other hand the demand may exceed the supply as in the choice of dwellings, or the distribution of rare articles. The successful competitor pays irrespective of the cost, increasing the general profit.

In dealings outside, the basis will be the ordinary commercial standard; and from these dealings the value of the frank can be measured in that standard; enabling any member to exchange his credit in franks for a currency available abroad.

Be noble! and the nobleness that lies
In other men, sleeping, but never dead,
Will rise in majesty to meet thine own.—Lowell.

VARIOUS VOICES.

D. M., Dryburgh, Va.—It is with much regret that I writ to inform you that my subscription will expire the last of this month, and as times are so hard with me, I am obliged to discontinue your paper. I have taken it so long I don't know how I shall do without it. I have always found it to be such a pleasant visitor, and has been such a help in leading to that grand, higher life. I hope you and your dear daughter may be spared to do much good; this is the prayer of your true friend.

E. D., Arkansas:—Mr. Walker of New York has sent me a copy of Lucifer. I like it very much, and according to your invitation on last page of copy I received, offering a trial subscription for thirteen weeks, and "some books worth reading" I send you the 25cts for thirteen weeks. Please send it and "John's Way" by Elmina D. Slenker, and if allowed by mail, I will do some missionary work with them. There are many liberals here but they are cowardly; afraid of criticism and the $, and I have suffered at the instigation of the orthodox hypocrites and hypocritical liberals, so am almost "going it alone."

Paul L. Sautter, Phila.:—I have been reading your sex-reform paper and am interested in the new phase of the subject. The legalized marriage institution, which is in vogue all over the world, and which is a relic of barbarism and superstition, never appeared to me so horrible until I read your paper. I know, from the bitter experience of some of my friends, that a promise made by two youthful lovers to love and live for each other, for "better or worse, till death do part," often becomes a damnable lie in a few years. Love, and often friendship, is succeeded by the bitterest hatred, if people are joined together—like Siamese Twins—by Church and State. I realized all this, but did not know the remedy. I am glad to say that I know it now. Free unions, based on mutual attraction, and the right to sever those unions when no longer productive of happiness, will only be possible when women are economically independent. For enclosed dollar send me one copy of "Hilda's Home."

W. B. Bond, Cleveland, O.:—Through the death of the late L. B. Silver of this city the cause of Freethought loses a noble champion. Three days before his death I was called to his bedside and in a voice so weak he could hardly be understood he said: "I am going to die; if any man says that I have renounced infidelity, tell him it is a lie."

His end was peaceful. He simply fell asleep, not in Jesus, but in a sleep that knows no waking. What a contrast is this case with those described lately by that flowery liar, Talmage, who said that "the dying groans of infidels could be heard two blocks away."

If we believed with the Christian that in death we await the call to a life of endless joy, then we could ask:

"Why do we mourn departed friends,
Or quake at death's alarms?
'Tis but the voice that Jesus speaks
To call us to his arms."—

But no. We are convinced that death is an eternal sleep. that death means the blotting out of personality—the final separation from our friends. Therefore we truly mourn. An infidel is one who does not believe in a future existence, an after state of rewards or punishments, therefore he has no fear. The statements that Christians make in regard to the death-bed scenes of infidels are either bare-faced lies or gross misrepresentations. If the Christian is capable of telling the truth in the matter the so-called infidels were only cowardly believers, who after living scandalous and untruthful lives, showed at the last moment their true characters,—that of poltroons governed by fear. They were not infidels.

Subscriber, Wall St. Colorado:—I have an idea, after reading Mississippi Notes, by M. Harman, and that idea is: What is the matter with a band of us going down in the country spoken of and forming a little country town. I don't mean exactly a colony, unless that followed later, but a little town where we could all make a living, sort of co-operatively, get out Lucifer, enlarge it, and generally live under less of the spur of life than we are most of us now doing. Where we could build up a town, where there should be no compulsion, but where that which seemed most advantageous to each and all should be allowed. Where the town's motto should be John Stuart Mill's definition of morality: "The greatest good of the greatest number, with the least possible injury to any". In the region your father writes concerning, it seems to me that a number of people might dwell who, without having any rules or compulsion, or anything that would conflict with the laws, could still live a much more happy and enjoyable life than we are able to do now. When I write about this I am not thinking about sex matters; I would leave that to take care of itself, according to reason and sense, but such a town would give us a chance to hear more lectures, and to study sexology better than we now can for a multitude of reasons. For myself I decidedly do not believe in promiscuity or variety, so that in making the proposition I am not prompted by sensuality, but I do think that on the correct solution of the sex question much for the weal or woe of humanity depends, and I think that sexology plays enough of a part in our life to make it worthy of being taken up as a special study. I think it is worthy of it, and the community I am thinking of would be more in the nature of a college for the study of sexology, without any features such as made Oneida obnoxious, than a "free love colony." I think such a community might do considerable good, be very helpful, and yet not be more "licentious" or "sensual" than is any other community in the country. What do you think of the idea?

[Our Wall Street Colo. "Subscriber" has so nearly voiced my own views in regard to plans and general objects of a co-operative group, or of co-operative groups, in Mississippi or elsewhere, that no special comment seems needful from me, at this time and place. I would only add here that so much depends on starting right; so much of success or failure depends on right location and on right selection of co-operators, that I would strongly recommend taking plenty of time in exploration and in correspondence with those who propose to join the group.

A "bureau of information," a "correspondence bureau" with headquarters at some central point, would seem to be in order. Letters like that of "Subscriber," with real names and post-office addresses, might be passed around from place to place and from hand to hand, so as to avoid taking too much space in our "Morning Star." M. H.]

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Persons Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 20 cents. Address Moses Harman, 167 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. R. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

"Loma"—A CITIZEN OF VENUS," by Prof. Wm Windsor. A story of surpassing interest, largely devoted to Sexologic and Sociologic problems. Like Bellamy in his "Looking Backward," the writer of "Loma" believes in the "trade," as a factor in social evolution, but individualists will probably forgive this feature for the sake of the radically revolutionary ideas in regard to popular theories—sexologic, theologic, cosmologic, etc. Substantially printed and artistically bound. Price, post-paid, $1.50. Address this office.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The corpos ing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

769.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

Songs of the Unblind Cupid.

Under the title "Songs of the Unblind Cupid," an edition de luxe, in red and black, of a few hitherto unpublished poems by the liberal poet, J. Wm. Lloyd, is just issued.

The verses are printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle-edged, hand-made paper of cerulean tint. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering.

Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red, and an initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors.

Mr. Lloyd, as author of "Wind Harp Songs" and the "Red Heart in a White World," needs no introduction to the liberal public. These few new poems of love, liberty and nature are here preserved in the highest style of the printers' art, and should find a place in the collection of every friend of freedom, every lover of poetry and every admirer of choice and dainty publications.

Edition limited to 650 copies. There will be no second edition.

Price per copy, 30 cents. Sent postpaid upon receipt of price by M. Harman, 507 Carroll Avenue, Chicago.

THE BALLAD OF READING JAIL. BY C. 3.3.

This powerful poem of more than 600 lines, is the work of OSCAR WILDE C.3.3. having been the poets prison number during his confinement in Reading Jail. It is dedicated to the memory of a trooper of the Horse Guards who was hanged in the jail at that time, and it depicts the terrible sensations of the author and his fellow prisoners before and after the execution.

Just issued; price, in cloth, blue, vellum back, beautifully printed from large type on hand-made antique paper, deckle edges; reading matter on one side of the paper; a sumptuous book of 96 pages, 7 inches by 5, $1. In paper, 44 pages, 10 cents. Mailed postpaid on receipt of price, by M. Harman, 507 Carroll Avenue, Chicago.

THE WORKS OF A PIONEER SHOULD NOT BE OVERLOOKED.

The following by WILLIAM DENTON, pioneer Freethought and Spiritualist lecturer, and naturalist, who died while on a journey of scientific research in the wilds of Australia some fifteen years ago, are of as vital importance now as when they were written:

Sermons from Shakespeare's Text:
"Tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones and good in everything."

Orthodoxy False, Since Spiritualism is True.
The God Proposed for Our National Constitution.
What is Right?
Man's True Saviors.
Christianity No Finality or Spiritualism Superior to Christianity.
Who are Christians?

Sent to any address for 10 cents each, by M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.

This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be FREE; must enjoy the full privilege of soliciting the love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrially."—Page 265. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CITIZENS AND COUNTRYLESS WOMAN," by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 400 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Free Love: A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of connubial love; also a review of the exclusive features of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 1870, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence. 140 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 20 cents. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.

"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.

"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.

Sample pages free. Prepaid $1.00. Address this office.

Books Worth Reading FREE!

Send us twenty-five cents for a thirteen weeks' trial subscription to Lucifer and we will present to you your choice of the following books, to the value of 25 cents. Read the list carefully. Every book is interesting and thought-inspiring.

John's Way; a domestic radical story, by Elmina D. Slenker,	.25
Human Rights; J. Madison Hook,	.10
Vital Force, Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation, by Al. Chavannes,	.15
Practical Co-operation; by E. C. Walker,	.10
The Revival of Puritanism; " "	.10
Love and the Law;	.05
Digging for Bedrock, by Moses Harman,	.10
In Hell and the Way Out; H. E. Allen,	.10

The American Institute of Phrenology.

President Mrs. Charlotte Fowler Wells, incorporated 1866, open its next session on September 5th 1899. For prospectus send (free on application) to the Secretary, care of FOWLER & WELLS CO., 27 East 21st St., New York

RIGHTS OF WOMEN IN THE SEXUAL RELATIONS,

By Karl Heinzen. A new edition together with the startling letters of Louise Mayen" on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German women at Frauenstadt. A book of 300 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Price paper bound, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW. A primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. A valuable compendium on Sex Ethics. Startling and Scientific Price, 10 cents.

LOVE AND THE LAW. By E. C. Walker. A clear, concise statement of social liberty in contradistinction to the much lauded legal bondage now almost universally upheld. An excellent missionary document. Two copies, 5 cents; 20 cts per dozen.

The Outcome of Legitimation. By Oswald Dawson. This address was to have appeared in the January "Adult," but the printers of that number played Bowdler on a small scale, and refused to print it, alleging that the matter which they did print was "bad enough, but we are printing that and decline to print more." The lecture deals with some problems arising from the practicalization of the theories of free love. Price, 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint: A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

The Story of An African Farm. Olive Schreiner's master piece. A story of the struggle for light, "the search for truth, the yearning for happiness of bright young English and German people, among the ignorant and coarse Boers and Kaffirs of South Africa. This is a work of art, and of truth. Well bound in cloth. 288 pages. Price 40 cents, postage 10 cents. For sale at this office.

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races." Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III., Co-operation; Chapter V., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, ten cts.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disguised religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor in ong reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

Some Problems in Social Freedom. Presidential address delivered by Lillian Harman before the Legitimation League, at Holborn Restaurant, London. "Freedom in Social Relations;" "The Ownership of Women;" "Where Does the Line?" "What Would Become of the Family?" "Marriage a 'contidence game';" "How Society Protects Children." Price, 5 cents. For sale at this office.

Love Ventures of Tom, Dick, and Harry. A Novel with an Affidavit. And they were naked and not ashamed (Gen. ii, 25). 16 full-page French-Art Illustrations. Illuminated covers. 12mo. 225 pp. paper, 50c.; boards, 50c.

Personal. Readers of Lucifer who would like a quiet, home-like room in a private family when visiting Chicago, should communicate with X. Y. Z., care of Lucifer, 507 Carroll Ave.

Wanted. Subscribers to "Little Freethinker." The only liberal paper published for the young. 25 cents a year. Also names of liberal women who want correspondents. Address Elmina Drake Slenker, Shoreville Pub. Co., Va.

Liberal Home. Those who wish to join in such a home that is now well established, please address with stamp, A. N. Corey, Electra, Marion Co., Fla.

Socialists: Ten cents pays for "Weekly Commoner" trial month. New radical socialist magazine; able writers; eight pages, spicy and up-to-date. Box 509, Portland, Oregon.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 27. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, JULY 15, E. M. 299. [C. E. 1899.] WHOLE No. 770.

The Two Battles Contrasted.

Ay, that is a story that takes one's breath,
How the men rode out in the face of death.
Rode as calmly as fishermen may
Who haul their nets at the break of day.

But never was fish net hauled in the weather
That rifle and cannon and shell together
Rained on those sailors, who drew from its bed
The wise sea serpent and crushed its head.

Heroes of war are they! Song and story
Shall add their names to the list of glory;
But where is the story and where is the song
For heroes of peace and martyrs of wrong?

They fight their battles in shop and mine;
They die at their posts and make no sign,
And the living envy the fortunate dead
As they fight for a pittance of butterless bread,

They herd like beasts in a slaughter pen;
They live like cattle and suffer like men,
Why, set by the horrors of such a life,
Like a merry-go-round seems the battle's strife.

And the open sea, and the open boat,
And the deadly cannon with bellowing throat,
Oh, what are they all, with death thrown in,
To the life that has nothing to lose or win—

The life that has nothing to hope or gain,
But ill-paid labor and beds of pain?

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Do They Really Desire Equal Rights?

In the "Woman's Journal" "H. B. B." says:

"Every week the papers give sickening details of assaults upon wives by husbands, often with intent to kill. The latest case is that of one Kelley, who, having compelled his wife to separate herself from him by a long series of brutalities, was in the habit of taking from her by force her scanty earnings as a waiter in an eating house. This poor woman, respectable and industrious, was thus kept in a condition of semi-slavery. Last week for some reason she did not receive her wages as usual and when the brutal wretch waylaid her and demanded money she had none to give him. Infuriated by the disappointment, he stabbed her to death. Now why did this man select this particular woman as the object of attack? Because public sentiment has not yet wholly outgrown the barbarous notion that the husband owns his wife; that he has a vested interest, so to speak, in her person, property, and earnings; that he is the 'head of the family.' The law, it is true, no longer recognizes a husband's right to his wife's earnings as formerly, yet even now it does not protect the wife from her husband's tyranny as it would protect her against that of any other man. This idea of masculine supremacy dies hard. It is intrenched in constitutions and laws which are made, maintained, and administered solely by men."

True; but would the conditions be improved if the positions of men and women were merely reversed? It would almost seem so; for "H. B. B." expresses his faith in feminine legislation in these words:

"In sober truth, the men who oppose or deny women the suffrage are responsible for wife-beating and wife-murder. For nothing would so avail to put an end to these brutalities as the recognized legal and political equality of women."

But if legislation is all that is needed, why do not the laws against wife-beating and wife-murder, now on the statute-books, protect women? If we desire to get at the roots of the evil we must strike far deeper than the superficial political status of women—we must strike at the morally-enforced ownership of each other by men and women in the marital relation. So we must ask, Do the women who battle for the ballot really seek only equality of opportunity with men? Do they not demand that woman shall have not only the opportunity to earn wages and retain them for her own use, but also the right to demand a share of her husband's earnings? Is it not true that the average woman believes she has "a vested interest, so to speak, in the person, property, and earnings" of her husband? And if she has this interest in him, why should he not have equal interest in her?

Neither man nor woman should submit to invasion by wife or husband any more readily than to invasion by any other woman or man. And when men and women have their sense of justice developed sufficiently to respect the rights of others, and courage enough to defend their own rights, there will be no need of legislation by either men or women. L. H.

Criticisms and Comments

BY C. P. HUNT.

The single tax people are continually telling about the will of God as regards the land. It is doubtful that they believe what they say, but they think the rest believe it. God wants every man to have land, but they never tell why he allows his will to be disregarded by the landlord. One lecturer at the Single Tax Club recently said God waited 500 years for the French revolution. Well then if we want to be god-like, and view with complacency vice, cruelty, misery and injustice, let us hold our jaws and wait.

* * *

Zarathustra looked upwards, and lo! an eagle swept through the air in wide circles, a serpent hanging from it not like a prey but like a friend; coiling round its neck. "They are mine animals" said Zarathustra and rejoiced heartily. "The proudest animal under the sun and the wisest animal under the sun have set out to reconnoiter. Let mine animals lead me.—The Eagle and the Serpent.

Unless the snake was the eagle's prey the eagle was violating the egoism advocated by the editor of "The Eagle and the Serpent." This eagle would represent the fool people who carry on their backs the wiseacres who hoodwink them. This principle would rank the mountaineer with the tourist on his back—both as true egoists.

* * *

On the streets of Chicago there may be seen "salvation" soldiers holding banners inscribed with a plea for some special class of indigents, with an iron box attached to the banner in which the public may drop lucre. What do these pious beggars do with the money collected? To whom is the accounting made? What good do they perform besides the annual thanksgiving dinner? There is a suspicion that these beggars are an aggregation of skates who cannot get their living any other way, and if the truth were known the "army" will number more people than those helped to a meal once a year.

* * *

Mr. Robert G. Ingersoll is the Voltaire of America. He has destroyed superstition but he is not much in economics. Where is the Rousseau to supplement his work with economic reform? I believe his name to be Henry George. Mr. Ingersoll has taken another step, and says women must be free, so that poor people will stop filling the earth with knaves, fools and cripples. This is a very good reason, but there are those who say woman should be free because she is entitled to it. A joke at the ten-twent-thirt theaters runs to the effect that a woman attended a circus, and was approached by a friendly bear which put his paws on her shoulder. She afterwards gave birth to a boy with "bare" feet. Certainly; also bare hands, bare body and bare mind. Whether rich or poor, this babe was blank on which environment is to write. Place the rich babes in the conditions in which the poor are raised, and they will become vicious just as the poor do now. Make women free tomorrow and the slum children will not be one whit better than before. The remedy is free women, free men, free land. The last is not the least.

* * *

SCENE: Chicago, A. D. 1899. Enter Street Car Supt.: I hereby give notice that on Saturday next I will lay tracks across Washington Bd. at Kedzie Ave., and will use force if necessary.

Park Commissioner: In reply I would say that the police will be on hand at that point and you will be prevented from doing so, by force if necessary.

There are Anarchists who "turn the other cheek also," and others who oppose law by force, or who gain their ends by force in the absence of law. The historian would better stir himself to get definitions for future use.

Superlative Prudery.

BY JAY CHAAPEL.

To what heights religious ignorance and prudery will go is astonishing in these days of material progress. What a pity that religious, or rather anti-religious and humanitarian progress do not keep pace with their sister.

Three or four, perhaps more, years ago, some Principals of the Brooklyn, N. Y., schools, with one James Cusack of School No. 17 as leader, made the profound moral discovery that there was great immorality and wickedness in Longfellow's poem, "The Building of the Ship." It was so terribly immoral and erotic to those prurient keepers of public morals that they called upon William H. Maxwell Sup't of Public Instruction and asked him to expunge it from the list of studies. Those devout Solons claimed to have found portions of that, to me, admirable poem, entirely unfit for children to read.

The Superintendent, with practical good sense, and no doubt purity of mind, (as those teachers evidently were not) only laughed at the silly charge against one of the world's grandest poets, of writing vicious poems. "Why," said he "if it comes to that, every edition of Shakespeare should be burnt, and Byron's works buried a mile deep."

The whole poem, these prurient prudes, said was bad, but the following special passages describing the launching of the ship were very objectionable and demoralizing.

"And for a moment one might mark
What had been hidden in the dark,
That the head of the maiden lay at rest,
Tenderly on the young man's breast.

"She starts—she moves—she seems to feel
The thrill of life along her keel,
And, spurning with her foot the ground,
With one exulting, joyous bound
She leaps into the ocean's arms!

"And lo! from the assembled crowd
There rose a shout prolonged and loud,
That to the ocean seemed to say,
Take her, O bridegroom, old and gray,
Take her to thy protecting arms,
With all her youth and all her charms!

"How beautiful she is! How fair
She lies within those arms, that press
Her form with many a soft caress
Of tenderness and watchful care!"

I think I am warranted in calling those pedagogs "vulgar" though I do not know them personally. I would do no person any injustice, but it is time to speak plainly and strongly when bigots saturated with ages of false modesty and tyrannous cruelty attempt to suppress free speech and imprison men and women more intelligent, cultured and moral than they. We need a dozen Lucifer's to storm the castles of ignorance and superstition with mental shot and shell each week. In the meantime it is the duty of every subscriber to Lucifer to try to get another among their friends, thereby helping the cause of justice and making the burdens of the editors more easy.

Instruct The Children

Helen Graham, in "Freedom."

A lazy habit of thought is a most deplorable one. How many vital, creative brains produce just a successive panorama of scattered, aimless thoughts. Such brains do not think systematically, or logically, and can not do so without the most careful training.

When children begin to reason their little brains should be guided into a logical method of thinking. It is so easy to steer the baby efforts, but so hard to break a habit.

Little Wilbur climbs on my lap, and pulling out my watch, listens to the lively ticking. Lifting his calm, gray eyes to mine he says, "Aunt Nell, what makes your watch tick?" Already, the active mind is looking for the cause of this effect, and I will encourage the effort. I open the watch case and show him the spring and the wheels and make him wonder still more. He will not understand, as I explain what I know of it; but he will have seen something new, and the active brain will have more food for thought. This is better than telling him "there's a cricket therein."

There is much to be admired in the little boy, who, after studying the anatomy of his little sister's ear wondered if "the holes go clear through," and wanted to stick a pencil in to find out.

We who understand something of the power of thought and of what importance it is to think rightly—logically—should not allow our children to form wrong mental habits. We can surround our children with strong, health-giving and living thoughts, but we can do more by also helping to form correct habits.

"Habit is a cable; we weave a thread of it each day and it soon becomes so strong that we cannot break it."

Those of us who have had to train ourselves to think logically in after years will know what a task it is. I have started to think out some problem of life, or tried to explain some of the science of mind, to some one, and have had to give up in despair, or have even doubted the truth, sometimes, owing to my inability to get at the foundation of it and follow it up to the height.

One thing that is detrimental to right thinking and independent opinion, is the reading of much fiction. A succession of thrilling scenes is thus brought before the mind, to stir the sentiment and imagination, and after this the brain cells crave this stimulation and are loath to think cool, reasonable thoughts, without such sensations accompanying them.

When I was a girl, I used to curl up in a big chair, with a good book, and go, with my body and soul, through all the adventures of the hero, or heroine. My imagination was exerted to the utmost, and then, when my mother asked me to attend to some household duty, or I had to stop and go to school I was as the drunkard, from whom the tempting cup has been snatched, and went about my duty with a sulky face and depressed spirit. I never could tell the stories that I read, for I could not remember them. I merely read for the momentary pleasure of it.

I would rather see a child, or a man, with a good logical, practical thinking apparatus, and unable to read, than to see him with a knowledge of seventeen languages, but unable to form a clear opinion of his own.

As a rule, man is a more logical thinker than woman, because in past ages, it has been considered unnecessary for women to think; and it has been the pride and boast of men to think systematically. And since the beginning of time, that which ministered to the pride and admiration of man or woman, in self, has prospered. We all love ourselves and wish to be all that we can, so let the women be logical.

Women often arrive at conclusions which are based on the broadest wisdom, but are unable to see this base, and tell "why." I knew of a minister who, after preparing his weekly sermon, always read it to his wife for criticism. This lady often single out some particular passage and remark that she would omit that, but when asked why she could not tell. But the minister, like a worthy gentleman, would leave it out, and he said that afterward he would almost invariably see a reason, and a good one, for doing so. Women may have the sixth sense—that of intuition—but they may as well have the reasoning ability that should go with it. Let us think with a purpose.

"The Truthseeker"

The July number of this interesting journal (published in Bradford, England,) contains:

Portrait and life sketch of Malfew Seklew; "The Disadvantages of Wealth," an Open Letter to Lord Roseberry; "Egoism," a Criticism of Nietche, by William Francis Barnard; "Demi-Gods Demi-Damned, or Haloes Hoodood," an estimate of the work of Henry George, who in the opinion of the writer, Malfew Seklew, "was a great man unfinished—nipped in the bud—he never blossomed." "His reputation, like the future of the Single Tax." Mr. Seklew furthermore remarks, "lies in the past."

"Monogamy and the Survival of the Fittest," is a plea for monogamy, by M. D. O'Brien, who believes that a fair picture of a society in which monogamy does not prevail is drawn by himself when he asks us to look at "John Jones, who has indulged himself so freely in sexual variety that he has become the father of fifty children by just as many different mothers. Each of these mothers has on the average four or five other children by just as many different fathers." Whew! what queer people they do have in England! Wonder where all those babies were hidden when I was over there?

"Secularism vs. Anarchism" is the title of a controversy between Walter C. Hart and W. Mac Queen, and there is a symposium in which six writers tell "Why I am a Socialist."

There are other contributed articles, by J. Blair Smith and Ragnor Redbeard.

The editorial trend of thought is illustrated in the following extracts from "Notes and Comments:"

Free discussion has triumphed in France. Dreyfus is on his way home, Picquart has been exonerated and released, Paty du Clam is detained, the unspeakable Esterhazy has confessed himself the author of the Bordereau, and now nothing remains to be done further than the complete exoneration of Dreyfus when he arrives, and the punishment of the real culprits. Zola, Jaures, and the newspaper, "L'Aurore," in conjunction with other lesser powers, took the matter up about two years ago, and by dint of persistent agitation, in the face of the gravest dangers, forced the issue in which we are so delighted today. A free press and free speech have won this notable victory in France. Where these are we may accomplish all things; where they are not it is surely darkness and death."

L. H.

What Can We Do?

BY INA CHAMPNEY.

This is a time in the world's growth when every one living with his eyes open must question.

At the present time the writer is living in a flat in a crowded tenement house in a southern city. Not a very desirable situation, but an excellent one in which to view the various forms of human life and character. And what do we see? Above all else, miserable, suffering, struggling souls; working men reduced to mere shadows of what they might be or even have been, men cramped, pinched, down-trodden slaves to the wealthy, driven nearly to desperation by poverty.

Yet, are not these laboring men the producers of the country, the men the whole race is dependent upon? Every day's work of the laborer represents $7.00 or $8.00 of wealth to the country and he gets $1.50 or $2.00 of this wealth. Where does the rest go?

Here we see large families only half supported. How can they be well provided for with the father earning such paltry pay? We see perhaps an older daughter working at hard, confining labor for $3.00 a week or even less, vainly trying to keep together the bodies and souls of the younger brothers and sisters. Here are dozens of half fed, half clothed, neglected little mortals, each a pitiable sight for a so-called civilized, a wealthy country.

Look here and see the young girls just entering the delicate years of womanhood, being made household drudges, who will work themselves into their graves before they are twenty. Or perhaps worse, live and sometime marry for support, in expectation of easier, happier times only to be a repetition of the slave and child bearing machines that their mothers were before them!

Again, too, we see an ignorant young woman—a hero worshipper—who blindly, passionately, falls at the feet of a U. S. soldier—man slaughterer—only to rise again finding herself in hopeless misery as she believes, an outcast, shamed and disgraced for life. Here she is homeless, penniless, driven from pillar to post, no rest for her aching heart, no sympathy, no respect. What is she to do? Think of the anguish of this woman's heart. Think of—the child, what will it be?

O, that I could make a home for such girls, where they could be nursed through their trials by free, radical people, who could gently and wisely lead them to see they are not disgraced; but that they can again face the world and gain its respect by their true, noble lives. They would, through this experience, see and master their ignorance; thereby becoming the true and able women to aid others suffering with the like disease—ignorance.

What is to be done, I ask, to better these deplorable conditions? Are not these little children, these young men and women the ones to enlighten and educate? Is it not this rising generation that must be reached, and taught the mysteries of life? But how? Education is so slow and the children multiply so fast. If reproduction could cease for a time, or could we have only desired children, there might be a more hopeful prospect of educating the countless thousands of ignorant sufferers. As this cannot be the case we must deal with the world as it stands today.

There are no new questions asked, no new thoughts expressed in these lines, nothing but what our thinkers are constantly thinking of and pondering over, and still the all important question remains unanswered.

Some writers have so confounded society with government as to leave little or no distinction between them; whereas they are not only different, but have different origins. Society is produced by our wants; government by our wickedness.—Thomas Paine.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

Costly Patriotism.

If our Morning Star can do a little toward building up a public sentiment that will forever abolish our present insane and barbarous method of celebrating the holiday known as the "Fourth of July," I for one will regard the time and labor well spent. In last issue some statistics were given in relation to our late carnival of noise, of burnings of buildings, and of maiming and killing in "honor of the flag." Referring to its own statistics in regard thereto the Chicago "Tribune" of July 10 has this to say:

"Since that publication the exchanges from all parts of the country have been carefully scrutinized to make the list as accurate as possible. The number of killed, 33, corresponds with the first report. The number of severely injured is increased to 1,962. The details are as follows: Cannon crackers, 646; toy cannon, 379; fire crackers, 309; powder explosions, 243; revolvers, 189; toy pistols, 110; gunshot wounds, 31; fireworks of various kinds, 55. Some of these victims will go through life without eyes, some without arms, some without legs, and a large number with mangled hands. The list includes only those who were sent to hospitals, or treated at home by doctors. It is probable that a complete list would record between 4,000 and 5,000 victims of the present senseless style of celebrating the Fourth of July. Another year should witness a reform, though how it is to be brought about is not clear, since the ordinances already on the books are deliberately violated and no effort is made by municipal authorities to enforce them. It is probable the idiotic business will continue until the list of mangled and slaughtered reaches the dimensions of a battle; then something may be done."

An occasional holiday, or day of rest and of rational recreation, is certainly desirable and commendable, but a holiday spent in a way to produce results such as these is one of the most convincing arguments to show that we, as a people, are living on a plane of development not far removed from the savage state. The statement of the "Tribune" that no effort is made to enforce the "ordinances now on the books," in regard to the use of dangerous explosives in celebrating "Independence day" is proof that only through an improved or enlightened public sentiment can the evils named herein be mitigated or abolished.

How many of Lucifer's readers will join in the effort to make an end of this wickedly wasteful and murderously destructive nuisance?

Impotence of Law.

John J. Ingalls, for many years United States Senator from Kansas and for a time president of the American House of Lords, is credited with the following utterance in regard to "trusts:"

"The trust is a public enemy. It deliberately raises the price of the staples of every community for the selfish purpose of increasing its unlawful gains. It destroys competition. It restricts trade. It menaces the life and health of its employes. It should be outlawed, so that its members and its property could be dealt with as we deal with the rattlesnake, the tiger and the mad dog. The laws are ample for the destruction of such monsters, but their penalties are not invoked. We all know why Capt. Oberlin M. Carter, a convicted felon, who disgraced the army and dishonored the flag, is still at large, drawing pay and rendering no service. By and by the lamp post and the torch!"

This opinion well illustrates what has been known to all thoughtful observers, namely that laws are powerless as against the owners of combined capital. Plutocracy rules, with law or against law.

But a man of Mr. Ingalls' age and experience ought to know better than to invoke the power of the unreasoning mob as a cure for plutocratic greed and lawlessness. He ought to know that nothing can avail to cure or remove the evils of aggregated wealth in the hands of the privileged few, but a public opinion that will demand the repeal of all laws that make such aggregations possible. Law is powerless for good so long as public sentiment is with the law-breakers, as now. Ex-Senator Ingalls himself, not many years ago, before a large audience in Topeka, Kansas, while declaiming against millionaires, frankly admitted that what troubled him most was that there was not just one more millionaire—himself!—and the applause that followed showed that his audience echoed and endorsed the rascally sentiment.

Great is demagogy, and J. J. Ingalls appears to be one of its prophets.

M. H.

The New Feudalism.

When Alexander Hamilton and his reactionaries succeeded in heading off and lassoing the movement towards equal rights for all and special privileges for none—that is to say, when the friends of imperialism, the enemies of human liberty and equality in the so-called constitutional convention of 1787-9, succeded in practically nullifying what had been gained by the seven years war with Great Britain, they probably did not foresee or fully understand what they were doing. They probably little suspected that the seedling they then planted would in future years grow to a tree that would overshadow all the land and thereby impoverish if not destroy all the trees of liberty that had been planted in this country by Patrick Henry, Thomas Paine, Thomas Jefferson, the Adamses, et al., and that had been nourished by the blood of freedom-lovers through all the years of conflict with King George and Lord North.

Do I need to name the tree that now overspreads the land, and like the deadly Bohun Upas, blights and withers all upon which its baleful shadow falls? By some it has been fitly named the "New Feudalism;" in plainer language corporate capitalism!

Chief Justice Marshall thus defines a corporation: "An artificial being, invisible, intangible and existing only in contemplation of law. Among its most important properties are immortality, and, if the expression may be allowed, individuality, properties by which a perpetual succession of any persons is considered as the same and may act as a single individual."

The leading article in the June number of the "Legal Adviser," written by "Benjamin A. Richmond, of the Maryland Bar," has this to say of these law-created personalities known as corporations:

"If, unlike the feudatories of the past, they do not make and unmake kings, yet like them, they do make and unmake all that stands to us in the place of kings. There is not a council board of government, whether of the executive, the judicial or the legistative departments, to which they have not forced their way and in which their power is not successfully exerted. There is not a financial, commercial or political undertaking of any magnitude or importance of which they are not either already in control, or must be reckoned with as controlling forces. Availing themselves of the liberality of our sovereignties, they have grown and swollen, until they have set themselves up as imperia in imperi, and have become the final repositories of all our powers and the arbiters of all our fortunes. By the granted charter they have been given more than lease with primogeniture in descent; they have been given life with immortality. By their franchises they have been given more than landed wealth upon which to gather retainers; they have been given the right and a convenient means of integrating all properties in mighty nuclei to which gravitate and around which cling and cluster more organized potencies than were ever boasted by England's greatest baronies.

Elsewhere Mr. Richmond says: "Sociologists are fond of speaking of the feudal state as being followed by the capitalistic age. But I am convinced that this is but a change of names for very similar things. Feudalism was based upon capital, but nearly all the capital then was land. Charterism is based upon capital embracing all other wealth as well as land, and of which the land now forms only a conspicuous part. Feudalism was adapted to warlike times and a warlike people. Charterism to peaceful times and commercial people, but both alike to the ultimate control, through capital, of the people. Discarding outward form and looking to inward final purpose and result, in substance, I see no other difference. We have banished the knightly captains of the feudal tenantry and in their places we have set up the skilled lawyers to lead and guide the organized hosts of our trusts and corporations."

While the evils of the "New Feudalism" are shown up in vivid colors by the writer in the "Legal Adviser" he does not propose any remedy. This, as a lawyer, could scarcely be expected of him. The interest of the legal profession is not the abolition of law-created personalities, or powers, but rather their increase. Among other things, showing the trend of his thought, he quotes Goldsmith's lines:

> "That those who think must govern those who toil;
> And all that freedom's highest aim can reach
> Is but to lay proportionate loads on all."

But whether we agree with his conclusions or not the article or essay is a valuable contribution, from the standpoint of legality and history, to the study of that gigantic and apparently almost omnipotent power in American politics, in economics and even in social life, variously known as the corporation, the trust, the capitalistic combine, etc. I therefore recommend our readers to send ten cents to the Mills publishing Co. of Denver Colo., for a copy of Vol. II. No. 10 of the "Legal Advertiser," —a monthly magazine devoted, as the name indicates, to matters of interest to lawyers and to those whose business requires them to keep posted in regard to laws and their administration.

M. HARMAN.

A Free Paper.

BY H. M. PARKHURST.

Referring to my series of Sociologic Lessons, the publication of which has been suspended during your absence, you say in a private letter to me:

"The natural legitimate inference conveyed by a weekly iterated lesson is that these represent the views of the paper; that they are the boiled down opinions of the editor on economic and sociologic questions, or that he adopts them substantially, else he would not give them the prominence of a long-continued series."

What I mean by a free paper is one which not only attempts to teach the ideas which the editor has himself adopted, but which is ready to allow its correspondents to teach the ideas which they have adopted, provided it is done in a way not to occupy too much space, not infringing on the rights of others by personalities, and expressing the ideas in a reasonably intelligent way. If you should have a correspondent who had studied out a new system relating to matters of common interest, it ought not to be necessary for him to explain it all in advance to the editor, and convince him that the theory is undoubtedly correct before he can begin the publication; and it ought not to be necessary for the editor, every time an article is sent to him for publication, to ask himself whether he can endorse everything stated in that article, and if not to refuse it publication or else to print it with a disclaimer. Garrison used to publish in the "Liberator" a column headed "Refuge of Oppression," to which he consigned chiefly extracts from other papers stating things which he objected to. A free paper ought to have at least a portion of its space devoted to a "Refuge for Free Speech," where writers who have what they consider new light to bring can present it without the inference you suggest, in the hope that among the readers of the paper there will be some minds ready to receive it. I do not claim in the Sociologic Lessons to give the boiled down opinions of anybody but myself and however useful they may be to the few who will take pains to study them, I do not ask or expect any one to accept them as a whole. If the little space they occupy may bring a spark of light to here and there a reader, that is a sufficient justification for their publication in a free paper, even if the editor differs from my views as much as I differ from his.

REPLY.

Yes, I fully agree that "a free paper ought to have at least a portion of its space devoted to a 'Refuge for Free Speech'" and that "it ought not to be necessary for the editor, every time an article is sent to him for publication, to ask himself whether he can endorse everything stated in that article and if not to refuse it publication or else to print it with a disclaimer." In proof that such has been the principle of action adopted and adhered to by myself in the publication of Lucifer it will perhaps not be considered amiss that I remind Friend Parkhurst that one of the articles for which I was indicted in the Kansas federal court was written by himself; an article that I neither approved nor disapproved, but inserted solely because I thought it might "bring a spark of light to here and there a reader." In good sooth I verily believe that few publishers in the United States have risked more or suffered more in defense of free speech than I have done, or than I am still willing to do. I have never, so far as I know, refused to print, and to print fully, any article—detached from and unconnected with a series,—that my critic has sent for publication, but a series of articles under the same heading and stretching out apparently "to infinity and beyond," is certainly a very different matter.

This, then, is my offence: "the very head and front of my offending hath this offence, no more," namely that I respectfully decline to print in each successive issue, for months and years, a brief, condensed, "Sociologic Lesson" without knowing before undertaking the apparently unending task, what the lessons are to contain, and when and where they are to end.

These "Lessons" have already been running, not continuously, in Lucifer for four or five years. They have not had "the right of way" over all other matter, but if printed in every issue they certainly would convey that impression to the reader, and it is because I wish to avoid such impression, rather than because I object to the opinions inculcated, that I have respectfully declined to continue the publication in the consecutive and piece-meal manner desired by their author. Not the matter but the manner—the interminable series—is the point of difference between Lucifer's venerable and efficient friend and helper, Henry M. Parkhurst, on the one hand, and on the other its very fallible editor,

MOSES HARMAN.

How Do the Marys Feel?

Once there was a widower, left with three children, who concluded, instead of re-wiving, to take a bachelor brother to superintend his house, and be, so far as he could, a house-parent to the little ones.

"If you come to me," says Widower John, "I will do as well by you as I did by Mary. You shall reign supreme in my home, and I will lay my fortune at your feet.

"Fortune, where is it?" says innocent brother Bachelor William. "Will you make it over in writing?"

"I mean," says John, explaining, "that I will provide the table liberally, dress you handsomely, get you meerschaums, and canes, and generally do my best to make you happy."

"But that wouldn't do," says Bachelor William. "I have never been considered extravagant in my habits, but I can imagine desires to arise which neither meerchaums, canes, nor unlimited credit at my tailor's would wholly cover."

"Oh, don't be afraid," says the widower kindly; "If you learn how to coax as well as Mary did, you will get no end of odd change to spend in your little vanities. You are my youngest brother, and I have always been fond of you. Just lay your sweet hands in mine and trust to me."

"It wouldn't do," says William; "it would kill my self respect. I would rather have $50.00 a month at my own disposal than $500 dribbled out to me for the asking."

"I am disappointed in you, brother," said the kind widower. "I had thought there was such a beautiful fraternal relation between us that you would be above caring which of us held the money. Mary didn't mind."

"Are you so sure of that?" said the bachelor brother, thoughtfully.—Mrs. Eliza Sproat Turner, in Working Woman's Journal.

Mutual Helpfulness.

This world is the nurse of all we know;
This world is the mother of all we feel

. . . .

See the mountains kiss high heaven,
And the waves clasp one another;
No sister flower would be forgiven
If it disdained its brother.

The fountains mingle with the river,
And the rivers with the ocean;
The winds of heaven mix forever
With a sweet emotion.

—Shelley.

"Legends of the Patriarchs and Prophets."*

Here are a few holy and divine facts compiled from Baring-Gould's "Legends of the Patriarchs and Prophets." These legends are just as historically true as is the Bible version, and have had just as faithful believers:

After his fall Satan took four wives and each became the mother of a host of devils.

The body of Adam was so great it would reach the Seventh heaven. The tree of life was so broad at base it would take a good walker five years to march around it.

At the marriage feast of Adam and Eve God made a table of precious stones, and each gem was one hundred ells long and sixty wide, and this table was covered with costly dishes.

Eve is said to be the first woman author and she wrote a book of prophecies dictated by the angel Raphael.

When Adam was created he was like a beast, coarse, rude and inanimate. From Eve he received his upright position and his spirituality.

After the flood Sakechak wanted some earth from the bottom of the abyss, and said, "send a female because women are quicker and more searching than men," and this reminds me that those who employ monkeys to gather cotton in the south, take the females because they pick more and cleaner cotton than the males do.

Adam had thirty sons and thirty daughters by his wife Eve, and when God inquired how many children he had he was ashamed of having so many girls, and said, "thirty sons and twenty-seven daughters." But God could not be deceived and took three of his fairest daughters and made elves of them and they were good and holy and did not perish in the deluge but were saved in the ark.

The serpent was formerly queen of all creatures. She had a head like rubies, and eyes like emeralds. Her height was that of the camel and the most beautiful colors adorned her skin; and her hair and face were those of a beautiful maiden. She was fragrant as musk and amber and her food was saffron. She was created 1000 years before man and was Eve's favorite companion.

Eve tasted the forbidden fruit and found it so delicious she gave some to Adam. He was afraid to eat it and Eve offered it to him three times a day for eighty years, then seeing it had not injured Eve, finally Adam ate it. His heaven-sent raiment slipped from him and his crown fell from his head; rings from his fingers, and he and Eve became naked, and their fallen garments reproached them:

"Great is your misfortune! Long will be your sorrows; we were created to adorn those who serve God; farewell till the resurrection."

The throne recoiled, saying, "Depart from me, ye disobedient ones," and all the inhabitants of Paradise turned their backs on the pair, and prayed God to remove them.

There are nearly 500 pages of these interesting legends and they are well worth reading and preserving.

*Bound in cloth; gilt tops, price 75 cents. For sale at this office.

A Story With a Moral.

The conversation at a dinner-table turned on Spiritualism. Said one of the guests. "I heard the other day of a seance at which a woman appeared to her husband.

"'Is that you, 'Arriet?'

"'Yes, it's me,' ungrammatically replied the deceased.

"'Are you 'appy, 'Arriet?'

"'Yes, very 'appy.'

"''Appier than you were with me, 'Arriet?

"'Yes, much 'appier.'

"'Where are you, 'Arriet?'

"'In 'ell!'"—Freethinker.

There are more clever women in the world than men think for; our habit is to despise them, we believe they do not think because they do not contradict us, and are weak because they do not struggle and rise up against us. A man only begins to know women as he grows old; and for my part my opinion of their cleverness rises every day of my life.—Thackeray.

If a woman under the influence of importunity and a desire or a home, marries one whom she does not fully love, that woman has committed adultery and a crime, yet more against posterity. Or if at first she did love her husband and subsequently, for sufficient, deep-seated and uncapricious reasons, loves him no longer, but loves another instead, and does not take that other to be her husband, she is then guilty of being both a prostitute and an adulteress.—A. J. Davis.

The address of the Publisher of "Little Freethinker" is Lock Box 67, Cramer Hill, N. J.—not Camden, N. J. as recently stated in Lucifer.

VARIOUS VOICES.

H. J., Abilene, Texas:—Please send me Ida Wells Barnett's "Lynch Law in Georgia." Find stamp enclosed. I see in Lucifer it is for free distribution. I am reading every word Lillian writes on that subject, for I know that every word she writes is an expression of honest conviction, but it is a most delicate subject, and a problem of all social problems the most difficult of solution.

G. B., London, England:—Your beautiful present, J. Wm Lloyd's poems, came to hand today. It is "a thing of beauty and a joy forever" as a book—certainly the prettiest specimen of a booklet I ever saw. I like Lloyd. I had a long correspondence once with Mr. —— anent the merits of J. W. L. —— is (or was) unfortunately too rapt in the contemplation of England's greatest writer to consider any of America's workers and thinkers. . . . . I was glad to learn from the Light-Bearer that your father is back again at his old post. . . . . News is plentiful enough in England; there is a big "vineyard" still, and I think the laborers are not all dead but many are sleeping.

W. S. Jones, M. D., Oakland, Ky.:—I have just received a sample copy of Lucifer with which I am very much pleased. I want to read it more, and I enclose money order to pay for six months' subscription. I am fully in accord with you in the remarks you make on "Fourth of July" celebrations. There can be no doubt that such demonstrations clearly indicate a rude and barbarous element in the people of our own Christian America which is continually being encouraged by utterances from the daily press, and also from the religious press, and even from the pulpit. I am truly glad that you have come out so plainly and emphatically in opposition to this rude and warlike custom, and also in opposition to the treatment the American people are giving the Filipinos.

R. T., San Andreas, Cal.:—With others I am glad to welcome you back again to the editorship of Lucifer, though I would say that your daughter has managed admirably in your absence. I trust that her little girl has fully recovered. We look upon Lucifer as one of the best papers we take, and could I have been brave enough to have lived the life of God's freedom during part of my life might be a happy and contented woman now. How the inner woman warred with the outer. How the inner said go ahead, how the outer, the mother grundyism said: "No, it was not right." I send you $2.25; $1 for another year's subscription; $1 for "A Cityless and Countryless World" to be sent to my father, and twenty-five cents for postage.

J. B., Edinburgh, Scotland:—I greatly enjoyed the leading article of 761 by Mary Brundage on "Jealousy as a cause of Crime." It gives expression to my thoughts in a superior literary style. It is true, jealousy must be conquered if freedom is to rule or come into practice; but it requires a severe struggle to uproot the teaching and feeling of a lifetime. . . . The Land Question in the shape of taxation of ground values for City and County purposes, has been to the front during the election of two new members of Parliament, Dewar and M'Crae to replace the two who died in the same week,—a very unusual thing. You know that the two reforms I am interested in most are Land Value Taxation and abolition of all other taxes,—and the other is the Sexual Freedom idea with abolition of diseases by removing the cause of so many. I think there is little hope of cure for these diseases while marriage and Freemasonry exist; the foulness they cover breeds anew the same troubles from generation to generation. As all truth is co-related so is the stealing of land values (created by the public) by individuals the cause of the other part of our woes. I am a Henry George man and only an Anarchist to a partial extent.

J. C. Patterson, San Francisco, Cal.,—Mr. Dallan Doyle in his able and very interesting pamphlet on the "Emancipation of Society from Government," says: "No mercy, say more, no justice for the poor. And the present cruelties from which there is no appeal, the present hardships from which there is no remedy as a matter of fact, direct descendents of the past, etc."

Is not this taking a rather pessimistic view of present conditions? That things are bad and gloomy there is no denying, but the belief "There is no remedy," arises, I think, from overlooking the cause that has produced these results. It is on account of the people's ignorance that government exists; they are governed because they have not been taught the prime essential that would confer on them perfect individual and industrial freedom. The real and only cause which we see in all civilized countries, of the few rich and many poor, is high interest on scarce money. We meet people who believe we can do without money but that is a mistaken idea. We must have some recognized medium in order to make our exchanges, and whatever that medium may be, whether of buttons, leather, pieces of colored glass or anything else, it would be money. Therefore money is an artificial creation of civilized law, made for the purpose of facilitating the manifold exchanges of an industrious people, and the less commercial or commodity value it has, the better off are the people. For, remember it is the interest that scarce money commands that concentrates the wealth created by the producer into the possession of the non-producer. "Our laws make the dollar the real value and producers and all kinds of property are controlled by its power."

We must teach the people that money is not value; that the things produced are the values. That paper money must be redeemed in gold is founded on a lie, the object being to keep money scarce so that the exploiting class may live in idleness on its interest.

"If producers ever gain their rights it will be by legally controlling the power of money, and not by any combination of labor. No ingenuity in the invention of machinery, no physical force or combination of labor has power to change this wrong" The remedy, which is an abundance of money, only limited by the amount of business, and fixing the amount of interest that can be legally asked for money loaned at not over one per cent, can only be accomplished by the people. By making money plentiful interest on loans is lowered, and as interest falls the wages of labor and the price of all kinds of property would go up. A proper understanding of money and its functions, and the independence which a permanent rise in wages would bring about, would be the death blow to standing armies. For men having steady work at high salaries would scorn the idea of living in a tent at $15.00 per month.

But having the money we could all have our rifles at our bedside to defend home, fireside and society against would-be rulers. For the thrones of the old world, and the governments of the new, rest upon, and are upheld by bayonets in the hands of the moneyless men.

Remove by education the superstitious belief that gold and silver make the only real money and thrones and governments would topple and fall.

Women in Marriage Slavery

Will find in HILDA'S HOME a story exposing the horrors of their condition as faithfully and as fearlessly as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" exposed the horrors of Negro slavery in the South. The story is more entertaining than many modern works of fiction and the plain truths it tells will find responsive echoes in the aching, bursting hearts of many women who know the galling effects of marriage thralldom.

The book contains 425 pages. Price handsomely bound in cloth, $1. In paper cover 50 cents. Send in your order NOW—especially if you want extra copies for distribution among your friends.

LIBERTY Political, Religious, Social and Sexual. An essay towards the formation of an anti-persecution society. By A. F. Tindall. Price 5 cents.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Persons Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 20 cents. Address Moses Harman, 167 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. R. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

"Loma"—A CITIZEN OF VENUS," by Prof. Wm Windsor. A story of surpassing interest largely devoted to Sexologic and Sociologic problems. Like Bellamy in his "Looking Backward," the writer of "Loma" believes in the "state," as a factor in social evolution, but individualists will probably forgive this feature for the sake of the radically revolutionary ideas in regard to popular theories—exologic, theologic, cosmologic, etc. Substantially printed and artistically bound. Price, post-paid, $1.50. Address this office.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

THE CHICAGO & ALTON R. R. is the best line to all points in the South, South west and West. Free reclining Chair Cars, Pullman Palace Cars. Ticket office 201 Adams st. Chicago.,

James Charlton, Gen. Pass. & Tkt Agent.

George J. Charlton, Asst Gen. Pass. & Tkt Agt.

770.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

Songs of the Unblind Cupid.

Under the title "Songs of the Unblind Cupid" an edition de luxe, in red and black, of a few hitherto unpublished poems by the liberal poet, J. Wm. Lloyd, is just issued.

The verses are printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle-edged, hand-made paper of cerulean tint. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red, and an initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors.

Mr. Lloyd, as author of "Wind Harp Songs" and the "Red Heart in a White World," needs no introduction to the liberal public. These few new poems of love, liberty and nature are here preserved in the highest style of the printers' art, and should find a place in the collection of every friend of freedom, every lover of poetry and every admirer of choice and dainty publications.

Edition limited to 650 copies. There will be no second edition.

Price per copy, 35 cents. Sent postpaid upon receipt of price by M. Harman, 507 Carroll Avenue, Chicago.

THE BALLAD OF READING JAIL. BY C. 3.3.

This powerful poem of more than 600 lines, is the work of OSCAR WILDE C. 3. 3. having been the poets prison number during his confinement in Reading Jail. It is dedicated to the memory of a trooper of the Horse Guards who was hanged in the jail at that time, and it depicts the terrible sensations of the author and his fellow prisoners before and after the execution.

Just issued; price, in cloth, blue, vellum back, beautifully printed from large type on hand-made antique paper, deckle edges; reading matter on one side of the paper; a sumptuous book of 96 pages, 7 inches by 5. $1. In paper, 44 pages, 10 cents. Mailed postpaid on receipt of price, by M. Harman, 507 Carroll Avenue, Chicago.

THE WORKS OF A PIONEER SHOULD NOT BE OVERLOOKED.

The following by WILLIAM DENTON, pioneer Freethought and Spiritualist lecturer, and naturalist, who died while on a journey of scientific research in the wilds of Australia some fifteen years ago, are of as vital importance now as when they were written:

Sermons from Shakespeare's Text;
"Tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones and good in everything."

Orthodoxy False, Since Spiritualism is True.
The God Proposed for Our National Constitution.
What is Right?
Man's True Saviors.
Christianity No Finality or Spiritualism Superior to Christianity.
Who are Christians?

Sent to any address for 10 cents each, by M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.

This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be FREE: love of any man, or of many, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrially."—Page 265. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CITYLESS AND COUNTRYLESS WORLD", by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 450 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Free Love; A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of conubial love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 1874, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence. 140 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.

"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.

"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.

Sample pages free. Prepaid $1.00. Address this office.

Books Worth Reading FREE!

Send us twenty-five cents for a thirteen weeks' trial subscription to Lucifer and we will present to you your choice of the following books, to the value of 25 cents. Read the list carefully. Every book is interesting and thought-inspiring.

John's Way; a domestic radical story, by Elmina D. Slenker,	.25
Human Rights; J. Madison Hook,	10
Vital Force, Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation, by A. Chavannes,	25
Practical Co-operation; by E. C. Walker,	.10
The Revival of Puritanism; " "	.10
Love and the Law; " "	.05
Digging for Bedrock, by Moses Harman,	.10
Is Hell and the Way Out; H. E. Allen.	10

The American Institute of Phrenology.

President Mrs. Charlotte Fowler Wells, incorporated 1866, open its next session on September 5th 1899. For prospectus send (free on application) to the Secretary, care of FOWLER & WELLS CO., 27 East 21st St., New York

RIGHTS OF WOMEN IN THE SEXUAL RELATIONS,

By Karl Heinzen. A new edition together with the startling letters of Louise Bayer on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German women at Frauenstadt. A book of 336 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Price paper bound, 50 cents; cloth, $1

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW. A primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. A valuable compendium on Sex Ethics. Startling and Scientific Price, 10 cents.

LOVE AND THE LAW. By E. C. Walker. A clear, concise statement of social liberty in contradistinction to the much lauded legal bondage now almost universally upheld. An excellent missionary document. Two copies, 5 cents; 20 or 1s per dozen.

The Outcome of Legitimation. By Oswald Dawson. This address was to have appeared in the January "Adult," but the printers of that number played Bowdler on a small scale, and refused to print it, alleging that the matter which they did print was "bad enough, but we are printing that and decline to print more." The lecture deals with some problems arising from the practicalization of the theories of free love. Price, 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint: A plea and protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

The Story of An African Farm. Olive Schreiner's master piece. A story of the struggle for light, the search for truth, the yearning for happiness of bright young English and German people, among the ignorant and coarse Boers and Kaffirs of South Africa. This is a work of art, and of truth. Well bound in cloth. 296 pages. Price 40 cents, postage 10 cents. For sale at this office.

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races". Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III., Co-operation; Chapter V., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, ten cts.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled Christians. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

Some Problems in Social Freedom. Presidential address delivered by Lillian Harman before the Legitimation League, at Holborn Restaurant, London. "Freedom in Social Relations;" "The Ownership of Women;" "Where Draw the Line?" "What Would Become of the Family?" "Marriage a 'confidence game';" "How Society Protects Children." Price, 5 cents. For sale at this office.

Love Ventures of Tom, Dick, and Harry. A Novel with an Affidavit And they were naked and not ashamed (Gen. ii. 25) 16 full-page French-Art Illustrations. Illuminated covers 12mo 225 pp. paper, 25c.; boards, 50c.

Personal. Readers of Lucifer who would like a quiet, home-like room in a private family when visiting Chicago, should correspond with X. Y. Z., care of Lucifer, 507 Carroll Ave.

Wanted. Subscribers to "Little Freethinker." The only liberal paper published for the young. 25 cents a year. Also names of liberal women who want correspondents. Address Elmina Drake Slenker, Knoxville Pub. Co., Va.

Liberal Home. Those who wish to join in such a home that is now well established, please address with stamp, A. M. Corey, Electra, Marion Co., Fla.

Socialists: Ten cents pays for "Weekly Commoner" trial month. New radical socialist magazine; able writers; eight pages, spicy and up-to-date. Box 808, Portland, Oregon.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 28. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, JULY 22, E. M. 299. [C. E. 1899.] WHOLE No. 771.

Poor Human Nature!

I saw a meager melancholy cow,
Blessed with a starveling calf who sucked in vain;
Ere noon he died. I asked the mother how—?
Quoth she "Of every four there dieth twain!"
Poor bovine nature!

I saw a sickly horse of shambling gait
Ugly and wicked, weak in leg and back,
Useless in all ways, in a wretched state,—
"We're all poor creatures!" said the sorry hack.
Poor equine nature!

I saw a slow cat crawling on the ground,
Weak, clumsy, inefficient, full of fears,
The mice escaping from her aimless bound—
Moaned she "This truly is a vale of tears!"
Poor feline nature!

Then did I glory in my noble race,
Healthful and beautiful, alert and strong;
Rejoicing that we hold a higher place
And need not add to theirs our mournful song—
Poor human nature!

—Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

"The Punishment of the Vestals."

Under the above title F. J. Gould, writing in the "Freethinker," compares the fate of the Vestal Virgins with the crucifixion of Christ.

The Vestal Virgins were instituted by Numa Pompilius. They took the vow of chastity and servitude for thirty years. "To them was committed the keeping of the holy fire on the altar; and in their inviolable charge were placed wills and other important documents."

Our writer goes on to describe the punishment of the Vestal who had violated her vow:

"If a Vestal neglected any of the smaller duties which the State assigned to her, she was whipped. But the scourge might only be wielded by the high priest, and he must hang a curtain between himself and the virgin whom he chastised. But if a Vestal indulged in forbidden love, and broke the awful vow of chastity, she must needs die. And this was the manner of her death. There was a gate in the wall of Rome named Collina, and near the gate rose a mound of earth, just inside the city. Under the mound was excavated a small cell, to which a flight of stairs gave access. In the cell were placed a bed, a lighted lamp, and a small quantity of provisions, such as bread, water, a pan of milk, and some oil. And thus she who lay a prisoner in the death-cell had enough of food to make her feel tenfold the terror of starvation. When all things were made ready, the Vestal who had sinned against the dignity of Rome was laid in a litter as if she were a corpse, and tied with cords, and her mouth so muffled that she could make no cry. In this guise she was carried through the streets; and, though the streets might be filled with a vast concourse of people, none uttered a curse or a sneer. Though the sun might shine, the sky appeared dark; for the city mourned, and every palace and temple seemed overshadowed with sorrow and shame.

After the bearers of the litter had made a pause in the Forum, they proceeded slowly to the dreadful mound near the Gate Collina. Halting before the little door, they released the Vestal from the bier, and undid the cords. Then the High Priest raised his arms towards heaven, and prayed; but he prayed in a whisper, as if not even the birds of the air should know the disgrace that had befallen Rome. When he had uttered his supplication, he led the veiled woman to the entrance of the house of death, and placed her on the steps. He and his fellow-priests turned their backs upon her as she went down to the cell. When she had descended, they drew up the steps, and heaped soil over the doorway. No man ever saw the Vestal alive again and she saw no man. The earth had devoured her in dread silence. And the fire leaped upon the altar, and was fed by other hands."

And here is his opinion of the tragedy:

"In all the history ever written I can recall no scene more impressive than this of the fallen Vestal. It is far more solemn and affecting than the tragedy of the Crucifixion.

"Why is this? Because in the one case there is a stern logic—terrifying, but magnificent; in the other there is a false sentimentality. . . . Never was it, never will it be, never can it be just that one man should suffer for the ill-doing of another. It may be generous; it may be expedient; it may be heroic; but not just. Either a condemned man deserves to die, or he does not. If he does not deserve to die, neither he himself should suffer nor a neighbor in his place. If he does truly deserve to die, then he himself should bear the penalty, and not a substitute. How can a sinner be made righteous by connivance in an act of injustice? If the Tiber is foul, will it avail to cleanse the Thames? And if the earth has become vile, can the holiness of the stars purge its wickedness? The innocent soul may shriek under the lash for all eternity, but its blood will never wash away the sin of the guilty. 'The sin that sinneth, it shall die.' So spake the Old Testament, austerely and sanely. So also spake old Rome; and when the Vestal went down to her last meal, even she might feel that the doom was just. No babe was made to weep instead of her; no guiltless life was banned for her sake. She fell, and she died; and the thunders of judgment rolled away into the everlasting stillness; and nature could smile as if the principle of Justice had been vindicated."

And this is justice, in the opinion of a Nineteenth Century "Rationalist"! He criticises the story of the crucifixion of Jesus because it was a "vicarious atonement;" yet what was it but a vicarious sacrifice when the Vestal went down to her dreadful death? She was the victim of the ignorance and superstition of her generation. She was an ignorant young girl when allured from her young companions by the promises of honors and glory in store for her, what could she know of the realities of the life upon which she was about to enter?

Then when she had taken the fatal vow, and the days and months and years passed changelessly by, and she grew faint and weary of the eternal sameness of her colorless existence, if she fell asleep beside the "sacred" fire, "Justice" demanded that she be whipped; if her lonely, starved soul called out for a little of the love and companionship craved by all living beings outraged "Justice" was to be appeased only by her starvation, her suffocation in the cold and clammy cell devised by priestly ingenuity!

In Mr. Gould's opinion the fact that Jesus voluntarily suffered for the sins of others is a violation of justice; but he sees only a vindication of justice in the involuntary martyrdom of the Vestal Virgins. For he says, "The pagan conception appals us; but we acknowledge its justice. The Christian conception first excites our pity and then our abhorrence."

In reading these sad tales of the childhood of our race we find much which appals us, much which excites our pity and abhorrence. But far more saddening is it to find "Rationalists" of the present day whose minds are still so befogged by the superstitions of those dark days that they insult the name of Justice by invoking it in defense of such frightful tragedies as "the punishment of the vestal."

LILLIAN HARMAN.

Combines, Trusts and Amalgamations.

BY R. B. KERR.

"Competition is fast disappearing before the growth of a more powerful principle". "Review of Reviews" for July.

In No. 768 Edgar D. Brinkerhoff criticises my recent article on monopolies and combines. His article is interesting for what it says, but far more for what it does not say. He simply tries to prove that if trusts charge extortionate prices competition may revive; but he does not dispute my main point that combination is the natural outcome of free competition, because it pays men better to combine than to compete.

Within the past six months the United States have witnessed a revolution, compared with which the Revolution of 1776 was a very small affair. On the first of January the industrial system of the United States might fairly have been described as the competitive system; today that system has almost entirely vanished into the past. This change will interest the economic historian for thousands of years, and it is well for us to go over the ground again and see what caused the change.

Some people attribute combination to the gold standard; others to a high tariff; others to land monopoly; others to law. I say that combination springs from the will to combine. Men have found that it paid better to combine than to compete; and men have combined.

There is nothing new about combination; the only thing that is new is the scale on which it is practiced. For ages two barbers in a village have known it was better to fix prices and stick to them than to try to get trade by alternately cutting each other's rates. There never was a village so small that it had not its little Rockefellers and Havemeyers. But now the big Rockefellers and Havemeyers have come upon the scene, and organized the industries of a nation on the principles of the two village barbers.

If the only advantage of combination had been that higher prices can be got by combination than by competition, that alone would have made combination inevitable. But combination, while raising prices, also cuts expenses. The president of the Commercial Travellers' National League lately testified before the Industrial Commission that the trusts had thrown 35,000 drummers out of employment, whose joint salaries amounted to $60,000,000. That means that the trusts have saved their members sixty million dollars a year in drummer's salaries alone. In the old days when there were a lot of rival producers, each establishment had to send drummers all over the continent. Now those rival producers are merged in one vast company and no drummers are needed; for merchants must either send to the trust for goods, or go without. A trust means one office where there used to be a hundred, and one clerk where fifty were formerly required. It means one big factory instead of a dozen small ones; one big steam engine, or electrical plant, or water power, where a number of little ones once did duty. The industrial revolution of last century extinguished domestic manufactories, and established big factories. The industrial revolution of 1899 has simply finished the work. I do not wonder that competition is dead, but I do wonder that it ever lived.

And now, will any man tell me, what on earth has this subject to do with currency, or tariff, or the land, or the law? If men want to sell dearly and produce cheaply when paid in gold, will they not want to do these things when paid in anything else? Does the love of gain depend on the conditions of land-holding? If combinations can be made in the teeth of the laws, can they not be made when there are no laws? As for free trade, that would certainly keep down the profits of the trusts for a few years, until national trusts are superseded by international trusts. But the "Review of Reviews" very pertinently points out that that would not kill the trusts, because the trusts save expense, and under foreign competition the need to save expense would be more pressing than ever. If individual enterprise has no chance against the trust alone, what chance would it have when ground between the upper millstone of domestic trusts and the nether millstone of foreign competition? No; foreign competition will never kill the trusts, but the trusts will soon go to Europe and Asia and kill foreign competition.

We can now form some conception of the future of the industrial world. In the first place, we shall see each branch of industry in the hands of one giant national company, which will be run on the strictest business principles. It will have a president, a board of directors, and a body of shareholders, who will decide by majority vote all questions not left to the executive. All the rest of the people in the industry will be wage-earners.

But national companies will soon give way to international companies. Each branch of industry throughout the world will then be in the hands of one universal company, and it is not likely that the chief executive of many of these companies will live in America. Probably most of the presidents will live in China or India, as these are the most populous countries; and from there they will govern the industrial world.

But even that will not be the end. There will still be about a hundred companies, each headed by a Rockefeller, to divide the world among them; and the world will not hold a hundred Rockefellers. It will soon be found that the amalgamation of different industries will lead to economy, as the amalgamation of one industry formerly did. One power will be used to work the machinery of many industries simultaneously, and one universal office will be found cheaper than a number. The final amalgamation will take place, and the industries of the world will be left in the hands of one universal trust.

But while industrial consolidation has been proceeding openly, another process will have been going on silently, viz, the gradual accumulation of the shares in a few hands. Shares in a great trust are a splendid thing to have, but many people are foolish and spendthrift, and will dissipate their shares, which will be purchased by their wiser brethren. As there will be no opening for any independent enterprise, and no chance for speculation, the spendthrifts will simply fall into the laboring class, and the shares will be owned by an ever-decreasing circle. In time they will all be in the hands of a few men, perhaps a Rockefeller, a Vanderbilt, a Carnegie and a Havemeyer. Then there will be a great game of freeze-out. But the strong man will win, as he always does; some day the shares will all stand in one man's name; and the industrial system will have worked out its inevitable destiny. One man will own the world, and all the others will be his wage earners.

To attain this result, however, one condition is indispensable. There must be absolute freedom. Only under absolute freedom can we have absolute centralization and the annihilation of all individuals but one. Everybody must be free to compete against the universal trust; but of course nobody will be able to do so, for the trust will be able to sell cheaper than anyone else could possibly produce. Finally, every child will have to be taught the sacredness of freedom of contract, and the glories of free competition. The greatest of crimes will be to write or speak a word against liberty. Golden statues of Benjamin Tucker and Edgar Brinkerhoff will stand at every street corner, and a thousand Bedloe's Islands will be crowned with monuments to liberty, to keep the world in subjection to its Chinese master.

Such is the only conceivable outcome of free competition.

What Social Freedom Implies.*

Social freedom declares every person has a right to live in his social relations according to the dictates of his own conscience and reason, the same as he has religiously; and government should protect him in that right from all interference from others, the same as it now does religiously. People must differ in their ideas of social life, the same as they do on religious matters, and for the same reason, their different degrees of growth; and the man who would try to force another to his views and practices in this respect, is as truly a tyrant as the one who would try to force another to his religious views.

There are a great variety of opinions extant as to what is the highest life between the sexes. We find as we go among the least advanced in civilization, women treated as slaves, beasts of burden, or articles of merchandise; parents selling their daughters for wives without regard to their wish or choice. We have progressed from one step to another in recognizing her humanity, until we have some among us who believe woman should reign queen in the realm of the affections. Social freedom recognizes the right of the Shaker to believe in celibacy and practice the same, but does not seem to be very fearful that all men will of course become celibates if they are accorded that right. If they did, it would be worse for the world than promiscuity, of which some are so fearful. It recognizes the right of the Catholics to marry according to the rituals of their church, but knows all will not choose that method. It recognizes the right of persons to live in polygamy if they choose, or in complex marriage as the Oneida Community does, or the right of the varietist to live in a dual relation.

A person may be a believer in social freedom, and be either of these, or neither; and yet if he recognizes the right of others to choose for themselves as best they may, as he would wish to do for himself, he is a believer in social freedom. To assume that a person is a Shaker, a polygamist or a free lover because he advocates social freedom is as unjust as it would be to assume a man to be a Materialist or a Jew, because he believed in religious freedom. We have not social freedom guaranteed to us by the constitution, as we have religious freedom, hence we find people more frequently interfering with our rights by passing laws trying to force all kinds of people to one mode of life in this respect, just as some people would force others to religious views if they had the power.

We hear the same outcry against the terrible over-turning of society if social freedom should obtain, that we once heard of religious freedom, and have so recently heard against freedom for the blacks.

We are told wives would desert their husbands, husbands their wives, our daughters would be debauched, and general promiscuousness and prostitution would result. This, my friends, is a picture of what actually does exist now, under our most stringent laws. It is the same old cry that was set up against the liberation of the blacks—the wail of the ignorant tyrant. Do our laws prevent these evils? We can hardly take up a newspaper without seeing a list of elopements, desertions, debaucheries, child-murders and atrocities against decency and order; enough to make the "very stones cry out in judgment against us;" and yet our opponents say these things will come of social freedom. They have come, good friends, without it. We have all these conditions now, and have never had social freedom. We have laws now which make woman man's slave, owned by him, soul and body, "and wives submit yourselves unto your husbands in all things" has been dinned into the ears of woman until she has failed to learn the diviner lesson "obey the principles of your own soul." Laws have been enacted by men with no voice of woman's, making him the owner of her property and her person; and he can recover damages from any other man, if she, of her own accord, have sexual relations with him, she being his property.

If we had no guarantee of religious freedom it would not hinder people differing in religious views, but with penalties annexed to all differences it would hinder honesty of expression; so in social life our laws prohibiting all sexual relations, except in legal marriage, have not prevented people from having different views on the subject, and giving expression to them in acts on the sly; but I will tell you what it has done, it has converted what might have been an honest promiscuous man into a promiscuous hypocrite, thus doubling the crime, if it be one, instead of preventing it; it has licensed men to debauch women in the marriage bed until the most fearful consequences have resulted, and diseases the most appalling, often resulting in life long misery, or premature death. I could relate cases coming under my professional observation, that would equal in sickening details and horrors the debaucheries of southern slaves, and yet people object to hearing this subject discussed.

*From "A Discussion of the Social Question" by Dr. Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. Price, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

"Too Much Liberty."

New York World.

In yesterday's "World" a correspondent signing himself "Schoolmaster" took up the cause of those Mount Vernon women and that Mount Vernon Magistrate who propose to send to jail all boys under sixteen years of age who go to theatres or other shows unattended by their parents. "Too much liberty" he wrote, "is not a good thing for children."

But who is to decide what is "too much liberty" except the parents of the child concerned? The plea that "too much liberty is not good" is as old as despotism, as familiar as oppression. It was the slaveholder's profound conviction that too much liberty was not good for the negro. It is the the plea on which the Russian third section suppresses newspapers, closes universities and sends men, women and little children to Siberia. All the hideous cruelties of mediaeval religious persecution had their origin in this thought that "too much liberty is not good" for the person or class of people to be oppressed. It is the tyrant's plea the conqueror's, the slave driver's, and in every case it is the oppressor who assumes to decide what is "too much liberty." Invariably he decides the matter in favor of his own convenience or interest or passion.

The right of a boy under sixteen to go to the show if his parents permit is as absolute and as sacred as the right of a Mount Vernon woman to wear flowers in her hat or a Mount Vernon Judge to take rolls and coffee for breakfast. And as to the morality of it, to which "Schoolmaster" makes reference, a boy is surely less apt to be corrupted by attendance upon any show which the law ought to permit than by spending the evening loitering about the streets, perhaps in vicious company. And certainly a show of any orderly sort is a better school of morality than the prisons to which the Mount Vernon Dogberry threatened to send boys who go to the show.

Apart from the restraints of parental discipline the American boy has always enjoyed a very large measure of liberty, and if we are the virtuous people we pretend to be it certainly has not hurt him.

Some well disposed, amiable people have confidence that a good cause will take care of itself, and while they attend to their own business and sleep the enemies of the good cause attend to the killing of it day and night. The eye of the predatory class never shuts.—Myron W. Reed.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

ONCE MORE we ask our friends not to send us money—silver or bank bills in unregistered letters. We are continually losing money in this way. Only a week ago a clerk in the Chicago Post Office was caught in the act of rifling letters of their valuables. Fifty letters were found upon his person. Send by Post Office Money Order, by bank draft but not personal checks. Sums under one dollar may be sent in postage stamps.

OUR READERS and patrons, everywhere, are hereby again requested not to forget to send us names of their friends and acquaintances who might become interested in Lucifer and its work, if they could see a few sample copies. Upon this plan, more than any other, we now depend for increase of subscription list, and for advertising the books and pamphlets that supplement and extend the work of the paper itself.

Freedom of Speech and of Press.

"What of the night, Watchman!" So far as freedom of speech and of press is concerned the night grows darker. Our readers have probably heard of the imprisonment of Editor Stewart, of the Mullen (Idaho) "Mirror," on the charge of treason and sedition. Here is part of the utterances for which Stewart was sent to prison:

"The 'authorities' are declaring that they are handling the affair at Wardner as expeditiously as possible. That may be true. They say that the men are being examined as fast as they can be reached. That may be true. But what compensation will be made to the hundreds of men who have been falsely imprisoned in box cars and a vile, filthy barn for from five days to four weeks, herded like sheep in a pen; taken from their work in the mines and mills with no chance to change their wet, heavy mine and mill garments for dry ones? How will the state compensate these men arrested at the bayonet point, while in the peaceful pursuit of their daily toil, given no chance to show whether or not there was any reason why they should be arrested at all? What excuse or compensation will the state make to those men who are released after being subjected for weeks to indignities, insults and abuses such as are said to be accorded political prisoners in Siberia?"

It appears that these criticisms upon the doings of the military authorities in their treatment of the miners excited the ire of Gen. Merriam, and that official, following the example of military despots of old time, answered his accuser by shutting him up behind prison bars and stopping the publication of his paper. Like Gen. Otis, in the Philippines, Gen. Merriam is not willing that the facts of his campaign against Western miners should be made known to the general public. The fact that "four men died from the treatment they received as prisoners in box cars and cattle pens" might, if known, compel the administration at Washington to order a public investigation of the case, and because this publicity might have a disastrous effect upon the prospects of promotion for the General himself, if not react disastrously upon the political prospects of the administration whose servant he is, suggested, it would appear, to this military hero the expedient of preventing further publicity by suppressing the paper that dared to criticize his acts, and sending the audacious editor to prison.

The suppression of free speech and press by Gen. Otis, in consequence of which it has been impossible to get at the facts concerning the war in the Philippines, continues to attract considerable attention though not a tithe of the attention that this highhanded outrage merits. Late dispatches from Manila via Hong Kong, so we are now told, give accounts of the protest of the correspondents of English and American newspapers against the censorship of free dispatches exercised by Gen. Otis. This "round robin" of the correspondents is a historical document calling attention to the infamy of the warfare against the Filipinos. This is the first instance in which the facts regarding the situation in the Philippines have been given to the American public with any adequate guarantee of their authenticity. Whether the Federal government will be influenced by this document remains to be seen. Let the truth be known, and the slaughter of the unoffending Filipinos will cease.

* * *

From the "Blue Grass Blade," Lexington, Ky., of July 16, we learn that its editor, Charles C. Moore, returned to his Kentucky home, on the 8th inst., after a confinement of five months in the Ohio State Prison. The Lexington "Herald" is quoted as saying that "his return was marked by a demonstration which would have done honor to a conquering army returning from some field of battle with its flag unfurled and proudly flying to the breeze."

Mr. Moore was sentenced by a federal court to two years imprisonment at hard labor in the penitentiary for publishing so-called obscene literature. A personal friend of the prisoner, a U. S. Senator, interviewed President McKinley and secured a commutation of sentence from two years to six months. At the end of five months—one month off for good behavior,—the editor of the "Blue Grass Blade" was released.

Among those who made addresses at the very flattering reception accorded the returning prisoner were Moses Kaufman and Josephine K. Henry. As reported in the "Blade" Mrs. Henry said, in part:

"Free thought, free speech, and free press have been defended and preserved by the ablest of earth. Through ignorance and mental darkness, through bloody wars, through torture, terror and tyranny, free thought has upheld the Promethean Torch of Reason with steady hand, and undeviating step until now it is leading the world with victorious colors. Those who have advanced and labored for better things for humanity have ever been the victims of religious prejudice and tyranny. . . . . But for the battle fought for free speech and free press by that splendid trinity of Freethinkers, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, and Thomas Paine, the human mind today would be in chains and the printing press the exclusive property of those in ecclesiastical and civil power.

"The superstitions, fables and fears of the past are steadily retreating before the 'march of mind,' and the banner of Rationalism is now thrown to the breeze by the scholars, poets, orators, editors, and other brain-workers of our time, and it is even being grasped by clerical hands in cathedrals, churches, and chapels, and being waved in synods, conferences, and ecclesiastical battle grounds. Rationalism has advanced thus far in the United States. The newspaper is far more powerful than the pulpit. The monopoly of the pulpit has been destroyed by the press, which is the greatest lever of civilization."

While we are all glad to know that Mr. Moore is again a free man, provided of course that he prefers to be out of prison, —of which fact, however, his letters from prison leave us in considerable doubt—it is difficult for some of us to see wherein his release is a vindication of freedom of speech and of press. The cutting down of the sentence from two years to six months is not saying that Moore is not guilty, as charged in the indictment, but simply that the punishment was excessive.

Then the ovation tendered to him on his return may have been prompted largely by the impression that he is now repentant, and because he has since repudiated the sentiments or opinions for the publication of which he was imprisoned. That is to say, while at the time of publication of the indicted matter Mr. Moore was a champion of free speech and press—at least so far as the discussion of the marriage question is concerned, but when put upon his trial for such publication the editor of the "Blue Grass Blade" backed squarely down, and spent his time in defending his paper against the charge that it was a "free love" publication, instead of boldly defending his right to publish anything not libelous or slanderous.

If I have been wrongly informed in regard to this matter I shall be glad to be set right. M. HARMAN.

Social Problems.

Among the gratifying signs of social progress is the fact that some women—would that their tribe could increase more rapidly than it does—now refuse to take the names of the men they select, or rather whom they accept, as their sexuo-economic partners. Whether they marry in the old way or not a few refuse to put on a new brass collar, figuratively speaking, every time they enter upon a new conjugal partnership—a new collar engraved with the name of the man they now acknowledge as lord and master.

This is one way of saying that the new woman is discontented; that she does not like the ways of the old woman. Paul exhorted the primitive Christians "to put off the old man with his deeds." The up-to-date woman is putting off the old woman with her deeds.

The old marriage law merged the individuality, the personality, of the wife in that of her husband, and to show that her personality was so merged she was required to take his name, just as the black slaves of the south were required to take the names of their owners, in token of their allegiance thereto. To prove that the surrender of her name is part of the law of marriage we have only to note that when a woman seeking a divorce, wishes to resume her maiden name or the name she bore previous to her latest marriage, she makes this a part of her petition to the court—thus showing the absolute falsity of the claim often made that marriage is an equal partnership.

Before marriage the old woman was labelled "Miss," to indicate, presumably, that she was now for sale in the matrimonial market, and that she had never yet been sold—never yet been "knocked down" to a bidder by a legally authorized auctioneer. After marriage she was and is labelled "Mistress"—for short "Missis," to indicate that she has been sold—once if not oftener.

In the matrimonial market the Misses were and are much more in demand than are Missises, and for the very obvious reason that new goods always sell more readily than second hand goods. The label "Mrs." is fair warning that the goods are not new. To the average man—the old man—it means "damaged goods"—"been owned and worn by some other man." "Don't want her," the would-be purchaser very naturally says to himself—"at least not while there are plenty of new goods exposed for sale."

Today there is an increasing number of women who refuse to be considered as second hand goods—refuse to regard themselves as sold, because of the fact that they have formed a sexuo-economic partnership with a man. The new woman knows that no man is considered second-hand goods—damaged goods—because of the fact that he has had experience in the sexuo-economic relation, whether that experience may have been according to law or without law. She knows that men are not considered any the less eligible as conjugal partners because they have been long on the market. They know that mature men are not called "master" (diminutive of mister) indicative of immaturity, innocence, ignorance, or inexperience, then why she asks, should a mature woman be labelled with a title that means she is immature, innocent, ignorant or inexperienced?

And thus it is seen that the common conventional "Miss," "Mrs.," "Mr." and "Master," have a much deeper significance than is usually attributed to them, by the average and superficial thinker. "Mr.," pronounced mister, originally means "master"—master of what? Presumably master, owner and ruler of himself,—his own body, mind, actions and wordly goods, and also master or ruler of the household, or other members of his family; also master or ruler of the employes in his business, whatever that business may be, and these definitions of "Mr." we find to be fairly correct—as applied to adults —"Master" being reserved, in polite society, as a label for youth, or immature manhood.

"Mrs."—an abbreviation for Mistress, commonly pronounced missis, is, by etymology, simply the feminine of mister, or master, but in law and custom it lacks a good deal of being the feminine counterpart of the masculine label. Neither in law nor custom is the wife mistress or ruler of herself—her body, her mind, her time, her actions, her children or her earnings—"her bed and board," as man is recognized to be owner and ruler of his body, mind, etc. It is probably owing to this well-known discrimination against woman, in law and custom, that the usual marriage formulas end with, "I pronounce you man and wife!"

Why not "man and woman"? or "woman and man"? or "husband and wife"?—"woman and husband"? or some such variation? The most plausible explanation would seem to be that while man remains the owner of himself, his name, his time, his earnings, etc., after marriage as before, it is not the same with woman. With the single exception that as husband he cannot legally make a transfer of real estate without consent of his wife, a man surrenders nothing at marriage, or next to nothing, whereas woman surrenders her name, or takes his in addition; surrenders the right to spend her time when and where she pleases; surrenders the right to control her person, her children, and in most Christian lands she surrenders the right to control her earnings, whether her labor be performed in the home or away from home.

The husband is the purse-holder, and while both law and custom allow the wife to use the credit of her husband she knows full well that she can be held to a strict account for such use, and that when she rebels against the authority of her lord and secedes from the sexuo-economic combination, he can advertise her as a "runaway" wife, warning all persons not to harbor her, nor to give her credit on his account, prefacing his statement with, "My wife, so and so, having left my bed and board." Who ever heard of a woman advertising her husband as a fugitive from her "bed and board"? M. HARMAN.

To be continued.

Law, Religion, and the Small Boy.

Last week a small boy in Evanston stole some apples belonging to the Principal of the Northwestern Academy. The little pilferer was arrested, tried, and sentenced to six months' attendance at Sunday school. In obedience to the command of the Justice, on last Sunday he made his first appearance at the place of punishment.

The "Tribune" devotes nearly a column to his case, treating it in a manner which the reporter evidently thought "funny." "He had on an old Prince Albert coat, which had been cut off at the bottom and trimmed at the sleeves so that it hung on the lad like a bag," we are told. "His vest was an old, low-cut, full-dress affair, badly spotted. His stockings were marvels in color, and his shoes were four or five sizes too large, and flapped on his feet like the sails of the Genesee in a light breeze. He wore a hat discarded by some of Evanston's heads, which gave the boy the appearance of a Cuban."

The lesson was on the three Hebrew children in the fiery furnace. When the teacher asked why they were cast into the furnace one of the good little Sunday school boys called out "For stealing apples!" This almost precipitated a fight, and broke up the Sunday school for that day. The action of the Sunday school child in taunting the little fellow in disgrace does not speak very well for the civilizing influence of the Sun day school, yet it is expected that enforced attendance will inculcate honesty in the little convict.

Of the child's home life the "Tribune" says: "Sonny's father is a religious exhorter and has been in the South for three years. The family is in poor circumstances and the boy practically lives in the street." Apparently there is too much religion in that family rather than too little. If the father would do less exhorting and would go to work and earn money with which to buy clothing and fruit for his children, it would be decidedly to the advantage of society at large as well as to that of the children.

By the way, since when has the Sunday school been a legal place of detention for criminals? L. H.

Free Trade.

BY EDGAR D. BRINKERHOFF.

The editorial on "The Mother's Reward," in Lucifer of July 8 is entirely satisfactory as to the ideas advocated; the only room for difference is as to the choice of words. The trouble with employing commerce and commercialism in an advanced sense is that it leaves us without a convenient word when referring to the free exchange of goods in buying and selling. The question is whether we shall boldly use the terms in their original sense or yield to the communists and state socialists who have read a false meaning into the words because they hate free trade?

By their modern interpretation, these people have induced many to abhor commercialism while the real thing to be feared is governmentalism or state interference with commerce. If these writers were respectable philosophers we might acknowledge that the term commercialism is entitled to the honor of an evoluted sense and cast about for a new name by which to express the old idea. Voluntarism and voluntary co-operation leave the idea of buying and selling too far in the background.

To elicit more definite details from the editor, allow me to propound the following inquiry: How does he picture the future men of ideal society when appropriating the funds they will receive as wages? Will they squander all on themselves or will the female portion of humanity receive a part now and then? Or, will the children receive something? If the women receive a part will it come about by gift, or taxation, or sale of goods? Or will it pass into their hands by some other means? If the children get something how will it come to them?

REPLY.

When a boy I read in the Malte Brun school geography something like this: "When an Australian receives a gift it is worth nothing to him till divided with a woman."

In my little pamphlet "Motherhood in Freedom," the new woman, the emancipated, the womanly woman of the future," is made to say to one of her possible or prospective co-operators, "I shall doubtless want companionship—the companionship of masculine man, and I shall want co-operation in raising and educating my child. If you prove worthy to be elected as such co-operator—if my highest intuitions and best judgment, as owner and natural guardian of my child, shall choose you as such companion and helper I shall be very sure to let you know it. But until I do so inform you—until I make such election or selection you must presume nothing, you must assume absolutely nothing. With Alice Carey in the 'Bridal Veil,' I say to you now and shall continue to say to you:

> The past is not mine; I am too proud to borrow—
> You must grow to new heights if I love you tomorrow."

In primeval times and among primeval races of the genus homo, man pursued and captured woman, much in the same way that he pursued and captured the beasts of the forest, and when captured he enslaved her—claimed and exercised the right of ownership and control over her person, her time, her labor and her offspring. Neither she nor her children were supposed to have any rights as against the autocratic will, the egoistic pleasure, of the masculine head of the family.

In process of time, when commercialism, or buying and selling, superseded, in part at least, the rule of force in the affairs of men, women became articles of merchandise, of barter, and were held as chattels or slaves by right of purchase.

In the present phase or stage of human evolution we find traces of both these methods of obtaining control of woman's person and of her offspring. Man does not now pursue and conquer woman with a club, as in the olden time; his weapons now are reason, persuasion, hypnotic suggestion, etc., and when he goes into the matrimonial market as purchaser he does not offer cows, bear-skins or wampum to the father of the girl he wants, but does much the same thing by making presents to the girl herself, or by offering to "endow her with all his earthly goods," if she will only surrender her person and the control of her prospective children to him.

As some one has succinctly put it, "In modern marriage the man is after the person of the woman, and the woman is after the purse of the man."

But it is confidently believed that human evolution has something higher, something better in store than either conquest or commercialism, as guiding or ruling forces in the most intimate relations of women and men. That higher and better ruling force is believed by many to be—in one word, Love! Not the love that "seeketh its own;" not the love that seeketh ownership and control of the loved object; not the love that like the horse-leech's daughters is always crying, "Give, give!" but the love that gets its highest satisfaction in giving to others without thought of other reward than the giving itself bestows. Not the narrow, the egoistically selfish love that always asks, "How is this going to affect me personally," but the broad, the altruistically selfish love that is uncalculating, spontaneous, intuitional, all-embracing—the love that like the universe has its "center everywhere and its circumference nowhere." The love that is beautifully outlined by some prophet of the still distant future, in the following lines:

> Love is life's end; an end yet never ending.
> Love's life's reward; rewarded in rewarding.
> Hence from thy wretched heart fond care remove—
> If e'er thou liv'st but once love's worth to prove
> Then will not love to live unless thou live to love.

"Rewarded in rewarding." Is this not answer enough to questions of how the women and children of the future will be provided for?

The men of the future, having been properly instructed in the principle of equitable co-operation will see the justice of dividing their earnings with the women of the future, without hope or expectation of reward other than the satisfaction of having borne a manly share of life's burdens. The manly man of the future will know—as the man of the present seems not to know—that all the real labor and peril of bringing children into the world, is borne by woman, leaving man free to do the hard labor needed in providing a home and sustenance for woman while engaged in her reproductive work, and also in providing shelter, clothing and sustenance for the young and helpless children. Just how this help "will come to them" just what proportion of a man's earnings will be set apart for the support of the woman or the women he loves, and who love him, or for the support of children, are matters of detail that may well be left to each individual and to the power of an enlightened public conscience. "Where there's a will there's a way," especially when that will is dominated, controlled and stimulated, by an all-pervading, all-conquering but non-invasive love.

I repeat, and would continue to repeat that when man is once civilized he will not need "taxation" or statutory compulsion of any kind, to compel him to do the right thing towards women and children. "The letter [of the law] killeth; it is the spirit [of love] that maketh alive." Woman's initiative, woman's election, will be law enough. The men who neglect, abuse or in any way mistreat women and children, will be ignored, avoided, boycotted! They will not reproduce their kind. None will be chosen by women as masculine co-operators, on any plane,—the physical, the intellectual, the psychic—except the unselfish, or rather the altruistically selfish. None but gentlemen, in the broad and true meaning of that word, will be counted among the elect, when womanhood awakes.

At present, not love but law is depended on to compel man to protect and support woman and her children; for results, read the daily papers. For results, observe the pinched, half-starved, anxious faces and the wretchedly clad forms of a large proportion of women and children seen daily on the streets. For results, go to the jails, the penitentiaries, the poor houses, the reform schools, the asylums for the insane,—the mentally, morally and physically deformed, prenatally disinherited and defrauded, and then consider whether it would not be well to trust to law a little less, and depend a little more on Love in Freedom—on Love guided by Wisdom—wisdom learned in the school of experience!

Is Friend Brinkerhoff still unanswered? If so I will try once more. M. HARMAN.

Woman and War.

BY ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

Though the average woman admires the military and its equipments, and many of them worship the soldier, still there are so many exceptions one can but feel hopeful the tide will turn as the race grows in enlightenment and culture. Even now there is a large per cent of women who eschew all wars and all military insignia. I cannot remember when I did not turn away from all such, as I would from any other sign of brute force, wrong and outrage.

Educated among Quakers I had it ingrained in me to dislike all that encouraged war, dissension or strife. And Quakers everywhere still cling to this abhorrence of war and war trappings. Shakers also, and all the immense crowds composing the great and numerous "Bands of Mercy" growing out of the work done by "Our Dumb Animals"—a paper that, aside from its catering to the mythology of the age, is one of the most useful of publications.

Nearly all the great thinkers among women are opposed to war, and especially opposed to "fist-fights" public or private. The Liberals must judge the world by its thinkers, for in time these will be its leaders; and reason and arbitration will decide all disputed questions. The Christian preaches universal love, peace and brotherhood, and then fills the world with war, strife, and murder. I do not say there are no good men in the church or army, but the whole trend of war is evil incalculable, and some day it will and must cease.

> "We rate our cash and business high? I have no objection.
> I rate them as high as the highest.
> Then a child born of a woman and man
> I rate beyond all rate,"
>
> Whitman.

A "Difference."

BY MRS. U. P. HADLEY.

Two children, beneath an oak, played among the grass and flowers, unmindful of the pretty scene made brighter by their happy presence and innocent prattle. Both were of one age, perfect in form and features. Dimples played hide-and-seek, twixt smiles and pouts, as on they chatted like two young bobo'-links. One had brown eyes, and hair to match, and ways as winsome as her looks. The other, had eyes of heavenly blue, and massive curls of yellow gold. No stranger passing, failed to cast a smiling glance upon the two; for both were fair,—surpassing fair—and called forth words of praise and love. So bright and cute was this pretty pair, 'twas hard to choose between the two. But, horrors! had those strangers known the truth, that out-spoken, undivided praise would ne'er have fallen upon the twain. One, only, would have called forth admiration; for one—the brown-eyed child—was born in wedlock while the blue-eyed cherub, was born "outside."

VARIOUS VOICES.

Francis Radick, Brooklyn, N. Y.:—I again received a sample copy of your valuable journal; I consider it an invitation to subscribe, therefore I enclose 25 cents for which kindly continue sending it to me.

John N. Volkel, South Bend, Ind.,—Enclosed you will find $1.10 for Lucifer and a copy of "Orthodoxy False Since Spiritualism is True." I received the book "A Physician in the House" and I am much pleased with it.

W. H.:—You sent me some leaves of Karezza which caused me to enclose $1.00 for the book. I am ignorant of much that makes life happy. I have learned much from Lucifer, thanks to you and others. As the masses are living today you can sum life up in these words, "dollars, ignorance and lust." Their brains reach no farther than their stomachs, and you cannot reach them through their heads; but why do I find fault? We are doing the best we can under the existing conditions and the knowledge we have. Hope you are quite well, after your trip. We need such men as you.

Henry M. Parkhurst, Brooklyn, N. Y.—My illustration in Sociologic Lessons, No. 80, is criticized in Lucifer No. 747 by C. T. B. who begins his article by saying "Equality is not predicable between different kinds of things." My first sentence was: "The theory of equality is contradicted throughout nature." These two statements seem to agree fairly well. By way of illustration I said: "A mouse for instance has no right to an equal division of food with an elephant." C. T. B. seems to claim that there should be equality between mice and equality between elephants. Suppose I change the illustration and say, A dwarf elephant has no right to an equal division of food with a giant elephant. My argument was that there are no two elephants precisely equal. Proportionate representation is not founded upon equality but upon equity. It is the natural law of growth that it is in proportion to conditions and circumstances. It is only so far as there is approximate equality of conditions and circumstances that equity recognizes individuals as equals.

What I have to say either of assent or dissent upon other questions raised in the article of C. T. B. appropriately belongs in the Sociologic Lessons themselves, where those questions are considered in their proper places or left for the reader to consider for himself.

WHAT IS AN ANARCHIST?

The word ANARCHY, in the minds of misinformed people, signifies disorder, chaos, turbulence, violence, bloodshed, retrogression. To the student of economics it signifies exactly the reverse of these ideas—in two words, Liberty and Progress. You cannot afford to be ignorant of this comparatively new view of economic science, and you will remain ignorant of it so long as you gain your information—or rather, misinformation—concerning it from newspapers only. P. J. Proudhon the great French economist, identifies Anarchy with Liberty and says "Liberty is the mother, not the daughter, of Order." Read and think for yourself and you will see that Anarchy instead of being a doctrine which threatens the destruction of all that is beneficial to humanity is in fact the necessary condition of unhampered social evolution. Here is a list of books on anarchy which we recommend. They will be sent post paid from Lucifer office on receipt of price:

Economics of Anarchy. A Study of the Industrial Type. By Dyer D. Lum. Paper, 60 pages. (Scarce) .25

Autonomy. Self Law; What Are Its Demands? A fragmentary exposition of the basic principle of individualism in its relation to society and government. By Moses Harman. This pamphlet of 29 uncut pages contains an account of the autonomistic marriage of Lillian Harman and Edwin C. Walker, and their subsequent arrest, trial and imprisonment. The pamphlet is not up to the standard in typography, but it contains data valuable to all lovers of personal liberty. .05

771.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

Creed of Liberty. A brief exposition of philosophical anarchism. By William Gilmour. Paper, 11 pages. .03

Cityless and Countryless World; an Outline of Practical Co-operative Individualism. By Henry Olerich. Red silk; gold title: nearly 500 pages. $1.00

Dawn of Civilization. A Radical Social Reform Novel by J. C. Spence, formerly a vice president of the Legitimation League. Blue and gold boards; 176 pages. .25

Government Analyzed. By John R. Kelso, A. M. This book seeks to show that all governments, like all gods, are the mere personifications of mythical monsters invented by selfish and crafty men as instruments with which to rob and enslave the ignorant toiling masses. A book which is sure to open the eyes of governmentalists who read it. Bound in cloth; 520 pages; edition limited; original price, $1.50. Our price, .90

Human Rights. By Madison Hook, with an Introduction by E. C. Walker. 1891; paper, 19 pages, .05

Thomas Jefferson. Father of American Democracy. His political, social and religious philosophy. By Gen. M. M. Trumbull. Paper, 29 pages, .10

Liberty: Political, Religious, Social and Sexual. By A. F. Tindall, A. T. C. L.; an essay towards establishing an Anti-Persecution Society to defend the rights of individuals against state interference and Puritan persecution. Paper, 8 pages. .03

Instead of a Book. By a man too busy to write one. A fragmentary exposition of philosophical anarchy by Benj. R. Tucker, editor of "Liberty." 512 pages. Paper, .50 cloth, $1.00

Proudhon and his Bank of the People. Being a defense of the great French anarchist, showing the evils of a specie currency and that interest on capital can and ought to be abolished by a system of free and mutual banking. By Charles A. Dana, late editor of the New York "Sun;" paper, .15

Red Heart in a White World. A suggestive manual of Free Society; containing a method and a hope. By William Lloyd. Handsome illuminated paper cover in white, red and green; 50 pages, .10

Revival of Puritanism. An expose of the spirit "which makes cowards of editors and teachers, and spies and blackmailers of officials; which emasculates our literature and degrades our art, and which harries, robs and imprisons the few who are so organized that they will not sacrifice to what they hold to be a falsehood, even though death be the alternative." By E. C. Walker. Paper, large pages, .10

What is Property? System of Economic Contradictions, or the Philosophy of Misery. P. J. Proudhon's great work showing the short-sightedness and fundamental errors of all schools of political economy. Cloth, 460 pages. Original price, $2.50. Our price, $1.00

The Chicago Martyrs. The famous speeches of the Eight Anarchists in Judge Gary's Court; and Altgeld's Reasons for Pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. With portraits of the Eight, and a picture of the Monument to them at Waldheim Cemetery. Introduction by Wm. Holmes. 172 large pages. Printed on good paper. Price, .25

Books Worth Reading FREE!

Send us twenty-five cents for a thirteen weeks' trial subscription to Lucifer and we will present to you your choice of the following books, to the value of 25 cents. Read the list carefully. Every book is interesting and thought-inspiring.

John's Way; a domestic radical story, by Elmina D. Slenker,	.25
Human Rights; J. Madison Hook,	.10
Vital Force, Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation, by A. Chavannes,	.25
Practical Co-operation; by E. C. Walker,	.10
The Revival of Puritanism; " "	.10
Love and the Law; " "	.05
Digging for Bedrock, by Moses Harman,	.10
In Hell and the Way Out; H. E. Allen,	.10

The American Institute of Phrenology.

President Mrs. Charlotte Fowler Wells, incorporated 1866, open its next session on September 5th 1899. For prospectus send (free on appliion) to the Secretary, care of FOWLER & WELLS CO., 27 East 21st St., New York

RIGHTS OF WOMEN IN THE SEXUAL RELATIONS,

By Karl Heinzen. A new edition together with the startling letters of "Louise Mayer" on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German women at Frauenstadt. A book of 286 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women," alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Price paper bound, 60 cents; cloth, $1

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW. A primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. A valuable compendium on Sex Ethics. Startling and Scientific Price, 10 cents.

LOVE AND THE LAW. By E. C. Walker. A clear, concise statement of social liberty in contradistinction to the much lauded legal bondage now almost universally upheld. An excellent missionary document. Two copies, 5 cents; 20 cents per dozen.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint: A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races." Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III., Co-operation; Chapter V., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, ten cts.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

Some Problems in Social Freedom. Presidential address delivered by Lillian Harman before the Legitimation League, at Holborn Restaurant, London. "Freedom in Social Relations;" "The Ownership of Women;" "Where Draw the Line?" "What Would Become of the Family?" "Marriage a Confidence game;" "How Society Protects Children." Price, 5 cents. For sale at this office.

Personal. Readers of Lucifer who would like a quiet, home like room in a private family when visiting Chicago, should communicate with X. Y. Z., care of Lucifer, 507 Carroll Ave.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health: or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 15 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.
"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.
"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.
Sample pages free. Prepaid $1.00. Address this office.

Free Love; A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of conjugal love; also a review of the erroneous feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 1875, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence. 140 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo, 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 29. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, JULY 29, E. M. 299. [C. E 1899.] WHOLE No. 772

Life and Death.

On parent knees, a naked, new-born child,
Weeping thou sat'st, while all around thee smiled.
So live that sinking on thy last long sleep
Thou then may'st smile while all around thee weep.
—Sir William Jones.

Gems From Ingersoll.

Give me the storm and tempest of thought and action, rather than the dead calm of ignorance and faith.

Banish me from Eden when you will; but first let me eat of the fruit of the tree of knowledge.

An honest god is the noblest work of man.

Strange! that no one has ever been persecuted by the church for believing God bad, while hundreds of millions have been destroyed for thinking him good.

The instant we admit that a book is too sacred to be doubted, or even reasoned about, we are mental serfs. It is infinitely absurd to suppose that a god would address a communication to intelligent beings, and yet make it a crime, to be punished in eternal flames, for them to use their intelligence for the purpose of understanding his communication.

Salvation through slavery is worthless. Salvation from slavery is inestimable.

In nearly all the theologies, mythologies, and religions, the devils have been so much more humane and merciful than the gods. No devil ever gave one of his generals an order to kill children and to rip open the bodies of pregnant women.

As a general thing, the gods have stopped drowning children, except as a punishment for violating the Sabbath.

In wars between great nations, the gods still interfere, but in prize fights, the best man with an honest referee, is almost sure to win.

Age after age, the strong have trampled upon the weak; the crafty and heartless have ensnared and enslaved the simple and innocent, and nowhere, in all the annals of mankind, has any god succored the oppressed.

The thoughts of man, in order to be of any real worth, must be free.

The first doubt was the womb and cradle of progress, and from the first doubt, man has continued to advance.

Whoever lifts his voice against abuses, whoever arraigns the past at the bar of the present, whoever asks the king to show his commission, or questions the authority of the priest, will be denounced as the enemy of man and God.

Nothing so outrages the feelings of the Church as a moral unbeliever—nothing so horrible as a charitable Atheist.

Who on earth at this day would pretend to settle any scientific question by a text from the Bible?

The combined wisdom and genius of all mankind cannot possibly conceive of an argument against liberty of thought.

Progress is born of doubt and inquiry.

A creed is the ignorant Past bullying the enlightened Present.

True genius never cowers, and there is always some Samson feeling for the pillars of authority.

The doubter, the investigator, the Infidel have been the saviors of liberty.

In every creed man is the slave of God—woman is the slave of man and the sweet children are the slaves of all.

Is it a small thing to reave the heavens of an insatiate monster and write upon the eternal dome, glittering with stars, the grand word—FREEDOM?

Is it a small thing to make men truly free—to destroy the dogmas of ignorance, prejudice, and power—the poisoned fables of superstition, and drive from the beautiful face of the earth the fiend of Fear?

The people perish for the lack of knowledge.

We need free bodies and free minds,—free labor and free thought,—chainless hands and fetterless brains. Free labor will give us wealth. Free thought will give us truth.

We need men with moral courage to speak and write their real thoughts, and to stand by their convictions, even to the very death. We need have no fear of being too radical.

It is a blessed thing that in every age some one has had individuality enough and courage enough to stand by his own convictions,—some one has had the grandeur to say his say.

To worship another is to degrade yourself.

The spirit of worship is the spirit of tyranny. The worshiper always regrets that he is not the worshiped.

Mental slavery is mental death, and every man who has given up his intellectual freedom is the living coffin of his dead soul. In this sense, every church is a cemetery and every creed an epitaph.

After all, the poorest bargain that a human being can make, is to give his individuality for what is called respectability.

I want no heaven for which I must give my reason; no happiness in exchange for my liberty, and no immortality that demands the surrender of my individuality.

"In the long run"—is all we can say and hope for. The clash of ideas, of book with book, of teaching with teaching, results in that training of the mind on which we all count so much. There is more and more public teaching on great questions; in the long run it will tell. Tolstoi and Stirner are about to face each other. The abolition of war is before the world. Monopoly and Socialism are counting their strength. Long live Free Discussion! And long live Justice.—Truth Seeker.

A Tragedy of the Ordinary.

BY GEORGE BEDBOROUGH.

Edith Watson was beautiful enough to be a king's consort. She was good enough to be a queen in her own right. Her aspirations were less lofty. She aimed at marrying a kind hearted workman. Edith was a lady's maid in the house of one of England's aristocracy. Daily before her eyes were flaunted wealth, caste, luxury, and the misery which is never far removed from these obstacles to social solidarity. Edith Watson was as well educated as her many duties demanded. She possessed a natural delicacy, which while it imparted an air of culture never interfered with her work, which robust health and a fine physique made at once a pleasure and a recreation. The tall, stately beauty of Edith led her into many temptations or what to a less healthy mind would have been temptations. They passed her, leaving behind them the wisdom and sympathy which such experiences impart to souls of noble worth. Never a word of advanced views had been breathed into Edith's ears. Her reading was of the varied type to be found in the libraries of the orthodox rich—the fine novels of a past age labelled "Classics," the unread poets whose names are names and nothing more, a few histories and other indispensible "ornaments," also unread, and a vast multitude of well skimmed novels of the flippant, bloodthirsty, or semi-religious types of the day. Edith's reading of the modern novel such as she found at Pitt House, was exceedingly small. Most of her reading hours were devoted to the poets whose beautifully bound covers first attracted her until the unfingered pages of Tennyson, Byron and the more romantic idealists became to her, Life, Philosophy, and Religion.

Life at Pitt House was by no means the dull, dreary, overworked existence so often pictured in fiction. Nearly every day she saw some phase of idleness, satiety, or abortive effort towards delight, in the lives of the butterflies whom she served, but seldom or never did she experience studied unkindness towards herself, or any systematic thwarting of her own relaxations. Occasionally her great beauty brought passing annoyances in the shape of the insistent attentions and openly or covertly expressed invitations from her master's guests and of course her young mistresses were by no means free from violent temper from time to time. But Edith's work was easy, her leisure hours not few, an abundance of fresh air and lovely country were always at hand, her fellow servants loved and almost worshipped her, her life was unclouded by a single fear.

Alfred Morgan was a steady and fairly intelligent workman. His wages were sufficient for more than his own scanty wants, and he saved something every week towards the home which he intended sooner or later to buy. At present he lived with his father, a widower with a large family of whom Alfred was the youngest. Alfred Morgan like most of the family was more or less religious. He taught a class in the Wesleyan Sunday School where his father had for years been a church member. Their Blackfriars home was a model home from one point of view. It was happy because all the family were united; there was not a single discord. A common love of the Wesleyan God, a common interest in the Brackfriars Church, a common reverence for family tradition, and a common absence of new ideas, new principles, or new beliefs, rendered the Morgan houshold the envy of the neighborhood and the pride of the church.

One of the Morgan girls was in service at Pitt House, and it is not surprising that Edith Watson was invited to pay her friend a visit one summer Saturday during the Pitt family's absence. That day was a memorable day to Edith, an orphan whose only relative was her mother's sister, a broken hearted and deserted wife whose husband's kindest act had been his suicide, after years of cruelty and oppression towards that long suffering woman. Here for the first time she saw how happy a home could be. The eldest, a woman of thirty-four, was her father's housekeeper. Alfred, his sisters, and his brother came in to tea, two of the girls brought their husbands and Robert brought his wife, to see Edith Watson of whom Sarah had told them so much. After supper Alfred saw his sister and Edith to the railway station. Edith visited the Morgans a second time and after that, Alfred and Edith corresponded. Only a few months later Alfred asked Edith to be his wife.

One summer day Edith Watson became Mrs. Alfred Morgan. Nearly all the servants from Pitt House were present, Lord and Lady Pitt gave a handsome present to the bride. Alfred's relations and many of his fellow workmen and church workers were present and the Blackfriars Church was full to suffocation. There never was a happier honeymoon than Mr. and Mrs. Morgan spent during their eight days wedding trip. A few days later they settled down in Blackfriars near the "model" home of Alfred's father, and the business of life went on afresh.

Edith sadly missed her favorite books, the country walks, and the air of the hills, but the untiring attentions of Alfred almost made her feel it must be wrong not to be fully satisfied with the solid comfort and his anxious desire for her happiness.

For two whole years this mingled content and vague dissatisfaction continued. Alfred's narrowness of vision and absence of imagination seemed atoned for by his wish to shield her from all trouble, and all too soon the painful luxury of knowing that another dear life was nestling close to her heart, banished the regrets which she vainly attempted at that time to fully understand. To do him the barest justice Alfred never dreamed that Edith had other thoughts than his own.

He was a good fellow, he worked hard in the shop all day but was always ready in the evenings to take her out for a walk, or to share in any work which a thoroughly practical man like himself could do. At the time of her first child's birth his help was invaluable in the house, and she loved him as she never loved him before.

Edith's second year of married life was a critical one. A Malthusian tract given to her by a neighbor, almost a total stranger to her, had repelled her at the time of reading it, through its sordid appeal to an egoistic emotion which until then she had not considered. She passed through a terrible time, and after staring death in the face for many weeks, she recovered her health and a part of her old strength. Her second child was a puny boy of pinched proportions, and the doctor said he would require constant attention for at least five years. This was the beginning of Edith's tragedy. Winnie, her first born was like her mother, fair, healthy and strong. With the most ordinary attention she seemed to flourish. Edith attended to her household work, washed, dressed and fed Winnie and gave all the rest of her time and attention to the ailing baby. Alfred sacrificed a great deal for the sake of the boy who bore a curious resemblance to himself. In his own early years he too had been his mother's constant care and she had died through the exhausting effect of instilling life into that weak frame. He did not remember all these facts, his subsequent growth into average hardy manhood had obliterated much of his early impression of weakness. He loved his wife and was sorry for his baby.

Alfred's sexual life had been suppressed ever since the birth of Baby. Edith was firm as adamant that until she had reared Baby, or until——she dared not think of that other possibility, she could not and would not bring into the world another being to share her attention and divert her from the supreme work o building up the life which she alone felt capable of raising. Morgan's sedentary life unfitted him for sexual restraint. His occupation, his environment, his lack of imagination, his diet and the absence of any other outlet for the forces within him all tended to render sexual restraint impossible. His very affection for Edith made his desires unbearable.

Edith remembered she had somewhere in the house a tract which told her something of the Malthusian view. With its aid she was able to read some more convincing literature on the subject. She learned that an annual addition to her family was not a necessary result of conjugal love. She shocked Alfred by telling him these things. He would not hear of her adoptin any such method for satisfying his desires without interfering with either her own health or the demands of their sick child. Edith's only answer was a renewal of her own determination, while Alfred's sexuality struggled with his religion and his narrow philosophy. Religion won in the struggle at a mighty cost, and it is not surprising that such a religious supremacy meant death to love and all the nobler side of Alfred's life. He never attempted the brutal methods of those who have endeavored to carry their opinions by force as at the sword's point.

After a few days of vehement protest, Alfred Morgan's love gave place to a sullen and growing indifference. Neglect followed, and soon a hundred obstacles intervened between himself and his home. He nursed his resentment and exaggerated it until he felt himself wronged beyond redress. And night after night for another five years their habits and their necessities compelled these two to sleep together. The proximity which had been their chief delight became at first an embarrassment and finally an agony.

Winnie was six years of age and Baby was nearly five. The latter had repaid all the mother's loving attention, and if he could hardly be called robust there was no longer any special weakness, and the future looked as promising as could be wished.

Edith made a final despairing appeal to Alfred, for she loved him still. But he was deaf to her, dead to her. They lived for many years together, Edith loving her children and in great part solaced by their love. Alfred loved but unloving, a melancholy man, moving gloomily about the house, never smiling, a ruined life. Edith suffered most because her finer metal was more sensitive, but she had much love left her still, her own love for every one, the gladness of the young lives owing so much to her and reflecting her love in their own bright hearts. Alfred's heart is desolate, his life is barren, his light has gone out.

From My Point of View.

BY LILLIAN HARMAN.

Said Rev. Tighe of Holy Angels' Catholic Church, Chicago, in commenting on Ingersoll's death. "No mention of the death of Mr. Ingersoll will be made in Catholic churches. It is not according to our laws to say mean things of the dead." Really! Then are we to infer that Luther, for instance, is still living? What a statement this is the priest practically makes—that from the standpoint of the Catholic church nothing good could be found in Ingersoll's life of which mention could be made!

* * *

"Ready for a Degree" is the caption under which the "St. Louis Republic" gives the following:

"Now that little Japan has been admitted into the senior class of civilization she must remember that dignity and self-poise are traditional necessities of such a position."

So "dignity and self-poise" are "necessities"? Then it is clear that the nations already in the senior class are able to exist without necessities, contenting themselves with such luxuries as insurrections, mobs, political campaigns, wars for conquest, etc., the details of which fill the newspapers every day.

* * *

The Evanston Police Justice who last week sentenced a small boy to six months' attendance at Sunday school for stealing apples, has repeated his offense. On July 21 Justice Levere sentenced George Stienbrieck to weekly attendance at Sunday school for six months. Levere says that he will himself "organize a class and take care of the boys." Well may the Sunday school exclaim, "Better, a thousand-fold, an avowed enemy than a fool friend!"

* * *

The last lecture delivered by Ingersoll was on "Liberty." The proceeds of the lecture were given to sick soldiers and their destitute families. To the Freethinker "liberty" is the most precious of words; and to the Christian, "The greatest of these is charity." But Ingersoll's words for liberty and his acts of charity will be equally unable to save him from damnation—if the Christians' creeds are true.

* * *

We should be willing to "hear all sides"; hence the southern view of the race troubles is given space in the "Various Voices" department. This is the only letter of its kind which we have received, and I am not sure it was written for publication. As to the facts in the case, all will probably never be known. It is natural that the perpetrators of a wrong will try to gloss it over, will try to justify their actions. This statement is equally true of both Hose and the mob. But while the mob had the sentiment of the community and the columns of the southern press enlisted in its defense, no one dared demand justice, a fair trial, for Hose. Whoever has faced a community aroused to the pitch of mob violence knows that it is almost impossible to obtain a truthful statement of the cause of offense. Having had experience in the publication of an unpopular paper in a hostile small community, I have had excellent opportunity to become acquainted with the mob spirit. The desire to blacken the body of the victim with tar is equalled only by the frenzy of anxiety to besmirch the reputation with all the vile calumnies imaginable.

* * *

But if we should admit the character of the negro is as black as it is painted—what then? Does that relieve the "superior race" of the natural obligation to treat him justly, to help him onward and upward in his struggle toward the light? It is our misfortune, as well as his, that he was ever brought here; but here he is, and what are we to do with him? He has been bound, his mind kept in darkness and ignorance and superstition. Some of the shackles have been removed; but they have left their marks on him. "He is born wrong"—but why? He is dishonest, untruthful, unreliable in many ways? What then? Since when has it been held that slavery developes the best qualities of men and women? Is slavery a condition conducive to the growth of a desire for justice, truth, honor? If so, the white race should enter into bondage for a few generations—there is plenty of room for development in those very desirable qualities. Similar charges have been made—and truthfully made—against the oppressed of all nations and all ages. Though I believe it is true that "the cure for the evils of liberty is more liberty" the converse principle is false—that on which the southern mobs seem to be acting—the principle that the cure for the evils of slavery is more slavery. For the evils which are apparently of liberty are actually the evils remaining from the old systems of slavery, and require only only more liberty to eradicate them. On the contrary, the evils of slavery can never be cured by more slavery, more oppression.

* * *

It may be true that the average negro cannot be trusted to pass a hen roost without appropriating a chicken or two. But what has been the example set him by the "superior race?" It is not pleasant to have one's chickens stolen—but I would rather have my chickens appropriated than to have my friends, my children, my labor, my own body appropriated as the whites appropriated the negroes. Less time is required to perpetrate a wrong than to right that wrong. The solution of the race question is not a matter of a few cases of mob vengeance. The time will not be measured by months or years or even generations. Slavery was a curse to all connected with it. The institution was a blight to the beautiful Southland—enervating, demoralizing to both whites and blacks. It has caused untold suffering, and much more suffering in the future will be due to it. This is no time for feelings of hatred and recrimination between sections nor between races. We must recognize the facts and do all that lies in our power to secure justice for all.

OUR READERS and patrons, everywhere, are hereby again requested not to forget to send us names of their friends and acquaintances who might become interested in Lucifer and its work, if they could see a few sample copies. Upon this plan, more than any other, we now depend for increase of subscription list, and for advertising the books and pamphlets that supplement and extend the work of the paper itself.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN. EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

To Friends in Iowa, Missouri and Kansas.

On or about the fifth of August the editor of this paper expects to start on a trip to Iowa, Missouri, Kansas and perhaps Nebraska, partly on business connected with the office of publication and partly in the hope that his physical health, which is still much below par—will be benefited thereby. My first stop will be at Mt. Pleasant Park, near Clinton, Iowa, at which place the Mississippi Valley Spiritualist Association holds its annual meetings. I expect to remain at this encampment about two weeks, or until the 19th or 20th of August. Thence I shall probably go to Omaha, Nebraska, and thence to Ottawa, Kansas, to attend the ninth annual meeting of the Kansas Free thought Association, which is called to meet August 23 to 29 inclusive.

At both of these annual meetings I hope to meet many of Lucifer's friends and patrons. From Ottawa I shall probably go to Topeka, Valley Falls and perhaps other points in Kansas. Thence returning to Chicago via Kansas City, Mo.

While looking forward to this trip with hopeful anticipation of the results at all points named, and at others not named, I confess to a feeling of special interest in the prospect of meeting my old friends and comrades of the Kansas Freethought Association.

Among these old time friends and co-workers, it will probably not be amiss to mention the name of the President of the K. F. A., Mrs Etta Semple, of Ottawa. Whatever of success this Association may have achieved in the past has been owing more to the untiring and self sacrificing efforts of Mrs Semple than to the efforts of any other individual—I had almost said, of all other individuals. I would by no means be understood as saying that the history of the freethought movement in Kansas is synonymous with the history of the K. F. A. Several State organizations had preceded the present one, but from various causes had been allowed to lapse, or go out of existence. About ten years ago Mrs. Semple proposed the formation of what she called "The Lucifer Club," with price of membership fixed at $2. —I think it was—per annum, the money to be used in sustaining the paper. A meeting was called, held in the interest of this club, at Topeka. This as I understand it, was the beginning of the present state organization. Since then annual meetings have been held, sometimes at Topeka but generally at Forest Park, near Ottawa. The organization has been kept up. Mrs Semple, its first president, has been re-elected to that position every year, if I mistake not, and in addition to the duties of president she has often if not generally performed the duties of Secretary and Treasurer.

While in Kansas Lucifer was considered the organ or mouthpiece of the K. F. A. Since our removal to Chicago, the "Freethought Ideal," now edited and published by Etta Semple and Laura Knox, at Ottawa Kansas, has succeeded to the place vacated by the Light-Bearer. Letters lately received from the editors inform us that this comparatively new competitor in the field of Freethought journalism is in a flourishing condition. It is published fortnightly at the low price of fifty cents a year and that it is well printed and edited and that it is worth a good deal more than the price asked for it, can easily be demonstrated to any reader of Lucifer by sending for a sample copy.

In conclusion I would earnestly ask all our readers in Kansas and adjoining states to attend the approaching annual meeting of the K. F. A. at Forest Park, Ottawa, and try to induce as many as possible to do likewise. Having attended several meetings at that place I can speak with the assurance of absolute knowledge when I say that this park is better adapted to the purpose of holding camp meetings than any other I have ever seen. Both of nature and of art its attractions are unsurpassed. From experience and observation also I know that Mrs. Semple is unsurpassed as a hostess at her home or as organizer of successful meetings of this kind. Ample provision is being made for all who may come. Arrangements for reduced rates on all railroads are being made. Remember this, when buying tickets before starting. The R. R. agent must be notified of your destination and intention.

How many of my old Kansas friends shall I have the pleasure of meeting at Forest Park, the last week in August next? And how many of my Iowa friends shall I meet at Mt. Pleasant Park during the second and third weeks of the same month?

M. HARMAN.

Robert G. Ingersoll.

Among the recent occurring events in the world of sensation, of thought and of action, the passing away of the personality known as Robert Green Ingersoll must be accorded a very prominent place. What the sober unimpassioned judgment of posterity,—say a hundred years hence—may be, it is now impossible to predict, but that his name and fame will receive increasing honor and luster as the years go by, is reasonably certain.

That Robert G. Ingersoll had his faults, his limitations, goes without saying. His most ardent admirers will not claim for him perfection. That he failed in some particulars to grasp the full meaning of some of the most important movements and demands of the times, in the fields of modern thought and action, is probably true. But that he was intellectually honest and brave; that he had the courage of his convictions; that his human sympathies were of the broadest, highest, and deepest; that his heart was in closest touch with human suffering everywhere, and that he devoted a very large share of his earnings to alleviating the sum of human misery, will probably be denied by few, if any, who are not biased or blinded by prejudice, or misled by ignorance of the facts.

While not a learned man, in the sense of scholastic or collegiate attainments, he was probably fully abreast of the times in all the most useful branches of human knowledge. His fame, however, rests, and will always rest, upon his iconoclastic labors in the field of theology and mythology,—among the time-honored and moss-grown monuments of religious creed and dogma—and upon his power as an orator and word painter. In the New York correspondence of the Chicago "Times-Herald" of July 22, in giving an account of the last hours of the "Great Agnostic, as he is commonly called, the writer indulges in these words of panegyric, which will probably find an echo in the breasts of thousands if not of millions:

"Known throughout the world,—a man of picturesque career, an orator possessed of unsurpassed eloquence and rhetorical ability, a lawyer and an impassioned pleader, a politician who never sought public office, a past master in the art of invective, satire and pathos, a word painter whose equal a century has not produced, a welling fountain of wit and humor, a humanitarian with a soul full of poetry and love for his fellow man, a scholar who challenged the admiration of the learned, a constant friend, an enjoyable companion, a loving husband and father, an agnostic who stirred the religious world as even Voltaire, Paine or Tyndall could not, a lecturer of international renown, the best beloved and most cordially hated man in Christendom—such a man was Colonel Ingersoll. Thousands will deeply mourn the passing of such a brilliant star and still other thousands will look upon his death as the close of a career that was a constant threat to the foundation principles of the Christian religion."

In the New York "World" of the same date appears the following brief but significant editorial:

"Robert G. Ingersoll was at the time of his death one of the best known Americans of the present day in the world. His fame is interesting because of the peculiar way in which it was got. It was due only in part to his own efforts. Its creators and propagators were his opponents, those whose creeds and beliefs he so savagely and so incessantly attacked. They answered him, and while his attacks had comparatively a small circulation, their answers carried his name and fame into almost every reading household in Christendom. Had it been possible to ignore him he would probably not have been known to the majority of his own countrymen."

We could easily fill many issues of our paper with current comment on the life and character of America's best known Freethinker, and must close this unsatisfactory notice with a few characteristic utterances from his own pen. From these brief sentences may be gathered, as we think, a fairly correct idea of Ingersoll's mental attitude toward the popular creeds of the day, and towards the men who defend these creeds, these religious dogmas:

"While utterly discarding all creeds, and denying the truth of all religions, there is neither in my heart nor upon my lips a sneer for the hopeful, loving, and tender souls who believe that from all this discord will result a perfect harmony; that every evil will in some mysterious way become a good, and that above and over all there is a being who, in some way, will reclaim and glorify every one of the children of men; but for those who heartlessly try to prove that salvation is almost impossible; that damnation is almost certain; that the highway of the universe leads to hell; who fill life with fear and death with horror; who curse the cradle and mock the tomb, it is impossible to entertain other than feelings of pity, contempt, and scorn.

"Reason, Observation, and Experience—the Holy Trinity of Science—have taught us that happiness is the only good; that the time to be happy is now, and the way to be happy is to make others so. This is enough for us. In this belief we are content to live and die. If by any possibility the existence of a power superior to, and independent of, nature shall be demonstrated, there will then be time enough to kneel. Until then, let us stand erect."

Elsewhere in this issue we insert some of the many gems of thought found in his writings. In next week's Lucifer we shall probably give more of these, and also some more comments by friend and foe in regard to the life and transition of the "best beloved and most cordially hated man in Christendom."

MOSES HARMAN.

The Population and Economic Question.

BY LIZZIE M. HOLMES.

Col. Ingersoll is brilliant and fascinating both as a speaker and a writer. But long ago he has been pronounced wofully ignorant on economic subjects or else very insincere. In politics he figures on the side of the plutocrat, the holders of the wealth produced by the poor workers, and on the rostrum or in society, he cannot or will not reason logically concerning the wealth producers. "Ignorance, poverty and vice" are synonomous terms, and the poor wretch burdened with these miseries is himself to blame and has no rights he or civilization is bound to respect.

His remedy for the evil and suffering in the world, according to the quotation in Lucifer No. 25, is to "prevent the ignorant, the poor, and the vicious from filling the world with their children."

This is a damnable utterance from every point of view. In the first place, are the "ignorant poor and vicious" of the world all born ignorant, poor and vicious? How many thousands of well-born children are crushed down, down into the depths of misery, by the terribly unjust systems which our civilization rests upon, every year? Indeed, the intense, sensitive, high strung natures of the children born of educated, aspiring fathers and mothers, are all the more irresponsible, miserable and desperate, when society robs them of their productions and denies them a chance to exercise their faculties in order to escape that disgraceful "poverty" which has no business to breed.

The leading scientists of the world now assert that habits, traits, disease or vices are not transmitted from parents to children. Robert Owen proved, by taking at random a number of children from the slums of London and placing them in the best possible conditions, that heredity has very little influence as against conditions. Weakness may be inherited—a weak father and mother cannot produce strong, sturdy offspring; if the children are not removed from the bad conditions which rendered the parents weak, they will without doubt go the way of the father and mother. But give them proper surroundings, give them room, light, opportunity—that which every plant needs to develop fully—and the tendency is always to outgrow the deficiencies of the beginning and come out strong, upright, well rounded out.

But if even for the sake of argument we concede that poverty and vice are bred in the blood and bones of unfortunate children, and we acknowledge that we ought to prevent "ignorance, poverty and vice" from breeding, where would we begin? Where draw the line? Who would have the right to say what persons were good enough, rich enough, wise enough to have children? For instance, there are thousands of preachers and good chirtsians who would prevent Col. Ingersoll from perpetuating himself if his children were all like him. I, from another standpoint, might wish to prevent his breeding children like himself, illogical, unjust, or hypocritical. I might like to prevent men like Rockefeller and many rich mine owners here in the west, whom I consider more "vicious" (because more powerful to cause suffering) and more ignorant than the people of the so-called lower classes, from breeding. It would be a tyrannical interference that would be limited only by the power one might obtain as against others.

I am especially indignant whenever I hear the old cant that the poor have no right to bring children into the world. It is as though you took a man, robbed him of his property, put him at drudgery that dwarfed and degraded him, heaped disgrace and humiliation upon him and then declare that because he is in the miserable condition to which you have brought him, he has no business to think of happiness in any form. No man can picture the sweetness and sacredness of home life, of mother love, of fatherly tenderness, of the sweet relations between brothers, sisters and parents, than Ingersoll. And yet he would forbid the least enjoyment of such happiness to those whom society has already stripped of every thing else worth living for. The first impulse of a noble man or woman, it seems to me, would be to give him back the rights he as a human being is entitled to equally with all others, that the happiness common to all mankind need not be denied him; not to forbid him dreaming of parental love, and sweet young children, because of what he has already suffered.

I am aware that it is personally not best for the poor to have children. But this fact is the horror and cruelty of it all. If a man had been mangled by some cruel monster, I would advise him to not try to indulge in the pleasures of locomotion; but I would not be satisfied with telling him and all crippled people not to try to move about, and let the matter rest at that. I should agitate and agitate to have the monster prevented from making more cripples who could not or dared not walk.

I am aware that the policy of Lucifer rests upon this principle: that women ought to be free in order that fewer and better children may be born, and it must believe in the inheritance of vice, ignorance and poverty, that its position may be made good; that only the improved children of free mothers can change the conditions etc. The inference then is naturally this: that we work for the freedom of women simply that better children may be born and the world thus be made brighter and happier.

To my mind, the freeing of women, the placing of woman on the footing of a human being, equal but no more, with all other human beings of whatever sex, for her own sake, is sufficient. I need no further excuse or reason for pleading for woman's emancipation.

Again, I am not so certain that the "better born children," the children born in love and comfort and soft, harmonious conditions, are the best fitted to fight against unjust, robbing institutions. They are too sensitive, too poetic, they love ease too well. And I have noticed that well born children do come to the "rock pile" and the jail sometimes and suffer more for their very breeding. The children born amid the struggle and turmoil are more often born with the faculties necessary to fight the injustice in society. What Ingersoll calls "vice" is often but sturdy protest, and his "ignorance" a keener insight into the workings of bad systems than he or his rich friends can possibly possess.

I am aware I have subjected myself to severe criticism, but I shall be glad to meet it. I am searching for the truth.

REPLY.

As our good friend Mrs. Holmes very evidently expects an answer from me I shall not wholly disappoint her, although, as often said in these columns, personal controversy is not at all to my liking. I much prefer that each writer put forth her or his own thought, with as little reference as possible to what others think or say.

In the first place I doubt if Mrs. Holmes would have written as she did, had she waited a week or two longer. Pretty evidently she wrote immediately on seeing the quotation in Lucifer to which she chiefly refers. Her language is largely that of passion, rather than of deliberate conviction. "Anger is a short madness;" anger is unscientific, illogical, unreasoning, and hence the very evident incongruities and false assumptions made in the above very decidedly sharp criticisms of R. G. Ingersoll and of Lucifer's teachings, a few only of which criticisms will be noticed here and now.

To show how wide of the mark our correspondent shoots it is only necessary to restate fully the utterance which she characterizes as "damnable." Says Ingersoll:

"Ignorance, poverty and vice must stop populating the world. This cannot be done by moral suasion. This cannot be done by talk or example. This cannot be done by religion or law; by priest or hangman. This cannot be done by force, physical or moral. To accomplish this there is but one way. Science must make woman the owner, the mistress of herself. Science, the only savior of mankind, must put it into the power of woman to decide for herself whether she will or will not become a mother."

How any person of the good sense that we all know Mrs. Holmes to possess, could see tyranny, force, compulsion or anything else that is "damnable" in this utterance of the now departed apostle of freedom and justice, is more than I can tell. And how she can infer that Ingersoll makes "ignorance, poverty and vice synonymous terms" is equally amazing to me. No inference of the kind is deducible from anything he has said, so far as I know. Ingersoll knew, quite as well as she who sits in judgment upon and condemns him, that ignorance and vice are found in the palaces of the rich as well as in the hovels of the poor; and he would have rich ignorance and rich vice to stop populating the world, no less than when these powerful factors are associated with poverty.

It is quite true that, by inference, particular emphasis was laid upon the fact that ignorant and vicious poverty is more prolific than ignorant and vicious wealth, and therefore productive of greater evil. But who is to blame for such inference? Certainly not the honest lecturer who alludes to it as a fact, a terrible fact of our social life. If it were not for the hordes of the ignorant, the vicious and the imbecile poor who have neither the intellect nor the will to be self-owning, self-governing, it would not be in the power of the ignorant, the vicious, the self-seeking rich to monopolize the earth and the fruits of the labor of others.

"Ignorance is the only darkness;" "ignorance is the only devil." "Science is the only savior of mankind," says Ingersoll. Logically then, if science demonstrates that woman cannot be sexually free until she is economically free, then science must free woman economically as well as sexually. Lucifer demands not only sexual and economic freedom for woman but also intellectual and psychic or soul freedom, and these she can never have while she owns allegiance to the man-made God of Paul, of David, and of the Jewish law giver Moses.

It is ignorance that holds woman,—and through her the race—in bondage to all these. Abolish ignorance, then; abolish the first of Ingersoll's trinity of evils and we abolish them all.

"Truth for authority and not authority for truth," should be our motto. It matters little what Robert Owen and other leading scientists of the world may have said if their dicta and partial experiments deny the teaching of human experience of all time. In the school of experience man has learned, if he has learned anything, that "like begets like." The agriculturist knows that if he would have good products he must have not only good soil, good culture, heat, light and moisture—good "environment"—but he must in the first place have good seed, good "heredity." The same is the lesson of experience in live stock raising, and the same is equally the lesson of experience in the breeding and rearing of human beings, and hence the emphasis with which Lucifer demands woman's freedom sexually, so that she may do her best for her child in the matter of heredity and prenatal influences.

In some points Mrs. Holmes so completely answers herself that no other reply is needed,—as when she admits that it is "not best for the poor to have children." As no one is asking that the poor be prohibited, by force or law, from having children, there is really no point to her elaborate argument on that score. And also as when she thinks that "children born in love and comfort and soft harmonious conditions would not be best fitted to fight against unjust, robbing institutions." If so, then why work for better conditions at all? If the children born under the improved conditions would be too weak or too selfish to fight for all their rights, how could they be expected to maintain their hold upon such rights as had been conferred upon them by others?

Finally, in regard to Ingersoll's affiliation with the Republican party, etc., I would briefly say that for years I worked with that party myself, and I was just as honest in my work then as I am honest now in trying to defeat and destroy that political machine. I cannot impeach the honesty, the sincerity, of those who differ from me politically without at the same time impeaching my own honesty and sincerity. The old admonition, "Judge not," is an excellent rule to go by. While it is true that a "tree is known by its fruits," we can never know the inward motives that impel the outward acts. "Charity [love] thinketh no ill of its neighbor."

Our old-time friend expects "severe criticism." I think her severest critic will be none other than herself when time and reflection shall have shown her that in her judgments she has been hasty and uncharitable, as well as illogical.

M. HARMAN.

What Became of the Children in Marriage.

Here is a reply to the question, "What will become of the children?" Under the heading, "Starving Family Relieved," the following appeared in the Chicago "Times-Herald" of July 22:

"A sad case of destitution was brought to the attention of the police at the Rawson street station yesterday, and the family of Julius Stahnka was relieved from hunger. In a basement at 22 Bowen street the officers found the father, mother, and six small children. For months the father had been unable to work, being subject to epileptic fits. His wife also became ill, and the children, who are all very young, almost starved at times. A quart of beans is all they had for food Thursday. The police at the Rawson street station took up a collection and purchased food for the family."

This furnishes proof of the oft-repeated statement that marriage provides for the children. Of course it is the most unusual thing in the world for a married man to be ill or out of work; but when such a state of affairs does exist, a collection may be taken up by the police and "the starving family relieved"!

L. H.

Danger of Premature Burial.

"New York World."

He was rich and carried an elegant timekeeper, worth $500. It stopped. He took it to the man who doctors watches. The watch doctor pondered over the case, looked wise, sprinkled lavender-water upon it, and then remarked solemnly, "A case of main-spring failure!" "But what is to be done about it?" said the anxious owner. "Screw it up in a tight box and bury it as soon as possible," said the man whose diploma dubbed him "D. W. D." (the translation of which is left to the reader.)

Hard for the watch and its owner, wasn't it? But how much worse had it been his wife or child! And yet this is precisely what is now taking place almost every day. A lady called in to see me one day, and in the course of conversation I happened to say, "What a pity it is that bleeding has gone out of fashion, for I believe that simple blood-letting would in many cases start the heart's motion, for it is quite certain that the blood continues to circulate for some time after apparent death."

"I know just such a case," she replied. "My husband's mother was on two occasions thought to be dead but was restored by her doctor, who simply bled her."

VARIOUS VOICES.

Mrs. M. E. W., Montgomery, Ala.—I inclose 25cts. for Lucifer for three months, as I wish to read Mr. Harman's travels in the south; also to become familiar with Lucifer. In reading your remarks in regard to Sam Hose, the vile negro, I am forcibly impressed to correct the impression you hold in regard to his crime given by the detectives. The detectives have lied. The negro was guilty of all that he was accused of, and not one half of the low vile acts that he committed on that woman's person were published in the papers. They were of such a nature that the truth could not be put in print. Two men who heard Mrs. Cranford's oath in court, as to the negro Hose's treatment came to this city, and related minute particulars, too low and vile to put in print. At the time of his execution, they found on his body a sealed envelope containing what she stated in court that he had taken from her body, and said that he took it in remembrance of her. He admitted the crime. People who live in the North and have so much sympathy for the negro had better come South and live with them five years. I think they would sing a different song. The negroes are all born wrong; they are born criminals. They are too lazy to work, the consequence is they study how to live without work and the result is their offspring are born criminals. The slave negroes are all good, kind people, but not one of them would hesitate to rob a hen roost on his way home from prayer meeting. Our criminals are those born since the war.

Myra Peppers, Ottumwa Iowa,—Although I do not get Lucifer regularly, some of my good friends send me a copy occasionally and in one of them I saw the letter from—— ——. I wrote a letter and sent it through Lillian and received a reply, with the request to destroy the letter. Carelessly I destroyed it without noting the address so will say to —— —— that is the reason I have not answered her most interesting letter. But as she says her correspondence is subject to confiscation by her legal owner a letter might not reach her after all. Lillian is right—take away the idea of ownership and marriage will be robbed of its terrors. I have lately had a little experience, in which the one-sidedness of things is evident. I have a brother-in-law, well known to many of Lucifer's readers and contributors—a believer in true freedom. He came to the place I call home, and was treated so shamefully by my owner that he could not remain. The only reason for this contemptible meanness is that he is an anarchist. Bah! and this same owner is a liberal—with a big L, but only liberal enough to damn the churches and the republican party. The line is drawn there and those who advocate socialism, anarchism, and free love, are denounced as enemies of civilization and fit only for prisons and the gallows. Pardon personalities but it is just as well to show up the sore spots in this marriage business.

Ina Champney in No. 770 of Lucifer hits the nail on the head in regard to education,—"none but desired children." It is a hopeful sign when young women can think and write as does Ina Champney. Before this letter grows too long I want to say that I heartily endorse the editorial entitled "Costly Patriotism" in 770. I have voiced the same sentiment many times. Speaking of Orangeman's day as celebrated in Canada, a friend of mine said "I do not believe in celebrating certain days that only perpetuate our forefather's blunders." To those of my friends who are expecting letters from me I send greetings. Numerous duties and the "late unpleasantness" account for seeming neglect. With good wishes to Lucifer and all who love Freedom, au revoir.

W. R. Woodard, Lincoln, Calif.,—Enclosed find $2. for renewal for Lucifer for one year, on Mrs. H. W. Woodard's subscription. Considering the quality and importance of Lucifer I think it cheaper at two dollars, than any other publication with which I am acquainted, and I suggest that every subscriber to Lucifer who feels as I do about its value, and is unable to render assistance by tongue or pen, should enclose two or more dollars per annum on each subscription. The paper merits the support of every thoughtful person who has paid any attention to the improvement of the human race. The spirit manifested towards his persecutors, by Mr. Harman during his persecution and imprisonment, is sublime. The sentiment he expresses concerning war, patriotism, Fourth of July celebrations, the rights of labor, government, religion and morality, women's rights, children's rights, and human rights, are in line with the best thought of the 19th century. Mental development, as exemplified through the results attained by art and science, in labor saving machinery; and more comprehensive and better methods, is far in advance, in the evolution of the human race, of moral development, as recognized in the business relations of men. That degree of moral development, that demands "equal and exact justice for all," and the greatest personal liberty that does not invade the equal liberty of all others, is only theoretically acknowledged, and that by but few. The fact that the greatest possible personal security for each and every individual against invasion of his rights by others, lies in the protection, by society, of every individual no matter how humble, from invasion from every source, is lost sight of in the mad, selfish scramble for personal advantage. All the opportunities which art and science have developed, for securing better results, by human effort, have been seized by the cunning and strong, and converted into huge engines of oppression, with which to invade the rights, and absorb the natural heritage of the masses. The result is on one hand enormous wealth and splendor in the hands of the few, whose morals are eaten away by corruption, (corrupt commercialism) which corrupts the whole moral atmosphere, and on the other hand the disinherited masses, begging from door to door, rapidly increasing in numbers as wealth and power become concentrated, becoming more unmanly, dissipated, and degraded day by day, and year by year, until they threaten the permanence of society. How to check and remove this vast avalanch of corruption on the one hand, which has gathered on the mountain tops of selfishness and corrupt commercialism, and threatens to overwhelm civilization, and the miasma of degradation on the other hand, which has gathered in the swamps and mire of poverty and injustice and theatens to breed a pestilence which will roll back the tide of progress to the "dark ages" of the past, is a question that demands the earnest attention of every intelligent human being.

772.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

Col. Ingersoll is reported to have said, in substance (I do not recall his exact words) that intelligence is the only lever that will or can raise humanity out of the mire of ignorance, superstition, selfishness and degradation. The work which is being done by reformers, in all lines of reform, is urgently needed, but I know of no line of reform in which work and workers are so urgently needed as that in which Lucifer is engaged.

WHAT IS AN ANARCHIST?

The word ANARCHY, in the minds of misinformed people, signifies disorder, chaos, turbulence, violence, bloodshed, retrogression. To the student of economics it signifies exactly the reverse of these ideas—in two words, Liberty and Progress. You cannot afford to be ignorant of this comparatively new view of economic science, and you will remain ignorant of it so long as you gain your information—or rather, misinformation—concerning it from newspapers only. P. J. Proudhon the great French economist, identifies Anarchy with Liberty and says "Liberty is the mother, not the daughter, of Order." Read and think for yourself and you will see that Anarchy instead of being a doctrine which threatens the destruction of all that is beneficial to humanity is in fact the necessary condition of unhampered social evolution. Here is a list of books on anarchy which we recommend. They will be sent post paid from Lucifer office on receipt of price:

Economics of Anarchy. A Study of the Industrial Type. By Dyer D. Lum. Paper, 60 pages. (Scarce) .25

Autonomy. Self Law; What Are Its Demands? A fragmentary exposition of the basic principle of individualism in its relation to society and government. By Moses Harman. This pamphlet of 29 uncut pages contains an account of the autonomistic marriage of Lillian Harman and Edwin C Walker, and their subsequent arrest, trial and imprisonment. The pamphlet is not up to the standard in typography, but it contains data valuable to all lovers of personal liberty. .05

Creed of Liberty. A brief exposition of philosophical anarchism. By William Gilmour. Paper, 11 pages. .03

Cityless and Countryless World; an Outline of Practical Co-operative Individualism, By Henry Olerich. Red silk; gold title: nearly 500 pages. $1.00

Dawn of Civilization. A Radical Social Reform Novel by J. C. Spence, formerly a vice president of the Legitimation League. Blue and gold boards; 176 pages. .25

Government Analyzed. By John R. Kelso, A. M. This book seeks to show that all governments, like all gods, are the mere personifications of mythical monsters invented by selfish and crafty men as instruments with which to rob and enslave the ignorant toiling masses. A book which is sure to open the eyes of governmentalists who read it. Bound in cloth; 520 pages; edition limited; original price, $1.50. Our price, .90

Human Rights. By Madison Hook, with an Introduction by E. C. Walker. 1891; paper, 19 pages, .05

Thomas Jefferson: Father of American Democracy. His political, social and religious philosophy. By Gen. M. M. Trumbull. Paper, 29 pages, .10

Liberty: Political, Religious, Social and Sexual. By A. F. Tindall, A. T. C. L.; an essay towards establishing an Anti-Persecution Society to defend the rights of individuals against state interference and Puritan persecution. Paper, 8 pages. .03

Instead of a Book. By a man too busy to write one. A fragmentary exposition of philosophical anarchy by Benj. R. Tucker, editor of "Liberty." 512 pages. Paper, .50 cloth, $1.00

Proudhon and his Bank of the People. Being a defense of the great French anarchist, showing the evils of a specie currency and that interest on capital can and ought to be abolished by a system of free and mutual banking. By Charles A. Dana, late editor of the New York "Sun;" paper, .15

Red Heart in a White World. A suggestive manual of Free Society; containing a method and a hope. By J. William Lloyd. Handsome illuminated paper cover in white, red and green; 50 pages, .10

Revival of Puritanism. An expose of the spirit "which makes cowards of editors and teachers, and spies and blackmailers of officials; which emasculates our literature and degrades our art, and which harries, robs and imprisons the few who are so organized that they will not sacrifice to what they hold to be a falsehood, even though death be the alternative." By E. C. Walker. Paper, large pages, .10

What is Property? System of Economic Contradictions, or the Philosophy of Misery. P. J. Proudhon's great work showing the short-sightedness and fundamental errors of all schools of political economy. Cloth, 460 pages. Original price, $2.50. Our price, $1.00

The Chicago Martyrs. The famous speeches of the Eight Anarchists in Judge Gary's Court; and Altgeld's Reasons for Pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. With portraits of the Eight, and a picture of the Monument to them at Waldheim Cemetery. Introduction by Wm. Holmes. 172 large pages. Printed on good paper. Price, .25

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY. Co-educational. Send for catalog. A. B. Gammage, President. 167 Dearborn St., Chicago.

Personal. Readers of Lucifer who would like a quiet, home-like room in a private family when visiting Chicago, should communicate with X. Y. Z., care of Lucifer, 167 Carroll Ave.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. "Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza. "Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold. Sample pages free. Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

Free Love; A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of connubial love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 1871, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence. 140 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 167 Carroll Ave., Chicago

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

LOVE AND THE LAW. By E. C. Walker. A clear, concise statement of social liberty in contradistinction to the much lauded legal bondage now almost universally upheld. An excellent missionary document. Two copies, 5 cents; 20 copies per dozen.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint: A scathing protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 30. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, AUGUST 5, E. M. 299. [C. E. 1899.] WHOLE No. 773.

Declaration of the Free.

We have no falsehoods to defend—
We want the facts;
Our force, our thought, we do not spend
In vain attacks.
And we will never meanly try
To save some fair and pleasing lie

The simple truth is what we ask,
Not the ideal;
We've set ourselves the noble task
To find the real.
If all there is is naught but dross,
We want to know and bear our loss.

We will not willingly be fooled
By fables nursed;
Our hearts, by earnest thought, are schooled
To bear the worst;
And we can stand erect and dare
All things, all facts that really are.

We have no God to serve or fear,
No hell to shun,
No devil with malicious leer,
When life is done
And endless sleep may close our eyes,
A sleep with neither dreams nor sighs.

We have no master on the land—
No king in air—
Without a manacle we stand,
Without a prayer,
Without a fear of coming night,
We seek the truth, we love the light.

We do not bow before a guess,
A vague unknown;
A senseless force we do not bless
In solemn tone.
When evil comes we do not curse,
Or thank because it is no worse.

When cyclones prowl—when lightning blights,
'Tis naught but fate;
There is no God of wrath who smites
In heartless hate.
Behind the things that injure man
There is no purpose, thought, or plan.

We waste no time in useless dread,
In trembling fear;
The present lives, the past is dead,
And we are here,
All welcome guests at life's great feast—
We need no help from ghost or priest.

Our life is joyous, jocund, free—
Not one a slave
Who bends in fear the trembling knee,
And seeks to save
A coward soul from future pain;
Not one will cringe or crawl for gain.

The jeweled cup of love we drain.
And friendship's wine
Now swiftly flows in every vein
With warmth divine,
And so we love and hope and dream
That in death's sky there is a gleam.

We walk according to our light,
Pursue the path
That leads to honor's stainless height,
Ca reless of wrath
Or curse of God, or priestly spite,
Longing to know and do the right.

We love our fellow man, our kind,
Wife, child, and friend,
To phantoms we are deaf and blind,
But we extend
The helping hand to the distressed;
By lifting others we are blessed.

Love's sacred flame within the heart
And friendship's glow;
While all the miracles of art
Their wealth bestow
Upon the thrilled and joyous brain,
And present raptures banish pain.

We love no phantom of the skies,
But living flesh,
With passion's soft and soulful eyes,
Lips warm and fresh,
And cheeks with health's red flag unfurled,
The breathing angels of the world.

The hands that help are better far
Than lips that pray.
Love is the ever gleaming star
That leads the way.
That shines, not on vague worlds of bliss,
But on a paradise in this.

We do not pray, or weep or wail;
We have no dread,
No fear to pass beyond the veil
That hides the dead.
And yet we question, dream, and guess,
But knowledge we do not possess.

We ask, yet nothing seems to know;
We cry in vain.
There is no "master of the show"
Who will explain,
Or from the future tear the mask,
And yet we dream and still we ask.

Is there beyond the silent night
An endless day?
Is death a door that leads to light?
We cannot say.
The tongueless secret locked in fate
We do not know. We hope and wait.

—Robert G. Ingersoll.

The Character of a Free Lover.

BY C. L. JAMES.

In one of the works of Mr. Matthew Arnold, I was reading, the other day, what incited me to execute a long-deferred resolution of writing something systematic on this subject.

Mr. Arnold was an extremely radical thinker on religious topics. He did not in the least believe in a personal God, in the literal truth of the Bible, nor, apparently, in the immortality of the soul. But he contended, justly enough, I grant, that the Hebrew and early Christian literatures, vulgarly called the Old and New Testaments, were of supreme importance to civilization because they had contributed to it, not certain moral precepts, which may be found also in Plato, Seneca, Confucius, etc., etc.; but "morality touched with emotion," or ethical religion. "Israel," as Mr. Arnold chooses to call the Jewish people, entertained, not a mere theory, but a profound conviction—his word is "intuition,"—that there exists "an eternal power, not ourselves, which makes for righteousness." No experience of crime triumphant, virtue crucified, death confounding all, could shake the obstinate persuasion of "Israel" that this is so; therefore "Israel" is our teacher in what evolution has come later to prove the way of life,—despite all the errors and shortcomings of "Israel" himself about matters of detail.

Among illustrations of that moral "intuition" which distinguished "Israel," Mr. Arnold cites the Commandment "Thou shalt not commit adultery," the sentiment of Proverbs on "the strange woman," the disappearance of polygamy in this Oriental nation before the time of Jesus, and the sayings of Jesus himself on the same subject. Very correctly again, he remarks that to restrain the lust of the flesh, besides being a vitally important lesson, is a hard one; and that we must not be at all surprised if either Jews or Christians be far from applying it faultlessly. He concludes as follows "Not practice alone is against the old strictness of rule, but theory; we have argumentative systems of free love and of rehabilitation of the flesh" . . . . here he cites some instances . . . then . . ." Israel's comment on the theory of free love is invaluable. He knows not that the dead are there, and that her guests are in the depths of hell."

This is my text. My thesis is that Mr. Arnold, like all honest opponents of free love, has totally misunderstood what he attacks. My argument shall tend to this, that free love does not mean "rehabilitation of the flesh," but, on the contrary, restraint upon the flesh. I contend that free love is not, as Mr. Arnold says "a disintegration of that moral perception on which the Seventh Commandment is founded," but eminently an integration of this moral perception. I shall endeavor to show that, as Christianity and all which follows Christianity along the same line, is, in general, the emancipation of the moral spirit from the mere letter of the Jewish law, (which Mr. Arnold would very readily admit), so free love is the rationale of "the Seventh Commandment" raised from a dead rule into a living principle. For the reasoning of "the Seventh Commandment," if it be anything, is just this, that the sexual passion should be restrained within the limits of prudence, justice and delicacy.

First, then, and principally, "the Seventh Commandment" is founded on a perception that the sexual propensity needs to be restrained. Now, however paradoxical it may sound, nothing restrains the sexual appetite like free love. For what is "the theory of free love," which Mr. Arnold has so ignorantly assailed? Surely, no one who will read my ensuing definition can doubt its correctness, so far as it goes. The theory is, first and principally this, that under no circumstances whatever should any woman be required, or persuaded to gratify this desire against her own inclinations. Now, it will not be disputed that the female sex is less amorous than the male. I allow this sounds rather like a stock assertion; but for a generation which reads Darwin, it would be an anachronism to dwell on that. The female is fully proved less amorous than the male; therefore a principle which holds it atrocious to constrain, or overrule, as by payment, the inclinations of a female, must restrain sexual indulgence far more than it ever yet has been restrained.

The difference is transcendentally important. Those Jewish legislators whom Mr. Arnold, not without some reason, admires, were sensible that much physical and moral injury might be done by unrestrained sexual indulgence in marriage as well as out. They accordingly laid down certain regulations for the restraint of desire notwithstanding marriage. The canon law and the moral treatises of Catholic writers upon these subjects also abound in somewhat unpleasantly minute injunctions of continence. But under Protestant auspices, a not unreasonable feeling that such matters cannot be reduced to rule, has left the woman without any protection against the demands of her legal master.

Besides under all systems of marriage, pagan or Christian, Protestant or Catholic, the lawfulness of intercourse is made complete, not by the inclination of either party, but by the performance of a mere ceremony. The canon law does indeed hold an actually compulsory marriage to be null; but any bribery or intimidation by which a woman may be brought to "accept the situation" avails to deprive her for life of the right to refuse her "conjugal duty." How much more efficacious, humane, and rational, the simple principle of the free lover that under any circumstances to exact reluctant submission is an odious crime? How, but through utter misunderstanding of its real nature, can free love ever be represented as indulgence instead of restraint?

License and liberty are essentially opposed; and there is no restraint like equal freedom. The male can indulge that passion whose greater energy distinguishes him from the female in but three ways—by finding a female whose inclinations are in harmony with his own; by compelling one to submit against her will; and overcoming her reluctance with filthy lucre. But the two last the free lover calls rape and whoredom. He utterly refuses to admit it as an excuse that they are committed under the human law, or that they have been sanctioned by all the priests outside of the infernal regions. He holds himself bound to abstain from them as from the most execrable of crimes and vices; and he considers proof of committing them abundantly sufficient to deprive another of his esteem.

It is evident, then, that he comes much farther and applies much more thoroughly than "Israel," or the canonists, who are Israel's successors, the general principle that sexual appetite should be restrained. Restrained, for them, within the limits of a technical law, by perception that inordinate concupiscence is dangerous, that secret amours may involve jealousy and strife, and that gross lewdness is offensive; it is restrained, for him, to the full limit of woman's superior continence, by the just and chivalrous sentiment that whoever will indulge his lust at the expense of her weakness or necessities is a monster.

To be more specific, we have said that the sexual passion should be restrained within the limits set by prudence. Now, which has the most reason to fear its consequences, the man or the woman? Very evidently, the woman. Is the woman, supposing her to have attained that degree of maturity and discretion without which she has no consent to give, less able to understand the perils to which she exposes herself than a man? I am certain such is not the ordinary opinion; and until I find some one to defend it I need give no reason why it is not mine. Surely, then, the free lover, besides being honorable and rigid in his feelings towards women, is judicious in his views of their interests. If they have more to risk than men, and if they understand the hazard quite as well as men, there can be no better way to keep the indulgence of desire within those limits set by prudence than to have it understood that indulgence shall depend entirely on their good will, and not at all on general maxims framed by men, who are less disposed, for every reason, to restrain it than they are themselves.

But, it may be said, notwithstanding the superior continence of women, many women go to ruin through disregarding these general maxims! This is sadly true; but surely it is rather surprising. If women are less amorous than men, as they are; if they have more to lose by rashness in love affairs than men, as they have; if they are easily taught to understand the importance of prudence quite as well as men understand it, which is unquestionable, then the fact that they often go to ruin through disregarding the general rules which men have framed for them, is one requiring explanation. It can scarcely be explained by this, that women, at certain periods, though not on the average, are peculiarly susceptible. For in this age of "new women" we see multitudes, in no physiological respect different from others, who, it must surely be allowed, are as unlikely subjects for the seducer as can be found on earth. In every middle-sized city of the present day, there are a thousand women, quite attractive in appearance, not at all defective sexually, and very free in manners, who are much safer than an odalisque in the grated harem or a nun in a Spanish convent. Though many people doubtless suppose, it really shows ignorance of men and things to suppose, that vehement insistence on a rule and cruel penalties for breaking it, do not often make its breach more common. But a still greater mistake is to suppose that these methods necessarily fortify the spirit of the rule—that its object must needs be attained more generally for such insistence on the letter.

I acknowledge, for my own part, a suspicion that this case is in point. Women, or rather girls, are often easy to seduce, because, to "preserve their modesty," they have been brought up in studied ignorance of a few plain facts, such as that men's desires are much stronger than their own; because they have been taught to allure men as a means of securing support through matrimony—was this to preserve their modesty? because they have not been trained to habits of industry and self-reliance which give them something else than love and flirtation to think about. But all this is the effect of these general maxims which men have framed to regulate the conduct of women.

To be continued.

Free Combines vs Law-Protected Trusts.

BY EDGAR D. BRINKERHOFF.

The article entitled "Combines, Trusts, and Amalgamations" by R. B. Kerr in Lucifer of July 22 contains many remarkable omissions, if the Hibernicism may be allowed. Nothing is said about my intimation in Lucifer of July 1, second paragraph, that prices are governed by some principle other than the will of the would-be monopolist, their tendency being towards the cost of production.

Also it does not explain how two barbers in a village can fix extortionate prices when another stands ready to come in and take custom at reasonable rates while the public boycotts the two rascals.

Again, it does not say anything about the additional expense and waste to which combines are liable—far exceeding any possible cut in expenses. The burden of proof here rests upon Mr. Kerr, for the presumption is that when a man attends to his own business it will be more economically done than when he hires; unless indeed he hires slaves, made such by laws driving them off of unoccupied land or preventing them from monetizing what little wealth they had. Combines, trusts and amalgamations could have no possible chance to live in competition with the free individual looking after his own business as the latter could sell cheaply without losing while the trust could only undersell at a loss and could not continue to compete at a loss against millions of men at once.

A further omission consists in failing to show a single instance in which men have successfully combined against the individual without government aid; in other words, no example is given of the public being fleeced by a free combination.

Mr. Kerr asks, "If combinations can be made in the teeth of the laws, can they not be made when there are no laws?" But the combinations are not made in the teeth of the laws but by help of the laws. Coal barons combine and succeed in keeping up prices because the state favors them by excluding others from the use of coal lands.

In his last paragraph, Mr. Kerr holds that "Nobody will be able to compete against the universal trust, for the trust will be able to sell cheaper than any one else could possibly produce." How does Mr. Kerr know this? Did he ever see a combine competing with a free individual? Did he ever see less waste going on in a large factory than in a small shop where the individual works for himself unhampered? Does he doubt that one industry after another would pass into the hands of individuals, beginning with those requiring least capital, as hunting, fishing and some departments of agriculture? On the same principle, in all industries the individual could produce more cheaply than the trust as soon as individual industry had time to develop. Mr. Kerr must prove that the trust can put the products of the chase and the fisheries on the market without loss at a lower price than they can be sold by the individual.

Mr. Kerr states that I do not dispute his "main point that combination is the natural outcome of free competition because it pays men better to combine than to compete." I did distinctly dispute this in the aforesaid article and used railroads for illustration. I will now dispose of it again—in regard to barbers. It will not pay the two village barbers to combine. Their shops are at different ends of the village and they will lose more than they will gain by combining into one shop to save expenses as some men will shave themselves rather than walk so far. Neither will it pay to agree to higher prices for fear of that outside barber and the public boycott. As there is plenty of custom they do not need to enter into any cutthroat competition. The natural competition they do enter into is healthy and does not pay them worse than would combination with its attendant danger of a boycott.

The saving of $60,000,000 in drummers salaries by a completer combination proves nothing because it is a saving that individual enterprise is capable of also, as under universal free trade which includes free land and free banking, the merchant must send to an individual for his goods or go without; for consumption will keep up with production and there will be no over-production.

Mr. Kerr complains that I simply tried to prove that if trusts charge extortionate prices competition may revive. Very well, we libertarians are very accommodating and are willing to take up the argument at any point. If discussion regarding ideal society already established is preferred, let it be invited. Or if it is preferred that the individualist shall trace the evolution from the stage of primitive industry to that of fully developed free industry, let that preference be expressed and the philosopher o freedom will not be slow to respond. Mr. Kerr has only himself to blame for my confining myself to the question of the mode of change from state-created monopoly by private individuals to jury-created industrial freedom. Besides, if he cannot show that competition cannot revive in the face of the trusts when freedom is conceded, his case is lost.

Criticisms and Comments.

BY C. F. HUNT.

According to Christians, God makes a death scene an example or a warning. If so R. G. Ingersoll's death shows divine approval of his life. His demise was ideal—perfect.

* * *

Since so many contributors are advising how Lucifer ought to be conducted, I wish to chip in a protest against single tax matter in No. 770. My offering on this subject was once ruled out. It may be proper that a paper devoted to motherhood should exclude the doctrine of equal right to the earth for mother as well as child.

* * *

We also need a censor against fiatism. When I read in the same paper: We must teach the people that money is not value; that the things produced are the values," I tremble for my ignorant fellows. We are asked to teach something false; dollars have so far been made only of metals which are produced by labor, and have a market value just as wheat has. By what effort of the imagination shall we believe that such a commodity is not value?

* * *

The "Daily News" says: "The conversation is seldom general at a New York dinner table, but each guest turns to his right-hand neighbor and falls into an earnest, excited, often vehement discussion." From which we may infer that the latest social fad is that each fashionable diner breathes "the hot air" against the back of his right hand neighbor's neck.

Mankind is divided into two classes—those who earn a living without getting it, and those who get a living without earning it.—Sel.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper as it has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

Westward Ho!

As stated in last week's issue the editor of this paper expects to start on a trip to Iowa, Kansas, and other western states, about the fifth of this month. At Mt. Pleasant Park, camp ground, near Clinton, Iowa, his first stop, he hopes to meet many friends who reside in Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Dakota, Minnesota and Wisconsin. From this camp he expects to go direct to Ottawa, Kansas, to attend the ninth annual meeting of the Kansas Freethinkers Association, which meeting will open on the twenty-third and close on the twenty-ninth of August. Several other points in the states named, will probably be visited, but the dates cannot now be definitely fixed.

Social Problems

Continuing, or further elaborating, the social problems treated of in No. 771, I would say that in law, and largely in custom, the appellation "Mistress" or "Missis" means a woman whose person is not her own, whose time is not her own, whose "bed and board" are not her own, whose earnings are not her own, and whose children are not her own. All these are owned and controlled, or may be owned and controlled, by another, and that other is, by courtesy, reckoned to be her sexuo-economic partner, but in law and largely also in custom, that other is her sexuo-economic master. For proof of this we have only to consult the law dictionaries and the court decisions bearing upon marriage and divorce.

But the word "mistress" has another meaning; a meaning commonly considered much more dishonorable than when pronounced "missis." In this secondary sense the word mistress means a "kept" woman—kept for what? For service in the kitchen, the laundry, the nursery, or as general housekeeper? O, no! but kept, retained, supported for services in the sex-relationship only; that is, kept as a temporary sex-slave. As such her master can use her and abuse her and cast her off when tired of her, or when for any cause he wishes the arrangement to cease, and without incurring any legal responsibility to care for her in sickness or old age, or for the children born of such unlicensed and unrecorded relationship.

A parallel can easily be drawn here between the two forms of sex-slavery and the two forms of manual labor slavery. Under chattel labor slavery the master was obliged by law and custom to care for the slave in sickness and in old age, and for the infant offspring of such slave. But in the wage slave manual labor system the master is under no such obligation, either in law or custom. And so likewise of the master, in sexuo-economics.

In her book, "Women and Economics," Charlotte Perkins Stetson probes the underlying causes of the inferiority of women to men in the sexuo-economic relation, and also shows the primary cause of bitter feeling between the two classes of sex-slaves, in these words:

"The highest human attributes are perfectly compatible with the sex-relation but not with the sexuo-economic relation. We see this opposition again in the tendency to collectivity in bodies of single men,—their comradeship, equality, and mutual helpfulness as compared with the attitude of the same men toward one another, when married. This is why the quality of "organizability" is stronger in men than in women; their common economic interests force them into this relation, while the isolated and even antagonistic economic interests of women keep them from it. The condition of individual economic dependence in which women live resembles that of the savage in the forest. They obtain their economic goods by securing a male through their individual exertions, all competing freely to this end. No combination is possible. The numerous girls at a summer resort, in their attitude toward the scant supply of young men, bear an unconscious resemblance to the emulous savages in a too closely hunted forest. And here may be given an economic reason for the oft-noted bitterness with which the virtuous women regard the vicious. The virtuous woman stands in close ranks with her sisters, refusing to part with herself—her only economic goods—until she is assured of legal marriage, with its lifelong guarantee of support. Under equal proportions of birth in the two sexes, every woman would be tolerably sure of obtaining her demands. But here enters the vicious woman, and offers the same goods—though of inferior quality, to be sure—for a far less price. Every one of such illegitimate competitors lowers the chances of the unmarried women and the income of the married. No wonder those who hold themselves highly should be moved to bitterness at being undersold in this way. It is the hatred of the trade-unionist for 'scab labor.'"

The problem of "spinsterhood," that is, the problem that confronts the unmarried human female, is, perhaps, under our sexuo-economic system, the most difficult and perplexing as well as the most pathetic or pitiable of all our social problems. As Mrs. Stetson says, the unmarried woman's "only economic goods" is "herself," which as men commonly understand it, means the service of her body in the sex relation. The man who is out of employment can go into the labor market and offer his services; he can boldly and openly compete with his fellows for a job. Not so the woman who would escape the isolation, the cruel martyrdom of celibate spinsterhood. To show that she is seeking sex service, either a lifelong job or a temporary engagement, is to defeat her object. The average man prefers a woman demure and very modest—one who speaks and acts as though she never had a thought, feeling or desire in the direction of sex-service, or sexuo-economic employment. And so the woman of nubile age must wait for man to propose, and if she have not wealth, social position or extraordinary beauty to recommend her she waits, waits—till the heart grows sick with hope deferred—waiting and longing for the man in whose companionship life on earth would be all the heaven she could desire, but the man who never comes—waits till all the bloom and beauty and fragrance of life has departed, and then perhaps in sheer desperation she accepts a man who has no other wants, desires or aspirations but those of the purely physical plane; accepts a man utterly distasteful and repulsive to her, or who soon becomes such, and thus dooms herself to a life of slavery and of degradation—in her own estimation if not of others, incomparably harder to bear than was the fate of the black chattel of Afro-American slavery.

Then when we remember that the fate of the woman herself—the submergence of all that means "sweetness and light" in life for her, is only a part of the picture; when we remember the working of the inexorable forces,—commonly called laws,—of nature, and know that from such sowing the harvest of new human beings must necessarily be of inferior quality; when we remember that "like begets like," and that all the conditions attending maternity leave lasting impress upon the child, including all mental states of the mother,—when we remember all this, can we wonder that many besides the "Great Agnostic," Robert G. Ingersoll, are now demanding that "Science shall make woman the owner, the mistress of herself?" That is, that science shall so order our social life that woman shall no longer be the "mistress"—whether licensed or unlicensed—of any man, but that she shall be queen in the realm of the affections, queen and final arbiter in solving all the intricate and perplexing social problems of human life.

M. HARMAN.

Woman and Home in Freedom.

BY LILLIAN HARMAN.

It is probable that there will be as many theories regarding what women will do with freedom, when they obtain it, as there are individuals to construct theories; and it is well that this should be. Every woman should have the right to formulate and live her ideal. And men, too, will have ideals, and as "every Jack has his Jill," he will doubtless find a woman who is somewhere near his ideal.

Much theorizing has been indulged in, recently, in Lucifer, concerning the economic position of women in freedom. I have always been much interested in this subject, though I do not believe it possible for us to settle the question for those who will live in the future nor for others than ourselves in the present. Yet we have the right to advise others,—they retaining the right to reject our advice when unwelcome. We should be cautious however in our advice, we can only suggest though we can not take the consequences of action. If I advise a friend to walk in a certain path and she stumbles and falls over a boulder and breaks her leg, it is her leg that is broken, not mine; and though I may bitterly regret having given her the advice, I can not suffer the physical disability in her stead. I may love, and sympathize with, and seek to aid her all in my power—still it is she who must lie in bed until the bone knits together again. Therefore in all the dilemmas of life, we may seek the counsel of our friends; but we should accept only the advice which our reason endorses as sound.

Just here I wish to say, in reference to the "haison" to which Mrs. Waisbrooker alludes, that it is a very risky thing for any third person to "urge" one lover to make a demand of another as a "test" of love. The delicacy which caused this woman to shrink from asking for money was her safest guide. It was not for a third person to say what either should or should not do. To make a present to a loved one is one thing; to demand a present is quite another. If the woman had been disabled in any way by her association with this man, he might owe her reparation; if he felt a warm friendship for her and was able to help her, it would have been right for him to do it—most friends, whether of the same or opposite sexes, enjoy adding to the happiness of their friends. But most women of my acquaintance shrink from asking men—even their husbands—for money. This fact alone is an argument in favor of the economic independence of woman. This woman acted as she did, it appears, because Mrs. Waisbrooker urged her to do so; but it was not Mrs. Waisbrooker who suffered the humiliation of it.

Under better economic conditions both men and women will earn their living in a more satisfactory manner than at present. Yet even under existing conditions I am unable to understand why a woman cannot be credited with earning her own living. The great majority of women live in individual homes. They wash, sew, cook, and do more or less other housekeeping for their families. The majority work nearly all the time; yet they are "supported" by their husbands. To my way of thinking, the men either want them to occupy the position of housekeeper or they do not. If the men want them to do so they should be willing to pay their companions a certain agreed on price for their work, just as they would pay any one else for work which they want done. If it is not to the interest of the men, if they are merely supporting the women for charity's sake, it should be so understood, and the woman should be give the opportunity to try to find a place where her services would be valued. As a matter of fact, most men who think they are supporting their wives, would not be willing to let them go at all.

In this way every working woman who has a strong will and a desire for economic independence can have the fact that she supports herself recognized; and this, too, under present economic conditions. I think we should do all we can to improve the economic conditions; but I, for one, do not intend to wait for the change. I intend to be an independent, self-supporting woman here and now. And I believe I would feel the same if I were the "mother of a family," living in conventional marriage, with my eyes newly opened to the light. If my husband should tell me that he supported me and the children, I should say to him,

"My dear, I have no desire to be a pauper, nor to bring up my children as a beggar's children. It takes a certain amount of money to dress the children and myself. Is it worth that sum to have me here to care for our mutual home? Tell me frankly. If it is, then pay me the money that we have been using in my support, that I may use it for my own support. If my work is not worth it to you,—well, we will part friends. Men have died and left women with families of little children. I will be no more helpless than they. I will find an opening somewhere, somehow. At the worst, I can take a house and keep boarders, or sew, or even wash for a living. Anything is better than eating the bread of charity."

There are very few women, even of those who have families of small children who cannot be self-supporting if they will.

Though there are many difficulties in the way of independence in the case of a woman who already has a family of small children; only the weak will or the ignorance of a childless woman prevents independence for her. But, it it is objected, "She can support only herself; she cannot support children!" Well, we may admit that is often the case. She may desire children—but children are luxuries. So may she desire a trip to the seashore, which is also a luxury. When we desire luxuries we adjust conditions so that we may have them, or if we are unable to do that we manage to get along without them. But as children are often the result of the reproductive act, the free woman needs to be careful lest she acquires one of these luxuries before she is prepared for it. It is not my province to dictate to others; but if my daughter or any other woman should ask my advice, I would say,

"If you are a free woman you are free to have friends of the opposite sex, and enjoy their society to any extent that may be mutually desirable. There are great possibilities of happiness in a companionship that does not involve a reproductive association. As it should not be forgotten, however, that there is an act, the indulgence in which brings with it the possibility of calling into being a new life, it is prudent to refrain from that act except when you feel that the man is good and true and able to be a good father to a child, and when you may feel that the child, though not entirely desired, is not a great misfortune, and is the result of a deep, genuine love,—a love which is so strong that it needs no 'test' to prove its existence. Then, even though you may have made a mistake, you will know that your child is the child of love, and even though you may not have all the conditions of existence as you desire, the child may be its own justification. If the love between you and the child's father continues—well and good. If it dies out, you may still be glad that you are a free woman, the mother of a child of love, and not an unloved wife."

There is much more I desire to say on this subject; but I do not approve of long articles in a small paper. I will add only a few words in regard to the question of the home. In my opinion, both men and women need homes. The home may be only a three by six room, and that of the man and woman may be side by side with a door between; but each man and woman ought to have some place on earth, be it ever so small, where he or she can be "at home," where he or she can be entirely alone, if desirous of privacy, or may do whatever can be done in the limits of the four walls, without question and without reproach.

OUR READERS and patrons, everywhere, are hereby again requested not to forget to send us names of their friends and acquaintances who might become interested in Lucifer and its work, if they could see a few sample copies. Upon this plan, more than any other, we now depend for increase of subscription list, and for advertising the books and pamphlets that supplement and extend the work of the paper itself.

Woman and Economics.

BY LOIS WAISBROOKER.

I see in Lucifer considerable discussion about the support of woman as mother if she is really free. It does not seem to me that there is any need for anxiety on that point any more than we need to worry about man's economic condition when monopoly privilege no longer exists. The fact that in many fields of physical labor woman cannot, and for the good of the race ought not, to do as much as man, and therefore that she, under this sys tem or any other that values every thing from a money standpoint, cannot secure as much money in return, need give us no anxiety whatever. Men that are men, love to do for those they love. Here is a test that every woman can apply. She will thus know if the man who seeks her—who is attracted to her—really loves her or is only attracted from the physical plane, and for his own gratification.

This cry of woman's being mercenary if she receives or expects aid from the man with whom she is associated is all nonsense. It will never be made by a man who loves a woman. And a woman who loves a man will not tax him for more than he will love to bestow when our economic system is properly adjusted. Now she is often driven to it from sheer necessity.

A case in point. I once knew a woman who had what is called a liaison with a man. This man and his wife were such only in name, had been so for a long time. He was in a position to command good wages and she was working for a pittance. There came a time when she wanted to go to a Liberal convention but hesitated because she needed money for the expenses of the trip that she did not possess.

I suggested to her to ask Mr.——to help her. She shrank from the thought but I urged her to it, told her that the reason he had not offered to help her was no doubt because he feared she would think he wanted to buy her. It will be a test of his love anyhow for if he really loves you he will be glad to help you. I was told afterward by his legal wife that——said he never was more astonished in his life than when——asked him for money. He seemed to think it an evidence that she was mercenary. Poor girl! it was a bitter experience. I can see her now with the tears rolling down her cheeks as she talked with me about it.

It is such men that our competitive system and Mother Grundy produces; men who do not know what love is, and they are to be pitied, for they are victims as much as woman is. In freedom, such freedom as will give woman the home and the control of her own person, such men will wake up to their true manhood and then there will be no question of support. "Oh, but why should woman have the control of the home any more than the man?" exclaims some man who is on the same plane as the man who thinks if a woman accepts aid from the man she loves, and who claims to love her, she is mercenary. Because only as woman contro's the home can she be really free. How can the home be woman's sphere as man is so fond of claiming, if she cannot control it? Man has never claimed that the home is his sphere, and yet he has claimed control, or at least equal control.

Neither man nor woman can find and live their nobler selves under the present system of things, and it is folly to try to decide what they will do in freedom by what they do today. As I am not afraid to trust women with freedom, neither am I afraid that in freedom man will not be just to woman, for under a system that gives equal opportunity to all, his better self will have the chance to manifest.

The feminine is the embodying power of the universe, is the builder. Man, in freedom, will realize this, will realize that the builder has the right to be provided with what is needed. Man is, by nature's law the provider and woman the builder, and when statute law gets out of the way, when love rules, man will feel wronged if not allowed to do his part, if not permitted to care for those he loves.

The masculine and feminine of the universe are equal in fact, equal in that they balance each other, but their spheres of work, their office, is not the same. If they were there would be no need for but one.

An Insult to Womanhood.

Cleveland "World"

If there is anything more disgusting than all others that spring out of conceit and are developed in vanity it is the self-constituted reformer who goes about looking after the morals of other people and seeking to make them conform to his own standard. It is true there is nothing in the moral law nor in the Constitution that prevents a man going about asserting, in a mild, gentlemanly way, that he is more chaste than his neighbors. We all recognize the virtue of chastity, we respect it, and we would that all men—especially other men—were chaste; therefore we are patient with the modern Joseph so long as he is gentlemanly in his claims. But when such a remarkably chaste man gets vociferous and crowds, as it were, his chastity down our throats, when he goes further and seeks the aid of law, the indignation naturally is deep, widespread, and justifiable.

The law as laid down by St. Anthony is that in art or in nature for a human being to appear or be made to appear as God created him or her—especially her—is to commit a crime. According to this, we owe all our virtue to the tailor or dress maker, for our modesty depends on our clothes, and when we prepare for retirement at night or take a bath we hang our modesty on hooks and chairs.

This is not the law of moral eunuchs, but the vulgarity of brutal ignorance. Of course, there are men filled with evil thoughts at the sight of a woman's bare shoulders in a ball dress, but that is the crime of the man, not of the woman, and such a brute would have the same feeling at the shrine of a saint. The worst feature of this chaste fad is to be found in the insult it offers our women. They are treated as if they were an inferior class that had to be protected by eunuchs like Comstock, as the slaves of the East are. God help us if the virtue of our mothers and daughters depends on legal enactment and the asinine activity of Comstock! They were virtuous through generations before Comstock was born, and virtuous they will continue long after the animated nuisance is dead and forgotten.

WHEN SENDING money to this office, use money orders or bank drafts, but not personal checks, bank bills nor coins. We are constantly losing money in the mail from disregard of these directions. Sums under one dollar may be sent in postage stamps.

VARIOUS VOICES.

E. A. Magoon, New England, O.:—Two weeks ago I put a letter addressed to Lillian Harman in the post-office here, with one dollar inclosed for Lucifer, and eight two cent stamps for a few copies of "Lynch Law in Georgia." As I have received no acknowledgement from you, I fear you did not get the letter or money. I am delighted with the poetry in the last Lucifer, "The Rebels." I wish I had enough copies of it to make a general distribution. I read it to every one I get a chance to. If a house divided against itself cannot stand, how can a government stand that persists in creating an antagonistic feeling in its best subjects, as well as those of inferior grade? I cannot believe any intelligent, self respecting man will now enlist in the cruel war of subjugation or extermination of those whose only crime is love of native land and liberty. I like the position you take and may you live long to battle for liberty and freedom in general, as well as for women especially.

Henry R. Thayer, Savannah, Ga.:—I found a very strange quotation from Wheeler Wilcox, in a recent Lucifer. It was to the effect that it took two pairs of eyes to make a stare annoying. It appeared without comment, nor has any since appeared. I am very much surprised,—first, at finding it credited to that author, and next that you allowed it to pass uncriticised. Have you never been conscious of any one staring at you from behind? Have you never turned around to meet someone's gaze? Do you not believe in telepathy? Cannot one person obtrusively project his thoughts upon another? I know many girls who are frequently much annoyed by lascivious, lustful stares of male bipeds, creatures whose sex education is sadly neglected, and who think rude staring and mental comment on a girl can do her no injury. I know several young women who can "size up" a rake very speedily, and who are about as much annoyed by his silent presence as they would be by his unwelcome attentions. There are plenty of girls quite ready to meet the eyes, and return the smiles of the aforesaid young men, but it is not they who are annoyed by them. I do not know what the girls who are annoyed can do, except endure it.

Chas. Gano Baylor, Providence, R. I.:—I ask those readers of Lucifer who have preserved a file of the paper to look back and re-read my articles upon Imperialism. I was criticised for these articles at the time of their publication. Was I right or wrong in my forecast of coming events? Let each honest mind answer. I refer especially to my articles entitled "The End," "A Skeleton Unveiled," "America to Zola" and "Aguinaldo."

I now in bidding farewell to the Lucifer circle, desire to record the following predictions.

1. McKinley in order to escape from his Philippine disgrace, will transfer the Philippine Islands not to England but to Russia. This is the beginning of a pro-Russian party in the United States. It is a part of the evolution of American Federal Imperialism.

2. Russia will become protector of the ecclesiastical privileges and best property interests of the Roman Hierarchy in the Philippine Islands. This will cement the already formed secret alliance between the Czar Pope and the Latin Pope.

3. Within five years the French Republic will be overthrown and a Catholic Monarchy as the ally of Russia will take its place.

4. Within five years there will be war between papal-ruled America with its mighty navy and England. Russia being in the coalition against England.

Lillie D. White, 1035 N. Albany ave., Chicago,—The reformers who are inclined to worry about the population question, in my opinion, have more reason to fear that not enough children will be born, rather than too many. There are a great many women, and their number is increasing, who avail themselves of freedom from divine commands, and those of Paul, and profit by the teachings of Ingersoll, Harman, et al.

A large number of women are seeking financial independence by engaging in professions, in business, in various industries, in which occupations they have no time to have children, even if they were so inclined. Then there is a large class of fashionable, frivolous women who refuse to have children, not because they think any kind of philosophy, or ever heard of such teachings as Mr. Harman's; but they have acquired certain knowledge which they apply to the prevention of maternity, simply because babies would seriously interfere with their amusements, their pleasures, their personal beauty and attractiveness; as these are of first importance in their eyes, the maternal instinct is sacrificed, if they have any.

Another class, who may be students of Lucifer, refrain from having children because they do not have "favorable conditions," materially or morally and so they repress the mother love, which in many cases may be a sad sacrifice. The average age of persons at marriage is increasing. Neither men nor women are inclined to marry so young, there is a notable decrease in the size of families, and altogether the population restrictionists have good grounds for self-gratulations.

To be sure, the classes aforesaid are the farthest removed from the "ignorant, poor and vicious," but this is where education is most likely to take effect. It cannot reach the slums where child breeding is unrestrained from an intellectual standpoint, but at the rate we are going, they may prove a possibly needed reserve ground in the future.

But whatever the effect of woman's freedom on the population of the world I am most sincerely with Mr. Harman in advocating the freedom and self ownership of woman. I would not use force to compel the above mentioned classes of women to have children, any more than Mr. Ingersoll or Mr. Harman would use force to prevent the breeding of the unfit. Mrs. Holmes did not accuse Mr. Ingersol of advocating force, she only supposed a case, in the question of who is the unfit, a subject upon which there is much room for difference of opinion and discussion, in which Mrs. Holmes needs no assistance from me.

Albina L. Washburn, Ft. Collins, Colo.:—Enclosed find $1 for renewal and "Vital Force." Now don't stop my paper, but keep right on to my address and I'll pay sometime, somehow, or my executors will; taking for granted that some of the readers of Lucifer must be executed for being ahead of the times. Since Helen Wilmans has given us all a new lease of life and tells us we may live forever if we live in accord with Nature's arrangements, I propose to join that "innumerable throng which moves" not to the "pale realms of shade" but right along in the sunlight, taking and giving all the happiness possible. During seven snowy months in Denver, beginning last November, I attended many meetings of advanced thinkers called by the various names Socialistic, Populistic, philosophic, scientific,—women's clubs, truth seekers, and spiritualists, all, as it seemed to me, tending toward one point—unity. The anarchists and Luciferites are scattered about among all these, some of whom never saw Lucifer or any paper devoted to stirpiculture, or "Free Society" or any anarchistic organ. True, some scientists, revolting against orthodoxy and superstition, are still dead set against anarchists, who also revolt against orthodoxy and superstition, adding—government of man by man. The former yet clinging to "law'n order" thro' government, not having examined the failures of government. Anarchists on the other hand may be found who repudiating government of man by man, orthodoxy, ancient dogmas, hastily throw the "whole business" of mental science, healing, occultism, spiritism, telepathy and all other isms not to be felt, seen or heard through physical powers, into the waste basket of their ignorance secure that they are in the right. Yet there are always a few in the general van who may be met at all meetings,—who know that all is good—they are seeking truth and sympathy. They are tolerant of all adverse opinions, sure that opinions, like coats may be changed and leave the man intact, still wearing a coat; knowing full well it is only the point of view and not falseness which makes diversity. They need to get acquainted. The Universal Brotherhood who study and try to practice theosophy or the wisdom religion receive all of any nation or belief so that they but accept the idea of Universal Brotherhood and strive to live accordingly.

Karma, the theory of cause and effect teaches that what we sow we shall reap and that repeated incarnations into the earth life must be had to perfect a soul ere it is ready to enter Nirvana or the All Good.

Lodge 214, which I joined, is a jolly set of serious students, if you can reconcile these words, they discuss the most profound problems of human existence yet sing, play, dance and live in the sunshine of the All Good, in simple love to one another

It fell to my lot to introduce into their midst a live, confessed anarchist who smilingly declared her individual freedom from all laws but nature's, yet offered to have her pockets searched for bombs,—a curious and to them unknown creature who nevertheless under the law of Universal Brotherhood was made welcome and happy. It was my intention and desire to call together the readers of Lucifer whom I found among the most intelligent people, but being without money or influence in the direction of public hall, no meetings were called. It seemed probable that there was not quite enough moral courage among those I met, to publicly discuss the sex question, no matter how thoroughly convinced they were of the need of such discussion. However it is rapidly coming to be recognized as one which must claim soon the attention of all who desire good to the whole race. Social questions involve those of family and health morals and rights, labor and money, so the people are learning and will rise to the occasion.

773.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

Special Offer!

Following is a list of valuable books which we will sell during August and September at just one half the regular publisher's price if ordered in lots amounting to one dollar or more. This unusually liberal offer is made because receipts of the office are always lower in the summer than at any other time of the year. The books could not be sold for these prices if it were not for the fact that many of them have been donated to Lucifer by generous friends to aid in its work of education. Pick out the books you want in the list below to the amount of two dollars and send us just ONE HALF the price marked and the books will be sent to you promptly, free of postage.

Ideala. By Sarah Grand. This is the story of a woman too thoughtful, too honest, too true for the conventional "middle class" English society in which she lived. Her life story furnishes much food for thought for those who like to study the facts of life when disguised as fiction. Handsomely bound in cloth. 195 pages. .40

The Story of an African Farm. Olive Schreiner's masterpiece. Chapter titles: Part I. Shadows from childlife; Plans and Bushman paintings; I was a stranger and ye took me in; Blessed is he that believeth; Sunday services; Bonaparte Blenkins makes his nest; He sets his trap; He catches the Old Bird; He sees a ghost; He shows his teeth; He snaps; He bites; He makes love. Part II: Times and seasons; Waldo's stranger; Gregory Rose finds his affinity; Lyndall, Tant' Sannie holds an upsitting and Gregory writes a letter; A Boer wedding; Waldo goes out to taste life, and Em stays at home and tastes it; The "Kopje"; Lyndall's stranger; Gregory Rose has an idea; An unfinished letter; Gregory's womanhood; Dreams; Waldo goes out to sit in the sunshine. Bound in cloth. 398 pages. .40

Our New Humanity, No. II. Part of the contents: The Prodigal Daughter, or the Price of Virtue, by Rachel Campbell; Pioneer Chips. Extracts from the private letters of Rachel Campbell, by M. Florence Johnson; Marriage, What It Was and Is—Will the coming woman marry? By "X." (M. Harman); Reminiscences of the Long Ago, II., III. and IV. By Lucy N. Colman; The Ascent of Life, by Moses Harman; Legal Wifehood, by Lucinda B. Chandler; Whose is the Child? by Lex; Tombstone Texts. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. III. Part of the contents: The Unwomanly Woman, by Lizzie M. Holmes; That Great Fraud Yclept Society, by Moses Hull—with comments by his daughter, M. Florence Johnson; Normal Sexual Action, by Ernest Winne; Evolution of Familism, by Albert Chavannes; Virgin Soil, (story); Love in Liberty, by J. Wm. Lloyd; Reminiscences of the Long Ago, V., VI., by Lucy N. Colman; At What Age? 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. IV. Contents: The Abolition of Marriage, by John Beverly Robinson; Isabel's Intention, (story) by Mariette; Reminiscences of Berlin Heights, by A. Warren; The Sexes and Love in Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; A Woman-Child, by J. Wm. Lloyd; Burmese Women; The Great Conflict, by James P. Morton, Jr.; "The Truth About Love," by Moses Harman; Reminiscences—Then and Now, by Moses Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. V. Contents: Priestly Celibacy, by A. L. Rawson; Sex Love Analytically Defined, by Ernest Winne; The Other Side, by May Clifford Hurd; The Incoherence of Transition, by E. C. Walker; The Greatest Sin, (an allegory,) by R. B. Kerr; Our New Savior—the Surgeon, by C. T. Brown; Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; To Man, (poem) by Charlotte Perkins Stetson; Motherhood in Freedom, by M. Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. VI. Contents: Woman's Primal Right, by Francis Barry; The Curse of Maternity, From the French of Henry Fevre; How to Escape the Curse, by Jonathan Mayo Crane: Can Marriage be Abolished? by Albert Chavannes; Woman's "Duty" to Bear Children, by E. C. Walker; Love's Law, by William Francis Barnard; The Freedom Not to Do, by C. L. Swartz; True and False Morality, by C. L. James; Wanted: A New Adam; A Brood Mare, (poem) by Charlotte Perkins Stetson; Life, Health and Longevity, by Moses Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. VII. Contents. The Rights of Children, by R. B. Kerr; Incineration, by Walter Breen; What Are Women Here For? by E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.; What the Young Need to Know—A Primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker; The New Martyrdom, by Lillian Harman; The Will, (story, from the French of Guy de Maupassant; A Free Man's Creed, by Moses Harman. .25

Leaflets by Austin Kent. Conjugal Love, the True and False; A Letter to a Magdalene; My Creed, or What I Believe and What I Know; An Open Letter to Andrew Jackson Davis, or, What I Call Conjugal Love; A Letter to My Atheistical Bretheren. Each, 3 cents; the lot, .12

A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers, by Henry D. Thoreau. Bound in cloth; 356 pages. .40

Ruled by the Tomb; A Discussion of Free Thought and Free Love, by Orford Northcote. .10

The Dawn of Civilization; or, England in the Nineteenth Century, by J. C. Spence. With portrait of author. 190 pages. .25

What the Young Need to Know,—A Primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. .10

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY. Co-educational. Send for catalog. A. E. Gammage, President. 167 Dearborn St., Chicago.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.
"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.
"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.
Sample pages free. Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

Free Love; A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of connubial love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 187-, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence. 140 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

LOVE AND THE LAW. By E. C. Walker. A clear, concise statement of social liberty in contradistinction to the much lauded legal bondage now almost universally upheld. An excellent missionary document. Two copies, 5 cents; 20 cents per dozen.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

Price 5 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 31. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, AUGUST 25, E. M. 299. [C. E 1899.] WHOLE No. 774.

Genius.

Far out at sea—the sun was high,
While veered the wind and flapped the sail;
We saw a snow-white butterfly
Dancing before the fitful gale
Far out at sea.

The little wanderer, who had lost
His way, of danger nothing knew;
Settled awhile upon the mast,
Then fluttered o'er the waters blue
Far out at sea.

Above, there gleamed the boundless sky;
Beneath the boundless ocean sheen;
Between them danced the butterfly,
The spirit life of this vast scene,
Far out at sea.

The tiny soul that soared away
Seeking the clouds on fragile wings,
Lured by the brighter, purer ray
Which hope's ecstatic morning brings—
Far out at sea.

Away he sped, a shimmering glee,
Scarce seen, now lost, yet onward borne!
Night comes with wind and rain, and he
No more will dance before the morn,
Far out at sea.

He dies, unlike his mates, I ween,
Perhaps not sooner, or worse crossed,
And he hath felt and known and seen
A larger life and hope, though lost
Far out at sea.

—Richard Hengist Horne.

What Sometimes Becomes of the Children.

BY M. FLORENCE JOHNSON.

It is well that Lucifer occasionally calls attention to the fact that sometimes children are neglected when their parents are married. The Boston "Journal" of July 22 prints an account of the death of R. G. Ingersoll and a short sketch of his life. It says:

"His address at the theater was very sensational, . . . and received a great deal of attention. In his peroration he devoted himself to the question of the improvement of the race, saying: "There is but one hope. Ignorance, poverty and vice must stop populating the world. This cannot be done by moral suasion. This cannot be done by talk or example. This cannot be done by religion or law—by priest or hangman. This cannot be done by force, physical or moral. To accomplish this there is but one way. Science must make woman the owner, the mistress of herself. Science, the only possible savior of mankind, must put it in the power of woman to decide for herself whether she will or will not become a mother.

"This is the solution of the whole question. This frees woman. The babes that are then born will be welcome. They will fill homes with light and joy."

Just what there is sensational I do not see. I think it good common sense. The same paper prints this account. In the headlines the case is called "pitiful" but nothing is said about its being sensational:

"A call from a signal box on Northampton Street was sent to Station 5 about 6 o'clock last night by Patrolman Brett, and the patrol wagon responded. It was not prisoners that the wagon received when it stopped at the box, but three shabbily dressed, pale-faced children. They had been found on the sidewalk, thrown out of the home by an irate landlord.

"As the ever hurrying wagon was about to turn away from the box a call was received over the telephone from the station to stop at another box on the way back. The black covered vehicle was turned in that direction, and a man, maudlin drunk, so overcome as to be almost senseless, was tumbled in on the seat opposite the three mites of children.

The elder, a girl of twelve years, gazed open eyed at the spectacle and then her little lip quivered and the tears which she bravely tried to restrain rolled down the pale cheek. The next child, a boy of four, also looked and wondered. And the baby girl in the oldest child's arms slumbered and said nothing. But the eyes of the other two had seen in the semi-conscious man on the other side the form of their father. And thus they were all taken to the station, the children to receive the care of the city, the father to occupy a cell.

"Some time later when it was all over a woman walked into the station and in a choking voice inquired what had been done with the children. She was told they had gone to the Chardon Street Home. She was asked what she was to them, and said she was the mother. Then she was told that her husband was in a cell and likely to be sent away in the morning.

"With the two burdens in her heart the wife and mother left the station with the tears falling fast and unchecked down her wasted cheeks.

A sad life has been the portion of that family of five. According to all reports the father, a laborer, and capable of earning fair pay, spent most of his time in a saloon. The lot of the mother and children became worse and worse until at last, they occupied two small rooms at 108 Northampton sreet. They stayed until the rent of each month was still unpaid and the landlord said they must go.

"Yesterday afternoon a constable was sent to the house. The father was not at home; he was in his usual idling place. Piece by piece, and they were not many, the constable, an expert in evictions, piled the articles of household furniture in the street. A sorry pile it made, the remnant of what had once been a substantial household outfit.

"The mother left the eldest of the children with the furniture while she went to hunt some place where they might go and spend the night. She was gone some time, but the faithful little miss of 12 remained on guard, her blue eyes flashing defiance at the looks of curiosity cast by rude passers.

"The baby, only a year old, became fretful and the child walked it to sleep. The little boy of four amused himself for a while until he became sleepy, then he climbed on a broken chair and fell asleep. Eventually, worn out with her vigil, the brave little girl sat down with the baby in her arms, and the blue eyes nodded through the tears. It was thus that the kindly patrolman found them and secured a place for them to sleep in peace.

"A police lantern marked the place where the household goods still remained in the street last night. The children were cared for at the home. In his cell the father slept a drunken sleep ready to be dragged into court this morning. It is probable that somewhere in the city a broken-hearted mother laid her head on some hard wood bench and slept a troubled sleep under the stars, until, disturbed by the ever-vigilant police officer, she was compelled to move on, to keep moving and wait for the renewed trouble the day would bring."

Had Science made this woman the owner, the mistress of herself it is not probable that she would be inquiring in a choking voice what had been done with her children. I should think sensations of joy would fill the hearts of all those who read that there is a possibility for some relief for such women and children. What must we think of society when such scenes are so common that they cause no commotion, and a suggested remedy causes "great sensation." Government can take such children to the alms house, the father to prison, and drive the "heart broken mother" from her resting place on some hard wood bench, and imprison those who would teach her how to save herself from a repetition of the experience.

"Sensational" to think of "all the babies born being welcome"! "Sensational" to think of all children "filling homes with joy"!

The papers are full of such accounts, children abused, neglected, uncared for, not one child mentioned among all the abused infantile world of whom it is said, it was a child born of the desire of a free woman and a free man. Such children are well cared for, yet those who plead for freedom are asked, "what will become of your children?" We will take care of them if the government will permit us to do so.

The Character of a Free Lover.

BY C. L. JAMES.

That men may be provided with wives, the less amorous sex must be taught no means of support but catching husbands. That girls may be attractive, they must be green. Add to all this, the cruelty with which the error of a girl is punished, and the leniency with which the licentiousness of a youth is treated; and judge whether the ruin of young women through indiscretion is made rarer or more common through what was lately the orthodox mode of education! As to the irregularities of mature women, it will be time to inquire whether the doctrine of free love tends to make them either more common or more pernicious when some one offers a little proof that the existing social rules have any tendency whatever to make them less so.

Such proof, if it exists, ought to be obtainable. A statistical demonstration that known adultery is less common in an otherwise similar community where these laws are strict than where they are lax—in Ireland, for instance, than in England, in Clapham than in London, among the middle class of any European country than the peasantry—would really be to the point!

The question remains whether the theory of free love tends to damage the morals of young men—a matter on which Mr. Arnold's solicitude has in it something rather amusing. The quotation from Proverbs is evidently his favorite. But surely if the great revelation of "Israel" be only or principally this, that there is peril in what quack doctors call "youthful indiscretions," we need no "Israel" to tell us so. Every pagan philosopher knew that as well as Solomon; and Lord Chesterfield's letters to his son, though justly blamed for laxity of principle, are actually better adapted to the purpose of keeping a young man moderately straight than the book of Proverbs is. For the lesson of mere selfish caution is best conveyed in the language of mere common sense. The boy could scarcely say that Chesterfield exaggerates. He might find some ground for saying that the author of the Book of Proverbs does. The free lover, however, may very safely offer his own doctrine for comparison with either of theirs. He says that to tempt "from misery the caress of love" is the crime of a coward and a scoundrel! That is "morality touched with emotion." To say that "the dead are there; and her guests are in the depths of hell," is very much like saying that tobacco causes diseases of the heart, that sugar spoils the teeth, or that there is a black man in the wood who eats up truant children. The pupil has no difficulty in seeing that such warnings are fantastic; and accordingly he estimates them at even less than their real value.

But prudence is not the only virtue which requires that the sexual passion should be controlled. The spirit of "the Seventh Commandment" certainly requires that it shall be kept within the limits of justice. And here the free lover can enjoy a renewed assurance that his doctrine is far more satisfactory than the letter of the Seventh Commandment. Nothing, certainly, can be more unjust than that a woman should be required to gratify a man against her present inclinations, even if she were at some previous time foolish enough to promise that she would always do so on demand. No consideration can make such a contract equitable. It is immoral and ought to be void. Now the mere letter of the Seventh Commandment in no way conflicts with this injustice. Neither, as above intimated, do the common and statutory laws assumed to be framed in conformity with the Seventh Commandment. The literature of this subject is voluminous and most repulsive. Much of it may, as above hinted, be found in those portions of the canon law which treat on sexual topics, and which have been pronounced the most disgusting publications in the world. Enough to sicken any one capable of comprehending what is meant by decency, and rouse to fury whoever could be excited by the atrocities of the Sioux or the "Ever Victorious" Chinese, may be found in the chapter on Cruelty, in Bishop's "Marriage and Divorce." And further than this I will not expose these horrors now.

Let it not be imagined that I mean a word of censure for those gallant free lovers, the Heywoods, Marklands, Harmans, et al., who have repeatedly braved imprisonment for the purpose of making known the outrages sanctioned by priestcraft and jurisprudence. I could not intend that without condemning myself; for I have been active enough in directing attention to these themes, and frequently sore at being able to do so little. Often when I have put beside each other some specially revolting case, and a judicial decision to the effect that men may commit such acts without even the penalty of being required to furnish the victim a separate maintenance, but under terror of the criminal law we must abstain from characterizing them, have I been ready to exclaim:

> "No, no! I will not, having breath to cry;
> Oh that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth;
> Then, with passion, would I shake the world,
> And rouse from sleep the fell anatomy
> Who cannot hear a lady's feeble voice,
> And scorns a modern invocation."

I touch lightly the strongest part of my case because this time my purpose, with which Mr. Arnold would have sympathized, is to persuade and not to batter. But if those who have imprisoned free lovers for telling the truth are in any degree justified when they call such exposures "obscene literature;" if they may quote with any appearance of honesty the old Latin maxim that crimes should be exposed for the sake of punishment but enormities swept away without exposure; this is the condemnation of their system, and indicates the free lovers' logic, whatever may be thought of his taste. The "Flagitia" which they call it obscene to publish, are direct consequences of the legal maxim that the husband has a right to exact obedience from the wife; and a law which authorizes doing what is too vile to be mentioned, even for the purpose of showing how vile it is, must certainly be a very wicked law.

Thanks to the courage of free lovers in exposing its evils, notwithstanding the protection given them by their hypocritical anxiety to stifle whatever knowledge might bring a "blush to the cheek of a young person," these evils have come to be so generally known that a considerable agitation against them is being carried on by people who do not profess to be free lovers. There are now numerous books, designed, as their prefaces inform us, for married persons, and published with the endorsement of orthodox ministers, physicians, jurists, and censors of morals; in which, after the usual liberal denunciation of free love this part of the free love method is adopted. Need I mention among the authors of such publications, another name than that of Dio Lewis? But it seems to me that these well meaning writers overlook a truth of vital importance, which the free lover remembers. The abuse they agree with him in condemning, is an essential part of the marriage system.

The Catholic casuists, as already intimated, anticipated them in praising the system while trying to purge it from its inherent blemishes. These casuists were confessors, well acquainted with human passion. They never would have said as the cool Melancthon said, if a woman could no longer bear children with safety, her duty was simply to die. They teach that it is her husband's duty to consult her health and feelings. But they also teach that to withhold what they call the marriage debt is inconsistent with the design and security of marriage; which simply proves that they knew mankind better than the cautious hygienists who are now trying to adopt the restraints of free love while trying to shirk the odium involved in giving it its name.

We are not at present considering the ethics of marriage and free love from the standpoint of prudence; which has been disposed of; nor from modesty, which is to come; but from that of justice. The theory of marriage, so far as it touches the instinct that every quid requires a quo, is this, Man finds it is not good for him to be alone. As he needs a companion, so the woman needs a protector. A contract for an uncertain period is so dangerous to her that parents would not usually allow their daughter to make it. As it also involves a probability that she and her children may become public charges, society refuses to tolerate it. The contract must be for life. Gross misconduct either discharges from it absolutely, as in other cases of forfeiture, or imposes on the offender new obligations with diminished benefits. Supposing it to hold, the man must support the woman, if she needs it, respect her right of dower if she has any. That he may have his quid pro quo she must obey him. And by a gruesome irony, it is, or was, provided that the party usually least inclined to exact "conjugal duty" may do so as well as the other.

Never mind the mercenary aspects of this bargain and sale theory just at present. We are discussing only equity as a business transaction now. Well, without professing that unfounded optimism which assumes that every institution, from cannibalism upwards through slavery, must needs have been altogether lovely in its season I may admit that one which has stood so long must have embodied about as much justice as mankind, during a great part of history and over a huge portion of the earth, were generally ready to demand or concede. But the same may be said of slavery or any thing else. That a woman should be legally required upon any consideration to prostitute herself, is against the sense of justice as developed now. If she chooses to make a voluntary bargain of that sort, it should, like any immoral contract, be without force and capable of repudiation without liability.

So it follows that the theory of free love is incompatible with all those peculiar obligations involved in the relation of marriage. The wife owes no duty to the husband, and it follows, as you have not failed to perceive, that he owes none to her. The idea of fidelity, in both parties, is founded upon that of service, and disappears with it, no doubt.

I am not careful to justify myself. I supposed all along that that was understood; and have been at pains only to explain the reason, because this, I thought, was misinterpreted. To that clamor which any proposed change always excites, merely because mankind, being improved monkeys, are governed chiefly by the imitative instinct, my reply shall be Fiat justitia ruat coelum! There's "morality touched with emotion" for you!

To be continued.

Does It "Take Two Pairs of Eyes to Make a Stare Annoying"?

BY MABEL FLEMING.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox asserts that it does; but in Lucifer No. 773 Henry R. Thayer takes exception to her statement. Literally the assertion may not be strictly true; but I maintain that we need to gain control of "the eye of the mind" as well as of the eye of the body. If a man rudely stares at a girl she may involuntarily glance toward him, but she need not continue looking at him. Just so, though she may feel the indefinable sensation which makes her conscious of the offensive regard of a man, I am sure that she may, and should, be able, not only seemingly but actually to ignore it.

Probably Mr. Thayer is more of a mental scientist than I am; but if so he should even more than I uphold the ideal of mental poise and power which we should strive to realize. So long as a woman is mentally in the condition that she cannot avoid suffering because of every rude stare, every "insulting" remark, she is just to that degree in the power, and at the mercy of every man she meets! How much innocent pleasure women have missed because they feared to go alone to theaters, meetings, and on solitary walks! How weak and dependent, how lacking in self-poise, is nearly every woman! Her activities and pleasures are restricted more by custom than by law. She dare not go any place to which it is unusual for a woman to go alone, and this not because it is against the law but contrary to custom.

I can sympathize with and understand the annoyance of the girls of whom Mr. Thayer writes. I have been very sensitive to the stares and comments of both men and women; but I found it "didn't pay" to permit myself to remain in such a negative condition. Either the looks and words were intentionally offensive, or they were not. If offense was not intended, I was very foolish if I felt insulted; while if an insult were intended I was equally foolish to permit the person to attain his or her object. So I made a "declaration of independence" to myself. I said, "I will not allow myself to be at the mercy of every corner loafer who chooses to look at or speak to me. If I want to go to and meeting, or theater, or restaurant, or park, at any hour of the day or night, I shall go, if convenient, and I will not remain away merely because there is no one to accompany me. I shall go, quietly, unconcernedly, as if there could be no question of the propriety of my action. If any one looks at or speaks to me in an impertinent manner, I shall be blind and deaf and dumb so far as that person is concerned. I shall go with the consciousness that I am in the right, and if any one is in the wrong, it is the person who thinks I am not acting as a self-reliant, self respecting individual should act.

Possibly Mr. Thayer is not aware of it, but the all-inclusive stare which the consciously well-dressed woman often gives her shabbily dressed sister is quite as exasperating as that of the corner loafer—if the victim permits it to be so. If we allow ourselves to be weak and cowardly we shall always live in a state of dread—we, grown women, will venture on the street tremblingly, timorously, like the child who fears the dark. I do not believe that ALL is mind; but I do believe that with a strong will and intelligent self-respect we may become invulnerable to more than half the ills which we have been taught to believe inevitable.

In this sense, it may be true that "it takes two pairs of eyes [and two minds] to make a stare annoying." This is by no means an excuse for the corner loafer. He is to be pitied; but it is not necessary to condemn him, for his attitude toward women brings its own punishment. He may attract to himself the weak women who are unfortunate enough to be purchasable; the woman who is capable of feeling strong, helpful love for a man is simply repelled by one of his type. In freedom he will be gradually eliminated by evolution—by "natural selection."

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, B. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

THE EDITOR is now at the Spiritualist campmeeting at Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa. Personal letters may be addressed to him at that place until August 18. He is looking well, and when he does not overtax his strength, usually feels well.

Ingersoll's Memorial Meeting.

Of all the memorial exercises I ever attended, the meeting held in honor of the life and character of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, at Studebaker Hall, Chicago, on Sunday August 6, was the most successful, the most memorable. Although most of the speakers professed belief in the continuity of life, after the death change, their praises of the "Great Agnostic," and of his life work were expressed in language of the highest eulogy that it has ever been my lot to hear.

The large hall was well filled, the numbers present being variously estimated at from fifteen hundred to three thousand, the latter the more probable figure.

The following paragraphs from the Monday morning "Chronicle," of this city gives a very fair general statement of the speeches and of their reception by the large audience.

"Orators and public men yesterday afternoon discoursed on the life and work of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll before a mass meeting at Studebaker hall in honor of the dead agnostic's memory. Ingersoll's life was eulogized for four hours by representatives of various elements. His probity of character and his devotion to human liberty were dwelt on as the dominant traits for which the noted orator will be remembered longest. Nearly all the speakers pronounced his fame secure and one man even said that 'temples will be built to him and his image will be worshiped when all gods and religions now known on earth will be forgotten'

"This invasion of the domain of prophecy was made by Chairman Cratty and the sentiment elicited a storm of applause. Every allusion to what the future had in store by way of progress and development for the views of the agnostic leader seemed to touch the audience as with an electric force and arouse their enthusiasm.

"At dramatic moments women vied with men in shouting approval and delight. Several women in the boxes and orchestra tiers grew faint and were led into the open air by friends. One woman swooned outright in her chair in the front orchestra row. Her joy had been changed into distress and pain just as a leading speaker's eloquence soared to its loftiest heights. She was given the assistance of fans and water, the proceedings being arrested only for a moment. The woman soon revived, but could not be persuaded to withdraw and she pluckily sat out the proceedings that to her were so vitally interesting. Demonstrations of deep grief for the great iconoclast's death were frequent and more than once were sealed with tears. Even the speakers were moved beyond the custom of orators, Colonel Davidson and Clark E. Carr being visibly affected. Few eyes were dry when speaker after speaker spoke touchingly of the tender devotion evinced above Ingersoll's dark-robed catafalque by his wife and daughters."

One of the most eloquent of the speakers was C. Porter Johnson who begun his address by saying:

"As an earnest believer in the divinity of Jesus Christ I come to pay my humble tribute to the memory of one who, while rejecting the dogmas of the material church, was during every hour of his magnificent life an inspired believer in the universal brotherhood of man. In that sublime belief we gather here to render homage to the dead yet potent priest of human weal, for he whose lips grew strangely still while breathing words of cheer is yet before us speaking the universal language of the sons of men who count the life and love the sum and goal of sentient things." and closed his magnificently eloquent tribute by saying:

"If he sometimes found fault with theories and dogmas made by men it was because he loved men more than creed. With him the publican was given the place of honor at the banquet, the pharisee was laughed to scorn. He had no patience with the things about which learned doctors disagree, but for the passions and the pains, the laughter and tears of his poor brother he ever had a listening ear. Out of a dark and dreary night of time will shine like a brilliant star the bright soul of Robert G. Ingersoll to illumine a conspicuous page. Ingersoll, matchless Ingersoll! thy name is written in the love of man, upon the imperishable scroll of time."

Prominent among the speakers was Clarence S. Darrow one of the best known and most influential of Chicago's lawyers and politicians of the reform school. We should be glad to report his eloquent tribute, and also that of others, but space fails.

Altogether the friends of the champion of mental and civil liberty have much reason for congratulation over the result of their efforts to honor the memory of one of America's most famous citizens.

M. HARMAN.

Justice, Duty and Gifts.

In reply to my remarks on "Free Trade" in Lucifer of July 22, Mr. Harman asks if I am answered. Yes, strictly, for he has told what he considers to be the manner in which the man of the future will divide his earnings with the women; namely, by gift. But this is very disappointing as I had hoped that Mr. Harman had in reserve some application of freedom that could be made before the millennium. It will be a long time before "the men of the future will see," in the words of Mr. Harman, "the justice of dividing their earnings with the women of the future; without hope or expectation of reward other than the satisfaction of having borne a manly share of life's burdens." I for one can not now see the justice in it, nor do I believe duty requires a man to present gifts to women. Satisfaction plays an important part in the determination of this question. If men find greater satisfaction in supporting women than in withholding such support, the problem is solved; but humanity has not yet reached the point where the satisfaction of bearing a manly share in life's burdens is great enough to induce men to support women without any other reward.

Possibly the editor does not mean to depend alone upon the sense of justice and the sense of duty to impel men to support women. Perhaps he regards love as a force strong enough to cause men to provide for women and children, for he speaks of it as a "ruling force," "the love that gets its highest satisfaction in giving to others without thought of other reward than the giving itself bestows." But this is Utopian again, for how many examples in the sexual domain can be adduce of persons who freely give and sacrifice without a thought of receiving? And then also love grows cold. And, further, Mr. Harman assumes near the beginning of his article that woman is the selector (lover), while the man is the selected (loved.) Love will not prompt a man to support when he is only the loved, not the lover.

I am inclined to ask the editor a further question. Waiving the inquiry whether gift is a just and practicable solution for society composed of perfect individuals, what means would he depend on to constrain the males to participate in furnishing support for women and children so long as men are imperfect or remain unwilling to bestow gifts without hope or reward? Law and taxation are ruled out entirely as neither the editor nor his questioner has the slightest confidence in these agencies.

EDGAR D. BRINKERHOFF.

REPLY.

The above comments of Friend Brinkerhoff remind me, once more, of the great and continual need of care in the use of words, as vehicles of ideas. Both he and I have probably used the words "gift" and "giving" somewhat loosely. The usual meaning attached to these words is that of conferring favors for which no equivalent is returned, or expected to be returned. This, it will easily be seen, is a very inadequate definition.

When man gives his labor and his time in providing a home to live in, and food for the sustenance of women and children, he does not and should not give that for which no equivalent is given. Woman, as race-builder and home-maker, gives her equivalent, but it is an equivalent that cannot be measured or estimated in dollars and cents—cannot or should not be reckoned an equivalent in the commercial sense—should not be made a merchantable or purchasable commodity.

It is largely because woman's equivalent, woman's work, in race-building and home-making, has been considered a merchantable, a purchasable commodity that we find our world filled with inequality, with robbery, invasion, murder, poverty and suffering, today.

In last week's Lucifer a quotation was made from "Women and Economics," in which Mrs. Stetson very clearly shows that the position of woman in sexuo-economics is that of the "savage in the forest." It is each for herself and against all others, and especially against the "scab" competitor who offers herself —"her only economic goods"—for a less price than support for life.

As shown by Mrs. Stetson, and as seen by every thoughtful observer, while in many lines of life the race has advanced to more humane methods or planes of thought and action, in sexuo-economics the genus homo is still on the brutal, the savage plane. The "family" is organized not on the plan or plane of co-operative fraternalism but on that of monopolistic individualism—with the added element of commercialism, or of putting everything, even woman's reproductive or creative powers, upon a merchantable or mercenary basis.

The family, the home, is built on feudalistic principles, not on cosmopolitan or humanitarian principles, and yet we wonder that all governments are today feudalistic, predatory, invasive, cruel, brutal, inhuman, instead of just, fraternal, co-operative, and humane.

Consider, for a moment, the natural results, the necessary and inevitable outgrowths of this feudalistic, monopolistic sexuo-economic system now popular in all parts of the world, upheld by statutory enactments and enforced by severe penalties.

On the theory that woman needs protection, needs support, needs a home wherein she can properly care for her children man-made laws have been enacted to secure these to women and children. Knowing that, as Friend Brinkerhoff says, "love grows cold" and that "love will not prompt a man to support when he is only the loved and not the lover," human lawgivers have tried to fix it so that when a man associates with a woman sexually he shall be obliged to support her, and the children that may result from such association. But knowing the selfishness of man's nature these law-makers have put marriage on a commercial basis instead of on a basis of love and mutual attraction, by giving to man the exclusive ownership,—the monopoly—of at least one woman, and the exclusive ownership of that woman's children. In Mohammedan countries the number of legal wives is limited to four, if I remember rightly. In a few Christian countries such as Utah before it became a state, Abyssinia, etc., there is, or was, no limit to the number of women a man may legally undertake to protect and support.

Since the woman in this case marries for support, and for the support of her children, she very naturally wants to make the most of her bargain. Hence the ever-present jealousy lest some other woman should get a share of her husband's money, or that some other woman's children should get provided for at the expense of her own children.

The same feeling in regard to the children, though in lesser degree, perhaps, controls the husband and father. As the child of his legal wife—the only child, or children, he can acknowledge as his—he seeks to secure to that child, or children, the wealth that he will be obliged to leave behind him when he dies. The abnormal development of acquisitiveness, which is otherwise condemned as stinginess and miserliness, becomes a virtue of high order, in the popular mind, when directed towards accumulating a fortune for the benefit of children.

Behold, then, the underlying cause, the chief raison d'etre of the monopolies, the enormous fortunes in the hands of a few individuals, and the consequent impoverishment of the many. It has its main source in the laws and customs relating to the support of women and children by men. If left to natural affection alone,—if there were no laws of entailment of property, we should have no such spectacle today as that of W. W. Astor, the man who has abjured allegiance to the land of his birth, because not sufficiently aristocratic, but yet who draws his six millions of dollars a year to spend in selfish extravagance abroad, money obtained by robbing tens of thousands of women and children in New York City, of their hard earnings, through rents upon the wretched hovels in which these poor people must live or be turned shelterless into the streets.

Other illustrations showing the natural results of the narrowly selfish, monopolistic basis of familism bequeathed to us from our savage ancestors, may be found in the family feuds of Kentucky, Tennessee and other American States—feuds originating commonly in disputes over the division of land or other matters in which the interests of children are the leading factors —feuds bequeathed from generation to generation and often resulting in murders or assassinations.

Our friend has no confidence in "law or taxation" as a means to constrain the males to participate in furnishing support for women and children. What then would he have? If he can trust neither to love nor to law, what is there left upon which to rely for justice? Law represents physical force,—unemotional force. Love represents the emotional, the psychic, the spiritual forces of life; the unselfish, the altruistic, the spontaneously co-operative forces of life. Between these two forces, or classes of forces, there can be nothing in common. They are mutually antagonistic, mutually destructive. When law enters love dies or takes its flight. Where love reigns law is ignored, eliminated. It ceases to exist as a ruling force.

As to the direct question asked, I would say, in brief, that woman has the remedy in her own hands, whenever she chooses to apply it. Let her refrain from motherhood until the support of her child is assured by provisions that do not depend upon the continued love or the continued financial ability of her masculine co-operator or co-operators.

Other points I should like to enlarge upon. I should like to call attention to the ideal homes, and the ideal family arrangements, described in "Cityless and Countryless World," "Hilda's Home," and other books of recent publication, but time and space fail for this issue. I close by quoting the well known lines.

> "If men relied on love to guide
> The world would be the better for it."

To which I would add a paraphrase upon another noted aphorism.

> "For ever in thine eyes, O Love!
> Shines that bright light by which we may be saved."

OUR READERS and patrons, everywhere, are hereby again requested not to forget to send us names of their friends and acquaintances who might become interested in Lucifer and its work, if they could see a few sample copies. Upon this plan, more than any other, we now depend for increase of subscription list, and for advertising the books and pamphlets that supplement and extend the work of the paper itself.

The Gatling Gun Case.

BY ED. W. CHAMBERLAIN.

In proportion as the licentious censorship of the press grows more aggressive resistance thereto becomes more imperative for while there is more general apprehension than ever before concerning the threatened destruction of constitutional liberty implied in prosecutions for the expression of unpopular opinions or for the employing of unconventional language partisan revenge still seizes opportunities of harassing its opponents by setting the censorship at work to convict them. Thus the censorship is kept alive mainly to gratify the envy, hatred and malice of the meanest of earth's creatures.

The latest case is that of Walter Hurt, editor of "The Gatling Gun," of Cleveland, Ohio, who in his July issue tells of his situation in the following language:

"There having been no new developments during the last month in the case against me in the United States court, there is little to be said in this connection. It is improbable that any further action of importance will be taken until court convenes in September. There will be a fight for the preservation of constitutional prerogatives, such as this country has never seen. Should I be convicted in the district court, the battle will then have only begun. Every step in the case will be stubbornly contested. It will be a fight for the principle of freedom against the power of force. It will be the struggle of a sovereign citizen, backed by public sentiment, against official oppression and political persecution. And it will be a fight to the finish. There will be no temporizing with the tyrants. Yes, it will be a bitter battle and a costly one, but it can end only in a triumph for truth. We shall find whether or not the constitution of our country is regnant over a set of cheap rascals clothed in the panoply of brief power. I shall not be satisfied for the struggle to end until the infamous Comstock law has been wiped from the statutes. Come conviction or acquittal, come victory or defeat, while life shall last will I be tireless in my labors for the liberty of the press, for freedom of speech and for a censorless mail."

Many Fools; One Hero.

BY F. A. COWELL.

Press dispatches from Kansas say several girls' clubs in that state have resolved that the members will not marry any man who stayed at home during the war; they vow to remain single all their lives if they can't get a cutthroat for a husband. This might be a sign of sex-reform—but it isn't. I don't wonder Lucifer left the state; no hope of Brother Harman's new and better race from unions of butchers and fools.

The same paper which contained that dispatch also had one on "America's only traitor." The account by one of the brave and noble officers of the death of the "traitor" is partly as follows:

"One of the soldiers of the Second Oregon drove his bayonet through the body of the traitor and and lifted him above his head and held him there while the soldiers shot him. The body was thrown into a trench and buried with several dead Filipinos. We would have treated him worse if we had known him."

If they could have been more cruel than they were they must have been specially drilled in barbarity. Valorous and cultured, are they not? Just the boys to teach the Filipinos what civilization is!

Now a few words as to the "traitor." He appears to have been the only MAN sent to the Philippines. Going there to fight brutal Spain and help free Cuba and finding himself used as a Hessian hireling to slaughter liberty seekers he seems to have had the courage to act like a man and die for the right. Imagine Sampson, Dewey, Hobson, et al. facing almost certain death to gain certain opprobrium and hatred of those among whom they were raised and trained, just to be on the side of the right. When humanity reigns I hope that on the roll of its heroes will be inscribed the name of Corporal Leonard F. Hayes, the only hero who wore a blue uniform in the Philippines. Lovers of liberty should honor that name along with such names as Toussaint L'Overture.

The Tragedy of a Wife.

From "A Window in Thrums," By J. M. Barrie.

Were Jess still alive to tell the life-story of Sam'l Fletcher and his wife, you could not hear it and sit still. The ghost cradle is but a page from the black history of a woman who married, to be blotted out from that hour. One case of the kind I myself have known, of a woman so good mated to a man so selfish that I can not think of her even now with a steady mouth. Hers was the tragedy of living on, more mournful than the tragedy that kills. In Thrums the weavers spoke of "lousing" from their looms, removing the chains, and there is something woful in that. But pity poor Nanny Coutts who took her chains to bed with her.

Nanny was buried a month or more before I came to the house on the brae, and even in Thrums the dead are seldom remembered for so long a time as that. But it was only after Sanders was left alone that we learned what a woman she had been, and how basely we had wronged her. She was an angel. Sanders went about whining when he had no longer a woman to ill-treat. He had this sentimental way with him, but it lost its effect after we knew the man.

"A deevil couldna hae deserved waur treatment," Tammas Haggart said to him. "Gang oot o' my sicht, man!"

"I'll blame mysel' till I die," Jess said, with tears in her eyes, "for no understandin' puir Nanny better."

So Nanny got sympathy at last, but not until her forgiving soul had left her tortured body. There was many a kindly heart in Thrums that would have gone out to her in her lifetime but we could not have loved her without upbraiding him, and she would not buy sympathy at the price. What a little story it is, and how few words are required to tell it! He was a bad husband to her, and she kept it secret. That is Nanny's life summed up. It is all that was left behind when her coffin went down the brae. Did she love him to the end, or was she only doing what she thought her duty? It is not for me even to guess. A good woman who suffers is altogether beyond man's reckoning. To such heights of self-sacrifice we can not rise. It crushes us; it ought to crush us on to our knees. For us, who saw Nanny, infirm, shrunken, and so weary, yet a type of the noblest womanhood, suffering for years, and misunderstood her to the end, what expiation can there be? I do not want to storm at the man who made her life so burdensome. Too many years have passed for that, nor would Nanny take it kindly if I called her man names.

Sanders worked little after his marriage. He had a sore back, he said, which became a torture if he leaned forward at his loom. What truth there was in this I can not say, but not every weaver in Thrums could "louse" when his back grew sore. Nanny went to the loom in his place, filling as well as weaving, and he walked about, better dressed than the common, and with cheerful words for those who had time to listen. Nanny got no approval, even for doing his work as well as her own, for they were understood to have money, and Sanders let us think her merely greedy. We drifted into his opinions.

Had Jess been one of those who could go about, she would, I think, have read Nanny better than the rest of us, for her intellect was bright, and always led her straight to her neighbors' hearts. But Nanny visited no one, and so Jess only knew of her by hearsay. Nanny's standoffishness, as it was called, was not a popular virtue, and she was blamed still more for trying to keep her husband out of other people's houses. He was so frank and full of gossip, and she was so reserved. He would go everywhere and she nowhere. He had been known to ask neighbors to tea and she had shown that she wanted them away, or even begged them not to come. We were not accustomed to go behind the face of a thing, and so we set down Nanny's inhospitality to churlishness or greed. Only after her death, when other women had to attend him, did we get to know what a tyrant Sanders was at his own hearth. The ambition of Nanny's life was that we should never know it, that we should continue extolling him, and say what we chose about herself. She knew that if we went much about the house and saw how he treated her, Sanders would ceas to be a respected man in Thrums.

So neat in his dress was Sanders, that he was seldom seen abroad in his corduroys. His blue bonnet for every day wear was such as even well-to-do farmers only wore at fair-time, and it was said that he had a handkerchief for every day in the week. Jess often held him up to Hendry as a model of courtesy and polite manners.

"Him an' Nanny's no weel matched," she used to say; "for he has grand ideas, an' she's o' the commonest. It maun be a richt trial to a man wi' his fine tastes to hae a wife 'at's wrapper's never even on, an' wha doesna wash her mutch ainee in a month."

It is true that Nanny was a slattern, but only because she was married into slavery. She was kept so busy washing and ironing for Sanders that she ceased to care how she looked herself. What did it matter whether her mutch was clean? Weaving and washing and cooking, doing the work of a breadwinner as well as of a house-wife, her's was soon a body prematurely old, on which no wrapper could sit becomingly. Before her face, Sanders would hint that her slovenly ways and dress tried him sorely, and, in company at least, she only bowed her head. We were given to respecting those who worked hard, but Nanny, we thought, was a woman of means, and Sanders let us call her a miser. He was always anxious, he said, to be generous, but Nanny would not feed a starving child. They had really not a penny beyond what Nanny earned at the loom, and now we know how Sanders shook her if she did not earn enough. His vanity was responsible for the story about her wealth, and she would not have us think him vain.

Because she did so much, we said that she was as strong as a cart-horse. The doctor who attended her the last week of her life discovered that she had never been well. Yet we had often wondered at her letting Sanders pit his own potatoes when he was so unable.

"Them 'at's strong, ye see," Sanders explained, "doesna ken what illness is, an' so its nat'ral they shouldna sympathize wi' onweel fowk. Ay, I'm rale thankfu' that Nanny keeps her health. I often envy her."

These were considered creditable sentiments, and so they might have been had Nanny uttered them. Thus easily Sanders built up a reputation for never complaining. I know now that he was a hard and cruel man who should have married a shrew; but while Nanny lived I thought he had a beautiful nature. Many a time I have spoken with him at Hendry's gate, and felt the better of his heartiness.

"I mauna complain," he always said; "na, we maun juist fecht awa."

Little, indeed, had he to complain of, and little did he fight away.

Sanders went twice to church every Sabbath, and thrice when he got the chance. There was no man who joined so lustily in the singing or looked straighter at the minister during the prayer. I have heard the minister say that Sander's constant attendance was an encouragement and a help to him. Nanny had been a great church-goer when she was a maiden, but after her marriage she only went in the afternoons, and a time came when she ceased altogether to attend. The minister admonished her many times, telling her, among other things, that her irreligious ways were a distress to her husband. She never replied that she could not go to church in the forenoon, because Sanders insisted on a hot meal being waiting him when the service ended. But it was true that Sanders, for appearance sake, would have had her go to church in the afternoons. It is now believed that on this point alone did she refuse to do as she was bidden. Nanny was very far from perfect, and the reason she forsook the kirk utterly was because she had no Sabbath clothes.

She died as she had lived, saying not a word when the minister, thinking it his duty drew a cruel comparison between herlife and her husband's.

"I got my first glimpse into the real state of affairs in that house," the doctor told me one night on the brae the day before she died. 'You're sure there's no hope for me?' she asked wistfully; and when I had to tell the truth, she sunk back on the pillow with a look of joy."

Nanny died with a lie on her lips. "Ay," she said, 'Sanders has been a guid man to me."

WHAT IS AN ANARCHIST?

The word ANARCHY, in the minds of misinformed people, signifies disorder, chaos, turbulence, violence, bloodshed, retrogression. To the student of economics it signifies exactly the reverse of these ideas—in two words, Liberty and Progress. You cannot afford to be ignorant of this comparatively new view of economic science, and you will remain ignorant of it so long as you gain your information—or rather, misinformation—concerning it from newspapers only. P. J. Proudhon the great French economist, identifies Anarchy with Liberty and says "Liberty is the mother, not the daughter, of Order." Read and think for yourself and you will see that Anarchy instead of being a doctrine which threatens the destruction of all that is beneficial to humanity is in fact the necessary condition of unhampered social evolution. Here is a list of books on anarchy which we recommend. They will be sent post paid from Lucifer office on receipt of price:

Economics of Anarchy. A Study of the Industrial Type. By Dyer D. Lum. Paper, 60 pages. (Scarce) .25

Autonomy. Self Law; What Are Its Demands? A fragmentary exposition of the basic principle of individualism in its relation to society and government. By Moses Harman. This pamphlet of 29 uncut pages contains an account of the autonomistic marriage of Lillian Harman and Edwin C Walker, and their subsequent arrest, trial and imprisonment. The pamphlet is not up to the standard in typography, but it contains data valuable to all lovers of personal liberty. .05

Cityless and Countryless World; an Outline of Practical Co-operative Individualism, By Henry Olerich. Red silk; gold title: nearly 500 pages. $1.00

Dawn of Civilization. A Radical Social Reform Novel by J. C. Spence, formerly a vice president of the Legitimation League. Blue and gold boards; 176 pages. .25

Government Analyzed. By John R. Kelso, A. M. This book seeks to show that all governments, like all gods, are the mere personifications of mythical monsters invented by selfish and crafty men as instruments with which to rob and enslave the ignorant toiling masses. A book which is sure to open the eyes of governmentalists who read it. Bound in cloth; 520 pages; edition limited; original price, $1.50. Our price, .90

Human Rights. By Madison Hook, with an Introduction by E. C. Walker. 1891; paper, 19 pages, .05

Thomas Jefferson. Father of American Democracy. His political, social and religious philosophy. By Gen. M. M. Trumbull. Paper, 29 pages, .10

Liberty: Political, Religious, Social and Sexual. By A. F. Tindall, A. T. C. L.; an essay towards establishing an Anti-Persecution Society to defend the rights of individuals against state interference and Puritan persecution. Paper, 8 pages. .03

774.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

must claim soon the attention of all who desire good to the whole race. Social questions involve those of family and health morals and rights, labor and money, so the people are learning and will rise to the occasion.

Special Offer!

Following is a list of valuable books which we will sell during August and September at just one half the regular publisher's price if ordered in lots amounting to one dollar or more. This unusually liberal offer is made because receipts of the office are always lower in the summer than at any other time of the year. The books could not be sold for these prices if it were not for the fact that many of them have been donated to Lucifer by generous friends to aid in its work of education. Pick out the books you want in the list below to the amount of two dollars and send us just ONE HALF the price marked and the books will be sent to you promptly, free of postage.

Ideala. By Sarah Grand. This is the story of a woman too thoughtful, too honest, too true for the conventional "middle class" English society in which she lived. Her life story furnishes much food for thought for those who like to study the facts of life when disguised as fiction. Handsomely bound in cloth. 195 pages. .40

The Story of an African Farm. Olive Schreiner's masterpiece. Chapter titles: Part I. Shadows from child-life; Plans and Bushman paintings; I was a stranger and ye took me in; Blessed is he that believeth; Sunday services; Bonaparte Blenkins makes his nest; He sets his trap; He catches the old Bird; He sees a ghost; He shows his teeth; He snaps; He bites; He makes love. Part II: Times and seasons; Waldo's stranger; Gregory Rose finds his affinity; Lyndall, Tant' Sannie holds an upsitting and Gregory writes a letter; A Boer wedding; Waldo goes out to taste life, and Em stays at home and tastes it; The "Kopje"; Lyndall's stranger; Gregory Rose has an idea; An unfinished letter; Gregory's womanhood; Dreams; Waldo goes out to sit in the sunshine. Bound in cloth. 398 pages. .40

Our New Humanity, No. II. Part of the contents: The Prodigal Daughter, or the Price of Virtue, by Rachel Campbell; Pioneer Chips. Extracts from the private letters of Rachel Campbell, by M. Florence Johnson; Marriage, What It Was and Is—Will the coming woman marry? By "X." (M. Harman); Reminiscences of the Long Ago, II., III. and IV. By Lucy N. Colman; The Ascent of Life, by Moses Harman; Legal Wifehood, by Lucinda B. Chandler; Whose is the Child? by Lex; Tombstone Texts. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. III. Part of the contents: The Unwomanly Woman, by Lizzie M. Holmes; That Great Fraud Yclept Society, by Moses Hull—with comments by his daughter, M. Florence Johnson; Normal Sexual Action, by Ernest Winne; Evolution of Familism, by Albert Chavannes; Virgin Soil, (story); Love in Liberty, by J. Wm. Lloyd; Reminiscences of the Long Ago, V., VI., by Lucy N. Colman; At What Age? 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. IV. Contents: The Abolition of Marriage, by John Beverly Robinson; Isabel's Intention, (story) by Mariette; Reminiscences of Berlin Heights, by A. Warren; The Sexes and Love in Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; A Woman-Child, by J. Wm. Lloyd; Burmese Women; The Great Conflict, by James F. Morton, Jr.; "The Truth About Love," by Moses Harman; Reminiscences—Then and Now, by Moses Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. V. Contents: Priestly Celibacy, by A. L. Rawson; Sex Love Analytically Defined, by Ernest Winne; The Other Side, by May Clifford Hurd; The Incoherence of Transition, by E. C. Walker; The Greatest Sin, (an allegory,) by R. B. Kerr; Our New Savior—the Surgeon, by C. T. Brown; Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; To Man, (poem) by Charlotte Perkins Stetson; Motherhood in Freedom, by M. Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. VI. Contents: Woman's Primal Right, by Francis Barry; The Curse of Maternity, From the French of Henry Fevre; How to Escape the Curse, by Jonathan Mayo Crane; Can Marriage be Abolished? by Albert Chavannes; Woman's "Duty" to Bear Children, by E. C. Walker; Love's Law, by William Francis Barnard; The Freedom Not to Do, by C. L. Swartz; True and False Morality, by C. L. James; Wanted: A New Adam; A Brood Mare, (poem) by Charlotte Perkins Stetson; Life, Health and Longevity, by Moses Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. VII. Contents. The Rights of Children, by R. B. Kerr; Incineration, by Walter Breen; What Are Women Here For? by E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.; What the Young Need to Know—A Primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker; The New Martyrdom, by Lillian Harman; The Will, (story, from the French of Guy de Maupassant; A Free Man's Creed, by Moses Harman. .25

Leaflets by Austin Kent. Conjugal Love, the True and False; A Letter to a Magdalene; My Creed, or What Believe and What I Know; An Open Letter to Andrew Jackson Davis, or, What I Call Conjugal Love; A Letter to My Atheistical Bretheren. Each, 3 cents; the lot, .12

A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers, by Henry D. Thoreau. Bound in cloth; 356 pages. .40

Ruled by the Tomb; A Discussion of Free Thought and Free Love, by Orford Northcote. .10

The Dawn of Civilization; or, England in the Nineteenth Century, by J. C. Spence. With portrait of author. 190 pages. .25

What the Young Need to Know,—A Primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. .10

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY. Co-educational. Send for catalog. A. E. Gammage, President. 167 Dearborn St., Chicago.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.
"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.
"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.
Sample pages free Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

Free Love: A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of conjugal love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 187[illegible] and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence. 160 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 167 Carroll Ave., Chicago

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressed. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

LOVE AND THE LAW. By E. C. Walker. A clear, concise statement of social liberty in contradistinction to the much lauded laws bondage now almost universally upheld. An excellent missionary document. Two copies, 5 cents; 20 cents per dozen.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint: A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. ~~41~~ 32 CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, AUGUST 19, E. M. 299. [C. E 1899.] WHOLE No. 775.

Heloise to Abelard.

How oft, when pressed to marriage, have I said
Curse on all laws but those which love has made.
Love, free as air, at sight of human ties,
Spreads his light wings, and in a moment flies.
Let wealth, let honor, wait the wedded dame,
August her deed, and sacred be her fame;
Before true passion all those views remove:
Fame, wealth, and honor! what are you to love?
The jealous god, when we profane his fires,
Those restless passions in revenge inspires,
And bids them make mistaken mortals groan,
Who seek in love for aught but love alone.
Should at my feet the world's great master fall,
Himself, his throne, his world, I'd scorn them all;
Nor Cæsar's empress would I deign to prove;
No, make me mistress to the man I love:
If there be yet another name more free,
More fond than mistress, make me that to thee!
O! happy state, when souls each other draw,
When love is liberty and nature law;
All then is full, possessing and possest,
No craving void left aching at the breast:
Ev'n thought meets thought, ere from the lips it part,
And each warm wish springs mutual from the heart.
This sure is bliss (if bliss on earth there be),
And once the lot of Abelard and me.

—Alexander Pope.

A Traveler's Tale.

BY R. B. KERR.

Travelers tell us that among the hill tribes of India there is a community of people who consider it a disgrace to be seen eating. I have made careful inquiries into the habits of this people, with the following results.

It seems that the members of this tribe, like all the rest of the world, admit that eating is necessary, but they call it a necessary evil. Their great aim is to drive vice underground. None of the stores on the main street of their village supply any kind of food, but on the outskirts are a number of houses to which the people resort after dark to buy food surreptitiously. Every body goes to one or other of these houses, but all are careful not to be observed, in order to escape being cast out of society.

It might be supposed that, in a community where eating is regarded with such horror, gluttony must be unknown. But we find, on the contrary, that over-eating is more common there than anywhere else. The thoughts of all the people are occupied with eating. Whenever a few children get together alone, they begin to tell each other naughty stories about eating. In school when any passage is read which suggests food in the most distant way, a grin goes round the class. It is the same with grown up people. Not only are they always telling indecent stories about food, but even their dreams are constantly disturbed with the thought of it. So ravenously do they eat, that their stomachs are always out of order, and their frames are exhausted with the over expenditure of energy in eating.

Moreover, disease is very prevalent, owing to the bad quality of the food. Being supplied only by the scum of society, in out of the way holes and corners, it is as bad as the whiskey which people drink under prohibition, and breeds all kinds of disorders. It is also very dear, for those who sell it are liable at any time to be raided by the police and severely punished, and cannot be expected to take such risks for nothing.

Those who sell the food are naturally regarded as the vilest of mankind, and have no standing in society. But they know how to revenge themselves on the respectable. Young people throng the eating houses under cover of night, and the inmates take every opportunity of leading them into bad habits, teaching them to drink and gamble, and even try to poison their minds against their mothers and sisters. These illicit dealers have an inveterate hatred of the respectable merchants of the community, whom they try to injure in every way. Being outcasts themselves, they try to pull all others into the gutter.

So deplorable has the condition of affairs become in this community, that all good people are discussing means of checking the social evil, as they call it. Vigilance committees have been formed to drive vice still further under ground. Every month the keepers of eating houses are brought before the Police magistrate and fined. Sermons are preached from every pulpit describing the lives and characters of those who sell food and pointing them out as examples of the awful consequences of eating. But it is all in vain. Vice is driven further underground, but eating goes on just the same.

There are many enlightened people in America who ought to be able to suggest a cure for this great evil. I suggest that the matter bereferred to Anthony Comstock, D. L. Moody, and other prominent reformers in America, and also to Lady Henry Somerset in England; and that letters be sent to them earnestly requesting them to take up the matter and suggest the means which would in their opinion be best fitted to remove the evil.

Southern Barbarism.

BY JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

I am glad that Lucifer printed the letter of "Mrs. M. E. W." in the interests of free speech, but sorry that the lady in question should have given expression to such an outburst of unreasoning race hatred. I do not know whether she was formerly the owner of human flesh and blood; but her letter gives the impression that she would like to see the institution of slavery restored. If "M. E. W." desires to defend the southern position, I would like to call her special attention to a few definite points.

1. Race prejudice is as old as the earliest tribal divisions. It is most strongly marked among the most ignorant nations. History demonstrates its utter irrationality. The dominant race of one epoch flourishes for a time, and then makes way for those whom it held in contempt as utter barbarians. What were our own ancestors, a thousand years ago? No intelligent student of history will presume to single out any race and declare that its position must be that of permanent inferiority or subjection. Even today, individual negroes like Booker F. Washington are fully the peers of our choicest Anglo-Saxon men and women. We outrage common sense, defy history, and lower ourselves, when we refuse the hand of fellowship to such men, merely because of a silly negrophobia, or because they are in advance of other members of their race. How can we set the limits of future development for a race only a generation beyond slavery, and still treated with brutal contempt, yet already able to produce such individuals? When we consider the ignorance in which the negro was designedly kept under slavery, and the treatment he has received ever since in the South, the wonder is not that many black men have become shiftless or criminal, but that the race is not in a far more degraded condition.

2. We in the North abhor rape as much as do any Southerners. But mere accusation is not proof; and the abuse of a white woman by a black man is no higher crime than the abuse of a black woman by a white man. As to the specific case of Sam Hose, the word of detectives sent to ascertain the exact facts is naturally worth as much as that of murderers seeking to cloak their crimes with a specious pretext.

3. Even assuming Hose's guilt, and the right of a mob to exact vengeance for it in a summary manner, what does "Mrs. M. E. W." think of civilized men who make a carnival out of an execution? Justice may be stern; but it is at least swift and sober. Only savages make the death of a fellow-being a scene of festivity and spectacular enjoyment. How can even the rankest apologist for lynching palliate the hideous and brutal tortures applied to the victim?

4. If Hose was such a vile wretch, what of the mob who hung Lige Strickland on the unsupported accusation of so low a criminal, writhing in torture and ready to accuse anybody? All apologists for the Georgia murderers sedulously avoid that point.

5. Much more might be said; but for the present I will content myself with asking "Mrs. M. E. W." to furnish, if she can, even the slightest shadow of excuse for the unspeakable monsters who murdered Mr. Baker and his child for no crime whatever, simply because they did not like his appointment as postmaster. If this is a sample of Southern civilization, justice defend us from experiencing any more of it. If a mob of negroes had committed such an act, what an outcry would have been raised! When we are truly civilized, we will learn that the principles of equal liberty apply to all, and that invasive acts are equally infamous, without regard to any distinction of sex, color or race.

To Our Mothers.

BY INA CHAMPNEY.

Mothers, do you realize the responsibility that is yours? Do you love your children? You may consider such a question almost an insult; but when one looks abroad and sees how the children of the country are unguided, untaught, we may naturally ask the question.

Your little ones are intelligent beings; they have a keen sense of justice; they crave confidence and affection. Such a being demands treatment above that of the brute, and should be taught by reason, not by the lash and the rod.

A mother, above all others, should be the child's confidant. How is she to inspire this confidence? By the manifestation of love; by gentle, not harsh dealings; by a considerate and thoughtful explanation of all childish questions. Never put a child off when he questions you, as he will do so soon as he can talk. Above all else, always be straightforward and truthful with children. Never let them find you guilty of the least deception. This, sooner than anything else, will destroy confidence.

In all sex matters our children are kept in ignorance. It seems almost wicked that this all important subject should be tabooed. It need not be entirely. Parents can, from the start, wisely instruct their children in sex matters so they need have no morbid curiosity. They can learn that sex is pure and beautiful. You will find their young minds ripe for sex culture much earlier than you think.

Mothers dread the time of puberty of their daughters. They dare not instruct their girls in regard to their physical natures, and the important changes taking place as they enter womanhood. This is a time when girls need wise instruction and gentle care. The majority of mothers are willing—rather than undergo a trial for the moment—to allow their daughters to remain ignorant, learning from hard experience.

A mother of thirteen children recently said to me: "I never could broach the subject to my girls."

"You would rather let your daughters be taught from the gutters and alleys?" I asked.

"Yes, I let the world teach my girls."

I say, this is a shame and a disgrace! What is it the world teaches—truth and freedom? No, prudery, false modesty, lust, licentiousness. Is this your highest ideal for your child?

Often have I heard mothers say: "I never liked children, never wanted them. One or two are all right, but so many nearly make me crazy." Women, don't you know this should be, and can be, in your control? You have the right to say whether you desire to be a mother. You should never give birth to an undesired child. It is a child's right to be born well.

Face the world on an equal footing with man. Cease this life of submissive slavery. Be an independent, rational individual. Realize, and demand your rights. You will never be a true woman and mother till you do, till you free yourself from this marriage slavery.

Radical mothers, what are you thinking of to willingly let your children grow up in the old conventional rut, as so many of you do? Are you afraid of your own convictions? If you are convinced of the fallacy of the old ideal, and of the truth of the new, why shouldn't this truth be for the rising generation as well as for yourselves?

"To have convictions to speak, to speak the truth, means to be willing to suffer." You are afraid of the world. You look into the future for your children and realize the scorn, the contempt, the ridicule heaped upon the heads of those who dare to speak the truth. You wish to save your children from this suffering. Can't you realize how infinitely greater will be the suffering in a life of conservatism, of bondage?

Give a child a just, liberal understanding of all sides of life, then leave him to choose for himself which road to take. You will be pretty sure to see him bravely and boldly step out into the broad, radical, progressive, onward march for truth and freedom.

Love and Finance.

BY LILLIE D. WHITE.

In Lucifer No. 773 Lois Waisbrooker cites a case, to illustrate a point, in which she advised a friend to ask her lover for money which she needed very much for a special purpose. Lillian Harman commented on the article, rather blaming Mrs. Waisbrooker for advising her and the woman for subjecting herself to the "humiliation" of a refusal.

It is quite impossible for outsiders to know all the facts in a case of this kind, but an entirely imaginary case would do as well for the sake of argument—a case in which a woman presents her financial stress to her lover with the request or expectation of help from him, and he refuses without any excuse or regret or explanation. Not only refuses but denounces her as a mercenary character and is "astonished" at her audacity, that, too, to the one person in the world the least likely to regard her kindly. Whether she was advised or urged to it or not does not affect the case, for as she was radical enough to love a married man, and intelligent enough to attend a liberal convention we may presume she was a woman of mature judgment.

I agree that he was under no obligation to supply her needs; neither would he be under any obligation to help her out if he found her lost in the woods, or a long way from home with a broken bicycle, or similar calamity, yet it would hardly be the natural conduct of a lover to leave her to her fate, on the plea that his love was too lofty and soulful to think of such sordid, material affairs.

She might feel humiliated under the circumstances, at the thought of having cherished an idol made of such very poor clay, but there should be no self reproach nor regrets, or fear that her conduct had been improper or blameworthy. In an instance of this kind, a real man and sincere lover would "feel wronged if not permited to care for those he loved."

I see no more reason why a man should supply a woman with money than that she should do the same for him—except that in the present stage of societary evolution it is more generally in his possession—but if between lovers there is not a mutual desire to do for each other whatever gives pleasure, in a general, all-around, practical way, there can be no very serious or lasting attachment. Love that is only expressed in sweet words, pet names, caresses, etc., and which flies away when anything practical is to be done, can not be very deep or sincere. Kisses are all very well but bread and cheese are not to be despised. Perhaps love without any consideration of practical helpfulness, is what is meant by being "loved for one's self alone," which sounds prettily poetic, but what is one's "self" aside from one's conduct and activity and ability to do the things which contribute to human comfort and happiness? Divested of these attributes, the power of "one's self" to give or receive pleasure, is very limited.

I do not believe it possible for a deep and enduring love or even friendship to exist between any two people, when one is in comfortable circumstances and the other making a desperate daily struggle for existence, "working for a pittance," if there is no thought of giving and receiving in the material as well as in the affectional, magnetic or intellectual realm.

I advocate decidedly the financial independence of woman; not until she is a self reliant, self-supporting, independent human being can she really be man's equal, and be to him a true companion and helpmate. Then the helpfulness can be mutual and the blessing that is found more in giving than receiving be shared by both.

The Problem Cannot Settle Itself.

BY JOSEPH STEINER.

Permit me to take issue with Cynthia M. Tregear in her article which appeared in No. 754, wherein she assumes that "the motherhood question will settle itself when women become free, financially and industrially."

I am aware that nearly all the socialists of the Marx school hold this view, but in doing so they are unconsciously hugging a delusion which will prove fatal to the realization of their hopes and aspirations in the domain of both politics and economics for the simple reason that it is in conflict with the omnipresent, historical requirements of genitive law.

Genitive law demonstrates that sex congress is the basis of social life, and motherhood service is the basis and foundation of industrial life.

Such being the case it is necessarily the only rational foundation for an industrial autonomy and a system of compensation for service rendered.

The assumption that the motherhood or any other problem ever settles itself independent of the intellectual entity that dominates its sphere, is too absurd to deserve notice; on the contrary, it is the divining power of each sphere that settles its problems, not in a haphazard way but in logical and historical order. There is a divinity of the intellectual entity of the star world that solves all astronomic problems, another of the plant world that solves its problems, another of the zoonic world that solves its problems and another of the societary world that does the same for it; but that divinity in the anthropoid has its headquarters in the cerebrum of the brain, consisting of reflective organs which are the tools with which nature has provided us to solve that important problem in the same logical and historical order as do the other intellectual entities in the antecedent spheres referred to above.

All institutions have their origin in a transient necessity and so long as that necessity exists they are a benefit and a blessing. When however they are perpetuated after the necessity for them has ceased their perpetuation degenerates into an abuse and becomes a curse instead of a blessing.

The sexual enslavement of the motherhood of the race is no exception. Through polygamy the domestication of female anthropoid brutes and their children began the humanizing process and humanization can begin in no other manner.

Monogamy resulted from an attempt to establish masculine suitage. This attempt had its origin in the aspiration for masculine instead of human rights, and as the woman was not included in those rights it has necessarily failed of suitage for both sexes.

Monogamy is perpetuated by the subjection of woman as a class to man as a class; hence it is the basis and foundation of our political (many headed) class despotism. It makes me tired to hear socialists ranting about class conciousness as between the capitalists as one class and the proletariat another class while they at the same time not only maintain a discreet silence concerning the domestic foundation of the politico-economic despotism but uphold and support it by making women chattels through marriage, so as to get their services cheaper than they could by paying her the current wage-slave rate as domestic and prostitute.

Indeed I feel perfectly safe in saying that if working men were compelled to secure to their wives the above rates of compensation not one in a thousand would be financially able to assume the responsibilities of husband and father.

Genitive law points unmistakably to the fact that the wage slave has the freedom of women in his immediate power and that through her freedom from chattelhood his own freedom becomes an assured fact. On the other hand so long as he withholds from woman as a class her sexual freedom he thereby insures the perpetuation of his own economic enslavement.

Woman slavery is the foundation of every slavery that ever has existed or can exist. This must be abolished by the organization of society on an industrial basis of compact (a step in which the trusts have already taken the initiative) with an industrial autonomy of which motherhood service required from her and rendered by her to society must be the basis of procedure in organization and compensation.

The increased productivity of machinery resulting from this change will be so great that there will be ample opportunity for all members of society to develop the best that is in them. Poverty and its dread will have lost its terrors and its incentive to over-reaching selfishness be destroyed; thus giving us a chance to become really civilized by becoming more socialized and consequently more humanized.

With the abolition of sex slavery all other slaveries must necessarily fall; a fall which will make necessary a realignment of society along both isonomic and economic lines of genitive law and by that alignment secure to each member of society all the isonomic and economic rights to which he or she is in equity entitled. On the other hand any attempt to build a co-operative commonwealth on the rickety foundation of monogamic familism is doomed to destruction sooner or later by the immutable fiat of genitive law.

Since writing the above I read in the papers that the Ruskin colony of Tennessee has collapsed because of the conflict between marriage and suitage. I have always maintained that any attempt at co-operative colonization on the basis of marriage must fail because of the incompatibility between monogamic familism and industrial autonomy as a basis of social procedure.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper in t has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

At Mt. Pleasant Park.

A few words only of greeting, from this somewhat famous encampment. I am meeting so many old friends and making the acquaintance of so many new ones that I seem to have no time for writing. Then the meetings at the "Auditorium" and at the "Pavilion" must not be neglected, to say nothing of numerous parlor or cottage classes or gatherings.

This camping ground was established nearly twenty years ago, as the property and headquarters of the Mississippi Valley Spiritualist Association. All who have visited the place will agree that the locality is admirably adapted to the purpose named. Overlooking the broad Mississippi—"Father of Waters"—the wooded hills furnish shade, clear and cold water and numerous picturesque views. Within easy access of a flourishing city well supplied with railways and with street car accommodations, reaching to the gate of the camp, the traveler finds no trouble and little expense in coming and going. Reduced rates on leading lines of travel, within a radius of some two hundred miles, have been secured by the management.

For many years before the advent of the white man to Illinois and Iowa, the hills around this city, (Clinton, Iowa,) were used so we are told, as a camping ground by the various tribes of Indians then inhabiting the forests and plains of the great Mississippi Valley, and hence it is not strange that those who believe in "spirit return" should tell us that Indian spirits frequent the grounds and "control" the "mediums."

As some of my readers know that I am here in search of health, rather than as a seeker after supermundane phenomena I will say that with the exception of a two days' tussle with my old friend indigestion, or gastric trouble, my health has seemed to be improving, since leaving Chicago, one week ago.

Knowing that a large proportion of Lucifer's readers are firm believers in the doctrine of the continuity of life after the change called death, I will try to give, in future issues, some account of what I am seeing and hearing that would seem to confirm that doctrine, that theory or philosophy of life.

I expect to remain here a week longer, or till about the twenty-second of this month. My next stop will be Ottawa, Kansas, at which place I hope to meet many friends of Lucifer who reside in the Sunflower state, and in adjoining states and territories, at the annual meeting of the Kansas Freethought Association.

M. HARMAN.

Right Marital Living.

This is the title of a little work just issued by Ida C. Craddock. Of it she says: "This essay is an expansion of an article of mine on this subject, which appeared in 'The Chicago Clinic' for May, 1899. It is published in response to requests from physicians and others all over the country for a simple, clear presentation of my teaching which could be handed by physicians to their patients and circulated among men and women who desire to know how to live healthy, wholesome, chaste lives as husband and wife." The work is clear, concise, and contains many helpful thoughts. Probably no one can read it without receiving great benefit, even though not accepting the author's teachings in their entirety. Mrs. Craddock will be remembered as the author of "Advice to a Prospective Bride," (the circulation of which is now suppressed,) and other works formerly advertised in Lucifer.

From My Point of View.

BY LILLIAN HARMAN.

What the average newspaper reporter doesn't know isn't worth knowing. For instance, in writing of the "converted infidel," Waggoner, of Ohio, who it is said will burn his infidel library, the "Tribune" reporter says: "He has the most complete library of infidelity ever published." This is interesting. And then we are told the number of works in this wonderful library—"150 volumes and 500 pamphlets; and are furthermore informed that this infidel possessed all the literature of this kind that has been published. If such are the limits of "infidel" literature many publishers and other owners of large libraries will open their eyes in astonishment.

* * *

By the way, there is a suggestion in the mode of conversion of this "infidel" which should not be overlooked by the promoters of religion. This aged "infidel" had been going about like a roaring lion for many years; he had been the terror of the ministers of his city; had even descended to street brawls in defense of the unfaith that was in him. His recently wedded young wife left him because of his insane treatment of her, and now herself is in the insane asylum. This old man was converted to Christianity, "washed in the blood of the lamb, and made white as snow" by a phonograph which played "Nearer My God to Thee," and other religious airs. The suggestion for the churches is this: Inasmuch as the phonograph has succeeded in converting such a vile infidel where all other means have failed, why not let the phonograph take the place of the preacher in every pulpit? The phonograph is less expensive to keep than is a man; if kept under lock and key it cannot become tainted with heretical doctrines; it cannot be affected by the "back talk" or arguments of the most hardened infidel; the complications with the pretty sisters which sometimes arise in the best regulated congregations will never occur to disturb the peace of the souls to which a phonograph ministers. These are but a few of the almost endless advantages which the mechanism of Edison possesses over the mechanism of God. And no charge is made for the suggestion.

* * *

The burning question in Chicago for the last week or so, is one brought up by the reported action of the managers of the Marshall Field department store. It was alleged that when a man in their employ who received a small salary contemplated marriage he was called to a consultation and advised against the step; if he persisted in his intentions he was discharged. This has caused numerous letters to be written to the daily press in answer to the question, On how small a salary can a family live? The writers almost unanimously agree that it is impossible for a family to live, no matter how poorly, on less than $10 a week. Inasmuch as there are thousands of men in Chicago who receive much less than $10 a week, are we to assume that they do not live, or that they do not support their families? The latter supposition is not worthy of consideration; for every one knows that a large proportion of these men are married, and of course they support their families,—for does not marriage insure support for the wife and children? Possibly these poorly-paid families are enabled, by a special dispensation of Providence, to live on air and dew like the fairies;—or on the more substantial city smoke and lake water!

* * *

To be properly qualified for his position, a judge should be an adept in the art of mind-reading. Much embarrassment might have been spared John Bentz and Minnie Caruthers, of Burlington, Ky., had Judge Tarvin possessed this faculty when he granted a divorce to Bentz. Tarvin has revoked the divorce because Bentz married Miss Caruthers two days later—"before the ink was dry." (By the way, that ink must be as slow as was the judge who used it.) Tarvin says in his decision that his court is not to be used to enable persons to throw off the marriage yoke in order to be married to some one else. Here is where the necessity for mind-reading arises. Every judge should have the ability to "see through" the applicant for divorce. If said applicant comes to him with the intention of living a celibate life for the rest of his days—(so many men do appear in court with that intention!)—or if he intends to keep a "mistress," or associate with prostitutes, the judge can legally and conscientiously grant a divorce. But if the man intends to marry another woman, he thereby proves himself wicked and depraved and altogether unworthy of consideration. All wives should look alike to a man; therefore if he wants a wife he should be content with the one he has. But Bentz now has one wife of his own choice, and another wife thrust upon him. As an editor has expressed it in commenting upon the case, "the Court has committed bigamy upon Bentz!"

How "Holy Women" Serve the Church.

"The maddest man in Platte county," says the Columbus (Neb.) "Times," "lives at Humphrey. He attended a social, and hugging bee, the proceeds to go to the Sunday school. Prices were graded according to the person hugged. For instance, for hugging a young, inexperienced girl the bidder had to give up ten cents, married women brought fifteen cents and widows a quarter. Well, the man was blindfolded, and, giving up fifteen cents, he said he would take a married woman. After he had hugged fifteen cents' worth the bandage was removed from his eyes, and lo! and behold, he had been hugging his own wife! Then he kicked and wanted his fifteen cents back."

That was a mean trick to play on the poor man—to make him pay for the use of his own property!

It would be very immoral for a woman to charge a man fifteen cents a hug if she herself got the money; but prostitution itself may be sanctified if the money is used for the benefit of the church.

"'Tis no new tale." The pages of history are full of instances of women selling themselves in the service of their religion. In treating of the derivation and meaning of the word Shaga Inman says in "Ancient Faiths Embodied in Ancient Names:"

"To us it is inconceivable that the indulgence of 'passion' could be associated with religion; but so it was. The words expressive of 'Sanctuary,' 'consecrated' and 'Sodomite' are in the Hebrew essentially the same; . . . . and we find that 'holy women' is a title given to those who devote their bodies to be used for hire, which goes to the service of the temple."

Thus it will be seen that these Nebraska women are now entitled to the honor of being known as "holy women."

L. H.

"She forgot the Baby."

Under the above title the Philadelphia "Item" prints a little sketch that might almost serve as a companion piece to Barrie's "Tragedy of a Wife" which we reproduced in Lucifer last week. It is so true to life that we reproduce it:

"G'long Nick; g'long. Seem's if Nick shows his age worse than ever today. We'll never get home 'less he starts his legs faster'n this."

And Martha Crocker leaned over and lapped the reins vigorously. The old horse jerked forward, sending the wheels of the rickety old express wagon into a hole and out of it with a bounce that almost shook Martha and her sister Jane off the seat.

The day was unusually raw even for New England November, and the wind stung the women's faces till their sallow cheeks were flecked with crimson.

There was one incongruous object. Fastened on top of a bundle of old gray laths in the back of the wagon was a baby's high chair—a new, unpainted, wooden chair. It was a rough, splintery chair, but clumsy and ugly as it was it told of new life in the midst of age and decay.

At last with a furtive look at her sister, Jane broke the silence. "Mother must be getting pretty tired keeping house alone. Guess I'll have to go back by Saturday, sure."

"I thought you'd stay until Thanksgivin'. Ain't mother going to John's for then?"

"Well I d'n' know. From what she said in her last letter, guess she ain't going after all. And—well I believe she'd rather have me to home."

"Now, Jane Hobson," began Martha with some spirit, "you know you just don't want to stay. And it's hard lines if a sister don't like to be with her sister."

Nick suddenly stopped short with a lurch that threatened to send women, laths, and chair in a heap to the ground.

"Land o' Goshen! Guess our dinner'll be settled enough to make room for supper time we get home. Why don't you want to stay with us for Thanksgivin'?"

Jane shifted her position uneasily and then looked up with a shade of defiance in her eyes.

"Well, I reckon you can guess," she said grimly. "I've got tired hearing that everlasting grumbling and cursing of Benjamin's. I must say I like to listen to something half-way pleasant once in a while."

Martha sighed again. "You see," she began with an apologetic air, "Ben's had hard luck this year. There ain't a thing gone right from the cranberry bog to the potato field. And he ain't been able to get anything to do this Fall. And a man don't feel like smiling much when things are so bad."

"Humph," retorted Jane, "this ain't the first time I've been to your house since the five years you've been married. I must say he's worse'n ever, but I didn't ever think Benjamin's amiability would outdo the sun's shining. For my part, I praise the day I gave Jim Ditton the mitten. He seemed like a decent enough fellow, but land! I'm mighty glad I didn't run the risk."

Martha's pinched face grew more pinched and strained as Jane let her rough words have full swing. Suddenly, to Jane's consternation, she covered her face with her hands and began to sob violently.

"For the land!" muttered Jane. "Now, Marthy, I'd ought to be ashamed of myself. 'Twas all uncalled for, and I guess I ain't much pleasanter than other folks."

Finally, after the violence of her grief had spent itself, Martha spoke; at first brokenly, and then more connectedly.

"No, no, Jane. 'Tain't your fault. I don't blame you for saying what you did. It's been hard enough for me not to say the same things for going on five years. I've kept hoping things would be better. And," with a sob, "they got worse steady. And yet, Ben ain't ever done what lots of men do. He ain't ever had anything to do with any other woman, and he don't get drunk. An' that's a good deal, Jane Hobson."

Jane, in spite of her regret that she had thus precipitated matters, could not refrain from answering.

"Humph! Well, I don't believe he'd found any other woman who'd have wanted to have anything to do with him. Guess a wife's the only person would have stood his ugliness."

Martha hardly noticed the interruption. "Certain," she went on, "I knew 'fore ever I married Ben he wasn't an angel. But I never mistrusted he was as he is. Sometimes does seem as if he didn't speak a pleasant word the livelong day. And—and, Jane, I can't stand it."

Martha hid her face again. In a minute she resumed, in a calmer but harder voice: "I don't blame you for wanting to go home, and I ain't going to ask you to stay. I only wish I could go home, too. I've thought often lately how nice and quiet and peaceful it must be there."

Jane cleared her throat. "Well," she said slowly, "I was rather extra rasped today, but I d'n' know but what I'll stay a while longer. But I don't see, Martha Crocker, how you put up with it. Why don't you pack up and come home? I guess you could earn enough to buy your victuals and clothes; you did 'fore ever you knew Benjamin Crocker."

Martha looked up and her breath came quickly. "O, don't you suppose I've thought of that? But you forget, Jane," and her face and voice softened incredibly, "there's the baby. You forget the baby."

Just then Nick slewed the wheels into a hole again, and as Jane turned to see if the chair was secure her face, too, had changed. The hard lines about the old maid's mouth had relaxed, and there was a tender, yearning look in the sharp eyes.

"Yes," she said, with a little catch in her breath, "yes—I forgot the baby."

Poor woman! Like countless numbers of her sisters, she was bound down by adverse material conditions; but infinitely more cramped and confined by the darkness of her mind. "She forgot the Baby,"—she forgot its highest interests—when she believed it necessary to rear it in a home of inharmony and gloom, a home which was unendurable even to her life-hardened "old-maid" sister; because she had suffered the misfortune of mistakenly marrying a man of whom the best that could be said was that "he ain't ever had anything to do with any other woman, and he don't get drunk!" Pity the little ones brought into being under such conditions! Even as a plant needs sunlight and air, so does the child require harmony and freedom and love. Denied these conditions, both plant and child are stunted, dwarfed, ruined.

L. H.

The Cause of the Ruskin Disruption.

"G. E. M.," in "Truth Seeker."

The receiver having sold out Ruskin Colony, and another co-operative failure having been put on record, the New York "Journal," which is in some respects a fake sheet, undertakes to tell the cause of the trouble. As Herbert N. Casson, an ex-Ruskinite, is now employed by the "Journal," the information is probably first hand, and runs as follows:

"The failure was not commercial. The association was perfectly solvent. It had always discounted all its bills, and was rated A1 at Bradstreet's. The cause of this trouble was the dissatisfaction of less than a dozen members. These people attempted to disseminate the doctrines of anarchy and free love, but were prevented by the remaining two hundred, who stood firmly for law, order, and morality."

If the failure of Ruskin was not commercial, it had no business to fail at all; for it certainly will not be said that colonies are founded among men to suppress the dissemination of the doctrines of anarchy and free love. These colonists hold, I infer, that co-operation and the abolition of the competitive system are the reforms of greatest moment, for in their paper, which I have read for some years, they never talk about anything else. The question of freethought, apparently, does not excite their interest. The liberty of the individual claims no share of their attention. Abuses that exist under the marriage laws they depend upon co-operation to abate. The indifference with which a socialist regards all other reforms but socialism is nothing less than magnificent. He will not do a stroke to further the solution of the religious question, the social question, and the question of personal liberty, but if the Ruskin colonists are a sample of the cult, he does not object to preventing the dissemination of those doctrines when they conflict with his own. If I happened to be a co-operator and a member of a colony, it should never be said that such trifles as free love and anarchy diverted me from my aim.

One of the troubles in Ruskin was bloomers, which some of the women insisted on wearing. Now, if clothes are more important than the Co-operative Republic, it is perhaps fit that bloomers should become a divisive issue; but if the opposite is the case, if our motto is to be socialism first and clothes afterward, the colonists who complained of the bloomers, as well as those who broke up the peace of the community by wearing them, were not very sincere in their professions. And it is the same as regards free love. If that is a subordinate matter it should be sunk out of sight, and the colony should not be imperiled in the first place by measures taken to prevent it. In a co-operative colony give all to co-operation. Were I there and did a brother member, not actually insane, insist on going without any clothes at all, or on the practice of an unorthodox marriage system, or none at all, I should regard it as my duty to say nothing and co-operate with the woodsaw.

But the experience of Ruskin colony demonstrates that neither is the industrial question the most difficult of solution nor is its solution the answer to any other problem. The bread and butter question was eliminated from the life of the colonist, who was assured of enough to eat and wear the year around. He also had books, papers, music, theatricals, and social amusements. And yet he found these worriments had been disposed of only to make room for others and to give him more leisure to discuss them. The despised subsidiary reforms, which he was accustomed to say could be safely left to evolution and the resolving influence of commercial prosperity, now began to assert themselves; and he was surprised to find them as serious and as far from settlement under socialism as under competition. Then he made the mistake of inserting the stopper instead of enlarging the orifice for the egress of thought on these topics, and the inevitable explosion followed, rending the community. I have heard people say that if freethought means free love or anarchy they don't want any of it, and I presume that there were colonists in Ruskin who said that if co-operation meant those things with bloomers to boot, competition was good enough for them. I have said to freethinkers who talked in this way that they were bound to accept the result of freethought or repudiate the principle, and so I should imagine a good co-operator ought to be satisfied with the condition of things produced by bringing a lot of co-operators together in a community, or else give up the system.

The "Journal," speaking on behalf of state socialism, pronounces the doom of colonies by asserting "the little isolated community which can be ruined by half a dozen disaffected members has never been a success, and in the very nature of things never can be so." I should guess that in the nature of things a community which prescribes the clothes, the opinions, and the conversation of its members, without any authority from its charter for doing so, would not need to look elsewhere for the cause of its disruption; whereas, with entire freedom of choice in these matters, and with nothing restrained except conduct unbecoming a co-operator, there could be no failure unless co-operation itself should not prove a success. I am sorry for the Ruskin dupes, but if the cause of the trouble is as stated in the "Journal," the "preventers" will draw from liberal people only such sympathy as happens to get misplaced.

The Consensus of Public Opinion.

From "Women and Economics."

In a "Handbook of Proverbs of All Nations," a collection comprising many thousands, these facts are to be observed: first, that the proverbs concerning women are an insignificant minority compared to those concerning men; second, that the proverbs concerning women almost invariably apply to them in general,—to the sex. Those concerning men qualify, limit, describe, specialize. It is "a lazy man," "a violent man," "a man in his cups." Qualities and actions are predicated of man individually, and not as a sex, unless he is flatly contrasted with woman, as in "A man of straw is worth a woman of gold," "Men are deeds, women are words," or "Man, woman, and the devil are the three degrees of comparison." But of woman it is always and only "a woman," meaning simply a female, and recognizing no personal distinction: "As much pity to see a woman weep as to see a goose go barefoot." "He that hath an eel by the tail and a woman by her word hath a slippery handle." "A woman, a spaniel, and a walnut-tree,—the more you beat 'em, the better they be." Occasionally a distinction is made between "a fair woman" and "a black woman"; and Solomon's "virtuous woman," who commanded such a high price, is familiar to us all. But in common thought it is simply "a woman" always. The boast of the profligate that he knows "the sex," so recently expressed by a new poet,—"The you an' 'cap with the White"; the complaint of the angry rejected that "all women are just alike!"—the consensus of public opinion of all time goes to show that the characteristics common to the sex have predominated over the characteristics distinctive of the individual,—a marked excess in sex distinction.

From the time our children are born, we use every means known to accentuate sex-distinction in both boy and girl; and the reason that the boy is not so hopelessly marked by it as the girl is that he has the whole field of human expression open to him besides. In our steady insistence on proclaiming sex-distinction we have grown to consider most human attributes as masculine attributes, for the simple reason that they were allowed to men and forbidden to women.

An Infamous Verdict.

"Co-operator."

Another martyr has been added to the cause of human liberty. Paul Corcoran, the secretary of the Miner's Union of Burke, has been found guilty of murder in the second degree and sentenced to seventeen years in prison, in spite of the fact that it was clearly proven that he was not at Wardner.

The jury were picked to convict, and the judge (another Gary) charged them that no matter if Corcoran was not there, things he was alleged to have said was inciting to violence and murder and he was guilty of murder even if some one else did the deed. This is curious law and infamous justice.

The effect can only be to push on the social evolution, as the death of martyrs always has done. While Corcoran is not physically dead, his incarceration for seventeen years is a living death. It must have its effect in Idaho in making the working people unite and elect a successor to the Stoughton jug, Stuenberg, who will release Corcoran.

Moral: Steal a Million.

New York "World."

Nellis Martin, who was convicted on Wednesday of stealing 15 cents, was sentenced to the penitentiary for three years.

But Captain Oberlin M. Carter, U. S. A. who stole $1,600,000 nearly five years ago, and was convicted unanimously by a court of fourteen brother officers, is still at liberty, enjoying the luxuries of life in a fashionable New York club, and drawing full pay from the army.

VARIOUS VOICES.

R. C. A., Blue Hill, Me.: I enclose $1 for Karezza. There is a Miss Harman here and I was talking to her of your father and you yesterday. "I love to tell the story" of heroism and devotion to principle that you both exemplify.

C. B., Scarsdale, N. Y.—For the enclosed, please send to me the book of Comrade Lloyd, called "Songs of the Unblind Cupid," edition de luxe; (does it look like thirty cents? to use New York slang.) I have taken a long time—odd times—to read "Hilda's Home," like it hugely but find short times to read it; would like to read and criticise it. Mrs. Graul must be a genius. Also send me "What the Young Need to Know." I do not see any advertisement of "Hilda's Home" in No. 767. Are they about sold out? Was much interested in that number. I note the request regarding aid in sending sample copies. Put the balance to my credit to that purpose if not due on my subscription.

[We still have a supply of "Hilda's Home." Price, in paper covers, 50 cents; in cloth, $1. We appreciate the assistance given for the purpose of distributing sample copies.]

Sadie E. Roberts, Bennington, Kansas—Enclosed find $1. for which continue our subscription to Lucifer. May it bear the light to many benighted minds and rescue slaves from bondage. Its cause—the cause of liberty—is sure to triumph. There shall be freedom in love as in all the other affairs of life. If the teaching of evolution is true, mankind must progress from the present marriage system into perfect freedom in the love relation. You are the martyr and pioneer in this reform, as was Bruno in the cause of religious freedom, and Garrison in the abolition of chattel slavery. The martyr never enjoys the glory while he is living but he can rest secure in the consciousness that the coming generations that shall reap the fruit of his labors will honor his memory, as yours will be honored in time to come.

Dr. Williams, Kalona, Iowa—I am gathering statistics of the primary cause of suicide, and all who have such intentions, please write, giving no name, but address, age, sex, and occupation, with cause of trouble. Also all who oppose trusts, send name to present to next congress. Some can get a number of names, giving their address. This is a free service on my part, and you can help. I will be out some time, but want to help humanity.

B. F. Brukk, Denver, Colo.:—It occurs to me that Mrs. Stetson should receive a just amount of good criticism on her "Woman and Economics." I do not like the "roast" "Liberty" gives her. She looks on woman as an economic factor—an evolutionary process developed through and by conditions. From a purely biological standpoint Mrs. Stetson is correct. The one error to me, is as usual, her remedy. She finds the state a solution for the evil—we find the solution in the abolition of the state. Mrs. Stetson, according to "Liberty," contends that "we would have to support the state. In those sentiments I find my only grounds for protest.

There is so much of the tendency to decry a man and his philosophy because his philosophy is not all good; to say it is all bad is as much the other extreme as can be. Mrs. Stetson's fundamentals are biology and evolution. It does not necessarily follow that her reasoning must be sound. "Grant me my premises, and I will prove my position." says the socialist. Not so. One's premise does not engender logical reasoning. Her fallacy is in reasoning toward a state instead of from it. It may be due to women's long oppression that they inadvertently tend toward authority. Certainly it can not grow out of a logical line of reasoning. Fundamentally liberty is the premise. Our philosophy is based on evolution—Mrs. Stetson's one cry is of oppression. Why, then, does she seek more oppression? Nevertheless she reasons well as far as she goes. Her error may be due to environment. it can't be a result of deep study or concise thought.

WOMEN and ECONOMICS,

A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women. By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Here are a few of the page headings of this remarkable work: "Economic environment; The dependence of women; No inherent disability of sex; Marriage not a partnership; House service as a livehood; Motherhood and economic production; Modification to maternity; The usefulness of sex; Differentiation of sex; Sex and humanity; The peacock's tail; Sex distinctions; The eternal feminine; unreasoning devotion; Women as persons; Race-attributes and sex-attribute; The normal child; Personal profit and sex-relations; The influence of heredity; The young man and the young woman; The effect of custom; The sex relation personal; Innocence and ignorance; Marriage with independence; The increasing difficulty of marriage; Supporting one's family; Virtue and vice; The results of repression; The harm that women do; The development of love; The hope for the future; The martyr and the pioneer; The dropping of the bars; The meaning of the new woman; Motherhood in education; A criminal failure; Marriage and the family; Love's young dream; The heart and the stomach; Socializing the household industries; The stomach as a family tie; The servant wife; World-servants and house-servants; A wider maternity; Between the old and the new; "The vices of the slave;" The outgrown stronghold. Printed on strong, heavy paper; 350 pages, bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale by M. Harman, 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

775.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

must claim soon the attention of all who desire good to the whole race. Social questions involve those of family and health morals and rights, labor and money, so the people are learning and will rise to the occasion.

Special Offer!

Following is a list of valuable books which we will sell during August and September at just one half the regular publisher's price if ordered in lots amounting to one dollar or more. This unusually liberal offer is made because receipts of the office are always lower in the summer than at any other time of the year. The books could not be sold for these prices if it were not for the fact that many of them have been donated to Lucifer by generous friends to aid in its work of education. Pick out the books you want in the list below to the amount of two dollars and send us just ONE HALF the price marked and the books will be sent to you promptly, free of postage.

Ideala. By Sarah Grand. This is the story of a woman too thoughtful, too honest, too true for the conventional "middle class" English society in which she lived. Her life story furnishes much food for thought for those who like to study the facts of life when disguised as fiction. Handsomely bound in cloth. 195 pages. .40

The Story of an African Farm. Olive Schreiner's masterpiece. Chapter titles: Part I. Shadows from child-life; Plans and Bushman paintings; I was a stranger and ye took me in; Blessed is he that believeth; Sunday services; Bonaparte Blenkins makes his nest; He sets his trap; He catches the Old Bird; He sees a ghost; He shows his teeth; He snaps; He bites; He makes love. Part II: Times and seasons; Waldo's stranger; Gregory Rose finds his affinity; Lyndall, Tant' Sannie holds an upsitting and Gregory writes a letter; A Boer wedding; Waldo goes out to taste life, and Em stays at home and tastes it; The "Kopje"; Lyndall's stranger; Gregory Rose has an idea; An unfinished letter; Gregory's womanhood; Dreams; Waldo goes out to sit in the sunshine. Bound in cloth. 398 pages. .40

Our New Humanity, No. II. Part of the contents: The Prodigal Daughter, or the Price of Virtue, by Rachel Campbell; Pioneer Chips. Extracts from the private letters of Rachel Campbell, by M. Florence Johnson; Marriage, What It Was and Is—Will the coming woman marry? By "X." (M. Harman); Reminiscences of the Long Ago, II., III. and IV. By Lucy N. Colman; The Ascent of Life, by Moses Harman; Legal Wifehood, by Lucinda B. Chandler; Whose is the Child? by Lex; Tombstone Texts. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. III. Part of the contents: The Unwomanly Woman, by Lizzie M. Holmes; That Great Fraud Yclept Society, by Moses Hull—with comments by his daughter, M. Florence Johnson; Normal Sexual Action, by Ernest Winne; Evolution of Familism, by Albert Chavannes; Virgin Soil, (story); Love in Liberty, by J. Wm. Lloyd; Reminiscences of the Long Ago, V., VI., by Lucy N. Colman; At What Age? 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. IV. Contents: The Abolition of Marriage, by John Beverly Robinson; Isabel's Intention, (story) by Mariette; Reminiscences of Berlin Heights, by A. Warren; The Sexes and Love in Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; A Woman-Child, by J. Wm. Lloyd; Burmese Women; The Great Conflict, by James F. Morton, Jr.; "The Truth About Love," by Moses Harman; Reminiscences—Then and Now, by Moses Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. V. Contents: Priestly Celibacy, by A. L. Rawson; Sex Love Analytically Defined, by Ernest Winne; The Other Side, by May Clifford Hurd; The Incoherence of Transition, by E. C. Walker; The Greatest Sin, (an allegory,) by R. B. Kerr; Our New Savior—the Surgeon, by C. T. Brown; Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; To Man, (poem) by Charlotte Perkins Stetson; Motherhood in Freedom, by M. Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. VI. Contents: Woman's Primal Right, by Francis Barry; The Curse of Maternity, From the French of Henry Fevre; How to Escape the Curse, by Jonathan Mayo Crane; Can Marriage be Abolished? by Albert Chavannes; Woman's "Duty" to Bear Children, by E. C. Walker; Love's Law, by William Francis Barnard; The Freedom Not to Do, by C. L. Swartz; True and False Morality, by C. L. James; Wanted: A New Adam; A Brood Mare, (poem) by Charlotte Perkins Stetson; Life, Health and Longevity, by Moses Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. VII. Contents. The Rights of Children, by R. B. Kerr; Incineration, by Walter Breen; What Are Women Here For? by E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.; What the Young Need to Know—A Primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker; The New Martyrdom, by Lillian Harman; The Will, (story, from the French of Guy de Maupassant; A Free Man's Creed, by Moses Harman. .25

Leaflets by Austin Kent. Conjugal Love, the True and False; A Letter to a Magdalene; My Creed, or What Believe and What I Know; An Open Letter to Andrew Jackson Davis, or, What I Call Conjugal Love; A Letter to My Atheistical Bretheren. Each, 3 cents; the lot, .12

A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers, by Henry D. Thoreau. Bound in cloth; 356 pages. .40

Ruled by the Tomb; A Discussion of Free Thought and Free Love, by Orford Northcote. .10

The Dawn of Civilization; or, England in the Nineteenth Century, by J. C. Spence. With portrait of author. 190 pages. .25

What the Young Need to Know,—A Primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. .10

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY. Co-educational. Send for catalog. A. E. Gammage, President. 167 Dearborn St., Chicago.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controuled maternity.
"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.
"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.
Sample pages free Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

Free Love: A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of consubtal love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 1871, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence. 160 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 167 Carroll Ave., Chicago

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

LOVE AND THE LAW. By E. C. Walker. A clear, concise statement of social liberty in contradistinction to the much lauded legal bondage now almost universally upheld. An excellent missionary document. Two copies, 5 cents; 30 cents per dozen.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 42. 33 CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, AUGUST 26, E. M. 299. [C. E. 1899.] WHOLE No. 776.

The Solitude of Self.

The loneliest thing in this lonely sphere
Is self, in its prison of flesh and bone;
Between the closest of comrades here
Is a wall as thick as a wall of stone.

There are thoughts we think that we cannot tell
To any being of woman born,
For the fetters of language they repel
And spurn with a proud, quick, restless scorn.

. . . . . .

When skies at sundown are splashed with fire
A vivified vision mine eyes behold,
And I look with a look of rapt desire
On castles of glory and cliffs of gold.

Where seas of jasper in jewels break
On shoals of beauty and shores of bloom,
Where never and never a heart shall ache
On the awful verge of an open tomb.

I try to mutter the thoughts that come
To me in the hush of the half light then;
But ah! my lips are dumb, and dumb
To me are the lips of my fellow men.

And thus I struggle my love to speak,
Its infinite secret I cannot name—
For words are pulseless and cold and weak,
And wanting the force of the vital flame.

No matter if I should cry and call
Till my tones went tinging unto the stars
Man could not hear me—for, O, the wall
Between us forever! It bars—it bars!

. . . . . .

Thus lonely, ah! lonely each wends his way
To the shadows and silence and never knows
The souls that walk with him day by day
To the restful palace and last repose.

—Will Hubbard Kernan.

The Character of a Free Lover.

BY C. L. JAMES.

(Continued.)

It is indeed, true, and Mr. Arnold has not failed to observe that many free lovers, among whom he mentions John Stuart Mill, for reasons sufficient to themselves, observe in practice, the letter of the Seventh Commandment. Nay, the free lover, as such, has no quarrel with the letter except that it falls short of the spirit. For the letter of the Seventh Commandment is only "Thou shalt not commit adultery." Now adultery in common, if not in statute, law, means something hypocritical and secret. Variety in love is not adultery, nor is free love necessarily variety in practice. But let me be clearly understood. With emancipation of the spirit, the letter ceases to be a commandment. Those who would enforce an external rule, either legally, or through what is called public opinion, are not free lovers. The point is worth dwelling on, because, among notable precursors of free love, there were many, principally persons of Swedenborgian or Spiritualistic views, who believed in predestined and eternal partnerships of two only, and denounced variety in love quite after the fashion of mere conservatives. These persons have done a great deal of good. Their principle, though in my judgment mistaken, was not, like the Philistine one, immoral. They had an honest hatred of prostitution—of mercenary connections, by whatever law cemented—and did much towards exposing the horrors and hypocrisies of merely arbitrary ethics. That they were not free lovers is, however, too plain. When they realize that free love means toleration of variety, they are safe to be found allying themselves with the Lust Power again. They prefer something else to the liberty of woman. The true free lover prefers that to everything else.

Of course, it is involved in liberty that every man and woman shall be free to choose his and her own associates; nor can I imagine a more suitable reason for declining any one's acquaintance than that his habitual conduct about the relations of the sexes displeases the person who does so. But he who makes it a rule to cut acquaintances already marked by deviation from established "form" as soon as he knows them to be so marked, does not choose his own associates. He lets Mrs. Grundy choose them for him; and like other slaves of Mrs. Grundy, he assists to enslave his neighbors. The difference is similar to that between taking one's own custom from a tradesman whom the person doing so dislikes, and entering into the prosecution of a "boycott." No one can be questioned for the former proceeding. The other is a conspiracy. Now no one knew better than Matthew Arnold that Philistinism is exactly such a conspiracy: and he would certainly have acknowledged that its modus operandi in such cases was arbitrary. He would not have confounded the morality of a Shelley with that of a Lothario. Nor has such confusion ever been even customary among the cultivated class in any country, nor among the proletariate. It belongs very strictly to Philistia. We get a little away from justice and back to prudence if we notice any attempt at defending the ethics of Philistia on the ground of general utility.

"The world must be peopled, and marriage is favorable to propagation": "there must be some civil law regulating the relations of the sexes for the children's sake." Ah! "Marriage is favorable to propagation." It is, indeed—a great deal too favorable. Did the man who urges this argument against free love ever bear of Malthus? There is just as much danger that the human race will be extinguished in consequence of the free love propaganda as that those physicians who expose the evils of gluttony will teach rich gluttons to starve themselves to death! Nothing could be less favorable to propagation than the law of the lowest savages, among whom every woman is required to gratify every man upon demand—nothing, I mean, which ever actually existed. Yet, in spite of this law the human race has increased. It has increased, in all ages, to the point of "pressure against the limits of subsistence"; and has been kept within them only by the ghastly agencies of war, famine and pestilence. The desires of the woman, even in her primitive state of slavery and prostitution, have proved quite sufficient to insure not only the continuation of the species but the operation of positive checks upon its increase. The only hope of substituting the preventive check for the positive is free love; and free love in a society of enlightened, sensible, self-supporting women, such as we are now beginning to see.

That a civil law is needed for the care of children would seem plausible, if there ever had been a law which actually contributed to that result. But there never has; and, so far as we can judge the unknown by the known, there cannot be. The most apparently sensible civil laws for that purpose are those of a few states in which a man before he can marry, must show that he can support a family. But their only practical effect has been to increase illegitimacy. A law which, while it leaves every man free to marry, imposes on him the obligation of supporting his children, if he can, is simply a bait to lure women into a trap. The one sure way of reducing the number of unprovided for children to a minimum, is that women, trained, as they now commonly are, to useful callings, should understand that they themselves, not Providence, nor the State, nor some man who may be dead or a pauper any day, must look to the consequences of actions which they are no longer required to do.

Finally, the spirit of the Seventh Commandment requires, as we have said, that the sexual appetite shall be restrained within those limits set by delicacy. And here again, the free lover finds himself at first on very solid ground. For what can be more immodest, as well as more unhygienic and unjust, than that a woman shall be required to satisfy any man when she would rather not? We need no better testimony than our enemies. They call a publication exposing these abuses of the marriage system, "obscene literature." He that doeth evil, hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest its deeds should be reproved.

But again, it will probably be acknowledged by every one that public mercenary prostitution is in the highest degree immodest. Now public mercenary prostitution is essential to the security of the marriage system. In Mr. Lecky's "History of Morals," and Sanger's "History of Prostitution," we may read how eminent Catholic sovereigns, such as Louis IX. of France (Saint Louis), and Maria Theresa, have, from time to time, exerted themselves by no means unsuccessfully, to put down prostitution, and how they repealed their edicts after a while because experience taught them that, in putting down prostitution, they were putting down marriage also. To suppress prostitution, for a time at least, is, as these valuable experiments show, by no means impossible. But it can be done only at the expense of increasing "private irregularities" to an extent incompatible with the marriage relation. The choice, as Saint Louis and Maria Theresa found, is between free love on one side, marriage and prostitution on the other.

That there is a chronic feud between marriage and prostitution by no means proves that the former can do without the latter. They are kindred methods of enslaving and exploiting womanhood, which can be done only on condition that the grosser one, at least, exist. Their quarrel is only about division of the spoil. Saint Louis and Maria Theresa, being bigots of a legal and sacramental system, came at last to say:

"We must tolerate prostitution since experience proves it necessary to the security of marriage."

The free lover says: "I will fight against prostitution to the last drop of my blood; and if marriage cannot do without it, let them perish together!"

Which sentiment sounds the more like "morality touched with emotion"? Do I mean, then, to say that free love would immediately extinguish prostitution? No, I admit that prostitution existed before marriage, and, therefore, can exist without marriage, though marriage cannot exist without prostitution, as Saint Louis and Maria Theresa proved. What I do mean to say is that free love would put prostitution in the way of extinction, while marriage must, and does, preserve it.

The marriage system requires that men, in consideration of obedience, shall support their wives. Lest this should not be a sufficient inducement for women to marry, the system always, until it begun to decline, required that women should be taught no other means of support than attracting men. But, since men were required to support their wives, which is somewhat expensive, and since the number of men nearly equals that of women; there always have been a considerable proportion of men who did not choose to marry and a considerable proportion of women who could not. Among the latter, those least attractive were left to pine. But such as possessed beauty and ardor found, in the desires of men who did not choose to marry, a ready market for those charms which the marriage system had rendered their only stock in trade. Yet that marriage preserves prostitution is not more evident, to one who will consider facts with the calmness of an economist or evolutionary psychologist, than that free love must gradually extinguish prostitution.

Prostitution is very unfavorable to female fecundity. It is not the prostitutes who chiefly renew their kind. It is the employers of the prostitutes who perpetuate the breed by begetting daughters just fit for prostitutes, and sons who follow in their father's footsteps. And what enables these worn-out roues, when they have got tired of prostitutes and have acquired money, to marry women by whom they may expect offspring? The hot competition for rich husbands, by girls whom the marriage system has trained to that alone. The sexual conservative says that a reformed rake is the best husband. The free lover says that a rake is just fit to associate with a harlot saving, perhaps, an apology to the harlot. He is not fit to associate with a better woman; and so far as women become free, he loses all opportunity to associate with them. In that same proportion prostitution must become extinct, for want of men to demand and women to furnish it, q. e. d.

(To be continued.)

The Centralization of Industry.

BY R. B. KERR.

An argument with Edgar D. Brinkerhoff presents the same difficulties as an argument with the late H. P. Blavatsky. Madame Blavatsky began by denying the law of gravitation, and the whole superstructure of modern science; thus compelling her opponents either to be silent, or to begin at the very beginning of human knowledge. Mr. Brinkerhoff denies all economic history, all modern economic theory, Herbert Spencer's law of universal evolution, and the common experience of all mankind. Then he leaves me to answer him in two columns of Lucifer.

For many years all writers and thinkers, except Mr. Brinkerhoff, have agreed that the centralization of industry conduces to economy and efficiency. Two centuries ago the cloth of which the coats of our ancestors were made was woven by the farmer's wife from the wool of her husband's sheep. Every step in the manufacture was taken by her alone. A hundred and twenty years ago the same cloth was made by twenty or thirty hands in a small factory, each worker attending only to one of the many processes which the wool had to go through in its transition into cloth. In our time hundreds are collected in one factory, each attending to one process only, and all the looms being driven by a common steam power. During the same period most other industries have undergone the same change. Two centuries ago the beer, the whiskey, the stockings, the shirts, of the family, were all made at home; today they are made in large factories with costly plants, where numbers work together under one head.

As to the cause of this change, all economists except Mr. Brinkerhoff are agreed. They all say it was due to centralization, which saved power and made division of labor possible. Adam Smith, in his famous chapter on the division of labor, shows how immensely productivity is increased by confining each worker to one process, instead of letting everyone do everything. He tells us how it takes twenty or thirty men even to make a pin, and how greatly the output of pins has been thus increased. Later economists tell us how, after the introduction of steam power, hundreds were collected in one building, because it was cheaper to generate one steam power for a hundred looms in one building, than a hundred steam powers for looms in a hundred different buildings. Herbert Spencer has shown that this is only a particular case of the law that runs through all nature, from the phenomena of astronomy to those of Sociology. He has shown that evolution is nothing but a continuous process of specialization, a movement "from an indefinite, incoherent homogeneity to a definite, coherent heterogeneity," and that centralization is a necessary condition of specialization; in other words, that integration and differentiation are inseparable.

To those who adopt the above theory of evolution the formation of trusts is easily explained. Trusts are formed to secure greater concentration of capital, with the economy and efficiency therefrom resulting. They are formed to bring together a greater aggregate of labor, in order that there may be a greater division of labor. They are formed to make one big factory building do instead of a dozen small ones; to make the great water powers of the country do their full complement of work, instead of lying half idle while inferior ones are used throughout the land; to employ expensive machinery beyond the means of the individual; to economize clerical labor; and in short to accomplish every economy which is made possible by centralization and its accompanying specialization.

To Mr. Brinkerhoff the above is all moonshine. He apparently believes that but for the wiles of bankers and the extortions of landlords, the farmer's wife would still be weaving the cloth and brewing the beer that the world consumes. He thinks that in free society every man will have a little business of his own, and run it without hired help of any kind. One will have a little iron foundry in his house, which he will work himself, and another will have a pocket linen factory; and before these potent competitors the great trusts and centralized industries will vanish like smoke. Well, well! all men have their hobbies.

Mr. Brinkerhoff lays great stress on the superiority of one man managing his own business to the hired manager of a syndicate. But that does not affect my argument about the centralization of industry, because one man may centralize industry, and kill competition just as well as a company. Take Sir Thomas Lipton, who is about to compete for the America's cup. He started with $400 and began to sell ham and bacon in a shop in Glasgow. In twenty years he had cleaned up $20,000,000 and owned 400 provision stores in the British Isles, and had ruined innumerable competitors. What did it matter to those competitors whether they were ruined by the competition of one man or by a joint stock company? The essential point is the centralization of business, which is every where ruining the small competitor, and can only end when all industries have been centralized into one. This centralization is quite independent of land systems, money systems, and tariffs, and inevitably follows from free competition. It is, in fact, competition committing suicide.

Mr. Brinkerhoff wants a case "in which men have successfully combined against the individual without government aid." The whole history of joint-stock companies is a case in point. For hundreds of years they were entirely illegal, and forbidden to hold land, collect debts, or exercise any legal powers. It was only in 1825 that they began to get legal recognition in England. Yet so great is the power of combination that even three centuries ago these illegal associations were beginning to fleece the public, causing Sir Edward Coke to remark that they had neither bodies to be kicked, nor souls to be damned.

In the town in which I live there are twenty-two hotels, all of which, I think, run dining rooms. Last March the hotel keepers met together and agreed to raise the price of board from $7 to $9 a week, apparently without any reason but the desire for gain. That combine remains unbroken. Four of the hotels have started subsequently, but all adopted the $7 tariff.

In a village of British Columbia there was one store, and it sold goods at very high prices. It charged a dollar for four cans of of the Reindeer brand of condensed milk. A disciple of Mr. Brinkerhoff opened a rival store and began to sell five cans for a dollar, thinking he could get the trade. So he did for a few days, until the first merchant posted a placard that he would sell six cans for a dollar. Back came the trade to him; along came the second merchant to talk matters over; and next day they were both selling four cans for a dollar.

If Lucifer will give me the space, I will fill all its issues to the end of the year with authentic cases of free combinations, unaided by law or government, which have fleeced the public by combination alone.

The Power of Custom.

Fontenelle, a writer of the last century, shrewdly remarked that "all nations made the astounding part of their myths while they were savage, and retained them from custom and religious conservatism." For, as Walter Bagehot argues in his brilliant little book on Physics and Politics, and as all anthropological research goes to prove, the lower races are non-progressive both through fear and instinct. And the majority of the members of higher races have not escaped from the operation of the same causes. Hence the persistence of coarse and grotesque elements in speculations wherein man has made gradual approach to the truth of things; hence, too—the like phenomena having to be interpreted—the similarity of the explanation of them. And as primitive myth embodies primitive theology, primitive morals, and primitive science, the history of beliefs shows how few there be who have escaped from the tyranny of that authority and sanctity with which the lapse of time invests old ideas.

Dissatisfaction is a necessary condition of progress; and dissatisfaction involves opposition. As Grant Allen puts it, in one of his most felicitous poems:

> If systems that be are the order of God,
> Revolt is a part of the order.

Hence a stage in the history of certain peoples when, in questioning what is commonly accepted, intellectual freedom is born.—Edward Clodd, "The Pioneers of Evolution," 2.

Of the non-progressiveness of the lower races, of which Mr. Clodd writes, "Harper's Magazine" incidentally gives the striking illustration which follows:

"The Haitian is a wonderful example of conservatism. What was, must be right. A few years ago the town of Port de Paix, owing to an unexpected progressive spirit on the part of the Government, constructed some fine water works. The town was well piped, with hydrants at short distances on all the streets. Decorative fountains were placed in the squares, drinking places for man and beast everywhere. The natives, as usual, took not the slightest interest in this important and necessary undertaking. At last, when completed, in accordance with the custom of the country, the water system was opened with a series of fetes. The whole section of the country had a hilarious holiday—balls, processions, cockfights, &c. When these were all over the natives came to the conclusion that the water works must have been built to give an excuse for them, and the water works were to longer of any service, so they promptly smashed the whole system and returned to carting the city's water from the distant river by ox teams. Now they tie their animals to the hydrants, fall over the fragments of the pipes scattered round the streets, and are happy."

Those who cavalierly reject the theory of Evolution, as not adequately supported by facts, seem quite to forget that their own theory is supported by no facts at all. Like the majority of men who are born to a given belief, they demand the most rigorous proof of any adverse belief, but assume that their own needs none.—Herbert Spencer, in 1852.

The equal suffragists have yet to learn that a weapon of invasion cannot become an instrument of liberty merely by being doubled up.—Lizzie M. Holmes, in "Liberty."

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL. AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN. EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper in t has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

Our Special Summer Offer.

Several more valuable books have been added this week to our special summer offer of radical literarture at half price. Many orders have been received for sets of "Our New Humanity" and as the supply is limited, those who desire to secure sets for their libraries should order promptly before all are sold.

Never before has such an opportunity been given to purchase first class radical literature at so low a price. The offer will remain open only four weeks longer but some of the books may be out of stock before that time has expired. For that reason early orders will prevent disappointment.

Subscribers will confer a favor on the publisher of Lucifer, and at the same time help the cause of education in the principles of sexology, by calling the attention of their friends to this remarkably liberal offer.

Tenting in the Woods.

The sensations that come to him who swaps the brick and stone walls, the hard pavements, the close stifling air, of a large city for life in a canvas tent in the woods and hills, can better be imagined than described. One of the most noticeable effects of such change of environment upon the writer of these lines is development of an almost unconquerable disposition to shirk!—to shirk or shun everything that requires mental effort. Rest, rest, be lazy; sleep, dream; forget that there is or ever was such a thing as work or duty—this is the tendency, these the overmastering temptations to which I have largely succumbed for nearly two weeks last past.

But now the time of my sojourn at Mt. Pleasant Park encampment is about ended and I feel that it is due to those who have helped to bear the burden of keeping Lucifer's light burning while its editor is taking life easy, should have some report of what he has seen, heard and otherwise experienced during these two weeks of tenting in the woods and hills of Iowa.

Prominent among these experiences is a course of lessons in "Soul-Culture," given by Mrs. Tyler-Moulton, of Milwaukee, Wis. Mrs. Moulton's work is intended largely to develop what she denominates the "seven spiritual senses,"—clairvoyance, clairaudience, psychometry, etc. Though not a part of the general program of the campmeeting her classes have been generally speaking, well attended, and the consensus of those who have taken this course of lessons is that they are well worth the time and money spent in acquiring knowledge upon these hitherto-considered doubtful, if not visionary, subjects. Mrs. Moulton possesses rare qualifications as a teacher.

Of the "mediums for physical manifestations," Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Brown, trumpet and slate-writing mediums, whose home address is 3731 Langley Ave, Chicago, are among the more noted. A prominent feature of their work is that of seances for "materialization of hands and faces in full light." These seances are public, and given under what would seem the most absolute "test conditions." On several occasions I have served on the committee, as an honest skeptic, to examine the "cabinet" and to sit with the "medium" while the phenomena appeared, and the result of these investigations is the conviction that the phenomena are not produced by "collusion," or by the conscious action of what is now called the "objective mind", of the medium or operator. Some of these phenomena are as follow:

Appearance of hands at apertures in the cabinet; writing on slates by these hands in full view of the audience; presentation of genuine roses manufactured apparently for the occasion and in a few seconds of time; manipulation of the persons of those who are holding the hands of the medium, and taking articles from the pockets of these sitters and exhibiting them to the spectators; writing messages to each person in the audience on slates, single or double—the double slates being nailed, screwed or tied together by the owner thereof, marked with his private mark—with many other similar performances, all in full daylight. Longer messages are received through the mediumship of Mrs. Brown, written on slates, or upon paper placed between slates held by the sitter himself beneath a common pine table.

I am fully aware of the deep-seated prejudice existing in the minds of many readers, against investigations of this kind, prejudices founded upon the well-known fact that "fortune-tellers," "magicians," "fakirs"—religious and secular—have in all ages of the world played upon the ignorance and credulity of their dupes to get money from them and for the purpose of keeping the masses of people in subjection to priestly and kingly power.

But the fact that most wonder-workers are frauds does not prove them all to be such. If so, then the "wizard of Menlo Park," Edison, must be condemned as a fraud. The fact that many of the best-known and most respected teachers of physical science are today reckoned among the believers in the genuineness of what are called Spiritualistic phenomena—such men as Professors Crookes and Wallace of England, together with many leading scientists of this country, would seem to suggest the propriety of being very careful how we condemn everything we do not fully understand, or that leads to conclusions different from those we have hitherto regarded as incontrovertibly true.

Of the platform speakers who have entertained the campers and visitors I would mention the names of Prof. W. F. Peck, of St. Louis, President of the Association; W. P. Colby, of Lake Helen, Fla.; Mrs. Gladys Cooley, of Chicago; Mrs. Carrie Twing, of New York, and Dr. H. C. Andrews, of Jonesboro, Ind.

Wishing to get this letter into the mail before the departure of the carrier I will defer an account of the efforts made on the camp ground to extend Lucifer's work, until next week.

M. HARMAN.

Another Comstock Case.

Etta Semple writes us that Jesse N. Lee and Laura Chinn have been arrested for violating the U. S. Postal laws. The trial is set for the first week in September, and money is urgently needed. We have not learned particulars of the case. Money should be sent to Etta Semple, Ottawa, Kansas.

Woman's Freedom is Human Freedom.

BY LIZZIE M. HOLMES.

More than a week has passed since I wrote the lines which Mr. Harman calls "words of passion" "illogical" etc., and the great man whom I dared to criticise, has also passed away; and yet I cannot say I regret or take back any of them.

Mr. Ingersoll asked, "The question is, can we prevent the ignorant, the poor and the vicious from filling the world with their children?" Thus inferring that if we could prevent it we would gladly do so. He is not the only one who has expressed this thought. People have organized themselves into societies which advocate the establishment of legal boards to determine who shall marry and have children and who shall not. Even advanced men and women have imagined they were doing a good work in thus trying to dispose of human lives and happiness by the fiat of a fallible, imperfect "board." It is this idea, that we could trust the fates of the people in such autocratic hands, that has always made me indignant.

I criticised his declaration that the "poor" should not fill the world with their children, and that the class he calls vicious ought to be prevented from having children. I do so yet. The poor are the crushed and maimed victims of the conditions which produce millionaires at their expense. We have robbed them of everything else and would further rob them of the right to be happy in the way every living thing seeks enjoyment—in love, in devotion and self-sacrifice to offspring. The least we can do after making the "poor" is to keep our hands off their private affairs.

As to the "vicious"—there is a wide difference of opinion as to who the vicious are in society, and none of us would be safe if a board of all kinds of people were established. I'll warrant that from somebody's point of view you and I and Ingersoll, the preachers and every body else are "vicious."

Mr. Ingersoll does make the terms synonomous, in lumping the "poor, the ignorant and the vicious" in one lot as a set that ought, if it were only possible, to be eliminated. Oppositely, the rich, the wise and the virtuous may be saved and allowed to perpetuate themselves. He no where suggests that the three qualifications could be mixed, or that the viciousness and the ignorance might creep into the other side.

I said that I might say to the poor, it is best for you personally not to have children, as I would say to a crippled man he had better not try to walk when it hurts him so much. But it would be his crippled condition I would regret, not the fact that he still tried to exercise his natural functions.

I still believe that the children born under certain conditions are the best fitted to cope with those conditions. A finely organized, sensitive, highly strung individual would be happy in a world where there was no struggle, and all his artistic, poetical and harmonious instincts could be developed and nurtured. But if his excessive fineness is due to to a hotbed culture he will be able to do little when he is set out in the cold to fight his own way in a world that shocks and astounds him. The hot house plants make a nice little corner in a hot house, by themselves, but they would not thrive in a northern potato patch where all kinds of rough vegetation were struggling for existence. Some of the strongest men of history come from the ranks of the poor.

Not that I think that only the poor have strong, able children; the middle classes, who have comforts without the luxuries and idleness which weaken, produce the best children, physically and mentally. But the dissipations and heartlessness of the very rich are worse than poverty in their effects on offspring. And undue care, the hot bed process as it were, is not beneficial—there is danger in borning children too good for this world, as well as in bearing them too bad.

I do not advocate the "freedom of women" from the emphasized sexual standpoint of Lucifer and many other reformers. It is excuse enough for me, that a human being is robbed of her rights. I demand equal liberty on the grounds of human existence, no matter what the consequences are.

It is degrading to woman to be constantly dwelling on her sex nature and her sex functions. Let her be considered as a human being, let her rights as a human being be accorded, and her "functions" as well as man's will take care of themselves.

REPLY.

To iterate and reiterate substantially the same ideas in the same or nearly the same language; to "bandy" words back and forth, as school boys do their rubber balls in the game of that name, would seem a worse than useless waste of time and space. That all correspondents should have sufficient space in which to define their positions upon any subject upon which their ideas have been considered worthy a place in Lucifer, is doubtless true, but that personal controversies should be drawn out indefinitely, even when new matters are introduced, is contrary to the long-established policy of this paper.

The transcendent importance, however, of a right understanding of Lucifer's central work is perhaps sufficient reason for a brief restatement of our position on this matter.

1. Mrs. Holmes demands "equal liberty . . . . . no matter what the consequences are." Lucifer demands equal liberty for woman chiefly because of "consequences." If the denial of liberty—liberty of choice of co-operators, liberty of choice and of time and environment for bringing children into the world, were not fraught with such tremendous, such fateful consequences to woman herself, to her children and to mankind at large, we might pass over with little concern the fact that women have not all the political or other rights that are now accorded to men. Lucifer demands equal liberty for all human beings to exercise all their normal functions in a non-invasive manner, but we know that rights and privileges are commensurate, or should be commensurate, with duties and responsibilities, and because the duties and responsibilities that naturally devolve upon woman as woman are transcendentally greater than those which devolve upon man as man, Lucifer wants to see the rights of womanhood, including motherhood, vindicated—vindicated and practicalized mainly because, as some of us see it, only in this way can human rights be vindicated and practicalized.

2. It is not "degrading to woman," as some of us see it, to emphasize the importance of freedom to use her sex nature, her maternal functions, in the way and at the time her own judgment and highest and best intuitions dictate. There is nothing degrading in the fact of sex, in the thought of sex or in the exercise of sex functions. Only in the perversion of this fact, this thought, this exercise, is there or can there be degradation of womanhood; and through degradation of womanhood follows necessarily degradation of the race, since, as we see it, in more ways than one,

WOMAN IS THE RACE!

As the mothers, so are the sons and daughters. Woman is often spoken of as "the sex." It is because of the necessities of the specialization known as motherhood that the race is differentiated into feminine and masculine. "Sex contains all," says Whitman. Sex-reform contains all reforms, says Lucifer.

Mrs. Holmes believes that "children born under certain conditions are best fitted to cope with those conditions." Is this true of the very poor, of the submerged classes in our large cities? Is it true of the serfs of Russia, the pariahs of India, of the poorest and most degraded classes everywhere? Experience and observation return a most emphatic negative. Reformers, with very rare exceptions come from the middle classes, from neither very rich nor very poor, but oftener from the very rich than from the very poor. The Hindoo reformer, Buddha, was son of the king and heir to the throne.

It may be that I know nothing of logic. "There are few logical brains," it is said, and mine may not be one of the favored few, but if I know what logic is, it means natural sequence. It means that the conclusion must follow the premise, or the truth assumed or taken for granted. When the premise is false as to fact, or when the conclusion does not necessarily follow the premise, the reasoning is illogical. Mrs. Holmes' criticism of Ingersoll's utterance assumed that he was in favor of "legal boards to determine who shall marry and who shall not." This assumption was false to the fact, since Ingersoll declared that the evils complained of could not be cured by "law or force." If she did not so assume, then her argument did not apply to the text criticised, and was therefore illogical.

But the despair of logic is reached when our correspondent insists that lumping together "the poor, the ignorant and the vicious" makes these classes "synonymous." Suppose Ingersoll had added to these classes the "homely"—would they still be synonymous? Again, suppose I should say, John, James and Henry voted for McKinley and are therefore synonymous—all Republicans and responsible for the sins of the administration. John may be a Republican, a Methodist and a banker. James may be a Democrat, a Catholic and a bootblack. Henry may be a Populist, a freethinker and a farmer, and yet are all "synonymous" according to the logic of Mrs. Holmes, because they are lumped together in a certain arbitrary category.

As to "words of passion." From boyhood I have heard men who give way to anger use the words "damn," "damned," and "damnable"; hence I had come to regard these as peculiarly the language of the passion known as anger, and as anger is a short madness, I naturally attributed much that was incoherent and illogical to that source. I wish still to think such was the case, rather than that Mrs. Holmes' first letter was the result of dispassionate thought.

Once more I close by saying, "Judge not, lest thou be judged,"—or, as I heard it from the public platform the other day, "He who judgeth another must first sit in judgment upon himself, and as a man thinketh—of others—so is he himself."

M. HARMAN.

Card From F. J. Gould.

DEAR MADAM: I have seen your remarks on my "Freethinker" article concerning the death of the Vestal. Of course I do not approve of killing women for satisfying a natural and healthy passion. I simply recognized that the old Romans had a different standard. They believed the interests of the State required the death of the Vestal who loved; and if we grant that premise, it seems to me just that the (supposed) sinner should die herself, a d not some one in her place,—as is done in the Christian system.

I should myself punish no sexual action except rape and offenses against the young.

How Civilization Civilizes.

From "Le Jardin de Supplices." Translated for "Liberty."

Miss Clara attracted, excited many men; she had always about her a court of passionate adorers. I was not jealous, being certain that she looked upon them as ridiculous and that she preferred me to all the others. Among the most fervent were a French explorer, who was on his way to the Malay peninsula to study the copper mines there, and an English officer, whom we had taken on at Aden and who was returning to his post at Bombay. They were, each in his own way, two dense, but very amusing, brutes, of whom Clara was fond of making sport. The explorer never tired of telling of his recent journeys through central Africa. As for the English officer, a captain in an artillery regiment, he tried to dazzle us by descriptions of his inventions in gunnery.

One evening, after dinner, on the bridge, we had all gathered about Clara, who was reclining delightfully in a rocking-chair. Some were smoking cigarettes, others were dreaming. All of us had at heart the same desire for Clara; and all, with the same ardent thought of possession, followed the to and fro motion of two little feet encased in two little pink slippers, which, in the rocking of the chair, emerged from the perfumed calyx of her skirts like the pistils of flowers. We said nothing. And the night was of a fairy-like mildness. The vessel glided voluptuously over the sea as over silk. Said Clara to the explorer, in a mischievous voice:

"Then it is no joke? You have really eaten human flesh?"

"Why certainly!" he answered, proudly, and in a tone that established his indubitable superiority to the rest of us. "It was very necessary. One eats what he has."

"How does it taste?" she asked, in a tone of slight disgust.

He thought for a moment; then, with a vague gesture, he said:

"Mon Dieu! how shall I explain it to you? Fancy, adorable Miss, fancy the flesh of a pig slightly pickled in walnut oil" . . .

And, with a careless air of resignation, he added:

"It is not very good. A gourmet would not eat it for pleasure. I prefer mutton, you know, or beefsteak."

"Evidently!" consented Clara.

And, as if desiring, out of politeness, to lessen the horror of this cannibalism, entered upon distinctions:

"Undoubtedly because you ate only negro flesh?"

"Negro?" he cried, with a start. "Pah! Luckily, my dear Miss, I was not reduced to that stern necessity. We never lacked white men, thank God! Our escort was numerous, consisting largely of Europeans—Marseillais, Germans, Italians,—a little of everything. When we were too hungry, we slaughtered one of the escort—preferably a German. The German, divine Miss, is fatter than men of other races, and so yields more meat. And besides, for us Frenchmen, that is one German less. The Italian is dry and hard. He is full of nerves."

"And the Marseillais?" queried I, interrupting.

"Pooh!" declared the traveler, shaking his head, "the Marseillais is much overrated. He smells of garlic, and also—I don't know why—of grease. I can scarcely call him food for a feast. Just edible, that's all!"

Turning to Clara, with protesting gestures he insisted.

"But negro flesh, never! I believe I should have vomited. I have known people who had eaten it. It made them sick. The negro is not comestible. In some cases, I assure you, he is even poisonous."

But, out of scruple, he made a qualification:

"After all, one has to be an expert, as with mushrooms. Perhaps the negroes of India can be eaten?"

"No," affirmed the English officer, in a curt and categorical tone, that closed, amid laughter, this culinary discussion, which was beginning to turn my stomach.

The explorer, a little out of countenance, resumed:

"No matter! In spite of all these petty annoyances, I am very glad to be going back again. In Europe I am sick; I do not live; I don't know where to go. In Europe I feel like a beast in a cage. There is no elbow-room. It is impossible to stretch one's arms, to open one's mouth, without clashing with stupid prejudices, imbecile laws, iniquitous morals! Last year, charming Miss, I was walking in a wheat-field. With my cane I was beating down the ears about me. It amused me: I have a right to do what I please, have I not? A peasant ran up, shouting and insulting me, and ordered me to leave his field! Incomprehensible! What would you have done in my place? I struck him on the head three times with my cane—vigorous blows. He fell, with his skull split. Well, guess what happened to me?"

"Perhaps you ate him?" insinuated Clara, with a laugh.

"No; they dragged me before some judge or other, and I was sentenced to two months' imprisonment and a fine of ten thousand francs! For a dirty peasant! And they call that civilization! Is it credible? Well, thank you! If I had had to be so sentenced in Africa every time I killed a negro, or even a white man" . . .

"So you killed negroes also?" asked Clara.

"Why, certainly, adorable Miss!"

"For what reason, since you did not eat them?"

"Why, to civilize them. That is to say, to take from them their stores of ivory and rubber. And then, what do you expect? If the governments and business houses that entrust us with civilizing missions learned that we had killed nobody, what would they say?"

"To be sure," approved the Norman gentleman. "Besides, the negroes are wild beasts . . . poachers . . . tigers" . . .

"The negroes? What a mistake, my dear sir! They are gentle and gay. They are like children. Did you ever see rabbits playing in a field, in the evening, at the edge of a wood?"

"Undoubtedly!"

"They have pretty movements, mad frolics, polishing their skins with their paws, and leaping and rolling in the grass. Well the negros are like these young rabbits. It is pleasant to watch them."

"Yet it is certain that they are cannibals," persisted the gentleman.

"The negroes?" protested the explorer. "Not at all. In the country where the blacks live, the only cannibals are the whites. The negroes eat bananas and herbs. I know a savant who maintains even that negroes have the stomachs of ruminants. How do you expect them to eat meat, especially human meat?"

"Then why kill them?" I objected, for in contact with those coarse and cruel men, I felt myself becoming good and full of pity.

"Why, I told you,—to civilize them. And also to amuse ourselves a little. When, after marches and marches, we came to a village of negroes, they were greatly frightened. Immediately they set up cries of distress; they did not try to run away, so great was their fear, but wept, with faces buried in the ground. We distributed brandy among them,—for we always went well supplied with alcohol,—and when they were drunk, we massacred them!"

"A dirty use to put a rifle to," summed up the Norman hunter, not without disgust.

The night grew more and more dazzling. The sky was aflame. Around us rocked the ocean, in great sheets of phosphorescent light. And I was sad, sad over Clara, sad over these coarse men, and over myself and over our words which were an offense to Silence and Beauty.

"Do you know Stanley?" suddenly asked Clara of the explorer.

"Why, certainly; I know him," he answered.

"And what do you think of him?"

"Oh, he!" said he, with a shake of the head.

And, as if frightful recollections had just rushed into his mind, he finished in a grave voice:

"He, all the same, goes a little far!"

VARIOUS VOICES.

Sara C. Campbell, Roodhouse, Ill.—For the inclosed dollar please send "Karezza." If it really teaches a controlled maternity" it is the book I want, for I can not rest while there are so many undesired, and undesigned children, and women's lives made miserable through fear of maternity. Though free love is my ideal, I would if possible alleviate the burdens of the married.

—

Lillie D. White, 1035 N. Albany ave. Chicago—B. F. Brukk in last Lucifer says she does not like the culinary operation performed by "Liberty" on Mrs. Stetson's book. She says it deserves "good criticism" then proceeds to criticise very much in the same line she condemns. In my opinion, there are plenty of good things to be said about the book, without criticising its stateism, and B. F. Brukk's excuses for the author's weak reasoning is indeed "damning with faint praise." It seems to me she is only "basting" Mr. Tucker's "roast."

—

Anton Merakergaard, Sioux Falls, S. D.,—Pamphlets received, (Special Offer) and I am reading them with much interest. Rachel Campbell's letters to Florence Johnson brought tears to my eyes. Oh, what a world of darkness is there in the modern marriage relations. You are doing a great work for humanity. I intend to go to Norway in a few years and when I visit Chicago I will step in at Carroll ave. and shake hands with the managers of the bright Light Bearer. I got the full value for the money sent for pamphlets. I wish I had a thousand dollars to give Lucifer, but I am only a common laborer and cannot afford much at a time, but as my means permit I shall continue to send to you for books and pamphlets.

—

Hosea McCoy, Chicago—I trust you are receiving many responses to your special summer book offer. You certainly are affording the readers of Lucifer an opportunity to secure excellent radical literature at a very small cost. I shall be surprised if your supply of "Our New Humanity" is not exhausted soon, for it seems to me that every reader of Lucifer will want a complete set of that valuable magazine. You are offering it at half the original price and the other half will more than pay for binding it so it may be preserved. When the general public awakes to the importance of the study of sexology, sets of "Our New Humanity"—the pioneer magazine in that field—will command a high price.

[We cannot sell "complete sets" of "Our New Humanity" at half price, as we have a very few numbers of No. 1. We sell No 1 only when a complete set is ordered at full price. L. H.]

—

H. H., Miss.:—I have been watching the sex reform movement for some time but in our position we cannot be known in any public way as sex reformers. I will enclose fifty cents as a contribution to your work. It is small but maybe some time we can do more. Freedom in sexual matters must come before the race can advance and become civilized in reality; but I am sorry to say that most people are so densely ignorant about these things that sex freedom means nothing more to them than license to indulge in lewdness. I want to ask you what book you can recommend for a girl of twenty-three who has had one little experience that left a deep wound and she is now trying to crush out all sexual desire.

The book must not be too radical, it must be fascinating and yet show the purity and happiness in a free and right expression between men and women. Is there such a book published,—and its price? The girl is a strong character and liberal in many ways but is inclined to be bitter against all sexual relations because of past experience and if I could throw something in her way that would help her I would like to do so; but it must be something of just the right sort and not too radical, or else she will not read it.

I am one of those who have long admired you and your noble father for the brave true fight you are making and have often wished that I could aid you. It now appears that the time is not so very far distant when I can do so.

[If the young woman likes to read stories, "Hilda's Home" would perhaps be beneficial to her. (Price, in paper, 50 cents; in cloth, $1.) Probably the "Rights of Women," (price 50 cents) would also be useful to her. It is very well written, and interesting to any woman of even moderately "strong character."]

WOMEN and ECONOMICS,

A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women. By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Here are a few of the page headings of this remarkable work: "Economic environment; The dependence of women; No inherent disability of sex; Marriage not a partnership; House service as a livehood; Motherhood and economic production; Modification to maternity; The usefulness of sex; Differentiation of sex; Sex and humanity; The peacock's tail; Sex distinctions; The eternal feminine; unreasoning devotion; Women as persons; Race-attributes and sex-attribute; The normal child; Personal profit and sex-relations; The influence of heredity; The young man and the young woman; The effect of custom; The sex relation personal; Innocence and ignorance; Marriage with independence; The increasing difficulty of marriage; Supporting one's family; Virtue and vice; The results of repression; The harm that women do; The development of love; The hope for the future; The martyr and the pioneer; The dropping of the bars; The meaning of the new woman; Motherhood in education; A criminal failure; Marriage and the family; Love's young dream; The heart and the stomach; Socializing the household industries; The stomach as a family tie; The servant wife; World-servants and house-servants; A wider maternity; Between the old and the new; "The vices of the slave;" The outgrown stronghold. Printed on strong, heavy paper; 350 pages, bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale by M. Harman, 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

AZTEC CALENDAR.

Send 25 cents to C. A. Higgins, A. G. P. A., A. T. & S. F. R'y, Great Northern Bl'g, Chicago, for copy of Aztec Calendar, July to December. Contains six separate reproductions in colors (8 x 11 inches) of Burbank's Pueblo Indian portraits—the season's art sensation. Also engraved cover representing ancient Aztec calendar stone. A handsome and unique souvenir; edition limited: order early.

776.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

Only Five Weeks More!

Following is a list of valuable books which we will sell during the month of Sept. at just one half the regular publisher's price if ordered in lots amounting to one dollar or more. This unusually liberal offer is made because receipts of the office are always lower in the summer than at any other time of the year. The books could not be sold for these prices if it were not for the fact that many of them have been donated to Lucifer by generous friends to aid in its work of education. Pick out the books you want in the list below to the amount of two dollars and send us just ONE HALF the price marked and the books will be sent to you promptly, free of postage.

Ideala. By Sarah Grand. This is the story of a woman too thoughtful, too honest, too true for the conventional "middle class" English society in which she lived. Her life story furnishes much food for thought for those who like to study the facts of life when disguised as fiction. Handsomely bound in cloth. 195 pages. .40

Our New Humanity, No. II. Part of the contents: The Prodigal Daughter, or the Price of Virtue, by Rachel Campbell; Pioneer Chips. Extracts from the private letters of Rachel Campbell, by M. Florence Johnson; Marriage, What It Was and Is—Will the coming woman marry? By "X." (M. Harman); Reminiscences of the Long Ago, II., III. and IV. By Lucy N. Colman; The Ascent of Life, by Moses Harman; Legal Wifehood, by Lucinda B. Chandler; Whose is the Child? by Lex; Tombstone Texts. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. III. Part of the contents: The Unwomanly Woman, by Lizzie M. Holmes; That Great Fraud Yclept Society, by Moses Hull—with comments by his daughter, M. Florence Johnson; Normal Sexual Action, by Ernest Winne; Evolution of Familism, by Albert Chavannes; Virgin Soil, (story); Love in Liberty, by J. Wm. Lloyd; Reminiscences of the Long Ago, V., VI., by Lucy N. Colman; At What Age? 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. IV. Contents: The Abolition of Marriage, by John Beverly Robinson; Isabel's Intention, (story) by Mariette; Reminiscences of Berlin Heights, by A. Warren; The Sexes and Love in Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; A Woman-Child, by J. Wm. Lloyd; Burmese Women; The Great Conflict, by James P. Morton, Jr.; "The Truth About Love," by Moses Harman; Reminiscences—Then and Now, by Moses Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. V. Contents: Priestly Celibacy, by A. L. Rawson; Sex Love Analytically Defined, by Ernest Winne; The Other Side, by May Clifford Hurd; The Incoherence of Transition, by E. C. Walker; The Greatest Sin, (an allegory,) by R. B. Kerr; Our New Savior—the Surgeon, by C. T. Brown; Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; To Man, (poem) by Charlotte Perkins Stetson; Motherhood in Freedom, by M. Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. VI. Contents: Woman's Primal Right, by Francis Barry; The Curse of Maternity, From the French of Henry Fevre; How to Escape the Curse, by Jonathan Mayo Crane; Can Marriage be Abolished? by Albert Chavannes; Woman's "Duty" to Bear Children, by E. C. Walker; Love's Law, by William Francis Barnard; The Freedom Not to Do, by C. L. Swartz; True and False Morality, by C. L. James; Wanted: A New Adam; A Brood Mare, (poem) by Charlotte Perkins Stetson; Life, Health and Longevity, by Moses Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. VII. Contents. The Rights of Children, by R. B. Kerr; Incineration, by Walter Breen; What Are Women Here For? by E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.; What the Young Need to Know—A Primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker; The New Martyrdom, by Lillian Harman; The Will, (story, from the French of Guy de Maupassant; A Free Man's Creed, by Moses Harman. .25

Leaflets by Austin Kent. Conjugal Love, the True and False; A Letter to a Magdalene; My Creed, or What Believe and What I Know; An Open Letter to Andrew Jackson Davis, or, What I Call Conjugal Love; A Letter to My Atheistical Bretheren. Each, 3 cents; the lot, .12

A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers, by Henry D. Thoreau. Bound in cloth; 356 pages. .40

Ruled by the Tomb; A Discussion of Free Thought and Free Love, by Orford Northcote. .10

The Dawn of Civilization; or, England in the Nineteenth Century, by J. C. Spence. With portrait of author. 190 pages. .25

What the Young Need to Know,—A Primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. .10

Economics of Anarchy. A Study of the Industrial Type. By Dyer D. Lum. Paper, 60 pages. (Scarce) .25

Government Analyzed. By John R. Kelso, A. M. This book seeks to show that all governments, like all gods, are the mere personifications of mythical monsters invented by selfish and crafty men as instruments with which to rob and enslave the ignorant toiling masses. A book that is sure to open the eyes of governmentalists who read it. Bound in cloth; 520 pages; edition limited; 1.50.

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY. Co-educational. Send for catalog. A. E. Gammage, President. 167 Dearborn St., Chicago.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.
"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.
"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.
Sample pages free Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

Free Love: A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of conjugal love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 1871, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence 140 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 207 Carroll Ave., Chicago

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 35 cents.

LOVE AND THE LAW. By E. C. Walker. A clear, concise statement of social liberty in contradistinction to the much lauded legs bondage now almost universally upheld. An excellent missionary document. Two copies, 5 cents; 20 cents per dozen.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be FREE; must enjoy the full privilege of soliciting the love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrially."—Page 265. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A Cityless and Country-Less World," by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 450 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Love Ventures of Tom, Dick, and Harry. A Novel with an Affidavit And they were naked and not ashamed (Gen. ii, 25. 16 full-page French Art Illustrations. Illuminated covers 12mo ... paper, 25c.; boards, 50c.

Price 5 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. ~~33~~ 34 CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, SEPT. 2, E. M. 233. [C. E. 1899.] WHOLE No. 777

Unprofitable.

"Why stand ye here all the day idle?"

A hopeless, heartless human life,
Nerved with no valor for the strife
Against the evil that is rife,

And wasting in soul-sloth its lease
Of precious years,—nor finding peace
In such half-death, but strange increase

Of discontent and vague unrest,
Of listlessness and lack of zest,—
The self-tormentings of a breast

That findeth not its task—can feel
No honest warmth, no tireless zeal
For change of others' woe to weal:

A life of aspirations furled,
Of Self in petty Self deep-curled
Amid the struggles of a world:

A narrow mind; a gleamless eye
That hath no glance on earth, on high,
Save for the pleasures passing by:

A godless soul cased in a creed
Of specious form and barren deed,
Transgressed for Lust, subserved for Greed.

Safe bid in which it findeth well
To cry that all who doubt rebel;
To brand the Thinker, infidel;

A life like this, and thousands, aye!
And millions like it here today
Stand in the way! Stand in the way!

Arthur W. Gundry, in Belford's Magazine.

The Character of a Free Lover.

BY C. L. JAMES.

(Conclusion.)

While it is certain that rape or whoredom, matrimonial or otherwise, are contrary to modesty, it is by no means so clear that variety in love is. That most people think so is simply omne ignotum pro horribile. Sir John Lubbock tells us that a very intelligent Cingalese chief was "perfectly scandalized" on learning that in England each man had only one wife. It was, he said, just like the wanderoos (monkeys). This is exactly how these people reason who compare variety in love to the habits of inferior animals. They forget, like our Cingalese did, that all forms of sexual association may be found among such animals, and that all are found among men, because "man is the sum of all animals." If we inquire historically into the origin of our matrimonial law, we shall find, I think, that modesty had little to do with it.

The true reason polygamy disappeared among the Jews, and still earlier among the European nations, is that their policy was to concentrate the estates. In America, where an opposite one prevails, we have actually seen polygamy revive, notwithstanding the strongest prejudices. But the poet of Philistia is as unlikely as our Cingalese to give such shocking considerations their proper weight. He indulges, when he states his case, in that cheapest of all rhetoric, panegyric on existing custom. He declares that the pure in heart can love but one; that the passion which transfigures and glorifies a sensual lust is utterly destroyed by division; that the pathos and sublimity of human life has its center at the hearth stone, and, he must add, it he tell the truth, is summed up in the famous prayer, "Lord, bless me and my wife, my son John and his wife—us four and no more."

The historical inquirer is apt to take a different view. He knows that the idea of exclusive love has a traceable origin—that it became the motif of literature during the Crusades, when so many Christian damsels were pining for knights who had carried their tokens to the fields of Palestine, that it has been very much overdone, and is visibly ceasing to be popular. He sees that Col. Ingersoll's shrine, "the fireside" is simply unknown to immense populations by no means destitute of refinement, sensibility, and piety,—to all tropical nations, for example, and to the Greeks—; that its earliest synonym in letters is the Roman atrium—the one smoke-blackened room of an Italian hut—; that it implies a damp climate, an agricultural society, a low state of the arts. Free love is not what has "abolished the fireside"; it is furnaces and registers! "The home," with the chimney corner, over which the snow "floated joyfully" in windy weather—the picturesque log-cabin in the midst of a hundred and sixty acres, "fenced with two dogs," is going—at the centers of civilization it is already gone—not because the naughty free lovers have been talking, but because the progress of material civilization has substituted more comfortable ways of living, more sanitary, more cosmopolitan,—because there are boarding houses, "which no one will shoulder a gun to fight for;" because there are palatial hotels, restaurants, "flats;" telephones, laundries, bakeries, circulating libraries, railroads, confounding rus in urbe with urbes in rure; because the good wife whose shuttle merrily went flashing through the loom, has been superseded by the "hello girl," the stenographer, the teacher, the female physician, lawyer, minister; the authoress, inventrix!

It is without shame that I confess a hearty sympathy for the visible tendencies of social progress. Change, because it is change, may have its material inconveniences; it may do some violence to old and pleasant associations; it may involve some shocks to the principles. But, on the whole, I am not more persuaded that it promotes longevity, which can scarcely be denied, than that it also promotes wisdom, culture, humanity, morality. If any one chooses to keep for himself one feature of obsolete civilization I have no objection. If he cannot reconcile his heart to a love which will not be exclusive, by all means let him find one to suit him—if he can. Only I advise him, with Mr. Arnold, to follow the example of "Israel" and "consider well his ways."

The profession of exclusive love between one man and one woman must needs mean one of three things—a mere convenient and advantageous arrangement, which has now ceased to be convenient, a "grand passion," or a humbug. Now, a "grand passion," like that of the model knight errant, is, beyond question, as it always was, quite rare. Where it really exists, it is, like everything which comes from the "abysmal depths of personality," entitled to all reverence. But the affectation of it is detestable. Like everything unreal, it is haunted by the spectres of jealousy and fear. And it is to lay these phantoms of their own creation, not to secure the "grand passion" whose security is itself, that those who affect the "grand passion" but do not experience it, revile free love and justify assassination. How different the sincerity of the genuine free lover!

"True love in this differs from gold and clay,
That to divide is not to take away.
Like ocean, which the north wind breaks
Into ten thousand waves, and each one makes
A mirror of the moon—like some great glass,
Which did distort whatever form might pass,
Dasht into fragments by a playful child
Which then reflects its eyes and forehead mild;
Giving, for one, which it could ne'er express;
A thousand images of loveliness."

It has been a said that women are less capable of such love, and more susceptible to jealousy, than men. So far as this is true, it measures the backwardness of women, a consequence of their depressed condition and inferior education. No wonder women are more jealous than men, when their jealousy means fear of being cast off after they have been used up. But "the new woman" has no such fears.

In Arabia, any woman can have a divorce for the asking; but Arab women seldom avail themselves of that privilege. In America, women more often seek divorce than men. Speaking of divorce, however, I must say that though it ought to be as easy as marriage, it is not the free lover's recipe for trouble between those who love. That washing of dirty linen in public, is a vulgar, nasty, scandalous piece of business, which the law of marriage alone makes necessary; and with the law of marriage it would disappear. At its best, divorce implies cessation of love. But varietists do not cease to love.

"True love in this differs from gold and clay,
That to divide is not to take away."

The true, evolutionary theory of beauty, upon which the esthetic aspect of sexual morality depends, I take to be as follows. Man in his uncultured state is a brute with lower pains and pleasures than our own. He is the sum of all the animals. Like the tiger, he revels in blood, like the swine in gluttony, like the dog in those lusts which we call monstrous and unnatural. A person familiar, as Mr. Arnold was, with Grecian history, must know that many of these declining passions persist into quite high states of civilization. The primitive man's slight advantage in intelligence over the brute is but at the service of his appetite. Other animals treat their females with courtesy. Savages always regard theirs as chattels. Dog will not eat dog; but in all countries we find evidence of a time when man considered it a rule of economy to eat men. Yet as man even in his rudest state, has some advantage over the beast in power of deduction, he learns by degrees that as sundry actions to which he is much inclined are inexpedient and against that utilitarian virtue which is founded in prudence—as nearly the same actions are destructive of confidence, and thus against that social virtue which is founded in justice—so many are condemned by something in himself which he calls the sense of beauty and fitness, and the foundation of esthetic virtue. His pride rebels against slavery to the flesh. He is ashamed of having eaten till he vomited or drank till he lay like a log. This pride becomes modesty when it teaches, as it does especially in the relation of the sexes, that there is no shame about passions to which those who remember them owe reciprocal attachment; but that they may well be ashamed of having shocked each other, or made a ridiculous exhibition of obsession before unsympathizing eyes.

Well—the primitive man immediately makes a god of whatever he cannot explain. These strange new feelings,—remorse, shame—the workings of imperfectly developed conscience, are, of course, the voice of a potent deity who condemns his acts. But he already worships gods who inspire and bless them. He has sacrificed spoil to Mars that he may get more; he has offered turtle doves to Venus that he may enjoy sensual raptures in abundance. He is far from immediately adopting that new life which has just been suggested to him. Jehovah, at first very imperfectly distinguished from Moloch and Ashtoreth-Chemosh, has quite a long battle to fight with them after the distinction has become clear. But the man has begun to understand that his best gods, that is his best feelings, appreciate no sacrifice so highly as the crucifixion of his grosser appetites. And thus originate the sacraments of primitive religion, which are the beginnings of beautiful art. Thus, for they are without exception dramatizations of passion—excuses to the fiends of lust and blood for not making them real offerings or not so many such offerings as previously.

Ages before Aristotle, instinct taught the barbarian that passion is "purified" by thus throwing it into objectivity—a lesson which many a Philistine and Puritan moralist is far from having perfectly learned as yet. As soon as passion ceases to be a master and becomes a model for playful imitation, it ceases to debase the soul to the level of the body and begins raising the body to the level of the intellectual soul. The howl and dance of the Bacchante becomes the ode from which the Grecian drama sprung; the hideous idols of nations still totemic, become the inimitable creations of the Hellenic sculpture and the Italian painter's brush. And then, as Lecky has shown in such admirable detail, a time is reached when Art entirely detaches itself from superstition, when beauty is loved and cultivated for itself alone.

Among these sacraments handed down to us from a barbarous past, that of marriage is quite typical. The student of archæology immediately recognizes its softened emblems of phallus and cteis, of the capture and flight, the ravishing and the feud. As it is one of the most profitable among religious ordinances to the priests, and one of the chief strongholds of their power, they have always insisted upon its sanctity. Let us see what this amounts to.

In the earliest sacramental stage of morals founded upon taste, it was still the general law that every woman must gratify any man when required. But the warrior who brought a captive into the tribe might redeem her for himself—after she had been ravished. Therefore, if a man and a woman happen to love each other, their union, by mutual consent, requires for its propriety, a rehearsal of these ancient rites. The neighbors representing the the tribe, must be called together to see the groom put a ring on the bride's finger, symbolic of the copulation which Captain Cook saw actually performed in public; she must be kissed all round; he must carry her away for a honeymoon; her relatives must pelt him with old shoes; he must treat; they must set up a separate home; and, if she proves to have another lover, she relapses into the state of common property.

No doubt, all this was, in its time, a great improvement. But it does not quite satisfy the free lover. He considers the assemblage and the ring trick an indecorous survival of an indecent practice. He does not see why the lady should kiss any one unless she chooses. He cannot understand why her having a lover requires her to be parted from her parents. He is not content with a home which requires a brothel in the next street. It may have been in this that the idealization of love begun. But free love is ideal. It aspires to make the world a home, and does not regret the dissolution of private dwellings by modern co-operative methods.

The soul of the free lover is offended to find people think that because a woman loves him he must set up as a master to whom her service and obedience are due. He utterly repudiates the barbarous idea that she is a common chattel unless she belongs to somebody. Should she require protection—which, for a "new woman," is hardly likely—he thinks all her lovers pledged to furnish it, and is utterly unable to see why any one of them should be called unpleasant names, such as "cuckold" and "wittol."

These are survivals from the time when men's appetites were too gross, their tastes too coarse, their sense of what the strong owe the weak too slight, for them to comprehend attachment not founded on passion, which is animal, but on its glorified spirit, Taste. They have little in common with the best feeling of even much ruder social states than this—with the devotion of Dante and Petrarch to women who were not their wives, or with the sentiment of the chaste Sir Galahad.

"Oh sweet are looks which ladies bend
On whom their favors fall.
For them I battle to the end
To save from shame and thrall."

It will scarcely be disputed that the love of Dante was a "grand passion." But this was not founded upon possession. It excluded jealousy. That counterfeit of the "grand passion" which is founded on possession and inspires jealousy is "nothing but a lust of the blood and a perversion of the will." If proof of this be needed, it may easily be found in the experiences of those pseudo free lovers, the affinity hunters, to whom reference has been made. This kind of love is unlike the love of the varietist in one great test particularly. It reverts perpetually to Philistinism. It requires, by its own open, reiterated, harped-upon confession, the stress of an external bond to make it anything else than transitory. Ah!

"These violent delights have violent ends,
And in their meeting die, like fire and powder,
Which, as they kiss, consume; the sweetest honey
Is loathesome in its own deliciousness,
And in the taste confound the appetite.
Therefore, love moderately; long love doth so."

Surely, it is something in proof of the moderation of free love that this repudiates all external bonds, and—finds it easy to be permanent. It is the last result of objectifying passion to realize that passion is sacred for those who experience it, and that no one else has anything to do with it. And thus, from the standpoint of esthetics, no less than of prudence and justice we find free love to be restraint, moderation, purification of the soul, substituting for external rules, which are always arbitrary, that spirit which gave them all the virtue they ever had.

Co-operative Individualism.

The following paragraphs are taken from "A Cityless and Countryless World," in which an inhabitant of Mars describes life on that planet:

"I have already told you that each individual, man, woman and child, has a private apartment in which each can live all alone, or invite as many companions as he, she or it may want or can get; but no one ever enters a private apartment of another for any social purposes without being invited by the inmate. Of course the arrangement of this invitation is left altogether with the individual. The woman invites her companions, both man and woman, if she so desires; the man does likewise. If the guest does not desire to accept the invitation, he or she remains away. All are as much at liberty to refuse as to respond to the invitation. But, as said before, no one calls on another in his or her private apartment without being invited. Hence, no one is bored with visitors, suitors or sweethearts whose company is not agreeable, or at such times when he or she prefers to be alone.

"From the foregoing explanation you can readily see that we have fathers, but no husbands; mothers, but no wives. No woman gives herself away to a man for any definite length of time; and no man gives himself to any woman for a definite length of time. Consequently, we have no marriages for life, as you have. We believe that both sexes should be completely free of each other at all times. We believe that no one should have any claim on another, whether male or female, further than the mutual solicitation of the parties from time to time desire to elicit. We believe that a woman, in order to live the purest life, must be free; must enjoy the full privilege of soliciting the love of any man or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrially and sexually."

The Woman With the Whip.

New York "World."

The woman with the whip is becoming almost as common as the man with the gun in regulating matrimonial defections and difficulties.

During the past week a well-dressed woman with fire in her eye, a riding-whip in her hand, and "business" in her voice, walked into a public restaurant in this city where her husband was dining with a "blonde girl," and suggested that he had better go home with her—his wife. After being cut across the face with the whip two or three times he went with her.

It is doubtful if there was much sympathy for the man among the spectators or readers of this occurrence. But the affair must have raised the question in some minds, What does a woman want of a man who has to be brought to her side with a whip? What sort of a "home" is it that is held together with a lash?

Goose-sauce and gander-sauce are very much alike in this matter. In Turkey or in our "new possession" of Sulu it is the habit of husbands to guard their wives and other chattels with bars and locks and deadly weapons. But why a civilized man should wish to keep a wife and companion in this way is something of a puzzle.

The Mutual Employment Association.

List of dealers, manufacturers and professional men and women agreeing to give to the M. E. A. a percentage on their sales or services to the members of this society:

Agent: Mrs. Agnes Bacon, 100 Emerson st., cor. Robey.
Bakery: Mrs. Ellis, 22 Park ave., near Ashland.
Barber: Chas. Metzger, 206 Clybourn ave.
Books: C. N. Haskins, 184 Dearborn, Room 9.
Cleaning of wall paper, fresco and carpet: P. J. McLean, 58 S. Center cor. Madison.
Coal and wood: N. E. Andersen, 74 E. Chicago ave.
Confectioners: J. U. Devine, 206 Clybourn; M. Rosenblum, 1120 W. Lake; Wm. Dalitch, 1194 W. Lake.
Cigars: Kleininger, 4514 Lake ave.; Charkin & Co., 497 North ave.; J. Poppers, 588 W. Adams; Wm. Dahtch, 1194 W. Lake.
Complexion water: Mrs. Agnes Bacon, 100 Emerson st.
Delicacy: A. Shoessling, 1754 N. Ashland.
Dentist: O. A. Rice, 1556 Milwaukee ave. cor. Western.
Doctors: J. R. Price, 631 Garfield bd., office, Lakeside bldg.; J. H. Greer, 52 Dearborn; Eliza Andrews, 212 Ogden ave.; Jessie S. Walsh, 212 Ogden ave.; Charles J. Lewis, 733 Carroll ave.
Drugs: Theodor Appel, 705 W. 21st Place.
Fish and oysters: N. C. Dahl, 145 S. Halsted.
Furnace cleaning and repairing: F. J. McLean, 58 S. Curtis.
Groceries: M. Johnson, 914 W. Lake.
Hats: M. Rosenblum, 1120 W. Lake; M. E. Kleininger, 4514 Lake ave.
Legal service: Carl A. Vogel, 100 Washington; E. I. Burdick, 71 Clark st.
Nurses: Jessie S. Walsh, 212 Ogden ave.; M. J. Newby, 595 Robey.
Naturalist: 359 Van Buren.
Optical goods: 739 Clybourn ave.
Paper hanging and painting: F. J. McLean, 58 S. Curtis.
Publisher: C. H. Kerr, 56 Fifth ave.
Umbrellas: 251 & 1436 N. Clark st.
Shoes: J. Burnes, 1057 Lake st.; E. Edelstadt, 463 State st.
Sign painting: J. C. Hart, 98 W. Adams st.
Soap factory: E. M. Davis, 253-255 Canal st.
Stenographers: E. Brooks, 595 Robey; O. V. Hamilton, 999 Monroe.
Suspenders: Kleininger, 4514 Lake ave.
Tailor: A. P. Hanson, 108 Fifth ave., Room 11.
Tinware: M. Rosenblum, 1120 W. Lake st.
Watch repairing: G. V. Sandfort, 739 Clybourn.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper in t has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

In the Sunflower State.

Leaving Mt. Pleasant Park encampment Tuesday afternoon Aug. 23, a three and half hours' run brought me back to Chicago and to the office of Lucifer, where I found many letters and much other business awaiting my attention. Owing, however, to the fact that my name had been placed upon the program of the annual convention of the Kansas Freethought Association, as one of the speakers, I staid only one day in the office, taking the six P. M. Santa Fe train Wednesday evening Aug 24, and arriving at this place at noon the following day.

A few words in regard to work at Mt. Pleasant Park, before telling of my reception at Forest Park encampment, Ottawa, Kansas.

At a conference meeting in the "Auditorium" at Mt. Pleasant Park I was allowed a twenty minutes talk upon "The Right to be Born Well, and the Relation between Generation on the Physical Plane and Normal Development on the Astral or Soul Plane." At the close of this conference it was voted by a large majority of the audience that the same subject should be continued at the next conference, which would be held on Thursday following. When the time arrived it was found that another subject had been substituted by the management and I was informed that on Monday Aug. 21 I would be allowed all the time I might desire, to speak on the subject named. When the time arrived I was met by a larger number of very attentive hearers than usually attended the conference meetings of the encampment.

In my talk I tried to make a practical application of the principles frequently enunciated in Lucifer's columns in regard to the importance of a better recognition of woman's primal right to self ownership, and the necessity of the abolition or the ignoring of all laws and customs that deny to her that right. As texts I read the utterance of R. G. Ingersoll at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston, which utterance was reprinted in Lucifer, No. 768, under the head "Unwelcome Children," and also the poem of Charlotte Perkins Stetson entitled "Mother to Child."

At the close of my comments upon these texts Prof. William Windsor the noted Phrenologist and author of "Loma," "Science of Creation," etc., took the stand, and in a few warmly appreciative words commended the work to which Lucifer and its editor were devoted, and then announced that he would deliver a lecture from the same platform on a line of subjects very closely connected with the subject of the forenoon.

Pursuant to this announcement I had the pleasure of listening, a few hours later, to a lecture upon "temperaments"—the "magnetic" temperament, the "electric," the "acid," the "alkaline" temperament, &c, &c. that surpassed in lucidity and plausibility anything I had ever heard on this subject. At the close of the lecture the professor called for nominations of two or three persons, known to his hearers but unknown to him, for the purpose of making a practical demonstration of the principles, the facts, the discoveries in mental and physical science, outlined in the lecture. In response to this call "Father Roberts," the patriarch of the encampment, and one of the originators of the Mississippi Valley Spiritualist Association, was put upon the rostrum and subjected to a most rigid and critical phrenological and physiological examination, with the result of which the subject himself and the large audience expressed themselves as very much gratified and pleased.

Of all the helpers of Lucifer there are few if any whose line of work is more important than is that of Prof. Windsor, and of his exceptionally bright and capable assistant and companion, Mrs. Marie Windsor.

Their work necessarily includes a thorough study of race-culture, homo-culture—the rights and wrongs of womanhood and childhood. In many respects I consider the books just named as among the very best yet written upon the subject of how to create a better race of human beings than any that have yet inhabited the planet earth.

Much I would like to say of the persons I met at Mt. Pleasant Park, the lectures I heard and the "phenomena" seen and heard, but time and space admonish me to bring this communication to a close, by saying that Lucifer's line of work seems to be much better understood and much better appreciated by the people who annually attend the encampment near Clinton, Iowa, than at any of my former visits to that place.

Ottawa, Kansas. M. HARMAN.

How Economic Independence Settles the Social Question.

The "Colony Notes" man of "Freedom," Olalla, Wash., was asked the question, which, with its answer, is given below:

"'Can a man or woman live according to free love in Equality and not be interfered with by other members?'

"Not long ago an attempt of this kind was made and it failed ignominiously. Just how much of the opposition displayed was due to the quality of love exhibited is a matter of conjecture, neither is it known to what extent the feeling of opposition might have been suppressed had all parties concerned in the affair been of the ideal sort where good morals are exhibited in every-day actions."

From which we are to infer that the entire co-operative community is to pass on the "quality of love" manifested by any of its members. But we are not informed whether the question is to be decided by a majority, two-thirds, or unanimous vote. Neither are we told whether the "quality" of the love existing between each married couple is to be subjected to a similar examination and possible condemnation. Perhaps "Freedom" will some day inform a waiting world that the test has been applied, and "all parties concerned in" married "affairs" in the colony are "of the ideal sort where good morals are exhibited in everyday actions." Then, perhaps, he will tell us why such ideal people need to be held together in legal bondage.

I often enjoy reading the paragraphs of the "Colony Notes" man. Here are a few sentences from one on

"THAT OTHER FELLOW."

"Yes, that other fellow always gives us a great deal of concern. We make laws to fit him; we are sure that it is his proposed policy that might be tainted just a little bit by selfishness. If anybody's moral household needs regulating, the directed effort is sure to seek the other fellow. We are apt to overlook the fact that the influence of personal example is more potent in working individual reform than personal advice is." L. H.

A Word to Lillian Harman.

SISTER WORKER: There are so many who want a hearing through Lucifer I had not intended to ask for space again soon; but upon reading your article in No. 773 I feel that in justice to myself and to woman generally I would like to say a few words.

I did not urge the woman to make a demand. To make known our needs to one who claims to love us when knowing that they can help us if they will, is not making a demand. If I loved a man and had money while he was so situated that he could not meet his needs and he kept his need from me I should feel very much hurt at his want of confidence in my love; and it was from that standpoint that I urged my friend to lay the situation before the man referred to.

It was not the mere pleasure of going to the convention that prompted the wish to go, but the hope that she should meet those there who could help her to get better employment. She had more than herself to support and he had no one to support but himself and those who could care for themselves if they so chose. He received from a wealthy corporation about twice as much per week as she could get per month, and I was amazed at the result of her showing him how matters stood. I had never held him in high esteem but I certainly supposed him better than he proved himself to be. As to her delicacy of feeling being her best guide, there is such a thing as standing so straight that we bend backward, and if I understood her in the least her reluctance arose from a fear of that weapon of selfish men—mercenary. It is time that we defied such injustice, that of such accusation.

You say "If she had been disabled in any way by her association with the man he would owe her reparation." I was not speaking of injury or reparation, but of giving the man an opportunity of doing himself a favor. If he loved her he would, under the circumstances, have considered it a privilege to aid her. You say again: "If he felt a warm attachment for her and was able to help her" etc. The idea of men and women associating together sexually who have not a warm friendship with each other is so repulsive to me that I do not care to consider it for a moment.

I realize the wrong of the idea that women are supported by their husbands and I will hold up both hands to encourage those who demand justice. You say: "There are very few women, even of those who have families who cannot be self-supporting if they will." Do you really mean that just as it stands? That all such women were they properly compensated do enough to support themselves I will admit, and if that is what you mean, all right, but as it stands it seems a little ambiguous. I do not believe you mean to be unjust, but if you mean there are few women, even of those who have families of small children, but can provide for themselves and the little ones if they will, you certainly have not investigated existing conditions fully enough to form a correct judgment, and you do a great many intelligent and earnest women a great injustice. I may be so stupid as to misunderstand you, but when you say "only the weak will or the ignorance of a childless woman prevents independence for her," I cannot think I have misunderstood you in the other case. That all childless women might be independent and self-supporting would be true if there were paying places for all, but there are not. Neither knowledge nor will power will sustain you in mid ocean without a plank, and that is a good illustration of how many a childless woman is situated. I glory in what you have done. I am glad there are some women who can assert themselves, but I long ago learned that it was not proof that another could do a thing because I could.

And now a word to the editor—While willing to give Ingersoll all the credit he deserves, if he, as I see it stated, believed the Chicago martyrs were not guilty of that of which they were accused, and yet refused to defend them for less than $10,000, considering Mrs. Holmes' friendship for them, I can well understand her feelings. Neither science nor any other method can remedy the evils complained of so long as our present system of economics is in force. LOIS WAISBROOKER.

REPLY.

It is no part of my business to defend the short-comings of R. G. Ingersoll, or of any other person. I have said, at the proper place, that it is doubtless true that he "did not fully grasp the significance of some of the more important movements in modern thought," etc. That he misunderstood the work and the character of the Chicago martyrs is doubtless true, but that he refused to defend them simply because the fee offered was too small, is at variance with the character of the man, as I now see it. We must also remember that there was plenty of time for radical changes of character in the thirteen years since the police riot in Chicago that resulted in the death or imprisonment of the "immortal eight." The Ingersoll of 1886 and the Ingersoll of 1899, may have been two very different individuals.

If science—knowledge—guided by wisdom—experience—will not "remedy the evils complained of," economic evils included, then nothing will. M. HARMAN.

I should make no comment on Mrs. Waisbrooker's letter were it not for the fact that she asks me a direct question, in reply to which I repeat that in my opinion the majority of mothers of families not only can be, but are, self-supporting. Very many not only support themselves but their husbands and children also. But even if a woman does not do work which brings in money, she may be none the less self-supporting. For instance, a wife keeps house and bears children which belong to her husband as well as to herself—in the estimation of both. Yet she is "dependent" on him; he "supports" her. Eventually she dies. He employs a woman to take her place in the care of home and children. He pays this housekeeper a living wage; she is self-supporting. Why the difference?

I said "if he felt a warm attachment for her and was able to help her" it was proper for him to do so; meaning that it was proper irrespective of whether they had been sexually intimate or not. I don't see what that intimacy has to do with the matter, unless one is injured thereby. If a friend of mine needed help which I was able to give, I should not give it any less readily to a woman friend, nor to a man with whom I had not been sexually intimate; nor would it be necessary for that friend to ask for help. And I feel sure I have many friends, both men and women, who feel equal interest in me.

Mrs. Waisbrooker says she will not for a moment consider the case of those who associate together sexually without feeling a warm friendship for each other. But it appears to me that she was considering just such a case in the one which she describes. In my opinion, if a warm attachment, irrespective of sexual relations, had existed between this man and woman, she would not have needed to ask him for help, and there would have been no occasion for advice from an outsider nor the refusal by the man and suffering of the woman. L. H.

Our Special Summer Offer.

Several more valuable books have been added this week to our special summer offer of radical literature at half price. Many orders have been received for sets of "Our New Humanity" and as the supply is limited, those who desire to secure sets for their libraries should order promptly before all are sold.

Never before has such an opportunity been given to purchase first class radical literature at so low a price. The offer will remain open only four weeks longer but some of the books may be out of stock before that time has expired. For that reason early orders will prevent disappointment.

Subscribers will confer a favor on the publisher of Lucifer, and at the same time help the cause of education in the principles of sexology, by calling the attention of their friends to this remarkably liberal offer.

In his excellent and cautious survey of Early Greek Philosophy . . . Professor Burnet says that the real advance made by the Ionians was through their "leaving off telling tales. They gave up the hopeless task of describing what was when as yet there was nothing, and asked instead what all things really are now."—Edward Clodd, "The Pioneers of Evolution," 5.

"When Freedom on her mountain height
Unfurled her standard to the air,
She tore the azure robe of night,
And set the stars of glory there."

Now Freedom sees this standard borne
Against herself, and Freedom sighs,
And wishes back to pillaged skies
Her stars by freemen's bullets torn.

Had she foreseen our Jingo lines
Charging the Tagals in a war of greed,
She would have better known our need,
And decked the flag with dollar signs.

—James J. Dooling, in "Liberty."

Sociologic Lessons.

BY HENRY M. PARKHURST.

No. 88. MINIMUM OF SUBSISTENCE: Employment in co-operative labor should be provided for all members and residents who desire it, whether for an hour or a year. It would not be proper to admit an applicant into any group against the will of its members; and it is possible for one to be rejected from all groups in which he asks employment. Whatever the cause of rejection he must have subsistence and it is better to give it absolutely than to compel a group to admit him, possibly causing all the rest to resign. It would be unjust to give those who are out of harmony with the association advantages which others do not share. The solution of the difficulty is to give to all members of the association conforming with its rules a minimum of subsistence sufficient to make them independent of labor and of charity. Those who work will have in addition the awards for their labor. Incompetents, including those who are out of harmony with the association, who are either unable or unwilling to leave it, and those who have special hobbies to which they wish to devote their whole time, such as new inventions or investigations, will need this provision. With the former class, it is a bounty given to those who have been unfortunate in their heredity; with the latter class, although some may be deluded dreamers, there is a probability that this expenditure of time will yield results of great value. Those who voluntarily forego the attractions of co-opreative industry will at least expect the results to justify the sacrifice.

No. 89. FINANCIAL INDEPENDENCE. A still more important application of the principle of the minimum of subsistence will be the solution it will give to the financial independence of women and children. Women will not only be able to lay up means of subsistence from their membership in groups of laborers in selected occupations, but such labors can be abridged or entirely abandoned during maternity or while caring for their children, and children may be educated and cared for to maturity without becoming a burden to their parents or others. Both these classes thus become absolutely independent financially.

Co-operation in the household will free women from a large portion of their cares; and co-operation in the nurseries and in the care of children, will prevent their becoming a burden to their parents. There will be a variety of occupations furnishing partial employment, enabling women to restrict their labors as much as they consider essential, and enabling children to learn to be useful, while pursuing their studies.

No. 90. INCREASED PRODUCTION. Whether this principle of furnishing to all a minimum of subsistence will be a burden to the association, will depend upon a comparison of the total products with those which would be produced in the absence of such a provision. My conclusion is that the total products will not be lessened; and if so the association itself will not be burdened.

1. Workers will produce no less when attracted to industry than when driven to it by fear of coming to want.

2. The large class of the unemployed will become workers, either fully or to a large extent, swelling production.

3. The class of the incompetent will be lessened; for many will find more or less useful employment which they can perform with self-respect and with the respect of society.

4. Women and children will be as productive as now, and it will cost no more to provide for them.

Compulsion to labor, as a mere means of subsistence, now tends to make labor repulsive; freedom from compulsion will make it, as it naturally is, attractive. There will therefore be no lack of production.

The total production then I think will be greater, and the total cost less. The distribution of the burden will be somewhat different, but more equitable. Single men may receive somewhat less for their labor in the groups in consequence of he distribution of part of the profits in furnishing the minimum of subsistence; but what they do receive will give them greater advantages than they can obtain in isolation.

No. 91. SURVIVAL OF THE FITTEST. It remains to apply the crucial test of the effect of the principle of the minimum of subsistence upon the fundamental principle of evolution from the survival of the fittest. Giving to the weak and the improvident in consequence of their wants, encourages the unfit at the cost of the fit, and therefore tends to retard evolution. Relieving the whole community from the burden of providing against the possible need of subsistence, enables them to devote so much more thought and energy to progress. The tendency therefore is to discourage hoarding up idle means, which may never be needed, to provide for sickness and old age, and to encourage seeking to make all wealth productive. This tends to physical development. Again, freedom from harassing cares tends to encourage the mental development of those who are now compelled to sacrifice all their aspirations to the necessities of a livelihood.

And farther, the general knowledge that the whole community are free and independent, will exert a highly moral influence; for effort will be rewarded by visible progress instead of being largely sunk in relieving wants which do not seem to diminish, and in suppressing attempts to invade the rights of others for self-preservation.

When all are financially independent, and properly instructed in the principles of stirpiculture, intelligent artificial selection in parentage will replace unintelligent natural selection by the destruction of the unfit; and without conscious self abnegation the race will enter upon a career of development hitherto unapproached.

No. 92. A PROGRESSIVE MINIMUM. The amount of the equal distribution to all members should at first be very small. In an association containing the usual proportion of drones, perhaps ten cents per week would be ample to show its tendencies, while it would be no serious burden if misused. The advantages would be likely to increase as members learned to adapt themselves to it, and the allowance could be usefully increased from year to year, in proportion to the advance in general prosperity. It is not probable that after a few years' experience in associative life, the main body of the members would become so altruistic that the amount of the minimum allowance would be a matter of indifference. Those who most needed it would receive additional voluntary aid in various ways, giving them conveniences and even luxuries, without detracting from their entire independence.

WHEN SENDING money to this office, use money orders or bank drafts, but not personal checks, bank bills or coins. We are constantly losing money in the mail from disregard of these directions. Sums under one dollar may be sent in postage stamps.

ONCE MORE we ask our friends not to send us money—silver or bank bills in unregistered letters. We are continually losing money in this way. Only a week ago a clerk in the Chicago Post Office was caught in the act of rifling letters of their valuables. Fifty letters were found upon his person. Send by Post Office Money Order, by bank draft but not personal checks. Sums under one dollar may be sent in postage stamps.

VARIOUS VOICES.

T. O. Smith, Norwood, Colo.:—I see by the number on the wrapper of my paper that my subscription to Lucifer expired some time ago. Enclosed find $1 to apply on same. Life continues to be a struggle for the necessaries of existence, but I consider Lucifer one of the necessities.

Mrs. R. A., Pa.:—Although I am a reader only (not a subscriber) of Lucifer I can not restrain my desire to send you a few heart felt words of appreciation along with a list of names of friends in whom I take an interest and to whom I hope you will mail sample copies that are best adapted to beginners who recently listened to Mrs. Lease, of Kansas, at Lily Dale, N. Y.—and are thus prepared for another step; people, who, after taking these steps will never sleep again and who are worth the trouble of more than one letter.

I was introduced to Lucifer by Miss Stowell and later when my dear uncle, Dr. R. C., from Texas, came here to spend his remaining days with us, I learned through him of your earnestness, truth and sincerity, and because he had more than once clasped your hand in friendship, I felt my sympathy widening and new and fuller ideals filling up the empty places in my unsatisfactory life,—unsatisfactory, though it has been that of a teacher, successful in the popularly accepted use of the term but to me a failure for I seemed to have missed some magic key which I must hold before I could take my pupils up and out o the sordid paths shown them by bigoted and religious parents. In Lucifer I found much to show me the natural remedy as well as a safety-valve for the rebellion within my own heart; for with the first number I began to have live thoughts and reawakened impulses and my health is actually better because rescued from mental stagnation.

Susan A. Patton, 229 Tree St., Philadelphia, Pa.:—Please let me know the price of Ida Craddock's book, "Right Marital Living." Also, how to address a letter to Paul Corcoran,—we may be able to write and send books to him, and thus help him bear the rigors of prison life. Berkman says he often would not go to his tray for food, but he sees a letter and this means real food to him. The extract comparing the case of the man who stole fifteen cents receiving three years' imprisonment and Capt. Carter, who stole one million going free and honored, reminds me of a case in this city. A little girl, about ten years old was employed "running cash" in a large store. She took a 98 cent ring and was discharged and has been called a thief when she was employed at other places; and this, too, by the poor wage slaves. She is now selling her favors and is having a much easier life economically. Her sister is doing the same thing for she was hounded for her sister's "crime." But the sons of that very man from whom she took the ring have stolen hundreds of dollars from their father by forging his name; yet he glossed that over for it would have disgraced him personally to acknowledge a forger as his son. Why then is it not a disgrace for us to allow conditions to exist that create these things in the larger family called society? Should we not feel the disgrace keenly when we pass a prison, an almshouse or an insane asylum and think that some of our family is there?

[The price of "Right Marital Living" is fifty cents. I do not know the address of Corcoran. It is well to remember those who are in prison, and send them messages and literature when the prison officials will permit. Berkman's address is A—7, Western Penitentiary, Allegheney, Pa. Probably few of our readers need to be told that he it was who shot Frick during the Homestead strike seven years ago. Strong efforts are being made to obtain his pardon. L. H.]

Edgar D. Brinkerhoff, Morrisville, Pa.—Allow me to add a word on the policy of your paper. Nothing should be admitted to Lucifer's columns that will destroy the unity of its aim. Its proper sphere is sexology. No other matter should be introduced except as subordinate to the discussion of sex. On sex matters Lucifer has a philosophy of its own to expound, to enable it to teach these doctrines well it invites expression of opinion pro and con. Not so, however, in other than sex subjects. Lucifer assumes a body of doctrines in regard to general freedom and other matters, but does not invite debate on these topics as this discussion would require too large a field for so small a paper to cover. In view of these principles, Mr. Kerr's first article on "Monopolies and Combines" should have been excluded. The subject is not so very foreign but it did not concern any position, taken by Mr. Kerr on sex questions. It is a fit discussion for a journal devoted to philosophical anarchism or one in the interest of state socialism. But having unfortunately been printed, it should be fought to the bitter end. The editor was abundantly able to take care of himself; but for the sake of seeing the enemy driven away as soon as possible I entered the fight by his side. Perhaps the rules of debate will accord Mr. Kerr the last word, but I would be sorry to see him have the last say on account of the effect on Lucifer's readers. In whatever way this particular discussion may finally be disposed of, Lucifer should in future adhere to the principle of undertaking discussion on no other topic than the several departments of sexology.

[Personally I agree, in the main, with Mr. Brinkerhoff's expressions in regard to the policy of the paper. Mr. Kerr also thinks that Lucifer should be principally devoted to discussion of sexology. But when Mr. Brinkerhoff says that any discussion should be "fought to the bitter end," I cannot agree with him. A short discussion may be interesting; but when each has expressed his opinion and the matter begins to grow personal, as is the usual tendency, it is better, I think, to drop it. This is my policy, at any rate. I have on a number of occasions allowed "the other fellow" to have "the last word" when I was strongly inclined to try to make clearer what I had previously said. I do not think long-continued controversies advisable. We can express our opinions without continually referring to the opposing opinion held by some other person.] L. H.

The above was in type for last issue but was crowded out.

WOMEN and ECONOMICS,

A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women. By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Here are a few of the page headings of this remarkable work: "Economic environment; The dependence of women; No inherent disability of sex; Marriage not a partnership; House service as a livehood; Motherhood and economic production; Modification to maternity; The usefulness of sex; Differentiation of sex; Sex and humanity; The peacock's tail; Sex distinctions; The eternal feminine; unreasoning devotion; Women as persons; Race-attributes and sex-attribute; The normal child; Personal profit and sex-relations; The influence of heredity; The young man and the young woman; The effect of custom; The sex relation personal; Innocence and ignorance; Marriage with independence; The increasing difficulty of marriage; Supporting one's family; Virtue and vice; The results of repression; The harm that women do; The development of love; The hope for the future; The martyr and the pioneer; The dropping of the bars; The meaning of the new woman; Motherhood in education; A criminal failure; Marriage and the family; Love's young dream; The heart and the stomach; Socializing the household industries; The stomach as a family tie; The servant wife; World-servants and house-servants; A wider maternity; Between the old and the new; "The vices of the slave;" The outgrown stronghold. Printed on strong, heavy paper; 350 pages, bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale by M. Harman, 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

AZTEC CALENDAR.

Send 25 cents to C. A. Higgins, A. G. P. A., A. T. & S. F. R'y, Great Northern Bldg., Chicago, for copy of Aztec Calendar, July to December. Contains six separate reproductions in color (6 x 11 inches) of Burbank's Pueblo Indian portraits—the season's art sensation. Also engraved cover representing ancient Aztec calendar stone. A handsome and unique souvenir; edition limited: order early.

THE CHICAGO & ALTON R. R. is the best line to all points in the South, South-west and West. Free reclining Chair Cars, Pullman Palace Cars. Ticket office 101 Adams st. Chicago.

James Charlton, Gen. Pass. & Tkt Agent. George J. Charlton, Asst Gen. Pass. & Tkt Agt.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW. A primer of Sexual Rationalism; by E. C. Walker. A valuable compendium on Sex Ethics. Startling and Scientific. Price, 10 cents.

777.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

Only Four Weeks More!

Following is a list of valuable books which we will sell during the month of Sept. at just one half the regular publisher's price if ordered in lots amounting to one dollar or more. This unusually liberal offer is made because receipts of the office are always lower in the summer than at any other time of the year. The books could not be sold for these prices if it were not for the fact that many of them have been donated to Lucifer by generous friends to aid in its work of education. Pick out the books you want in the list below to the amount of two dollars and send us just ONE HALF the price marked and the books will be sent to you promptly, free of postage.

Ideala. By Sarah Grand. This is the story of a woman too thoughtful, too honest, too true for the conventional "middle class" English society in which she lived. Her life story furnishes much food for thought for those who like to study the facts of life when disguised as fiction. Handsomely bound in cloth. 195 pages. .40

Our New Humanity, No. II. Part of the contents: The Prodigal Daughter, or the Price of Virtue, by Rachel Campbell; Pioneer Chips. Extracts from the private letters of Rachel Campbell, by M. Florence Johnson; Marriage, What It Was and Is—Will the coming woman marry? By "X." (M. Harman); Reminiscences of the Long Ago, II., III. and IV. By Lucy N. Colman; The Ascent of Life, by Moses Harman; Legal Wifehood, by Lucinda B. Chandler; Whose is the Child? by Lex; Tombstone Texts. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. III. Part of the contents: The Unwomanly Woman, by Lizzie M. Holmes; That Great Fraud Yelept Society, by Moses Hull—with comments by his daughter, M. Florence Johnson; Normal Sexual Action, by Ernest Winne; Evolution of Familism, by Albert Chavannes; Virgin Soil, (story); Love in Liberty, by J. Wm. Lloyd; Reminiscences of the Long Ago, V., VI., by Lucy N. Colman; At What Age? 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. IV. Contents: The Abolition of Marriage, by John Beverly Robinson; Isabel's Intention, (story) by Mariette; Reminiscences of Berlin Heights, by A. Warren; The Sexes and Love in Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; A Woman-Child, by J. Wm. Lloyd; Burmese Women; The Great Conflict, by James F. Morton, Jr.; "The Truth About Love," by Moses Harman; Reminiscences—Then and Now, by Moses Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. V. Contents: Priestly Celibacy, by A. L. Rawson; Sex Love Analytically Defined, by Ernest Winne; The Other Side, by May Clifford Hurd; The Incoherence of Transition, by E. C. Walker; The Greatest Sin, (an allegory,) by R. B. Kerr; Our New Savior—the Surgeon, by C. T. Brown; Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; To Man, (poem) by Charlotte Perkins Stetson; Motherhood in Freedom, by M. Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. VI. Contents: Woman's Primal Right, by Francis Barry; The Curse of Maternity, From the French of Henry Fevre; How to Escape the Curse, by Jonathan Mayo Crane: Can Marriage be Abolished? by Albert Chavannes; Woman's "Duty" to Bear Children, by E. C. Walker; Love's Law, by William Francis Barnard; The Freedom Not to Do, by C. L. Swartz; True and False Morality, by C. L. James; Wanted: A New Adam; A Brood Mare, (poem) by Charlotte Perkins Stetson; Life, Health and Longevity, by Moses Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. VII. Contents. The Rights of Children, by R. B. Kerr; Incineration, by Walter Breen; What Are Women Here For? by E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.; What the Young Need to Know—A Primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker; The New Martyrdom, by Lillian Harman; The Will, (story, from the French of Guy de Maupassant; A Free Man's Creed, by Moses Harman. .25

Leaflets by Austin Kent. Conjugal Love, the True and False; A Letter to a Magdalene; My Creed, or What Believe and What I Know; An Open Letter to Andrew Jackson Davis, or, What I Call Conjugal Love; A Letter to My Atheistical Bretheren. Each, 3 cents; the lot, .12

A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers, by Henry D. Thoreau. Bound in cloth; 356 pages. .40

Ruled by the Tomb; A Discussion of Free Thought and Free Love, by Orford Northcote. .10

The Dawn of Civilization; or, England in the Nineteenth Century, by J. C. Spence. With portrait of author. 190 pages. .25

What the Young Need to Know.—A Primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. .10

Economics of Anarchy. A Study of the Industrial Type. By Dyer D. Lum. Paper, 60 pages. (Scarce) .25

Government Analyzed. By John R. Kelso, A. M. This book seeks to show that all governments, like all gods, are the mere personifications of mythical monsters invented by selfish and crafty men as instruments with which to rob and enslave the ignorant toiling masses. A book which is sure to open the eyes of governmentalists who read it. Bound in cloth; 320 pages; edition limted; 1.50.

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY. Co-educational. Send for catalog. A. E. Gammage, President. 167 Dearborn St., Chicago.

RIGHTS OF WOMEN
IN THE SEXUAL RELATIONS,

By Karl Heinzen. A new edition together with the startling letters of Louise Nayen" on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German women at Frauenstadt. A book of 300 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Price paper bound, 50 cents; cloth, $1

THE BALLAD OF READING JAIL. BY C. 3.3.

This powerful poem of more than 600 lines, is the work of OSCAR WILDE C. 3. 3. having been the poets prison number during his confinement in Reading Jail. It is dedicated to the memory of a trooper of the Horse Guards who was hanged in the jail at that time, and it depicts the terrible sensations of the author and his fellow prisoners before and after the execution.

Just issued; price, in cloth, blue, vellum back, beautifully printed from large type on hand-made antique paper, deckle edges; reading matter on one side of the paper; a sumptuous book of 96 pages, 7 inches by 5. $1. In paper, 41 pages, 10 cents. Mailed postpaid on receipt of price, by M. Harman, 167 Carroll Avenue, Chicago.

LOVE AND THE LAW. By E. C. Walker. A clear, concise statement of social liberty in contradistinction to the much lauded legal bondage now almost universally upheld. An excellent missionary document. Two copies, 5 cents; 20 cents per dozen.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at the office.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be FREE; must enjoy the full privilege of soliciting the love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrially."—Page 268. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CITYLESS AND COUNTRYLESS WORLD", by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 450 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. ~~14~~ 35 CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, SEPT. 9, E. M. 299. [C. E 1899.] WHOLE No. 778

A Friend to Man.

"He was a friend to man, and lived in a house by the side of the road."—Homer.

There are hermit souls that live withdrawn,
In the place of their self-content:
There are souls like stars that dwell apart,
In a fellowless firmament;
There are pioneer souls that blaze their paths
Where highlands never ran;
But let me live by the side of the road,
And be a friend to man.

I see from my house by the side of the road,
By the side of the highway of life,
The men that press with the ardor of hope,
The men who are faint with the strife;
But I turn not away from their smiles nor their tears,—
Both parts of an infinite plan:—
Let me live in my house by the side of the road,
And be a friend to man.

I know there are brook-gladdened meadows ahead,
And mountains of wearisome height;
That the road passes on through the long afternoon,
And stretches away to the night:
But still I rejoice when the travelers rejoice,
And weep with the strangers that moan,
Nor live in my house by the side of the road
Like a man who dwells alone.

Let me live in my house by the side of the road,
Where the race of men go by;
They are good, they are bad, they are weak, they are strong,
Wise, foolish—and so am I;
Then why should I sit in the scorner's seat,
Or hurl the cynic's ban?
Let me live in my house by the side of the road,
And be a friend to man.

—Sam Walter Foss.

Legal Marriage and the Bible.

BY REV. SIDNEY HOLMES.

I once heard of a pious old woman who said she believed in the good old doctrine set forth in the Bible in the words: "Let every tub stand on its own bottom." Many another woman—and man too—has quoted as scripture John Wesley's declaration that "Cleanliness is next to Godliness." Thousands of persons believe the expression "God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," used in Sterne's "Sentimental Journey," is a quotation from the Bible. But in many years of careful search I have been unable to find any of the above quoted sentences in the authorized King James' translation of the Holy Bible.

Ignorance similar to that of the persons to whom I have alluded is shown by those who imagine that the Bible declares that "Marriage is a divine institution," or that it says "Marriages are made in heaven." On the contrary when the Sadducees sought to induce Jesus to defend the marriage institution, the Bible says, Matthew xxii, 29, 30, "Jesus answered and said unto them, Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God. For in the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven."

The difficulty in reconciling this declaration with other, wherein Jesus apparently upholds marriage is a misunderstanding of the fact that he is here denouncing the marriage institution—the man-made laws binding man and woman together in wedlock. In the resurrection, he says, such laws do not exist, but natural attraction is unhampered and they "are as the angels of God in heaven." Bearing this in mind, it is clear what he means when he says, Mark x, 9, "What therefore God has joined together, let no man put asunder." What "God hath put together" requires no law of man to ratify it.

This is the view which was taken by the primitive Christians and they were persecuted for it on the ground that their doctrine in this regard was "lewd and immoral." But I shall not at this time go into a history of marriage; perhaps later I may do so and show that marriage by law is anti-Christian and immoral. The purpose of these preliminary observations is to call attention to the fact that the view of marriage which I have advanced—that legal wedlock is anti-Christian and immoral—is supported by the teachings of the Tolstoyan Christian Brotherhood in England. The members of this Brotherhood abjure the laws of man, as the primitive Christian did, and take the Bible for their sole guide.

The Brotherhood publishes a paper called "The New Order," the motto of which is "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord." In its issue for August, under the title "Legal Marriage and The Taking of Oaths," it published the following article, which, I think, shows conclusively that the doctrines taught by Lucifer in regard to marriage are not necessarily antagonistic to the doctrines of Jesus as set forth in the Bible, however much they may be at variance with the teachings of the so-called Christian church of today.

"Full well ye reject the power of God that ye may keep your own tradition."—Mark, vii., 9.

Certain friends, well-wishers, and sympathetic spectators of the movement towards a simpler, truer, and more Christ-like life which "The New Order" endeavors to voice, have of late been grieved and offended because some persons in those groups which are now increasing in number and strength in various parts of England have discarded the religious and legal ceremonies which usually accompany marriage, and have formed unions in which they do not recognize the law of England—neither the national, nor the customary and social law of England. One cannot but regret the estrangement of some whose sympathy up to a certain point was sincere and strong, but who now walk no more with us, and these few lines are written in the hope of making the position on the question of legal marriage clearer.

In the first place, it must be remarked that the "offence" comes partly because they do not grasp the whole attitude of the movement toward law and the existing social system. Legal marriage is partly a public announcement of the intention of the parties; so far it is not open to objection, but it is more than this. However veiled by festivity and rejoicing, it is really the outcome of general distrust and suspicion, the invoking of force to compel each to do his or her duty to the other in the new relation formed. "It cometh of evil."

Yet who can doubt that a desire for good, a wish to secure fidelity, to deepen the sense of responsibility for the consequences of the act, has been at work all along in the development of marriage customs and laws? Yes, a zeal for good, but not according to knowledge.

In precisely the same way the wisdom of the world has sought to secure veracity. In the common and deplorable absence of sincerity and accuracy of speech, the law requires that a man's word shall in certain important matters be reinforced by an oath, thus trying to deepen his sense of the profound importance of truthfulness. But with what result? Who that really thinks the matter out can doubt that the practice of taking oaths has lowered the general standard of veracity? Call God in as a witness in special cases, and you imply that God is not always a witness; require an oath on certain occasions, and you virtually proclaim that truth is not to be looked for with a simple yea or nay. The thoughtless person is less ashamed to lie. The law of his country has plainly taught him that veracity is hardly to be expected of him except in connection with an oath. Nay, it carries further than this. Weaken thus the general reverence for truth under ordinary circumstances, and the average moral sense of the community is lowered, so that even the solemn oath fails to secure truth—and the simple yea, yea and nay, nay of the man who refuses to swear is more to be relied on than the oath of the average person. It is notorious that the oath is no guarantee for truth, and that perjury is committed every day.

The only way that truth can be secured is by a general rise in the standard of truthfulness, and that can only be brought about by speaking truth ourselves and by trusting unto seventy times seven to the unsworn veracity of others. People tend to become what we expect them to be. "It's a shame to tell Arnold a lie," said the Rugby boys, "he always believes you." This is what Jesus taught. But the poor world has not been able yet to understand or believe him, and it goes on still in its own wise way, which is Foolishness.

The taking of oaths is an exact parallel to legal marriage. For see: Society suffers, has suffered in the past, and unborn generations must yet suffer, for sex relations selfishly entered into, for reckless and irresponsible parentage, for homes left desolate, for women cast aside like broken toys; and so the law steps in and endeavors to secure fidelity, to guarantee that unions shall be made with a full intention to abide by the consequences for better or worse; and it does so, not by requiring fidelity and responsibility in every union—it cannot do this, for outward force law can never run along the lines of absolute right and justice—but by trying to secure fidelity and responsibility for certain unions undertaken with special forms and ceremonies. Now, the law of God written in our hearts is that we shall be faithful to any union that we have contracted, and shall accept to the full all the consequences of our act, but this law is made of no effect by the tradition of men, which says that we are bound to be faithful to unions made with certain legal sanctions—which refuses to recognize unions otherwise contracted so that many unions which law and society support are in sight of God adultery, and many others which the world refuses to sanction are marriages before God. And just as the practice of bolstering up the moral sense and securing veracity by the taking of oaths has tended to weaken the sense of duty to speak truth with a simple yea and nay and has thus lowered the average standard of truthfulness, so the practice of bolstering up fidelity and responsibility by outward sanctions and compulsions in respect of certain specific unions has weakened the average conscience in regard to fidelity and responsibility in non-legalized unions; and at the door of legal marriage, with its customary sanctities and respectabilities, must lie some, at least, of the blame for the unhappy discarded women who are a danger to our society, and the untold number of "illegitimate" infants "farmed" and otherwise done to death.

I entreat those of our sympathisers who have not as yet seen the marriage law and custom in this light to reconsider their position—to see that the attempt to secure right action by outward hedging and restraint in certain cases weakens the conscience and the sense of responsibility in respect of the many cases where the outward sanction cannot in the nature of things be applied; to see that just as in the case of oaths, we suffer mainly from the prevailing low moral standard, and instead of trying by outward means to impose our standard in as many cases as possible, our wisest plan—the method of Jesus—is to raise the prevalent tone of thought, firstly by our own purity and entire acceptance of any responsibility we may have incurred, and, secondly, by treating as sacred every union which claims to be a marriage, whether legal or non-legal.

J. P. H.

Socialism and Sex.

BY R. B. KERR.

In No. 775 an article by "G. E. M." is reproduced from the "Truth Seeker," which contains the following remarks: "The indifference with which a socialist regards all other reforms but socialism is nothing less than magnificent. He will not do a stroke to further the solution of the religious question, the social question, and the question of personal liberty." The above is so absolutely false that it deserves some notice. To save space I shall deal only with the record of socialists on the sex question.

Socialism is nothing but an economic creed, and socialists as such have no more to do with the sex question than vegetarians. Socialism is an older and stronger movement than the sex movement, and has an incomparably greater number of adherents; from which it follows that there must be many socialists who are not sex reformers. On the other hand the sex reformers are mainly recruited from the socialists. It may be that three-fourths of the socialists are not sex reformers, but there is no doubt that nine-tenths of the sex reformers are socialists. In the literature of the sex movement three books have far surpassed all others in circulation, "The Elements of Social Science," "Woman in the Past, Present, and Future", and "The Woman who Did". The first two have gone through many editions in many languages, while the third has had a huge sale in all English speaking countries. The first was by an anonymous Doctor of Medicine; the second by August Bebel, who leads the seventeen million socialists of Germany; the third by Grant Allen, a prominent socialist.

The Legitimation League was, I think, the only society ever devoted to the promotion of sexual freedom. It had four prominent women propagandists, Emma Wardlaw Best, Edith Lanchester, Amy Morant, and Berta Buss. I know nothing of Mrs. Best's economics, but the other three are active members of Socialist societies.

At the Legitimation League at which I presided, there were twelve speakers, of whom eight were members of socialist societies. All the socialists were solid for sexual freedom. The only dissentient voice in the meeting was that of Henry Seymour, one of the ablest disciples of Proudhon, who thought that easy divorce would solve the sex problem.

When the Legitimation League declared for sexual freedom three members left, Wordsworth Donisthorpe, J. C. Spence, and J. Greevz Fisher. All were economic followers of Proudhon. Evidently they had also read Proudhon's writings on women to some purpose.

I know very little about American socialism, but the names of Charlotte Perkins Stetson, Edward Bellamy and T. B. Wakeman at once occur to me. Bellamy, though not a varietist, was a thorough believer in sexual freedom, and nothing on the sex question is more worth reading than his chapter in "Equality." Without comparing the merits of writers, I venture to say that "Women and Economics" and "Equality" will penetrate into more American homes than any other book yet written by any American writer in favor of sexual freedom.

Many pages might be written on this subject. One might deal with Robert Owen the Communist, the first man who ever tried to introduce sexual freedom into a community; or with William Morris, Bernard Shaw, and Edward Carpenter, all socialists and advocates of sexual freedom. There is a vast sex literature in France and Germany, almost all written by socialists. In all countries the socialists have been denounced as free lovers by the bourgeoisie.

The Bible tells us to "buy the truth and sell it not." The motto of the "Truthseeker" seems to be "Seek the truth, and tell it not."

Report of a Meeting of the D. A. E.

BY C. F. HUNT.

A weekly meeting of the D. A. E. (Divine Anthropoid Entities) was lately held in the Cerebrum of a Brain (vide Joseph Steiner in Lucifer No. 775.) Logic in the chair.

Prayer by Religious Fervor: "Almighty Mortal Thinker, we come again before Thee to do thy will, acknowledging thee as our Creator. Watch over our deliberations, and teach us to remember our dependence upon Thee for our existence. Well hast thou said 'an honest God is the noblest work of Man.' Aid us to be honest Gods, and do only thy will, and solve the problems of the societary world, even though we cannot see the ultimate purpose at times, for instance when we breed slaves for Monopoly and then kill them off with our patent Checks when they become too numerous. Make us understand the intricate policies of modern governments and when Political Economy changes help us to conform with alacrity. Amen."

"Amen" echoed all the spooks, except one sickly bant named Discontent who took the floor and said he thought R. Fervor was a mossback, and that it was time the Divinities drew up a declaration of independence. Why not follow the reformers on the Earth, and accomplish something? They had followed beaten paths too long, and even that old fossil Malthus, who had joined them, was beginning to crack open.

"The ghost is blasphemous," objected Conservatism. "He would open the floodgates. I move he be destroyed."

The chair ruled that while their radical friend was a mere subjective conception, yet they were all made of the same flimsy material, and if they began the use of such penalties, where would the matter end? Instead of fighting among themselves, why not take up, in earnest, the work for which they were assembled, that of developingthe Human Race?

Mars took the floor and asked how he was to decide in battle, when both sides were asking his help. Referred to Committee on Preventive Checks.

Pestilence and Famine offered a joint report, asking for relief. They were not especially tender hearted, but sometimes when cutting off the young and fair, their feeelings revolted against the work. Referred to a committee of mortals composed of R. G. Ingersoll (present) and M. Harman and L. M. Holmes, still in the mortal sphere.

"I move you," said Prudence rising, "that the name of M. Florence Johnson be added to this committee. She knows a remedy called Science which can make Woman the owner of herself, and then a woman, instead of asking for her children in a choking voice (in a case where three children have been carted to the jail with their drunken father) will apply the proper antidote, which is, Have no children."

"The member will explain how that would help the children already in jail," said the Chair. "What if the father learns to drink after the children are born by the mother's choice?"

It was decided to leave this problem to Human Thought.

War expressed the opinion that if women instead of men engaged in battle population would be checked more than by killing off men. This was ruled out of order as being in advance o Public Opinion. The meeting then adjourned.

LOVE AND THE LAW. By E. C. Walker. A clear, concise statement of social liberty in contradistinction to the much lauded less bondage now almost universally upheld. An excellent missionary document. Two copies, 5 cents; 20 cop ies per dozen.

The Wife as a Dependent.

The article in a late Lucifer in which Lillian Harman refers to the question of women asking their husbands for money minded me to pen a few thoughts on that subject. She speaks of the reluctance most women feel in asking their husbands for money; but I have never known a woman who did not shrink from this task, and I cannot conceive of there being such a one; unless it be among the uncivilized or among women very deficient in mental and moral perception. And even such I imagine, ponder over the question, "Why am I a pauper? why should Charlie carry the purse?"

Occasionally a woman may think she "don't mind asking," but I venture to say that her tone and bearing when asking for and receiveing money would belie her words. She does not like to ask, and for the best of reasons. She is a creature of Nature, and this mother long ago taught her that begging is not in harmony with her inherent law. Nature gives and receives but never begs. Beggars are legally made, whether the beggar be a tramp asking for bread, a woman asking for a quarter to buy pins, or a Christian begging for favors from his distant God.

I have suffered tortures from having to ask for the nickels and quarters, which never came willingly although there were plenty to give. I saw the injustice of the obligation imposed upon me, and my whole nature rebelled, yet I fulfilled it for years. I tried to crush the spirit of womanhood that demanded justice. But one day I found this spirit too strong to be quelled and I said to the man who carried my earnings, something like this: "I have decided never again to ask you for money. I have never been an idler, as you know, but help to earn all you have, and after earning it, it is wrong to compel me to go to you as one asking a gift, which you give reluctantly and in a spirit of assumed generosity. I must sing your praises if you provide the simplest neccessaries for your children and myself.

"When you pay a man for work, you do not consider it in the light of a gift but his just due. Now I am entitled to as respectful and as just treatment as you give to others."

The dear man was shocked, he could not accept my unorthodox views, and waxed eloquent in his denunciations of them. He thought that the right kind of a woman would be not only willing but glad to ask her husband for money. Yes, "the right kind of a woman" would accept her husband's opinions as well and consider whatever he did as right. Glorious conception! but of ancient type.

I told him I was sorry he had failed to get his ideal woman, but it happened that I was not cut after the St. Paul pattern. He advised women to keep silent and "ask their husbands at home" but I never considered the apostle's advice as sound, while it seemed he had been revelling in its great beauty and divine wisdom. Some of the Bible writers give lovely advice concerning women, and men of all generations have been delighted to follow. Women, I told him, have always by their keener intuitions detected the corruptness of the biblical authority as applied to them but their weakness of will has held them as slaves to the masculine conception. I warned him that when they were stronger, man would waken to discover that his Bible-ordained subjects had flown. He, like the average man, is fearful of their flight.

It is true, as I have said, that woman knows from within. She is the star in the east whose mission is to guide the world, the wise men included, into the light of a higher understanding and the haven of peace. The star leads ever to the manger of Christ (truth). It comes and stands over where the young child lies. The wise men guided by its brilliancy are led to the feet of the savior of the world. Woman, you are that star which leads ever to truth—to truth, the savior of man, and the only liberator of a suffering race. Awaken to a perception of your position, obey the voice within, and woo manto the heights of the sublime.

C. A. S. Des Moines, Iowa

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW. A primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. A valuable compendium on Sex Ethics. Startling and Scientific Facts, 10 cents.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper that it has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

DURING the past week we have received a dozen or more orders for "A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers," which we were unable to fill, owing to the supply of contributed copies being exhausted. We cannot buy more and sell at the low price advertised. It may be noted that other pamphlets are added to the list this week, and of some of these the supply is small. Only three weeks remain in which to take advantage of this Special Offer. The results, so far, have been quite gratifying to us, and we trust to our patrons as well.

At Forest Park, Ottawa.

The ninth Annual Convention of the Kansas Freethought Association at Forest Park, Ottawa, Kansas, though not so numerously attended as some of its predecessors, was a very harmonious and enjoyable affair. John E. Remsberg, of Atchison, Kan., President of the National Secular Union, who is credited with having delivered more Freethought addresses than any other lecturer now living, addressed the convention Saturday and Sunday evenings, Aug. 26 and 27. A prominent feature of the convention was the "conference" meetings, on which occasions the subjects discussed took in to a great extent the whole field of human or sociologic reform.

To fill a vacancy in the program the writer of these lines was invited to occupy and did occupy the platform on Thursday evening, in giving some account of his tour in the Southern States, last winter and spring, and on Friday evening he talked for an hour and a half upon "Motherhood in Freedom," and the "Right to be Born Well."

As at Mt. Pleasant Park I took for my texts the utterances of R. G. Ingersoll before the Free Religious Association of Boston, namely, "Science must make woman the owner, the mistress, of herself. Science, the only savior of mankind, must put it in the power of woman to decide for herself whether she will or will not become a mother," and showed, or tried to show, that this demand of the great Agnostic is identical with the demand, the contention, that Lucifer has been making for the last fifteen years, and for which demand, printed in plain language, its editor thrice suffered imprisonment as a malefactor.

The discussion that followed was animated and very interesting. Commenting upon my demand that woman should take the lead in all matters pertaining to the building of new human beings, and upon her shoulders naturally falls the chief responsibility of success or failure, Mrs. Semple maintained that I had not said enough. Admitting all that had been said in the lecture, in regard to woman's responsibility and the necessity of teaching girls all that is known or can be known of right and wrong selection of masculine co operation, prenatal impressions etc., Mrs. Semple maintained that the education of boys and of men along these lines should not be neglected. Boys and men should know that a large share of the responsibility of race improvement rests upon them, and that a high moral tone and correct habits of living are as necessary in preparation for fatherhood as they are in preparation for motherhood.

Mr. Baldwin of Liberal, Mo., said there could be no doubt of the speaker's honesty of purpose, but while conceding his honesty, his earnestness, etc., it does not follow that we should endorse all that he says. John Brown was honest and earnest. "It seems to be characteristic of many would-be reformers," said Mr. Baldwin "to run things into the ground. Great progress has been made in marital matters, and yet jails would continue to be filled though marriage laws should be abolished." Colonel Ingersoll was highly eulogized by Mr. Baldwin for the influence of his life and writings in favor of the "purity of the home," etc.

F. W. Cotton of Olathe, Kansas, defended the positions taken by the lecturer of the evening, and said no paper had ever done better work for the purity of the home than had Lucifer. "I love the cranks," said Mr. Cotton. "The world has progressed because of such cranks as Brother Harman. If there were no cranks there would be no progress."

W. O. Jones of Emporia, Kan., agreed most emphatically with the lecturer.

Matthew Semple, chairman of the meeting, told a humorous story illustrative of the hollowness, the hypocrisy, of the current or conventional morality in matters of sex, showing how the "upper crust," leaders of society give themselves away when measuring "other people's corn in their own half bushel."

Lack of space prevents more than the merest outline of the disscussion that followed the Friday evening lecture. Others whose names are not now recalled, took part therein. Having taken so much time in opening up the subject of discussion I made no reply, at the close to my friendly critics, and will claim but little space now. Briefly, however, I would say to Mrs. Semple:

Yes. Fatherhood is a very important factor in child-building and hence he cannot escape his share of the responsibility. But man's responsibility is subordinate to that of the woman in this matter All that has been said of masculine responsibility simply emphasizes my contention that woman must assume all responsibility of maternity, [including choice of paternity] on behalf of the children. Responsibility of the mother includes that of the father, as the greater includes the less, or as the whole includes every part. Woman is the architect and builder of the new human being. Man is the helper, the furnisher of materials—supplyer of conditions. As such he is responsible to woman for the quality of these materials, etc., while woman is responsible to the child and to the world at large for the general result—the finished product; just as the architect and builder of a public edifice is responsible to the municipality for the character of the finished structure, while the furnisher of materials—conditions—is responsible, chiefly if not solely, to the architect and builder.

To Mr. Baldwin I would say that it is canon law marriage and the statutes enacted to enforce canon law marriage that were arraigned by my lecture; and if Colonel Ingersoll's utterance before the Free Religious Association could be practicalized then there would be little or nothing left of canon law marriage. Great minds have differed in the past, and will doubtless continue to differ. Self-ownership of woman would abolish marriage—as we have it today. R. G. Ingersoll thinks this would abolish jails and penitentiaries. R. L. Baldwin thinks otherwise. Who is in the right?

Of the resolutions passed by the convention the first reads as follows:

"Whereas, the preamble to the Declaration of American Independence formulates and emphasizes the principle that all men should have equal right to life, liberty and pursuit of happiness, and whereas the Constitution of the United States guarantees freedom of speech and of press, and whereas all Freethinkers accept the formula of Herbert Spencer in his 'Data of Ethics,' viz.: 'Each individual has the right to do as he pleases so long as he does not invade the equal rights of others,'—therefore

"Resolved—That we, the members of the Kansas Freethought Association in convention assembled demand the repeal of the Federal statutes known as the Comstock postal laws, under which laws many publishers, editors and private persons have been deprived of liberty and property on the technical charge of sending through the mails obscene literature, and Resolved further that we pledge ourselves to use our influence and best efforts to secure the triumph of the principle 'equal rights for all and special privileges for none.'"

A resolution condemning the war upon the Filipinos was adopted after a somewhat spirited discussion. As passed it reads as follows:

"Resolved—By the members of the Kansas Freethought Association in convention assembled at Ottawa, Kansas, that we do most heartily condemn the present murderous policy of our government in the far-off Philippine Islands."

In support of this resolution it was put on record as the sense of the convention that "The immortal document, the Declaration of Independence, has been relegated to oblivion; its great injunctions and grand precepts ignored and forgotten by those who should love them most and cherish them best."

Mrs. Etta Semple of Ottawa, Kansas, was re-elected President of the Association for the coming year; J. W. Watkins, of Quenemo, Kansas, Secretary, and Samuel Carter, Kate Unthank, and W. H. Kerr, Vice Presidents.

Monday afternoon, Aug. 28, I visited one of Lucifer's oldest, most faithful and most generous friends, Henry Hiatt of Twin Mound, Kansas. Brother Hiatt is eighty-three years old, or thereabouts, and has been in feeble health for some months past but was able to meet me at the station, Richland, and drive me to his home, and that of his venerable but still active companion—some five miles away. The country around Twin Mound is the most picturesque I have yet seen in Kansas, and while the surface of the earth is hilly and broken it is very fertile and is covered with a luxuriant growth of vegetation. The corn crop of Kansas, by the way, for the present year, is now estimated at 300,000,000, the largest crop ever grown in this banner corn-growing state.

M. HARMAN.

Valley Falls, Kan., Sept. 1, '99.

Peck's Ideal for Maids and Mothers.

Laila Ueber in "Woman's Journal,"

Mr. Harry Thurston Peck, in his article entitled "For Maids and Mothers," in the January "Cosmopolitan," has told with naive simplicity his discoveries regarding the position women should occupy in the scheme of things.

Higher education, he has decided, "saps and weakens the physical strength and vitality of women, impairs their fitness for the functions Nature has assigned to them, and imports into the work of scholarship a disturbing element," besides various other calamities including "loss of charm." All of which is no doubt very important if true. As there seems to be other men who have this question of the position of women disturbing their repose, and who have also discovered, through divine intervention, where Nature intended women to stand, it is high time we women gave ear. We must confess, however, that it is rather hard, in the light of our present knowledge, to take Mr. Peck and his supporters seriously. They remind us of a story told of Lincoln during the war, when he was visited by a delegation of clergymen, who came to inform him of the intentions of the Lord respecting his duty. He heard them patiently to the end, and then merely remarked that "it wasn't often a man had a delegation sent direct from Divine Providence." In the case of women, these celestial delegations seem to be numerous.

Mr. Peck tells us that "a man who has gone deeply into things grows modest with the increase of knowledge." Applying this to the question in hand, we ask, is it then a lack of knowledge that makes some men so bold in the branch of learning known as "The Woman Question?" Or is it really modesty which prompts them to give us so generously their infallible decisions regarding our position? And this, too, in the face of the statement Mr. Peck makes, that women are "profoundly different" from men. Are we then to suppose that they know more about us than we do about ourselves, because they are so different

No doubt, if men's discoveries in all other fields of learning were as absolute and undeniable as in this, women would never have dared lift their diminished heads and ask to have them developed, for then there would indeed have been evidence that there was already quite enough head in the world.

Mr. Peck declares in all seriousness, that the trouble with having women in higher educational institutions lies with the university teacher;—that "but rarely can his attitude toward women who come under his direction be wholly and completely identical with his attitude towards men. Strive as he may, and say what he may, he can seldom forget that they are women; he cannot put aside at will the feeling which is based on social custom, tradition, on a thousand little influences, that spring up in his mind and manner from the very moment when he is confronted by the thought of sex." What a pathetic confession! Could anything show more conclusively that some reconstruction of society is necessary for the progress of mankind?

According to Mr. Peck, this conglomeration of feelings so deranges the university teachers, as to "create false standards, and propagate traditions that are lies," for because these students are women, he has "ranked them side by side with men of far superior attainments." Then Mr. Peck nobly and unselfishly remarks, that "if it were purely and entirely a woman question, perhaps it would not matter; but the serious part of this same question is its reflex influence upon the training of men."

It is the old story of Eve and the serpent: "She tempts me, I yield, and thereby overthrow the glorious standard of education I would uphold. Therefore take her away that I may be kept from temptation!" This state of things is indeed sad, but what an unbiased observer might say is needed under these trying conditions is men with sufficient backbone and control over their emotions to mark women as they deserved to be marked. Then, if women really do not possess the requisite ability, to drop them from these higher institutions of learning where, according to Mr Peck they are doing so much harm.

It is very apparent that Mr. Peck believes with Anthony Hope, that boys will be boys; but even that would not matter if we could prevent girls from being girls. He tells us also that woman "cannot possibly dwell upon anything that affects her intimately, and at the same time preserve the calm judgment and impartiality of an indifferent person." That her reason "is almost inevitably overpowered and warped by a capacity for emotion which with her lies close to reason, and which, when the two are not at one, controls it." We have long suspected that this very idea when applied to this type of man, might give us the clue to some of the astonishingly selfish utterances of these sentimentalists on the woman question. For this subject so influences their emotions and feelings that their sense of proportion, sense of humor, even their common sense seems to desert them when women are under discussion. Witness this quotation from Mr. Peck:

"Woman is never therefore to be thought of as the counterpart of man, any more than she is to be thought of otherwise than in the relation which she holds to man. Whatever is proposed for her, whatever plans are made for her, whatever privilege or duty may be claimed for her, must all be judged and passed upon in the light of this relation. Whatever fits her better to perform her part as man's best ally and his truest inspiration is a thing to be attained at any sacrifice of tradition; whatever mars the scheme of Nature and impairs the fitness of the woman for her cosmic functions ought to be stamped out relentlessly at any sacrifice of theory."

Here we have the "unbiased masculine" giving a purely unselfish opinion as regards woman. It is plainly evident that untrammeled intellect alone has reached this masterly discovery that woman is not to be thought of otherwise than in the relation which she holds to man. The only drawback to the glory reflected upon Mr. Peck in this discovery is the fact that other men before him have also used pure intellect upon this problem and come to the same conclusion.

Mr. Peck thinks things are pretty nice just as they are; he sees no reason why women should be wanting more development when they have such respect and reverence as is given them under these pleasant conditions. And his object in giving us his opinion, is to tell us that he fears a certain lack of content, which he has noticed in some women, may develop into a general form of discontent, and toward this, he wishes us to know "man is undoubtedly unsympathetic,—impatient even." That if it is distinction, or high position in the world that woman wants, she might as well give it up at once, since "everybody knows that man was created to do the world's hard work, to blaze the path for civilization, to strive, to battle, and to conquer, while woman's place in life is to put heart into his struggle by her sympathy, to keep him from faltering by her belief in him, to give him also that highest motive for achievement which springs from love that is the source of supreme and lasting inspiration." This reminds us of a parody on the Psalm of Life, and as we all like to see fine thoughts in poetic form, we quote the gem.

"Wives of great men all remind us
How domestic and sublime
Wives may live, yet leave behind them
Only Hubby's tracks on time.

Life is real, life is earnest,
A Hubby great should be our goal;
Dust we are to dust returnest.
Only Hubby has a soul.

Let us then be up and doing
With a heart for Hubby's fate
Nothing for ourselves perusing;
All is well if Hubby 's great."

"Some," he says, "may object that it is too soon to generalize; that the sex has not had time to prove its true equality with man in man's own field of labor." "Yet," he says, "this is really not the case." Here again we see Mr. Peck speaking with the authority of one having a special divine revelation respecting women. And as proof of our lack of ability, he tells us that there never was a female Bach or Phidias; that Sappho and George Eliot can't be put beside Dante and Shakespeare; consequently what is the use of our trying, since after all this terrible "sacrifice of health, after all the loss of charm," we can only take a second or third rank.

Now this is a novel reason for pure mind to evolve for not giving women higher education. This idea applied to men would lead to only the Bachs, Dantes and Shakespeares receiving higher education, and the difficulty that would confront us would be to decide who these embryo geniuses were, upon whom higher education should be bestowed.

To speak seriously and with no pretensions to revelation, women realize that the reason they want higher education as well as other advantages, both political and economic, is simply because they are human beings, who, like men, intend to develop their minds and characters, believing that it lies for each woman, as for each man, to select the work she believes herself best fitted to perform in the world.

It is an undeniable truth that the age is rapidly outgrowing Mr. Peck's hybrid, over-sexed ideal of woman, and the chief difficulty all along has been that this strange being never existed as a fact, but comes under the definition of a mermaid we once heard of in childhood,—"a thing that can't live in water and dies when it comes on land." Such a nondescript being could not be a success, except in the minds of those who evolved her. For we know that intellect, whether in woman or man, must assert itself; and to say, "thus far thou shalt go and no farther," in influences or education, is powerless to stay the tide of progress which sweeps on in spite of the fact that some people are without ability to reckon with it or courage to confront it.

WHEN SENDING money to this office, use money orders or bank drafts, but not personal checks, bank bills or coins. We are constantly losing money in the mail from disregard of these directions. Sums under one dollar may be sent in postage stamps.

As a "Beginner" Sees Us.

From the several copies of Lucifer which I have seen from time to time in the past four years I take it for granted that all reasons for the abolition of marriage are understood and conceded as a matter of course by all writers of the paper, and to raise objections against the institution would be a waste of time and space, as the case has already been decided.

This position seems to me unreasonable and untenable. Almost the first obstruction the beginner meets in the path of social progress is marriage; and, until that stumbling-block is removed, he cannot advance one step. Now to refuse to discuss the wrongs and injustice of the present marriage system, because many of you have evoluted beyond, is wrong—if your aim is to convert—and the surest way to keep people from traveling your road. It is a fact that not two persons out of twenty will pick up an average copy of Lucifer without receiving a "shock" to their moral convictions from the advanced theories advocated therein.

You may be right, but you are very injudicious in your method of administering such strong doses to weak patients, if you desire to effect a permanent cure. Too much light at first often blinds the eyes of the weak. If a monthly edition of Lucifer could be printed for beginners, in which only the wrongs and inconsistencies of the present social system would be shown in their true colors without reference to the future welfare of society beyond the abolition of marriage; the result would be fifty converts where now there is one. You may be all right in your deductions, but you must remember you did not always occupy such high ground, and you should be willing to make every allowance for those at the bottom of the ladder who are looking up to you for light and encouragement.

I, personally, like such writers as C. L. James, Walter Barrows, and Francis Barry, even though I cannot agree with them, but I do not expect the average investigator to exercise the same leniency toward them. Most people would feel like picking up a club and giving them a bat over the head for daring to prophesy of a time when women and men could meet and associate sexually indiscriminately, like sheep and cattle in a field without a sense of humiliation, or loss of social prestige. Of course there is a milder way of stating the case, but these are the cold facts, stripped of their high lights and finishing touches. Walter Barrows could no doubt take his brushes and transform this rough sketch into a fine painting without destroying even a line. The secret, perhaps, lies in knowing how to mix the paints, and in applying them at the right change of the moon.

I do not believe that women will ever have a moral right to associate sexually with Tom, Dick, and Harry. I believe the race is going the other way. Of course she may enjoy the legal right, but can she do so and retain her self-respect in the eyes of men? Virtue will always be its own reward, and women who indulge the least sexuality (even to the point of total abstinence) will be the ones most respected and admired by men.

I do not like to mar the symmetry of "new ideals," but I cannot refrain from chastising those mad extremists who maintain that sexuality is the sole aim and goal of humanity. There are higher and nobler aims in life than the gratification of fleshly lust, and as the spiritual energies and aspirations of man unfold and expand this doctrine will gradually be accepted. Love has its rights and no sane person will regard legal restrictions regulating the same, but lust has no rights whatever, and should be condemned by all thinkers and writers. It is painful to note that there is a tendency on the part of some writers to uphold and extol bestiality from a moral point of view. This is wrong and should be discouraged. Sex association, when prompted by love is lawful and proper and can never be interfered with by gods or men; and, if indulged in honestly will never lead to quarrels or separations, for there is little danger of men or women loving two persons at the same time.

From this I do not want to be understood as opposing sexual liberty; far from it! I am unequivocally in favor of unrestricted liberty between the sexes, and against all legal barriers regulating the same, but I deny that any lover, man or woman, can clap his or her hands and shout hallelujah, when one he or she has loved and trusted for years turns away to the love and embraces of another. The human heart is not built that way. All should have this right, but such changes will always be accompanied by heart-aches and disappointments too deep for utterance. Like Warren, I prefer to save my embraces for the one I love best—but, I expect my mate to do as much by me.

H. P. Hadley.

It seems strange to me that any one who has read even "three or four copies of Lucifer, as H. P. Hadley says he has done, should receive the impression that we "refuse to discuss the wrongs and injustice of the present marriage system." There is probably not a week goes by in which attention is not called to some phase of this wrong.

Our correspondent may be right in saying that the average copy of Lucifer will "shock" the majority of new readers. If so, it is because they do not read it with due thought. As a matter of fact, it is the average beginner who usually expresses himself in the most "shocking," most "coarse" manner. It is on the writing of the "beginner" that the editorial pencil has to be exercised most freely to make the paper even admissible to the mails. I have thought it necessary to eliminate considerable matter from the article of Mr. Hadley (I use the prefix as a matter of convenience,) and substitute euphemisms for several words which experience and observation have taught me are dangerous to attempt to send through the mails.

But this is no new experience. In our "Lucifer Circle" meetings I have observed that it was always the consistent radical who expressed his or her ideas in "decorous" language. It was the conservative, who came there shame-facedly, evidently expecting something "off color," who indulged in "smutty" stories and innuendoes.

It is rather amusing to see the names which Mr. Hadley brackets together as representative writers of Lucifer—"Walter Barrows"—I presume he means Barton—was a typical "beginner." He had seen just one copy of Lucifer, and his impression of the paper was quite similar to that of Mr. Hadley. He, too, assumed that if we admitted the right of a person to regulate his or her affairs we thereby advocated promiscuity. In other words, he assumed that freedom of choice was synonymous with no choice. Mr. Barton's letters were not written for publication—of course his real name was suppressed—and the letters had to be "toned down" very decidedly in order that the paper containing them might be mailable. It is astonishing that any one could read them and not see that they were opposed to the policy of the paper.

The great bugaboo that so terribly frightens Mr. Hadley and Mr. Barton, is a creature of their imagination—promiscuity. When an issue of Lucifer is named in which promiscuity is advocated, there will be time to defend it against the charge. I have not yet seen that paper.

Mr. Hadley thinks it necessary to "chastise those who maintain that sexuality is the sole aim and goal of humanity." But who does so maintain? I know of no one who comes nearer to it than the person who assumes that, granted liberty, people must inevitably go to excess. Who is it who thinks that a certain act is the inevitable consequence of a man and woman taking the liberty to be alone together?

In liberty Mr. Hadley will have the right to reserve himself for any woman who wants him; but he will not have the right to hold any one to him by force. As long as she voluntarily desires to remain with him it is her right to do so; but liberty will nullify that old edict of law: "Once consent, always consent."

Mr. Hadley will also have the right to give his admiration and respect to the woman of no sexual experience—(quite a "dividing up" that will be, to be sure, when his highest admiration and respect are given to a woman other than the one on whom he bestows his "embraces"!) But what an upheaval of ideals it would involve, should the rest of the world agree with him! For instance think of the apotheosis of the "withered" and hopeless "old maid," and the accompanying fall from the admiration of men of the "irresistible, charming widow," and the dethronement of the "household queen"—the Mother! Our friend is a great iconoclast.

L. H.

Boston has in its rivers and harbor thirty places belonging to the city for open-air bathing in summer. Other cities have considerable, though in most cases inferior, facilities of the sort. Chicago, with twenty-five miles of lake front, has one public bathing beach "for children," in Lincoln park, and two admirable tanks, one for men and the other for women, in Douglas Park. Swimming is an exercise which for wholesomeness and exhilaration is second to none other in the world, and yet the inhabitants of this city have but slight enjoyment of it.

Moreover, bathing suits are a nuisance to carry about, and to many a burdensome expense if rented. Bathing beaches are being provided in the East and abroad where no suits are required. Such beaches have proved entirely unobjectionable. Chicago needs ample places—apart from the Chicago River—where her youths can swim, and in some of these "costume" might well be dispensed with.—Chicago Tribune.

WOMEN and ECONOMICS,

A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women. By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Here are a few of the page headings of this remarkable work: "Economic environment; The dependence of women; No inherent disability of sex; Marriage not a partnership; House service as a livehood; Motherhood and economic production; Modification to maternity; The usefulness of sex; Differentiation of sex; Sex and humanity; The peacock's tail; Sex distinctions; The eternal feminine; unreasoning devotion; Women as persons; Race-attributes and sex-attribute; The normal child; Personal profit and sex-relations; The influence of heredity; The young man and the young woman; The effect of custom; The sex relation personal; Innocence and ignorance; Marriage with independence; The increasing difficulty of marriage; Supporting one's family; Virtue and vice; The results of repression; The harm that women do; The development of love; The hope for the future; The martyr and the pioneer; The dropping of the bars; The meaning of the new woman; Motherhood in education; A criminal failure; Marriage and the family; Love's young dream; The heart and the stomach; Socializing the household industries; The stomach as a family tie; The servant wife; World-servants and house-servants; A wider maternity; Between the old and the new; "The vices of the slave;" The outgrown stronghold. Printed on strong, heavy paper; 350 pages, bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale by M. Harman, 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

AZTEC CALENDAR.

Send 25 cents to C. A. Higgins, A. G. P. A., A. T. & S. F. Ry., Great Northern Bldg., Chicago, for copy of Aztec Calendar, July to December. Contains six separate reproductions in color (8 x 11 inches) of Burbank's Pueblo Indian portraits—the season's art sensation. Also engraved cover representing ancient Aztec calendar stone. A handsome and unique souvenir; edition limited: order early.

Free Love; A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of connubial love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 1871, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence. 110 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

THE CHICAGO & ALTON R. R. is the best line to all points in the South, South-west and West. Free reclining Chair Cars, Pullman Palace Cars. Ticket office 101 Adams st. Chicago.

James Charlton, Gen. Pass. & Tkt Agent.

George J. Charlton, Asst Gen. Pass. & Tkt Agt.

778.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

Only Four Weeks More!

Following is a list of valuable books which we will sell during the month of Sept. at just one half the regular publisher's price if ordered in lots amounting to one dollar or more. This unusually liberal offer is made because receipts of the office are always lower in the summer than at any other time of the year. The books could not be sold for these prices if it were not for the fact that many of them have been donated to Lucifer by generous friends to aid in its work of education. Pick out the books you want in the list below to the amount of two dollars and send us just ONE HALF the price marked and the books will be sent to you promptly, free of postage.

Ideala. By Sarah Grand. This is the story of a woman too thoughtful, too honest, too true for the conventional "middle class" English society in which she lived. Her life story furnishes much food for thought for those who like to study the facts of life when disguised as fiction. Handsomely bound in cloth. 195 pages. .40

Our New Humanity, No. II. Part of the contents: The Prodigal Daughter, or the Price of Virtue, by Rachel Campbell; Pioneer Chips. Extracts from the private letters of Rachel Campbell, by M. Florence Johnson; Marriage, What It Was and Is—Will the coming woman marry? By "X." (M. Harman); Reminiscences of the Long Ago, II., III. and IV. By Lucy N. Colman; The Ascent of Life, by Moses Harman; Legal Wifehood, by Lucinda B. Chandler; Whose is the Child? by Lex; Tombstone Texts. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. III. Part of the contents: The Unwomanly Woman, by Lizzie M. Holmes; That Great Fraud Yclept Society, by Moses Hull—with comments by his daughter, M. Florence Johnson; Normal Sexual Action, by Ernest Winne; Evolution of Familism, by Albert Chavannes; Virgin Soil, (story); Love in Liberty, by J. Wm. Lloyd; Reminiscences of the Long Ago, V., VI., by Lucy N. Colman; At What Age? 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. IV. Contents: The Abolition of Marriage, by John Beverly Robinson; Isabel's Intention, (story) by Mariette; Reminiscences of Berlin Heights, by A. Warren; The Sexes and Love in Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; A Woman-Child, by J. Wm. Lloyd; Burmese Women; The Great Conflict, by James F. Morton, Jr.; "The Truth About Love," by Moses Harman; Reminiscences—Then and Now, by Moses Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. V. Contents: Priestly Celibacy, by A. L. Rawson; Sex Love Analytically Defined, by Ernest Winne; The Other Side, by May Clifford Hurd; The Incoherence of Transition, by E. C. Walker; The Greatest Sin, (an allegory,) by R. B. Kerr; Our New Savior—the Surgeon, by C. T. Brown; Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; To Man, (poem) by Charlotte Perkins Stetson; Motherhood in Freedom, by M. Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. VI. Contents: Woman's Primal Right, by Francis Barry; The Curse of Maternity, From the French of Henry Fevre; How to Escape the Curse, by Jonathan Mayo Crane; Can Marriage be Abolished? by Albert Chavannes; Woman's "Duty" to Bear Children, by E. C. Walker; Love's Law, by William Francis Barnard; The Freedom Not to Do, by C. L. Swartz; True and False Morality, by C. L. James; Wanted: A New Adam; A Brood Mare, (poem) by Charlotte Perkins Stetson; Life, Health and Longevity, by Moses Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. VII. Contents. The Rights of Children, by R. B. Kerr; Incineration, by Walter Breen; What Are Women Here For? by E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.; What the Young Need to Know—A Primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker; The New Martyrdom, by Lillian Harman; The Will, (story, from the French of Guy de Maupassant; A Free Man's Creed, by Moses Harman. .25

Leaflets by Austin Kent. Conjugal Love, the True and False; A Letter to a Magdalene; My Creed, or What Believe and What I Know; An Open Letter to Andrew Jackson Davis, or, What I Call Conjugal Love; A Letter to My Atheistical Brethren. Each, 3 cents; the lot, .12

Ruled by the Tomb; A Discussion of Free Thought and Free Love, by Orford Northcote. .10

The Dawn of Civilization; or, England in the Nineteenth Century, by J. C. Spence. With portrait of author. 190 pages. .25

What the Young Need to Know,—A Primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. .10

Economics of Anarchy. A Study of the Industrial Type. By Dyer D. Lum. Paper, 60 pages. (Scarce) .25

Government Analyzed. By John R. Kelso, A. M. This book seeks to show that all governments, like all gods, are the mere personifications of mythical monsters invented by selfish and crafty men as instruments with which to rob and enslave the ignorant toiling masses. A book which is sure to open the eyes of governmentalists who read it. Bound in cloth; 520 pages; edition limited; 1.50.

Liberty, Political, Religious, Social and Sexual. By A. F. Tindall. .10

Catechism on the Science of a Universal Religion. Or what we can, and must do, in co-operation to secure a true religion and universal happiness. By Gabriel Z. Wacht. 118 pages. .25

Vistae Vitae. By M. T. Martin, M. D. .25

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs. By Oswald Dawson. Contains fine full-page portraits of E. H. Heywood, Lois Waisbrooker, M. Harman and Lillian Harman. .25

Free Press. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock Law. By G. C. Clemens and David Overmyer. Also Judge Foster's decision overruling the demurrer. .25

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY. Co-educational. Send for catalog. A. E. Gammage, President. 167 Dearborn St., Chicago.

RIGHTS OF WOMEN

IN THE SEXUAL RELATIONS,

By Karl Heinzen. A new edition together with the startling letters of "Louise Mayen" on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German women at Frauenstadt. A book of 286 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Price paper bound, 50 cents; cloth, $1

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be FREE; must enjoy the full privilege of soliciting the love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent socially, industrially."—Page 365. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CITYLESS AND COUNTRYLESS WORLD", by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 470 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races." Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III., Co-operation; Chapter V., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, ten cts.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 36. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, SEPT. 16, E. M. 299. [C. E 1899.] WHOLE No. 779

If We Knew.

Could we but draw the curtains
That surround each others lives,
See the naked heart and spirit,
Know what spur the action gives
Often we should find it better,
Purer than we judge we should
We should love each other better
If we clearly understood.

If we knew the cares and troubles,
Knew the efforts all in vain,
And the bitter disappointment—
Understood the loss and gain—
Would the grim, eternal roughness
Seem, I wonder, just the same?
Should we help, where now we hinder?
Should we pity where we blame?

Ah! we judge each other harshly,
Knowing not life's hidden force;
Knowing not the fount of action
Is less turbid at its source.
Seeing not amid the evil
All the golden grains of good—
Oh! we'd love each better
If we only understood.

—Sel.

The Idea of God and Sex Purity.

BY REV. SIDNEY HOLMES.

"What has the idea of a God to do with this scientific subject (sex purity)?" asks "A Freethinker" in "The Christian Life," and the editor of that paper answers: "God, with many, means the highest conception of love, truth, purity and justice. Put it in this light, if you please, and see how important such ideal thought is in its relation to the question of sex purity."

The objection to Brother Caldwell's use of the word God in the sense indicated is that it is a limitation of the God idea, for the word God does not mean the same thing to any two persons. Much of the evil of the marriage institution is due to the fact that millions of persons attribute to God a restrictive power antagonistic to the course of nature, although, paradoxically enough, they call this course of nature "God's law" in every case except where it pertains to the impulses and affections of human beings. For man, they believe, God has had to supplement his natural laws by revelations, as if an omniscient being would not know enough to make laws that require no amendment by revelation.

I do not believe it is necessary to appeal to the God idea to show the desirability of right living. But Brother Caldwell may reply that right living means living as God intends us to live. All people, however, do not agree as to what is God's intent and many contend that there is no evidence that God has any intent. For that reason I think unnecessary argument can be avoided by saying that right living is living in such a way as to promote the welfare and happiness of humanity so far as we are able to do so.

Brother Caldwell and I may be able to show to our Christian friends that marital slavery is not in accord with the general teachings of the Bible, but in order to impress the horrors of this slavery on the thousands who do not care anything about what the Bible teaches it is necessary to take a broader ground. For that reason I prefer to appeal to the sense of justice in men and women.

"The unprincipled man would take advantage of the woman to whom he was not legally married, and deprive his children of their rights to an inheritance in his property. The law protects the wife and children when the husband and father has property which rightfully belongs to them." So says the editor of "The Christian Life." But would not an unprincipled man also take advantage of the woman to whom he is legally married? Has not Brother Caldwell's paper cited numerous cases of this kind? What worse advantage can a man take of a woman than a sexual advantage? Are not advantages of this kind taken thousands of times in wedlock where they are taken once outside of marriage? Is it not true that an unprincipled man can, and often does, squander his property and thereby deprives his wife and children of their inheritance? How then does the law protect them? Apparently Brother Caldwell's argument is that marriage is necessary only when the man is unprincipled. But what woman will marry a man whom she believes to be unprincipled? And if she discovers after marriage that he is unprincipled is that not all the more reason why she should be free to leave him? Will Brother Caldwell contend that she, for the sake of an inheritance for herself and children, should continue to live with him and "submit to his demands however unjust and tyrannical he may be"? His own words declare "Such an idea is a travesty of justice . . . and indicates, in those who entertain it, a serious mental defect, if not moral perversity."

"If parties marry for any other consideration except mutual love and affection," Brother Caldwell says, "they commit a serious mistake." Do they not commit just as serious a mistake if they remain married and live together for any other consideration? Yet Brother Caldwell in such a case apparently thinks, figuratively speaking, that they should grin and bear it.

Here is the proof of it. One of his readers writes: "We know there is an awful responsibility resting upon woman, but what can she do until she is treated differently by the father of her children?"

Note his answer: "If she has tried love coupled with firmness and enforced by heavenly wisdom, patiently and persistently, without effect, let her keep on. She will certainly develop in herself the noblest qualities of mind, heart and soul, and if she bears children, they will inherit most noble principles and tendencies."

With a firm belief in Brother Caldwell's honesty and his sincerity of purpose in endeavoring to promote sexual purity, I must say that I consider such advice to a woman atrocious. In the first place I can not see how the course he prescribes could be approved by either "heavenly" or earthly wisdom. I can not believe that submission by a woman to a careless and inconsiderate husband will have a tendency to develop in her "the noblest qualities of mind, heart and soul." On the contrary I should think it would tend to destroy her individuality and degrade her womanhood to the extent that she would be unfit for motherhood.

"Let her keep right on," is Brother Caldwell's advice to a woman who has done all in her power to secure from an inconsiderate husband a respect for her right to be exempt from sexual invasion. Yet in the same issue of his paper he prints a story by Mrs. McVean-Adams showing the effect of such keeping right on. The story is about a woman preacher who has been talking to a western ranchman about the breeding of cattle. The ranchman says:

"That woman stood there, lookin' just as innocent, and when I was all done, she sez, sez she, 'I have been told that cattle were better cared for than women, in this free country,' sez she, 'and now I know it is true.'

"'How do you make that out?' sez I.

"'O, I go about so much, an' often women tell me things. Being a stranger an' on the wing, they open their hearts to me—broken hearts, lots of them,' sez she. 'An' I hear about babies born before their time; babies born dead, babes born idiotic, babies born deformed, babes born beautiful to look at, but stamped with sensuality, which early destroys them; babies born healthful, but dying in convulsions, because the mother's milk is spoiled by excitement; and I think how blessed it would be if some of the good common sense that causes men to obey the law of nature in the care of cattle, could be used in the care of human bodies and immortal souls.'"

Unmindful of the antagonism of this story to his advice to a suffering wife voiced in the words "Let her keep right on," he adds a line at the bottom of the story saying "We hope to have Mrs. Adams' contributions regularly for publication in these columns.

"The Christian Life" is doing a good work however. Its principles are very near in accord with those of The Light Bearer and it reaches many people who are not far enough advanced for some of the radical views expressed in Lucifer—those who are not ready to discard tradition but must be made to see that a proposed reform is in accord with their own standard of morality. Among its announced principles are "The divine right of every child to be well born and welcomed into existence.

"The improvement of the race through the observance of pre-natal laws and improved environments.

"The character of children should be improved by right thought and action on the part of parents during the pre-natal existence of their children.

"Parents can, and should, endow their children with a better heredity than they themselves possess.

"We believe in the right of woman to determine when she shall assume the maternal office.

"The two things that most powerfully affect humanity for good or ill—heredity and environment—should be made as good as possible.

"Ignorance is a fruitful source of vice; therefore wise instruction of the young is a good preventive, and a wise investment.

"A child born of mutual love, wisdom and goodness, rightly environed, is sure to be a blessing to the world.

"Stirpiculture—the improvement of humanity through pre-natal influences, etc.,—is a most important science."

"The Christian Life" is published quarterly by the National Purity Association, 81 Fifth avenue, Chicago.

Man's senses have been his arch-deceivers, and his preconceptions their abettors, throughout human history; . . . advance has been possible only as he has escaped through the discipline of the intellect from the illusive impressions about phenomena which the senses convey.—Edward Clodd, "Pioneers of Evolution," p. 150.

In a Far-off World.

From "Dreams." Olive Schreiner.

There is a world in one of the far-off stars, and things do not happen here as they happen there.

In that world were a man and woman; they had one work, and they walked together side by side on many days, and were friends—and that is a thing that happens now and then in this world also.

But there was something in that star-world that there is not here. There was a thick wood: where the trees grew closest, and the stems were interlocked, and the summer sun never shone, there stood a shrine. In the day all was quiet, but at night, when the stars shone or the moon glinted on the tree-tops and all was quiet below, if one crept here quite alone and knelt on the steps of the stone altar, and uncovering one's breast, so wounded that the blood fell down on the altar steps, then whatever he who knelt there wished for was granted him. And all this happens, as I said, because it is a far-off world, and things often happen there as they do not happen here.

Now, the man and woman walked together; and the woman wished well to the man. One night when the moon was shining so that the leaves of all the trees glinted, and the waves of the sea were silvery, the woman walked alone to the forest. It was dark there; the moonlight fell in little flecks on the dead leaves under her feet, and the branches were knotted tight overhead. Farther in it got darker, not even a fleck of moonlight shone. Then she came to the shrine; she knelt down before it and prayed; there came no answer. Then she uncovered her breast: and with a sharp two-edged stone that lay there she wounded it. The drops dripped slowly down on to the stone, and a voice cried, "What do you seek?"

She answered, "There is a man; I hold him nearer than any thing. I would give him the best of all blessings."

The voice said, "What is it?"

The girl said, "I know not, but that which is most good for him I wish him to have."

The voice said, "Your prayer is answered; he shall have it."

Then she stood up. She covered her breast and held the garment tight upon it with her hand, and ran out of the forest, and the dead leaves flattered under her feet. Out in the moonlight the soft air was blowing, and the sand glittered on the beach. She ran along the smooth shore, then suddenly she stood still. Out across the water there was something moving. She shaded her eyes and looked. It was a boat; it was sliding swiftly over the moonlit water out to sea. One stood upright in it; the face the moonlight did not show, but the figure she knew. It was passing swiftly; it seemed as if no one propelled it; the moonlight's shimmer did not let her see clearly, and the boat was far from shore, but it seemed almost as if there was another figure sitting in the stern. Faster and faster it glided over the water away, away. She ran along the shore; she came no nearer it. The garment she had held closed fluttered open; she stretched out her arms, and the moonlight shone on her long loose hair.

Then a voice beside her whispered, "What is it?"

She cried, "With my blood I bought the best of all gifts for him. I have come to bring it him! He is going from me!"

The voice whispered softly, "Your prayer was answered. It has been given him."

She cried, "What is it?"

The voice answered, "It is that he might leave you."

The girl stood still. Far out at sea the boat was lost to sight beyond the moonlight sheen.

The voice spake softly, "Art thou contented?"

She said, "I am contented."

At her feet the waves broke in long ripples softly on the shore.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposite views are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the strong points of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "A Lecture on Religious Political and Social Freedom." Price, 10 cents. A set, one of each, for 20 cents.

Specialization in Industry.

BY EDGAR D. BRINKERHOFF.

The impression made by the chapter on division of labor in "Wealth of Nations" was so strong as to force me at the age of thirteen to Mr. Kerr's conclusion that the state should centralize all production to make specialization more minute and exact. Further study made it apparent how much more tyrannical the state would become after the union with industry and what a poor manager it is anyway. Still further research brought to light some contrasts between two ideals, the one of great aggregations of labor and capital under one control, the other of just as great assemblages of labor and capital though not owned by one or a few but controlled separately in small parcels by individual owners and workers. This latter conception allows industry the completest specialization and the greatest economy and is the one to which Mr. Kerr has not yet attained.

He does not see how twenty or thirty men can be efficiently engaged in making a pin unless they have a boss over them and use tools and machinery and a building owned by the large capitalist or the state. He has never imagined twenty men each in his own shop joining his special labor to the pin and selling it to the owner of the next shop who adds his work and passes it on to the next at a slightly increased price. He has not contemplated a manufacturer of steam power selling the same to each shop as demand arises. He has not hoped to see the manufacturing of the future done in cheap, safe, low buildings rather than in costly, unsafe sky scrapers which are a product of the artificial scarcity of land even if they do otherwise admit of some unimportant economies. He has not realized the saving of clerical labor where red tape does not play a part as it must in large concerns and in government business. What Mr. Kerr has conceived is a pocket linen factory in each man's house and he has wasted his breath in punching this man of straw.

The important point is aggregation, not control. Still it is not necessary to regard every shop or mine as presenting the extreme example of one man working for himself in a center where are congregated thousands of others working for themselves each with his little capital, though something like this would be the condition of a majority of the producers. But the nature of some supplies requires that a number of men be associated in furnishing them, as say in bridge building. Even this business may not involve a large plant under one control as possibly industry may yet become so nearly perfectly differentiated that the builders of bridges will buy ready-made all the parts going to make up the complete bridge, giving their orders to quarries, foundries and machine shops as needed. Men will associate in bridge building as equal partners, but even if one man should own and manage the business and hire others, there would be no denial of the superior possibilities of individual industry, as the wages paid must be very high when land and money are free so that any one may work for himself when not satisfied with the wages offered.

Where rent and interest do not exist, there will be no single fortune large enough to yield the amount of capital needed to reduce the power of Niagara on a grand scale to a form convenient for use in shops; but private initiative is equal to the occasion when workers are free. Out of millions of workingmen in possession of a snug little capital of many thousands of dollars each enough will be ready to combine their means into a large concern to accomplish this end. This beats the control of great capitalists or of the state, especially when we consider that they would have to sell the power at about the cost of producing it.

It is not the centralization of business but its union with the state that is ruining the small competitor. Natural centralization will make no rule of hurting anybody.

How can Mr. Kerr think that "this centralization" that is ruining small competitors "is quite independent of land systems, money systems, and tariffs and inevitably follows from free competition"? Can it be possible that he believes that the power of the coal barons and oil kings would not be greatly impaired if the principle of occupancy and use were to be observed and the state were to discontinue backing them up in withholding coal fields and oil lands from use? And does he suppose that railroads could collect their present exorbitant charges if interest were to be abolished, as it would be under a free money system? And is he confident that tariffs and other interferences with trade do not put into some pockets the profits that they take out of other pockets?

It is strange to hear Herbert Spencer's name invoked on Mr. Kerr's side of this controversy. The author of the "Synthetic Philosophy" would be surprised to hear state industry called heterogeneous and individual initiative homogeneous.

Mr. Kerr has not yet furnished a single example of the fleecing of the public by a combine unaided by government. Sir Thomas Lipton was aided by the state as every captain of industry is helped in a country where exist rent and interest: these are government products benefiting the strong as much as special favors would, and acting very much as would a law protecting everybody in the use of their fists. The joint-stock companies of England two or three centuries ago were aided more or less by the state as the government was not allowing business freedom at that time. The nine dollars charged by the twenty-two hotels must be about a fair price for board under the circumstances or else private houses would soon enter the field in taking table boarders. A dollar is not charged for four cans of condensed milk in other villages, why in the one referred to? When Mr. Kerr was challenged to produce a single instance of gulling the public by a free combination, it was intended that a case should be given of detrauded persons sufficiently numerous and near enough to civilization to be entitled to the dignity of being called the public. Also, it was intended that the example should be selected from developed industry as no one disputes that undue gains occur at times at the dawn of industry or during the early stages of developing business as in the matter of the joint-stock companies mentioned, though it is evident that excessive profits tend to disappear.

In Mr. Kerr's first reply to Mr. Harman he undertook to show that combines can prosper as well in a country of free money, free land and free trade as in a country where monopoly law exists. He will make little headway in establishing this contention until he produces some evidence that interferences with business do not assist combines in robbing the public.

Morrisville, Sept. 3, 1899.

As to the Heathen.

Bolton Hall.

We met to consider what was the trouble with the heathen. They all talked at once, so that nobody except myself could hear what anybody said.

"He wastes the skins of his bananas," said the college student.

"He drinks too much rum, when we send it to him," said the Good Templar.

"He does not acquire any land," said the political reformer.

"Nor indeed any of his neighbor's goods," said the business man.

"He spends too much on his funeral rites," said the superintendent of the poor.

"He talks too much about his other rights," said the senator.

"Send him to the country," said the city missionary.

"Send him to——!" said the practical politician.

"We must share with him the blessings of our civilization," said the stock broker.

"Send the soldiers after him," said the expansionist.

"And some Bibles, too, said the parson. "I have read that Bibles when in the soldiers' pockets, often stop bullets."

I stood up and said nothing. At this they were greatly astonished, and when all had ceased talking I read:

"Ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte and when he is made ye make him two-fold more a child of hell than yourselves."

The meeting broke up in confusion.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

THE NAME LUCIFER MEANS LIGHT-BEARING OR LIGHT-BRINGING and the paper in it has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

Current Comments.

An object lesson of much significance is contained in the following "special to the New York 'Herald' from Washington":

"When Admiral Dewey is formally detached from sea duty immediately after the return of the Olympia next month, he will be granted an indefinite leave of absence and only assigned to duty again upon his own application. If the admiral holds to his reported determination to retire he will be placed on the retired list on December 26, when he will be 62 years old. There will be no change in the admiral's pay upon his retirement."

So long as honors such as these, and so long as such pecuniary rewards, continue to be showered upon those whose occupation is the killing of their fellow human beings, is there any good ground of hope that war will ever cease to be attractive to the ambitious, the enterprising and the "patriotic" youth of the United States? With the example given us in this Philippine war,—this wholesale butchery of a people whose only crime is that they ask to be free and independent, the young men of today with military aspirations are warranted in the belief that there will always be opportunities for putting to practice their profession, and of gaining renown and wealth in the business of soldier.

* * *

In speaking of the pension business Commissioner H. Clay Evans says he is a "believer in generous giving of pensions to the defenders of this nation, and it is my duty as an officer to administer the laws as laid down by Congress."

Very natural, indeed, that a man in receipt of a salary many times larger than the income he could possibly earn at hard productive labor, should be a believer in the policy or plan of pensioning soldiers or soldiers' widows. Without such policy on the part of the government there would be no office or officer called "Commissioner of Pensions." But how is it with the producers of all wealth—the ill-paid toilers in mines, in factories, and on the farm? Do these people want a pension department with its high-salaried officials, its discriminations in favor of army officers and their widows, its endless rolls of red tape, giving employment to legions of hungry place-hunters?

"Defenders of the nation." Admitting that there is an element of justice in awarding pensions to surviving soldiers who defended the "nation" against foreign invaders, how is it when that nation is itself the invader, as in the case of the American army now invading the Philippine Islands?

Proceeding, Commissioner Evans says:

"In the year 1878 the amount paid in round numbers was $27,800,000; new laws were enacted and in 1881 the law known as the arrearages act was put into practice so that in 1889 there were paid for pensions $88,700,000 and in 1890, June 27, the 'New law' as it is known was passed and during the next three years, '91, '92 and '93, there were over 500 000 names added to the roll and in 1893 the amount paid for pensions was almost $157,000,000. In the year 1899 the average pension under the same law is $165.70 or about 25 per cent. higher.

Think of adding five hundred thousand new names to the pension list, in three years and after a lapse of thirty years, or nearly so, from the close of the then last war! Why not put everybody on the pension lists, "Confederates" included? And what of the moral honesty, what of the sense of manly independence of the general public, when the chief aim in life of a very large proportion of that general public seems to be to get into the pensioned class? that is, the class supported at public cost, including, of course, all who in any way draw pay from government, state or national.

At present rate of increase, is it not reasonable to expect that in less than fifty years from this date the annual expenditure for pensions—added to salaries of government officials—will absorb the greater portion of the earnings of the real producers of wealth?

M. HARMAN.

Additions to Our Special Offer.

"IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; OR, LIFE IN SOCIOLAND."

We are authorized by the author, Albert Chavannes, to add the above to our "Special Offer" list, he generously agreeing to contribute to Lucifer all copies ordered during the next two weeks.

This is a "realistic novel." In the prefatory remarks the author tells this little story, which he takes from a comic paper:

"Two girls with the advanced ideas which are becoming so popular are conversing together. One of them asks her friend.

"'Have you seen "L——'s?" naming a play.

"'Yes, I have,' says the other.

"'Well, what do you think of it?'

"'Oh, I don't know,' is the answer; 'nothing very bad, yet it is barfly the kind of a play where a young girl would want to take her mother!'"

"The lesson of this short dialogue," says Mr. Chavannes, "is that the new generation is undergoing a reaction from the stilted prudery of this century. They are not more immoral, but there is less hypocrisy, and they are learning that the best safeguard for proper conduct is personal character and not the artificial restraints of society.

"It may be that this book is hardly the kind that a young girl of our day would want to put in the hands of her mother; but I believe there is nothing in it that can possibly harm the morals of a right-minded person, and that if objection is made to it on that score, it will come from that fast diminishing class of persons who mistake ignorance for purity."

"A WEEK ON THE CONCORD AND MERRIMAC RIVERS."

Last week we announced that we could fill no more orders for Henry D. Thoreau's book of the foregoing title. The generous friend who had contributed the copies advertised has now sent us enough cloth-bound copies to fill previously-received orders, and has added twelve copies in paper covers. Judging by the rapidity with which the others were taken, these will be gone in less than a week.

"DREAMS."

This well-known work by Olive Schreiner, is a book without which no library of liberal thought is complete. We have sold many copies of it; but if there be any of Lucifer's readers who have it not, this opportunity should not be neglected. A small number has been contributed for Lucifer's benefit. The same friend has contributed, also, a few copies (companion-pieces in binding) of

"AULD LICHT IDYLS,"

by J. M. Barrie. The secret of the charm of this author's writing is found in the fact that he pictures "real folks" such as were seen in the little sketch from his pen which we published a few weeks ago, entitled "The Tragedy of a Wife."

"THE COMING RACE."

This is one of Bulwer's best-known works. Though not altogether in line with Lucifer, it is of interest as a forerunner of such books as Bellamy's "Looking Backward."

For further description, prices, etc., of these books see the "Special Offer" on last page of this issue. And if you are interested in the matter, do not forget that the offer holds good for only two more weeks.

Send to us for descriptive circulars of "A Physician in the House," 800 pages. Price reduced to $2.50.

From My Point of View.

BY LILLIAN HARMAN.

Undoubtedly "Mrs. M. E. W." is correct in saying there are many negro women who stand on the streets and "tempt" men who are susceptible to such temptation. It is equally true that many white women are engaged in a similar occupation. And cases have been heard of, too, in which white men have "tempted" white women. But what of the mulattoes who are more than thirty-five years old?—(for surely no one will claim that all are under that age.) I have never heard that the negro woman of ante-bellum days spent much of her time standing on the streets selling herself. It was usually the "susceptible" and "virtuous" white man who sold her and often his own offspring as well.

* * *

So the white people of the south object to negroes holding federal office because they do not like to be "ruled over" by the "inferior race!" I was not previously aware of the fact that a postmaster ruled the patrons of his office. Yet postmaster elect Baker and his little child were burned to death because of this desire to "rule over" his fellow citizens! There is a "color line" in heroism, as well as in morals, it seems. If a white man, appointed to office in a negro community should allow himself to be intimidated and driven out he would be considered a coward. If he should defend his rights, even to the death, he would be hailed as a hero. Why should the act which is denounced as foolhardy in a negro be applauded as courageous in another man, merely because of difference in color? The charge which "Mrs. M. E. W.," in the last paragraph of her letter, makes against the citizens of Montgomery is very severe; but doubtless she knows whereof she speaks.

* * *

"Some women go off and have a good cry, when they should go off and hunt a big club, and use it."

There is too much energy wasted in crying and sighing by both women and men. It may be well to let off a little steam, occasionally; but the engine which is always letting off steam, doesn't accomplish much else. When the engine is doing the most work it wastes the least steam, and as a rule the man or woman who does the most effective work spends the least time in aimless fretting.

* * *

I agree with Rev. Sidney Holmes in his characterization of Mr. Caldwell's advice to an abused wife as "atrocious." Slavish submission is not my ideal of the "highest quality" attainable by woman. But even if it were, what would such submission develop in the man? When a mother permits a child to invade the rights of others—when it learns that by kicking and screaming it may attain its desires, no matter how unreasonable,—she may by her submission to the child develop her highest qualities of mind, heart and soul, but I doubt it. It is certain, however, that the qualities developed in the child are far from the highest. It grows narrowly selfish, unlovely, and is disliked and shunned by all who come in contact with it. Just so the woman who submits to the invasive desires of her husband is his worst enemy in that she cultivates the growth of narrowly selfish and unlovely traits in his character. The domestic tyrant who owns a submissive wife is one of the most disagreeable creatures that walks the earth. Every one has met him many times. And this is equally true of the tyrannical wife mated to a submissive husband. The wisely loving mother, wife, and husband will refuse to submit to invasion, and that for the highest good of the loved child, husband, or wife, as well as for their own.

"The man
Of virtuous soul, commands not, nor obeys."

* * *

Mr. Brinkerhoff thinks Mr. Kerr combats a "man of straw" when Mr. Kerr ignores the fact that by a division of labor men may be self-employing and independent. Why, then, does he assume that each woman must necessarily be her own housekeeper, nurse-maid and wage-earner at the same time? A working man is supposed to be able to support himself and wife and five children; he earning the wages and she acting as housekeeper and child-nurse. Is it inconceivable that two or more women may co-operate similarly so far as the economic relation is concerned? Suppose five women choose to live together. Three are wage-earners and they pay one of the remaining to take care of the children, and the other to take care of the house. In that way they could easily support five children and themselves. But it is probable that they would not care to live alone. It is probable that their lovers or husbands would like to live with them. They could easily take a larger house, and the money which these men would pay for board and rooms would enable the mothers to have more children, if they so desired. This plan is practicable, as I know by both observation and experience. Of course we may fancy beautiful ideals for the future, and we should strive to attain them, but I do not believe in leaving everything to the future. I know a great many women who are self supporting, but not one of my acquaintance (even of those who support a husband in addition to self and children) subsists on black bread alone and lives in but one room. Certainly there are such women; but they are not the women who hold new ideas of feminine independence. They are of the class who work for their husbands in the fields,—sometimes harnessed to the plow—who bear large families of children, and are "supported" by their husbands. In addition to their other labors, they often run the "pocket linen factory," spinning, weaving, cutting and sewing the garments for their family. But the paper is nearly ready to go to press, so for the present I must leave Mr. Brinkerhoff's "black-bread" woman in Mr. Kerr's "pocket-linen factory." We can afford to laugh at both these bogies. Their time is almost past.

Facial Expression as Evidence.

BY C. F. HUNT.

Hereafter evidence in courts will deal largely with opinions and facial expressions, if the methods of the Dreyfus trial are to be followed. It will therefore be necessary to employ a kodak man to aid the shorthand reporter. The opinions and the facial expressions must both be placed on record. Had this been done in the Dreyfus trial, the speech of an attorney for the defendant might be supposed to resemble the following:

"Here, gentlemen, we have a photograph of Patty de Lobster just as he is saying he is too sick to appear in court. Note the evasive expression. Note this picture of Gen. Tararum as he says 'I am firmly convinced that the prisoner is guilty.' Compare its wild and haggard look with this picture of Col. Boomderay as he hurls back defiance in these words: 'I am sure the prisoner is innocent.'

"Here we have Gen. Cordeaye changing his mind, also a snap shot before changing and one afterwards. These pictures alone ought to clear the accused. Here is a moving picture showing Col. Picquart springing to his feet and protesting. You will hear what the protest was if necessary. Here again is Col. Jouast saying to M. Labori, 'Your tone is improper;' also a silhouette of the tone. This shows M. Labori answering respectfully. 'Gentlemen, these pictures will, I am sure, give you an impression that you probably ought to set the prisoner free, if they do not, I shall be sorry there were not more pictures taken.'"

A Correction.

In my article on "The Centralization of Industry" in No. 776 appears a misprint, which entirely destroys the argument. Describing a combine of hotel-keepers to raise the price of board from $7 to $9 a week, I said, "Four of the hotels started subsequently, but all adopted the $9 tariff." This was accidentally printed "the $7 tariff."

R. B. KERR.

Remember we are always glad to receive names and addresses for sample copies. Stamps for same are welcome, too; but send along the names, anyway.

Feeling is Old; Thought is Young.

Edward Clodd, "The Pioneers of Evolution."

The fact abides that the great mass of supernatural beliefs which have persisted from the lower culture till now, and which are still held by an overwhelming majority of civilized mankind are referable to causes concomitant with man's mental development- causes operative throughout history. The low intellectual environment of his barbaric past was constant for thousands of years, and his adaptation thereto was complete. The intrusion of the scientific method in its application to man disturbed that equilibrium. But this, as yet, only superficially. Like the foraminifera that persist in the ocean depths, the great majority of mankind have remained, but slightly, if at all, modified; thus illustrating the truth of the doctrine of evolution in their psychical history. (For that doctrine does not imply all-round continuous advance. "Let us never forget," Mr. Spencer says in Social Statics, "that the law is—adaptation to circumstances, be they what they may.") Therefore the superstitions that still dominate the life of man, even in so-called civilized centers, are no stumbling blocks to us. They are supports along the path of inquiry, because we account for their persistence. Thought and feeling have a common base, because man is a unit, a duality. But the exercise of the one has been active from the beginnings of his history—indeed we know not at what point backward we can classify it as human or quasi-human while the other, speaking comparatively, has but recently been called into play. So far as its influence on the modern world goes may we not say that it began, at least in the domain of scientific naturalism, with the Ionian philosophers? Emotionally, we are hundreds of years old; rationally, we are embryos. In other words, man wondered countless ages before he reasoned because feeling travels along the line of least resistance, while thought, or the challenge by inquiry—therefore the assumption that there may be two sides to a question—must pursue a path obstructed by the dominance of custom, the force of imitation, and the strength of prejudice and fear. It is here that anthropology, notably that psychical branch of it comprehended under folk-lore, takes up the cue from the momentous doctrine of heredity; explains the persistence of the primitive; and the causes of man's tardy escape from the illusions of the senses, and the general conservatism of human nature. "Born into life! in vain, Opinions, those or these, unaltered to retain the obstinate mind decrees," as in the striking illustration cited in Heines's Travel-Pictures. "A few years ago Bullock dug up an ancient stone idol in Mexico, and the next day he found that it had been crowned during the night with flowers. And yet the Spaniard had exterminated the old Mexican religion with fire and sword and for three centuries had been engaged in plowing and harrowing their minds and implanting the seed of Christianity." The causes of error and delusion, and of the spiritual nightmares of olden time, being made clear, there is begotten a generous sympathy with that which empirical notions of human nature attributed to wilfulness or to man's fall from a high estate. Superstitions which are the outcome of ignorance can awaken only pity.

From Their Point of View.

Henry B. Platt is dead. He leaves $10,000,000. His will provides that the estate must not be divided until his grandson, now four years old, shall be of age. By the time the estate is divided it should amount to $100,000,000. Somebody will have to earn that extra ninety millions between now and the baby's coming of age.

Money, or rather the property which it represents, is made by human effort. Somebody, or rather a vast collection of "somebodies," have got to make $90,000,000 worth of human effort that a four-year-old baby may, after seventeen years of idleness, get more money than any man should have.

Does it seem to you that a system of this kind needs a change, or is it anarchy to suggest any change? In the latter case the men who founded this country in which you take such pride were anarchists, for they legislated especially against the piling up of great fortunes for future generations.

With this idea in mind, they forbade the entailing of estates, although their wildest dreams never included a $100,000,000 fortune as a possible result of entail.—New York "Journal."

* * *

Magistrate Crane has put forth the judical dictum that "the idea of a respectable woman being out in the streets"—by which he meant in a cab on a journey home from a party—"at 2 o'clock in the morning is absurd. It's monstrous to believe the story."

Now, as a matter of fact many respectable women are out in cabs or street cars or elevated trains at that hour every morning in the year. Some of them have been attending social functions. A great number of them are honest working women whose employment compels them to be out at such hours. The women who write for newspapers must often turn in copy very late at night. The women who do stenography and typewriting are often busy until the small hours. And as these honest, earnest women cannot afford chaperonage, they must go home alone late at night.

To assume that they are not "respectable" because of their hours is a monstrous injustice. A magistrate should devote himself rather to such an enforcement of the law as would render them perfectly safe in their lonely late travels. For in a civilized city it should be perfectly safe for anybody—man, woman or child—to traverse any street at any hour of the twenty-four. It is the duty of a magistrate to protect women, not to insult them.—New York "World."

* * *

The Pilgrim Fathers looked on worry as a divine heritage to be carefully cherished.

When they didn't have anything to worry them they went out and found it.

When crops were good and Indians minded their own business they went on the still hunt for something to worry about.

There is something fascinating about worry. It is the only thing you can lose in the dark and find without trouble. And it is the one thing which sticketh closer than a brother.

Several antidotes for worry have been tried. Don't worry clubs have been formed all over the country. The latest cure for worry is laughter.

Men, it is claimed, are willing to catch pleasure as it flies. But women must have everything "just so" before they can enjoy themselves, and then they are usually too tired.

"Worry is a disease," said a woman lecturer to women the other day in Chicago, "but fortunately not incurable. Women say that one can't be laughing when worried. You might be as hurried but you would not be as worried if you laughed.

"I happened to speak once of my husband to a little girl and she said:

"'Why, I didn't think you were married."

"'Why?' I asked.

"'Cause you laugh so much.'

"Wasn't that a commentary on matrimony?"—New York "World."

VARIOUS VOICES.

Mrs. H. G. D., Durant Ia.,—Enclosed find one dollar for which please send me "Karezza." If it teaches controlled maternity it is just the book for which I have been looking.

Electa Dodd, Arlington, Neb.—Have just received the last number of my subscription, and I am glad to be able to renew for another year. I would sadly miss Lucifer's bright face, and the light it brings each week. Long may it live to diffuse the much needed light that it always brings. Glad the editor is improving, even slowly.

Emma Neiswender, Grove City, Ohio:—I have received much benefit and light through Lucifer which will aid me in securing a greater liberty the rest of my life. Every woman who can gain her financial independence should do so. I believe the larger parts of estates should be given to our daughters and freedom will come sooner than by the ballot. In Ohio if the wife outlives her husband she gets the income from one third the estate for life; if she dies first, nothing. It is time she began to accumulate in her own name. Enclosed find seventy-five cents for Lucifer, twenty-five cents for "Woman in the Past, Present and Future," by Aug. Bebel, and fifteen cents for "Light-Bearer Library."

E. Williams, Room 17 Hale Bldg, Stockton, Cal.—A copy of your publication, Lucifer, dated April 14 '97 is in my possession. Not knowing whether it is still published or not I venture to communicate with you. I shall be pleased to become a subscriber if it is still published. I presume you accept stamps for any publication under a dollar. Kindly forward to the above address "The Red Heart in a White World" for which I enclose stamps. I should like to know if there are any people in this vicinity, in sympathy with your objects, any circles organized, and what are the conditions for enrollment. Being a stranger in this part of the state and not associated with any fraternal or religious body, I find it difficult to become acquainted with a class of people liberal in thought and kind in deeds. Any information in this regard will be thankfully received.

[Yes, we take stamps in payment of small bills. It is contrary to our custom to give names of subscribers, but we hope friends in Stockton and vicinity will communicate with the writer of the foregoing letter. L. H.]

Mrs. M. E. W., Montgomery, Ala.:—Fifteen years a resident among people of whom more than half are negroes, I have had an opportunity of personal knowledge. I know that they get all they inherit, are treated kindly by the white people, are encouraged in honesty and truthfulness which is rare among them. The white people are glad that slavery is abolished, they would not have the responsibility on their hands again. A negro rapeist is not executed till they have ample proof,—a confession; and the criminal is taken to the bedside of the injured woman, (this occured in Montgomery only about four years ago.) Lige Strickland's; execution was an act of an excited mob, was a wrong, and denounced by the rational class of people. An assault on a negro woman by a white man is unheard of in our vicinity. The woman stands on the streets and lures the honest, virtuous white man in her web if he has not stamina enough to resist temptation. They are proud of the white blood. It is the mulatto that aspires above the animal. I repeat what I have previously said—if Northern sympathizers of the negro element will come South and live among them, they will change their views in regard to barbarism. Negroes are fed and many of them are clothed by the white people. I do not refer to such men as Booker Washington,—I wish that they were all like him. He like many of our best colored element, has white man's blood running through his veins, which elevates him many degrees above the animal negro. We have a number of talented business colored men in our city who command respect and receive it from our best citizens, but we have no colored element that can command positions as office holders, and have power to rule over the white people.

Postmaster-elect Baker was informed that he could not be post master in that town, and he should have been wise enough to have resigned his office. Booker Washington could not hold an office in this city. He is too intelligent to attempt to hold such a position as Postmaster elect Baker did. Capital punishment I abhor—let the criminal live out a natural life in prison, work for the benefit of the state, be fed well, treated kindly that he may learn to love this world and pass out with love in his soul instead of hate.

Mr. Morton has a perfect right to come here and put himself on equality with the negro element, can live neighbor to them, hire a negro woman cook, ride in a carriage with them so long as the appearance of a servant is maintained, but if he should attempt to escort a negro woman through the streets of Montgomery he would end his career in the lockup.

Edgar D. Brinkerhoff, Morrisville, Pa.:—The average woman without talent and not exceptionally strong physically or mentally can support herself and children by her own labor if she will live in one small room, eat black bread and wear second-hand clothes. Black bread is very sustaining, little else being absolutely necessary in the line of eating. She need not work very hard nor every day in the week, and she can lay something by for a rainy day.

But when we question whether women can earn their own living and the support of their children, we do not mean the scale of living outlined above; we mean to inquire whether they can earn such a living as working people are used to in this country. When we consider how long it takes sometimes to find employment and how much sickness costs, we must admit that the present condition of the labor market does not enable women in general to obtain fair support for themselves and children without help from some quarter.

Let us look into the future. Free individual industry, when fully developed will enable women as well as men to earn ten dollars a day. That is, a day's labor will buy what can now be bought for ten dollars. At first blush it will seem as if the new woman would on the average be able to earn ample support for herself and children; but when that day arrives the standard of living will have been so raised that ten dollars will seem like a mere pittance and the woman trying to live upon it will feel as a woman now feels who occupies one room, eats black bread and wears cast off clothing. For it must be remembered that there is this difference between the power of a woman to earn wages and the wage-earning power of a man: the man earns ten dollars right along for perhaps forty years; the woman earns ten dollars a day while she works and nothing during pregnancy, lactation, the sickness of children, and at other times. If women do not work when home duties properly require their attention, it is doubtful if they can on this supposition be credited with more than five dollars a day for forty years. Consequently, when women earn ten dollars a day they can keep their home up to only the five-dollars-a-day standard.

So there is fallacy in the assumption that when women become self sustaining the support question will be settled. Far from it. Developed industry may place the childless woman on a par with men so far as maintenance is concerned, but her child-bearing sister is at just as great relative disadvantage when wages are high as when they are low.

The support question will never be settled until some way is found to get men to divide their earnings with the women and children without bringing to bear upon them any pressure whatever, neither law, nor fine, nor taxation, nor even the influence of public opinion. They must freely desire to devote a part of their earnings to the support of these comparatively helpless ones. The proper subject of inquiry is, Where is to be found the well spring of this desire to bear a manly share of life's burdens?

AZTEC CALENDAR.

Send 25 cents to C. A. Higgins, A. G. P. A., A. T. & S. F. Ry., Great Northern Bldg., Chicago, for copy of 44 oc Calendar, July to December. Contains six separate reproductions in colors (8 x 11 inches) of Burbank's Pueblo Indian portraits—the season's art sensation. Also engraved cover representing ancient Aztec calendar stone. A handsome and unique souvenir; edition limited; order early.

Free Love: A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of conjugal love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 1871, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence. 160 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 167 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

THE CHICAGO & ALTON R. R. is the best line to all points in the South, South-west and West. Free reclining Chair Cars, Pullman Palace Cars. Ticket office 101 Adams st. Chicago.

James Charlton, Gen. Pass. & Tkt Agent.

George J. Charlton, Asst Gen. Pass. & Tkt Agt.

779.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

Only Two Weeks More!

Our Special Offer of valuable books at HALF PRICE during the month of September has resulted in distributing a great amount of radical literature among the readers of Lucifer. Many letters have been received from purchasers expressing surprise that so much should be given for so little money. We have explained that many of the books were given to Lucifer by friends who wished to aid in its educational work. All the money received for books which are donated is profit (except the expense of postage, which in some instances is almost half as much as the book is sold for) to be used in defraying the expense of publishing Lucifer. Radical papers, as a rule do not pay the expense of publication, and Lucifer is no exception to the rule. The deficit must be made up by friends of the cause for which the paper is published. Rather than ask for contributions to keep The Light Bearer alive we prefer to circulate as much radical literature as possible and those who purchase books of us thereby aid in sustaining the paper.

Those who have the means should take advantage of our Special Half Price offer to purchase books for distribution among their friends who are in need of light on the terrible evils of marriage slavery. Copies of "Our New Humanity" are particularly valuable for this purpose. No better reading to open the eyes of men and women to the horrors of legal marriage and its twin sister illegal prostitution than Rachel Campbell's powerful essay "The Prodigal Daughter," can be found anywhere. It is printed in full in No. III. of Our New Humanity. Orders are coming in more rapidly as the end of the month approaches, for the offer will be withdrawn on the last day of September. The supply of some of the books in the list is limited and purchasers in making selections should indicate those they are willing to take as second choice if the one they desire most are all sold before their orders are received.

Remember these books will not be sold at half price unless the order amounts to ONE DOLLAR at least. Pick out the books you want to the amount of TWO DOLLARS or more and send us just ONE-HALF the marked price.

Ideala. By Sarah Grand. This is the story of a woman too thoughtful, too honest, too true for the conventional "middle class" English society in which she lived. Her life story furnishes much food for thought for those who like to study the facts of life when disguised as fiction. Handsomely bound in cloth. 195 pages. .40

Our New Humanity, No. II. Part of the contents: The Prodigal Daughter, or the Price of Virtue, by Rachel Campbell; Pioneer Chips. Extracts from the private letters of Rachel Campbell, by M. Florence Johnson; Marriage, What It Was and Is—Will the coming woman marry? By "X." (M. Harman); Reminiscences of the Long Ago, II., III. and IV. By Lucy N. Colman; The Ascent of Life, by Moses Harman; Legal Wifehood, by Lucinda B. Chandler; Whose is the Child? by Lex; Tombstone Texts. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. III. Part of the contents: The Unwomanly Woman, by Lizzie M. Holmes; That Great Fraud Yclept Society, by Moses Hull—with comments by his daughter, M. Florence Johnson; Normal Sexual Action, by Ernest Winne; Evolution of Familism, by Albert Chavannes; Virgin Soil, (story); Love in Liberty, by J. Wm. Lloyd; Reminiscences of the Long Ago, V., VI., by Lucy N. Colman; At What Age? 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. IV. Contents: The Abolition of Marriage, by John Beverly Robinson; Isabel's Intention, (story) by Mariette; Reminiscences of Berlin Heights, by A. Warren; The Sexes and Love in Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; A Woman-Child, by J. Wm. Lloyd; Burmese Women; The Great Conflict, by James F. Morton, Jr.; "The Truth About Love," by Moses Harman; Reminiscences—Then and Now, by Moses Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. V. Contents: Priestly Celibacy, by A. L. Rawson; Sex Love Analytically Defined, by Ernest Winne; The Other Side, by May Clifford Hurd; The Incoherence of Transition, by E. C. Walker; The Greatest Sin, (an allegory,) by R. B. Kerr; Our New Savior—the Surgeon, by C. T. Brown; Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; To Man, (poem) by Charlotte Perkins Stetson; Motherhood in Freedom, by M. Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. VI. Contents: Woman's Primal Right, by Francis Barry; The Curse of Maternity, From the French of Henry Fevre; How to Escape the Curse, by Jonathan Mayo Crane: Can Marriage be Abolished? by Albert Chavannes; Woman's "Duty" to Bear Children, by E. C. Walker; Love's Law, by William Francis Barnard; The Freedom Not to Do, by C. L. Swartz; True and False Morality, by C. L. James; Wanted: A New Adam; A Brood Mare, (poem) by Charlotte Perkins Stetson; Life, Health and Longevity, by Moses Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. VII. Contents. The Rights of Children, by R. B. Kerr; Incineration, by Walter Breen; What Are Women Here For? by E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.; What the Young Need to Know—A Primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker; The New Martyrdom, by Lillian Harman; The Will, (story, from the French of Guy de Maupassant; A Free Man's Creed, by Moses Harman. .25

Leaflets by Austin Kent. Conjugal Love, the True and False; A Letter to a Magdalene; My Creed, or What Believe and What I Know; An Open Letter to Andrew Jackson Davis, or, What I Call Conjugal Love; A Letter to My Atheistical Brethren. Each, 3 cents; the lot, 12

The Dawn of Civilization; or, England in the Nineteenth Century, by J. C. Spence. With portrait of author. 190 pages. .25

What the Young Need to Know.—A Primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. .10

Economics of Anarchy. A Study of the Industrial Type. By Dyer D. Lum. Paper, 60 pages. (Scarce) .25

Government Analyzed. By John R. Kelso, A. M. This book seeks to show that all governments, like all gods, are the mere personifications of mythical monsters invented by selfish and crafty men as instruments with which to rob and enslave the ignorant toiling masses. A book which is sure to open the eyes of governmentalists who read it. Bound in cloth; 520 pages; edition limited; 1.50.

Liberty, Political, Religious, Social and Sexual. By A. F. Tisdall. .10

Catechism on the Science of a Universal Religion. Or what we can, and must do, in co-operation to secure a true religion and universal happiness. By Gabriel Z. Wacht. 118 pages. .25

Vistae Vitae. By M. T. Martin, M. D. .25

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs. By Oswald Dawson. Contains fine full-page portraits of E. H. Heywood, Lois Waisbrooker, M. Harman and Lillian Harman. .25

Free Press. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock Law. By G. C. Clemens and David Overmyer. Also Judge Foster's decision overruling the demurrer. .25

In Brighter Climes; or Life in Socioland. A realistic novel. By Albert Chavannes. 260 pages. .25

A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers. By Henry D. Thoreau. 356 pages. Paper covers. .25

Dreams By Olive Schreiner. The Lost Joy; The Hunter; The Gardens of Pleasure; In a Far-off World; Three Dreams in a Desert; A Dream of Wild Bees; In a Ruined Chapel; Life's Gifts; The Artist's Secret; I Thought I Stood; The Sunlight Lay Across my Bed. 128 Pages. Red cloth: silver lettering. .50

Auld Licht Idyls. By J. M. Barrie. 192 pages. Blue cloth, silver lettering. .50

The Coming Race. By Edward Bulwer, Lord Lytton. 218 pages. Maroon cloth. .50

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 37. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, SEPT. 23, E. M. 299. [C. E 1899.] WHOLE No. 780

The People's Advent.

'Tis coming up the steep of time,
A nd this old world is growing brighter!
We may not see its dawn sublime,
Yet high hopes make the heart throb lighter.
We may be sleeping in the ground
When it awakes the world in wonder;
But we have felt it gathering 'round—
And heard its voice of lying thunder!
'Tis coming! yes, 'tis coming!

'Tis coming now, the glorious time
Foretold by seers and sung in story,
For which, when thinking was a crime,
Souls leapt to heaven from scaffolds gory!
They pass'd, nor see the work they wrought,
Now the crown'd hopes of centuries blossom!
But the live lightning of their thought—
And daring deeds, doth pulse earth's bosom,
'Tis coming! yes, 'tis coming!

Creeds, empires, systems, rot with age,
But the great people's ever youthful!
And it shall write the future page
To our humanity more truthful;
The smallest heart hath tender chords
To waken at the name of "Brother!"
And the time comes when scorpion words
We shall not speak to sting each other.
'Tis coming! yes, 'tis coming!

—Gerald Massey.

Margaret of Navarre.

BY C. L. JAMES.

In these days when Comstockism runs rampart, it is an interesting observation that one can search the shelves of no considerable book store without finding a large duodecimo denominated on its back "The Heptameron, of Maigaret." Margaret, queen of Navarre, sister of the famous French king, Francis I., was born about two years before him, 11th April, 1492, the year of the discovery of America. Her eyes opened on a new era. The birth of a new world, a new faith, a new learning, a new society, were all so nearly contemporaneous that these appear the playfellows of her infancy, in whose longer lives her's ought only to recall their own. By the profane cant of the Renaissance, her mother, Louise of Savoy, her brother, and herself, were called the Trinity; an idea which she embodied in a pretty epigram, making herself the least. Historians have dealt more kindly with her. They call Louise able, indeed, but covetous, dissolute and violent; Francis, a representative of decaying chivalry, with all its virtues and vices; Margaret, a mother to the modern Israel, on whose glorious record there is only one stain—that she wrote a licentious book, in the fashion which during her time was growing old. Some have even attempted to clear her of this charge—with the very satisfactory result that it is doubtful whether she printed the Heptameron, or only left it, stories, connecting narrative, and all, to her executors.

But in truth these three famous relatives were very like each other. Francis was the spoiled child, for whose faults we must make excuses. Louise, even before the Reformation came to give her piety a form and a purpose, was scarcely less religious than Margaret, as her diary proves. The Heptameron immortalizes the fact that Margaret was not without the waywardness of her mother. No censor can question that they always loved. Those who know Louise only from history, will be surprised to find her represented in the Heptameron, under the anagramatic name of Cisile, as a grave and experienced matron, who plays chorus to the narrators of stories in the loose manner of the day, never failing to extract philosophy and morality from the laxest tale they tell. Margaret had a governess, Madame de Chatillon, whose virtues are highly praised. Her precocious talents were cultivated by teachers in Latin, Greek, philosophy and theology. At fifteen, which means before the Reformation, she was noted for devotion; and her hymns, which still contribute to her literary fame, had begun being talked about. She was also a brilliant society woman, with "an agreeable voice, of touching tone," says a contemporary. From first to last she was a generous patron of letters, and an indefatigable student. Her affectionate disposition is celebrated by all the writers of the age, who, of course may flatter; but who are entitled to some credit, because their eulogies are not vague, but invariably give particulars.

The misfortunes of Francis were due to his mother's passions. She was in love with the famous Constable Bourbon, who afterwards took Rome for the emperor Charles V. He bluntly said he would not marry "a woman without modesty." The slighted beauty set on foot a persecution which drove the greatest soldier of France into rebellion, and when that failed, into joining the foreign enemy. This caused the invasion of France; the death of the great Bayard, who fell in battle against Bourbon; the terrible sack of Rome; and the capture of Francis himself at Pavia, 24th February, 1525. But through all these calamities, Louise, whom Margaret now aided with her counsel, displayed ability enough to redeem the ruin her violence had wrought. She was, as usual, regent during her son's absence. To her, after the battle of Pavia, he wrote the celebrated sentiment "All is lost except life and honor." By the joint advice of Louise and Margaret, the captive monarch had himself transferred to Spain, where he could negotiate personally with the emperor Charles, his conqueror. Louise bought off England (under Henry VIII. and Wolsey) from alliance with Charles; and Margaret, who had lost her first husband, the duke of Alencon soon after Pavia, obtained permission to visit her brother, though not till after he had become dangerously ill, which did not suit Charles' purposes (August and September 1525). Louise undoubtedly entertained a hope that her daughter would capture the emperor; but this card failed to take. Margaret, however, penetrated and frustrated Charles' plan, which was indefinite delay. She made herself so great a favorite with the people and the nobles that, in alarm, he forbade the latter to meet her. But, as she said, she was not tabooed to the ladies, in whose good graces she secured a strong position. She made the match which soon followed between her brother and Charles' sister, queen dowager of Portugal, whom he had intended for Bourbon; thus breaking a powerful bond between her enemies. She instructed Francis to keep on playing sick: and, when this failed to subdue Charles' resolution of exacting harsh terms, "the Trinity" arranged among them a plan which proved successful. During November, Francis abdicated in favor of his infant son; Margaret returned home in time to avoid being detained; though Charles, already suspicious, had changed his attitude, and tried prevailing on her to stay: the emperor, finding that though Francis remained in Spain, the king of France had slipped through his fingers, was fain to let his prisoner go, under pledges which there was no security for his keeping, and with a grudge which he was certain to wreak, (January 1526).

From that day the fortune of their life-long feud was, on the whole, favorable to Francis rather than Charles. During this period the Reformation was making steady progress. It began in France with Lefevre, Farel and Briconnet, about 1515; and was always zealously promoted by Margaret. During Francis' imprisonment Louise yielded to the counsels of her minister Duprat, so far that there were martrydoms, the first of their kind in France. But during this very time, Margaret, by her influence with her brother, repeatedly averted the fate which at last came on the reformer Berquin: and if there is any truth in her representations Louise also became a friend to the new doctrine. Margaret was married again, in 1527, to Henry d'Albret, king of Navarre. In January following, she bore him Jeanne, queen in her own right, and mother of Henri IV. During the rest of her life, her little kingdom was a center of Protestantism; and from thenceforth till her grandson had become the greatest among French sovereigns, Navarre was regarded as a radically heretical state. Among those who enjoyed Margaret's protection was the poet Marot, who translated the psalms into French. This was in the forties, when Francis was persecuting the Protestants of Dauphiny. Marot's secular works are regarded as the beginning of classical French poetry. That of an earlier period is dialectic and far inferior in the character of the themes. Calvin also had found an asylum in Navarre till the violence of his sentiments and his growing influence began to embroil Margaret with her brother (1534). Her own courage went so far that the priests openly threatened her with prosecution on the capital charge of heresy; and, after she became queen, were always eager to find an opportunity of involving her in war. She died December 21, 1549, aged fifty-seven, more than two years after Francis, whom she thus outlived altogether about four. Her last stage was clouded by regret for all whom she loved most. Her mother had died in 1531. Her husband, a boisterous, though good-natured knight of the old school, was no companion for so intellectual a woman. Her last verses breathe only melancholy and weariness of the world. Yet her appreciation of life and its pleasures made her unwilling to leave it. In the course of nature, she complained, she should live some years yet. In reply to an encouraging remark about eternal life, she said "We have to sleep in the ground a good long while first." Besides the "Heptameron," she published a volume of poetry about a year before her death. Another, which she took pains to collect, has never been printed; but exists in MSS. at Paris. Her letters were collected and published in 1841. As a poet, she is far above many who have managed to pass: her verses are by no means lacking in fancy, grace, originality or sentiment; and the versification is always that of an accomplished scholar: but it must be confessed that her effusions are in the main artificial, frigid and very unnecessarily long-winded. The surest proof that she wrote the "Heptameron" and intended it for publication, is the character of organic unity which it bears. Its very title proclaims it an imitation of Boccacio's "Decameron;" and similarly, the sixty-eight stories contained in it have probably little original but the style. Some, however, are thought to relate adventures of her own; for it would be quite superfluous to say she had seen a great deal of exceedingly gay life. Marot was said to be her paramour, though this is probably a slander: she had unquestionably flirted with the emperor Charles, the Constable Bourbon and Admiral Bonnivet. Some of the tales are fully as rank as any of her models, with a difference not much in her favor—the difference between Italian indecency and French. But while the main narrative in the "Decameron" is nothing more than a thread on which to hang the stories, Margaret collected the tales out of which she made the "Heptameron" for the sake of her main narrative and the lessons introduced into it.

Free in thought and expression as the whole book is, no one who allows for the author's situation can help seeing that it was written "with a moral purpose." But it was more than that. It is not only moral but religious; not only religious but theological, and not only theological but polemical. It is a Protestant satire, in which the Calvinistic doctrines and view of life are advocated; the Catholic hierarchy and sacramental system, and the religious orders, attacked with intemperate zeal. From that standpoint of motive, it belongs to the same class of books as Erasmus' "Praise of Folly," More's "Utopia," the works of Hutten and of Rabelais. But there is this important difference that the view is narrower and clearer than in these other prophecies of the great moral and intellectual revolution. Their authors, except Hutten, were Catholics, who only saw an evil not obscure to any intelligent Catholic. Margaret was a Protestant, who thought she also saw the remedy. There are evident reasons for her choosing a form of expression which, even in that coarse age, could do her reputation no good. She was qualified to wear it well; and it was adapted to a public in which she had an interest. Court scandal, written by the Queen of Navarre, was sure to be interesting. A treatise on justification through faith, by the queen of Navarre, would probably have been a poor performance. A large class of people, with souls to save and influence to use, would certainly read court scandal, whoever wrote it. They probably would not read another Calvinistic tract, whoever wrote it.

So the brave woman rendered this last service to the cause of her life's devotion, with result that the author of the "Heptameron" is still the friend of many who know nothing about the Huguenot queen. In person she was tall and slender, with long oval face and delicate features. The picture which shows her and Louise of Savoy together, makes them very much alike, but, in spite of age and widow's weeds, the mother looks decidedly lighter than the daughter.

Criticisms and Comments.

BY C. P. HUNT.

If the Fall Festival Association will pay the stone cutters' union $5,000 the latter will allow President McKinley to work as a scab stone mason long enough to put a little mortar on a corner stone. If a stone trust would say: You must use Trust stone, but you may use just one non-Trust stone if you will pay me $5,000, such action would be condemned as absurd. Verily union labor is It.

* * *

A lot of tomnoddies are at present pottering about trusts. Their remedies make an old reformer smile. They call to mind Bill Nye's remarks on seeing the picture in a certain almanac of the nude gentleman whose peritoneum is nicely pinned back exposing his viscera. This picture distressed Mr. Nye very much, and he thought the man should wear a vest. Now, a vest is a very inadequate remedy. The patient should assume a reclining position, be sewed up, and after mending for a month or so, a vest would be an unobjectionable palliative. Mr. Nye meant well enough, and so do the reform grannies.

* * *

Every daily paper has given an account of the death of Mrs. O'Leary's cow's sister. Thus it is ever, fame comes after death. This cow has been wondering why a fickle world has not recognized her as relative of the most celebrated of all cows. It will only aggravate her spirit now to note the tardy acknowledgement. She even claimed equal ability, perhaps, with any cow to kick over a lamp and burn a city, but lacked the opportunity. Perhaps it is better that she is like "some village Hampden" guiltless of her country's conflagrations. The moral is, If you cannot be famous, be a famous individual's sister.

* * *

The workingman is not joining the war against Trusts The well-tried remedies, Toil, Thrift and Temperance will not fail to overcome this evil as they have all others.

What is Sin?

"Francesca" in "Brann's Iconoclast."

Compare the lives of George Eliot and Jane Eyre. The latter, according to the definition of sin generally accepted, was a noble woman. When she discovered that Rochester had a mad wife she promptly and piously left him. The wife was a raving lunatic, had been for years, and he had carried that Horror strapped to his back, as they strapped the ghastly dead to the living for punishment of old. He had felt the acrid shame and loathing and despair eat into his soul as an acid, drop by drop. He had fled from Memory as from a nightmare, seeking peace in strange lands and among strange peoples. And go where he would, that vacant face laughed, Sycorax-like, at his shoulder, and "despair in vain sat brooding o'er the putrid eggs of hope". He had suffered all this for years, when Jane Eyre came into his life. As depicted by Bronte, I cannot see what there was about such a woman to win the love of such a man. But she did. His starved life thrilled, as over the frozen fields starts the first pink flush of spring, and in the chill silence he heard a robin sing. All the love of his powerful nature he poured at her feet. All the hope of his being, lashed and repressed through years of torture, rose trembling at his own daring, when this woman's eyes looked into his. Revolting fiercely at the hideous injustice of his life, he becomes a law unto himself and takes the woman he loves to the altar. The denouement comes. The cup shatters at his thirsting lips and as the awful Night of his life again falls, he stretches out his hands blindly to this woman who alone can drive back the black Hell that has been his fate. Does she do this? No—she is a virtuous woman. She gathers the robes of her Chastity closely around her and slips past the pitifully groping hands and out to the safe environment of her own immaculate society. She leaves him to the tender ministrations of hirelings and the cheerful society of a lunatic. She takes her sorrows to the Lord in prayer and renders up thanksgiving for the salvation of her soul. She thinks now and then of the man she has deserted, but chiefly to shudder at her own narrow escape. This is the character of Jane Eyre. She was a good woman and did not sin. George Eliot was not a good woman and she did sin. So say the prophets.

Jane Eyre had a soul the size of a pea. Eliot had a soul that soared as an eagle beyond the Alps. Jane Eyre was small, cowardly, narrow-minded, selfish—a Pharisee. The mote of her own quaking personality filled the scope of her vision. Her entire thought clung like a bat to her share in the lottery of the Hereafter. Rochester might despair and die and rot, but she would entertain no possibility of risk about the Harp and Crown. Her God might be a God of Love or he might be a devil incarnate, enjoying Rochester's prolonged crucifixion. She did not know and she did not propose to take chances. Jane Eyre was a good woman and she bowed down reverently to the seventh commandment. Jane Eyre and Parkhurst defined its breaking as Sin. George Eliot offered no definition. Her personality and her life towered, as Colossi, above the thorn-path of steeples that tore her skirts to tatters. Her thought to her was an empire that acknowledged no boundaries. The cant and cowardice of Bronte's heroine were as great an insolence to such a character as Eliot's as is the harness upon the forest king that crouches, drugged and dazed, at the patent leather shoe of the ringmaster. She suffered, as did Parnell—as did Mrs. O'Shea. Such lives feel the venomed sting of insects. But the stings cannot extract one cowardly prayer and the life's purpose floats, as a lotus lily above the strangling reeds and black waters that cannot drag it down.

Grant Allen and Ouida have both said that any woman would have been honored if Shelley had made her his mistress. Grant Allen and Onida, like George Eliot, are not particularly noted for their orthodoxy. They form a trinity of thinkers and they flatly refuse the decision of the New York divines as regards sin. Jane Eyre's commonplace personality will float serenely along to a celestial haven. She could not experience, because she could not understand, the privilege of ministering to a mind great as Parnell's. She could not understand the sweetness of being loved as such men love—of being to him the haven of peace to which he could turn when wearied of the world's plaudits and execrations alike. She could not sink her own Ego, finding her heaven in serving him. Rochester loved an automatic Mosaic tablet. Parnell loved a tender woman. Jane Eyre fed on celestial snowballs, leaving the man who loved her to die in the desert. Kitty O'Shea gathered the love with which the gods had honored her into her inmost soul, and gave thanks. When the world's huzzas rose in waves around him, she knew that his eyes sought hers. When the world's censure stung like whips, in her arms alone he could forget. Aching brain and quivering nerve found balm beneath the softness of her lips. And though the world gave its acknowledgement to the brilliance of his intellect, she knew that the approval of her caress was to him far more. Her crucifixion, if deserved, came. As Carlyle said of Burns, Parnell's "sun shone as through a tropical tornado; and the pale shadow of Death eclipsed it at noon." The woman he loved had dared much and had borne much, and his love had been at once her Crown and her Calvary. Holding her to his breast, he battled the mediocrities that snarled like curs at his feet, and, the battle ended, he sank "to silence and pathetic dust." She was left alone, but her life was not lived in vain.

If the lives of Mrs. O'Shea, of Francesca, of Heloise, of George Eliot, come under the category of those who break the seventh commandment—if the love of such women be sin and that of Jane Eyre be virtue—then is "the offense holy which they have committed." Above the former, through the white fire of suffering, gleams the glory of Affinity and around them breathes the perfume of the jasmine. The latter wears the white flower of a scentless, because soulless, life, and to reach it her feet were stained with the piteous blood of a strong man's heart.

To break the seventh commandment is sin, says the Rev. Collyer, for which there is no condoning. Yet she was a greater and a grander and a truer and a more womanly woman, who was the mistress of Parnell, than the woman who became Rochester's wife.

"The Jewish people have developed a tendency toward broad thought," says Rabbi Mendes. "Life should not be regarded as self-torture." And because not only the Jewish but all people are developing a tendency toward broad thought, has the discussion startled the church: "What is sin?" The hobgoblins of old-time Puritanism are becoming more and more mythical. Social law has of necessity kept in step with advancing and broadening ideas, and the church, because it has clung to the dusty bones of prehistoric custom, is confronting the necessity of a retranslation of that Mount Sinai revelation, for > —"in the veriest span of Time,

> Each Vice has worn a Virtue's crown; all
> Good was banned as sin or Crime."

The Kasidah is analytical. And it is the Koran of today. The commandments are neither honored nor obeyed. The unutterable brutality of the second alone, the cursing of the guiltless, is no less an insult to Deity than it is to our intelligence. The Sabbath is being less and less observed. And man not only covets, but obtains, through Court and Church, his neighbor's wife.

The divines still face the question: "What is sin?"

The seventh annual convention of the National Spiritual Association will be held in America Auditorium hall, 77-79 31 St., Chicago, Oct. 17, 18, 19, and 20 Among the well known speakers expected are Moses Hull, Prof. Lockwood, Cora L. V. Richmond, and Addie L. Ballou. A rate of one and one third fare has been made with the railroads for those attending the convention. Our friends who may attend this convention are cordially invited to call on us.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper (which has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

Kansas.

After an absence of three and one half years I find myself once more a visitor within the Commonwealth formerly known as "Bleeding Kansas." This cognomen or sobriquet was given to the political division of the earth now familiarly called the "Sunflower State" because, for some years, it was the battle ground between "Freedom" and "Slavery," that is, between those who wished to make Kansas a "free state," and those who desired to extend over its hills and plains the banner of Afro-American slavery.

For several years after the passage, by the American "Congress," of the so-called "Kansas-Nebraska bill"—whereby the lands known by those names were opened to white people for settlement—there was almost continuous war between the aforesaid forces, and dark and bloody deeds were of almost daily occurrence.

Among the names made famous in this „border Conflict" are those of Charles Robinson, first governor of the state of Kansas, "John Brown of Osawatomie," James H. Lane, Samuel N. Wood, G. W. Brown—editor of the "Herald of Freedom," and many others whose words and deeds will not soon be forgotten by those who inhabit this the central state of the "American Union."

These lines are written in the city made memorable by the "Quantrell Raid," and by many other noted events, whereby it has earned the sobriquet "the Historic City"—Lawrence, so named in honor of Amos A. Lawrence, one of the men most prominent in the movement that made Kansas a "free state." The site of this city was selected in 1854, and from that date for "ten bloody years," to quote the language of a late historian, "Lawrence was the storm center of the opposing forces of Freedom and Slavery."

A recent compilation of facts relating to the history of Lawrence published by E. F. Caldwell, of this city, gives a brief but graphic description of the vengeance wreaked by the pro-slavery forces, in their last assault upon the "storm center" from which I quote two paragraphs:

"On the 21st of August, 1863 William C. Quantrell, in command of about 400 mounted men, armed with carbines and revolvers, the most desperate and accomplished riders and marksmen on earth, dashed into Lawrence and commenced at once a slaughter of every man in sight, and an indiscriminate pillage of the houses. The arms of the citizens had been ordered stored in a building on Massachusetts street, and the charge of the rebels was too sudden to obtain them. Organized resistance therefore was out of the question. A few individuals undertook defense, only to fall unavenged. Death prevailed everywhere. The reports of unerring revolvers were incessant. To the horrors of assassination was speedily added the terrors of conflagration. The street was in flames on each side throughout its entire extent. The dead and living, confined in the burning buildings were consumed in the flames, and in many instances a handful of ashes was the only legacy a noble man yielded his almost demented widow. Mayor Collomore sought safety in a well, in which he was overpowered by the gas and smoke, and received death unwounded, two other men being suffocated with him. Seventeen recruits for the fourteenth Kansas, mere boys and unarmed, were all shot and killed where they lay on the sidewalk, their bed during the heat of the preceding night.

"Thus for hours [beginning at sunrise] the work of murder, plunder and arson went on unopposed. At almost nine o'clock the raiders almost instantaneously disappeared, going out of town directly south, and marking their way by the burning houses along the line of their retreat. They suffered comparatively no loss, but one of their number being killed within the city and but few on the return. They left the town in ruins, and one hundred and forty three dead in the streets, and thirty desperately wounded. The main street was all burned but two stores. Seventy-five business houses were destroyed and nearly one hundred residences. Eighty widows and one hundred and fifty orphans were among the woeful legacies left by the raiders to perpetuate the memories of the day of doom."

To look up and down this same Massachusetts street—now as then the principal thoroughfare of Lawrence, with its hundreds of prosperous business houses, its many and stately public buildings, and to note the thousands of beautiful, commodious and in many cases luxurious residences on the side streets, the beholder can with difficulty imagine it possible that these are the identical streets that witnessed the terrible slaughter and the burnings of that "day of doom," only thirty-six years ago. It would seem quite incredible that civilized human beings could thus shoot down and stab to death the unarmed and unresisting inhabitants of a peaceful city, did we not know that the sons of the men and the women who risked, and in many cases lost, their lives in defense of human freedom in Kansas, are today engaged in butchering the defenders of human freedom in the far-away Philippine Islands.

One of the impressive landmarks by which the traveler remembers Lawrence, is the "Windmill on the hill," in the western part of the city. This mill was built by A. Palm, a native of Sweden, and one of the best known citizens of the "Historic City." On the morning of the raid Mr. Palm was asleep in a large stone house on Kentucky street. Some of his employes were already at their work putting together the large timbers of the new mill. When fired upon they ran, with their axes on their shoulders, to the house in which their employer was sleeping, closely pursued by the merciless raiders. Fearing to enter a house defended by men armed with axes the assailants compelled some of their prisoners to carry lumber and place it near the walls. Then setting fire to the lumber they killed the prisoners who brought the combustibles and left Mr. Palm and his men to fight the fire as best they could, while they passed on to houses whose occupants had no axes to defend themselves with. To this fortunate circumstance,—the fact that his men were in possession of the formidable-looking "broadaxes" used in getting out timbers for the mill Mr. Palm attributes his escape on that fateful day, and his ability to extend the hospitality of his beautiful home on the hillside, to the wandering editor of Lucifer.

Lawrence, Kan. Sept. 17, '99. M. HARMAN.

Liberty and the Trusts.

The most important speech from a libertarian point of view of the "Conference on Trusts and Combinations" held in Chicago last week was that of Benjamin R. Tucker. In matter it was masterly as all who are familiar with Mr. Tucker's writings would expect; but even his friends were astonished by his eloquent and convincing delivery. The large audience, comparatively few of whom were of his school of thought, were loud in enthusiastic applause, though he did not hesitate to call his ideas anarchism. The "Times-Herald" next morning said:

"The splendidly delivered arguments of Benjamin R. Tucker, the theoretical anarchist, furnished the sensation of the afternoon. His analysis showed the four kinds of special privileges which permitted the development of trusts on such an immense scale. Little changes in society, he argued, could never abolish these privileges. The anarchistic principle must be applied—the principle of the equality of liberty to all—and by this means competition would be made fair and free, or otherwise the trusts would continue to develop their monstrous system of inequality.

Mr. Tucker concluded his address with these words: "Anarchy wants to call off the quacks and give liberty, nature's great cure-all, a chance to do its perfect work. Free access to the world of matter, abolishing land monopoly; free access to the world of mind, abolishing idea monopoly; free access to the untaxed and unprivileged market, abolishing tariff monopoly and money monopoly—secure these, and all the rest shall be added unto you. For liberty is the remedy of every social evil, and to anarchy must the world look at last for any enduring guarantee of social order."

* * *

Bourke Cockran, the Tammany orator from New York, made an eloquent "stump speech" for trusts. He said:

"A combination may be good or bad, according to its effect. For instance, a combination for prayer is a church. All good men would subscribe to the success of it. A combination for burglary is a conspiracy. All good men would call out the police to prevent it."

As he is a devout Roman Catholic he cannot conceive of any "good men" failing to "subscribe" to a combination for prayer. As a governmentalist, he does not think it worth while to mention the fact that it is only the small burglary which attracts the attention of the police. A great nation may rob a small one; but that in his opinion is not burglary—it is "patriotism."

The entire tone of Mr. Cockran's speech was that of a rich man to rich men, as for instance, when he said:

"If I can go to a department store, or to any other kind of a trust and get a suit of clothes for $40, why, I would rather go there, and would go there, rather than to a small tailor and pay him $50."

Probably the vast majority of his audience had never possessed a $40 suit of clothing which, in his estimation, is so cheap. But the workingman who earned only one, two, or three dollars a day was not, in his estimation, worthy of consideration.

* * *

Of ideas W. J. Bryan said: "We get ideas from every source. An idea is the most important thing that a man can get into his head. An idea will control a man's life. An idea will revolutionize a community, a state, a nation, a world, and we never know when we are going to get an idea. Sometimes we get them when we do not want to get them, and sometimes we get them from sources which would not be expected to furnish ideas. We get them from our fellow-man. We get them from inanimate nature. We get them from the animals about us.

"I got an idea once from some hogs that I think was a valuable idea. I was riding through Iowa and I saw some hogs rooting in a field, and the first thought that came to me was that those hogs were destroying a great deal in value, and my mind ran back to the time when we kept hogs. Then I thought of the way in which we used to protect property from the hogs by putting rings in their noses, and then the thought came to me why we did it—not to keep the hogs from getting fat—we were more interested in their getting fat than they were; the sooner they got fat the sooner we killed them. The longer they were in getting fat the longer they lived, but why did we put the ring in their noses, so—so that while they were getting fat they would not destroy more than they were worth. And then the thought came to me that one of the great purposes of government was to put rings in the noses of hogs."

This may be the theory of government; but in practice it enables a few large hogs to wallow in the trough, wasting more than would feed all their companions, who stand at a respectful distance and squeal with hunger.

On my way home, after hearing this speech, I was forcibly reminded of Mr. Bryan's idea. A richly dressed woman passed me. The fashionable demi train of her delicate silk dress swept the filthy ground. Near her a shabbily and insufficiently clothed woman walked and in her thin arms she carried a white-faced and hungry eyed baby. The money wasted in the first woman's dress would have gone far toward comfortably clothing the mother and baby; and yet even had the richly dressed woman obeyed the injunction to sell all and give to the poor, the problem would not have been solved. "Hoggishness" seems to be the most prominent trait of human nature. And yet I believe that we may slowly though surely eradicate it; or that we may at least bring it under wise self-control. L. H.

Personal.

My approaching western trip will begin in New York City, Oct. 13. From there I shall pass through Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, and other western States, ending in San Francisco, Cal. I desire to meet as many friends of liberty as possible, and want to hear at once from all who would welcome a flying call. I have appointments in various cities, and could easily stop off at other places en route for a brief visit. In my coming work in connection with "Free Society" I shall not lose sight of the vital importance of the sex question; and it is my wish to number as many sex reformers as possible among my personal acquaintances. Hence I invite all friends and co-workers in these and the far western states, to write me at once, if they would like to arrange for a visit. Address me care of Chas. L. Abbott, 48 Congress St., Boston, Mass. All letters sent there will be forwarded, both before, and during my tour.

JAMES P. MORTON, JR.

What Next?

Dr. Guinn, a Maine dentist, got a divorce from his wife and then emigrated to Santa Barbara, Cal. He went into business there, and making the acquaintance of a lady who pleased him they married. The first wife's father got requisition papers and had the Doctor taken back to Maine on a charge of bigamy. The law of Maine forbade his marrying again under two years and he did not wait that length of time. Query. Has a divorced man a wife, and if not how can he be a bigamist when he marries again? Query 2d. When a man leaves one state and settles in another is he still amenable to the laws of the state he left for an act commit ed after he left?

LOIS WAISBROOKER.

State-Controlled Morals.

E. C. Walker in "Fair Play."

The New York "Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children" is a despotism intensified by religious and moral fanaticism. In its eyes, social non-conformity is as great a crime as habitual intemperance, cruelty, or starvation, and as ample a warrant for tearing the child from the care of parent or guardian. There is no invasion of the right of citizens which it admits to be without its province. It denies alike the right of social association and of private assembly. As to its power, a man well qualified to judge has said that in law it is almost unlimited. As to its assumptions, the "Sun" of July 27, 1899, sums them up in these words: "Mr. Gerry's idea has always been that he and not the courts was the sole arbiter of the future of a child that had once been committed through his society to an institution. Under the Gerry laws an agent of the society has the right to force his way into a home, take a child and have it committed by a city magistrate without more than a perfunctory notice being sent to the child's parents or guardians. Mr. Gerry has maintained that, once committed, the child could not be pardoned by the Governor, nor could it be released except with the consent of the society until its twenty first birthday, unless the allegations on which in was committed could be proved false in the Court of Appeals. Even then the society could retain the custody of the child during the long time the case was being fought in the courts. The society has also declared its right to withhold all information of the child even from the parents or guardians, until the term of commitment shall have expired." Its agents can enter any home in the name of the Board of Health, and under pretense of doing the work of that Board, can pry into the most private concerns of the family, although admittedly not experts in Health Board work and in no sense employees of the city, receiving their pay from the Gerry Society. The Society is constantly appealing to the legislature for more power, and until recently has usually obtained what it went after. In July of this year Judge Bartlett of the Court of Appeals decided against the Children's Aid Society of Rochester, in a case where that society made practically the the same claims as those always asserted by the Gerry Society. A little light is breaking, but powerful fanatical interests and much money are on the side of Gerry, and the Comstock Society is in close alliance with the other representative of injected righteousness.

* * *

"Puck" characterizes as "winsomely childlike" the argument of the clergymen who, admitting that the church "can do nothing to stem the epidemic of divorce," begs "society" to cure the evil by making it unfashionable. "Puck" says "there is but one way to correct the divorce evil, and that is to correct the marriage evil." So long as women marry for money and position, "regardless of moral worth or personal adaptability," "so long as there is buying and selling in marriage there will be revoking of bad bargains—revoking both unofficial and official. . . . The woman who sells herself to one man is on a moral level with the woman who sells herself to a hundred." These be brave words from a paper like "Puck" especially the last sentence. But "Puck" has found only one of the roots of the tree of divorce. Its explanation does not cover those divorces and ought-to-be divorces where money considerations did not predominate in the marriages. "Puck" goes pretty deeply butit has not yet got to the bottom. It has yet to learnthat it is neither just nor wise to compel two persons to remain tied together. Whether they come together through love or through mercenary motives is only a non-essential incident in the drama. Persons are still more likely to be mistaken in choosing partners or to find the conditions that brought about their union changing than they are to have made marriage a matter of buying and selling.

* * *

Ingersoll did his work and did it well; better, in fact, than many of his critics have done theirs, and yet they are crying out against him because he did not do theirs also. We all wish he had seen some questions in our light; we also wish his critics had reen some other question in his light. No promoter of a panacea should accuse another of narrowness. Let us do our work as well as he did his, if we can.

The Beautiful Skirt.

"A. C." in "Woman's Journal."

Only a little dust. Almost imperceptible dust, caught on the rug on the floor of the handsome hall.

It was a Turkish rug, lying on the perfectly waxed, hardwood floor, in a hall where neatness seemed to reign along with all the appointments of wealth.

But there was that almost imperceptible dust!

How did it come to be there? If you had ears that could hear its voices, it could tell you. It would say that it had clutched a fold on the beautiful lady's gown, and come in from the street.

It was a beautiful gown as well as a beautiful lady. A tailor-made gown, and its fashionable bias flounce trailed stylishly on the ground.

Everything was stylish about the lady, from her fair face, with rather deep circles below the eyes, to her slender and handsome walking shoes. She walked trailing her gown properly, dust or no dust. Indeed, she ignored the dust of the street; but will the dust ignore her?

Let us listen, if she will not, for this almost imperceptible dust moves and acts with fearful power, and, if we listen, we possibly may understand its language.

Soon after coming in on the beautiful lady's gown, other steps followed and other gowns helped to move the dust along farther into the house; but it had a fancy for the beautiful lady. Her frailness attracted it, and it followed her to her bed-chamber. Her feet had never trod the loathsome precincts from whence it came, but it came to her on her gown.

Soon there came to the chamber a little child; a sweet, rosy cherub. In its romping it stirred the dust about.

Then the dust began to be separated, being formed of many particles, and these talked among themselves. As they talked they danced back and forth, waltzing, swirling, capering, with every motion of the child and its mamma, the beautiful lady.

A scientist could have understood them if he had caught some of them under his microscope. He would have called them "germs." With what alarm he would have recognized the diphtheretic, and with what dismay would he have seen the tuberculosis germ approaching the frail lady.

Back and forth, dancing, capering, waltzing, the germs kept time while baby in its mother's arm said, as thousands of other little ones were saying:

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep,
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take."

This baby was saying it for the last time.

When night came again, thousands of little voices sent up again the babies' prayers, but this one was gasping out its little life on mamma's bosom, destroyed by a germ.

A yellow card at the front door warned all comers against diphtheria.

The beautiful lady sought health vainly for a year or more, then found rest "beyond the sorrow and the parting."

"Broken hearted" it was said. "Found death in the dust of the street," said the microscope. A victim of the long skirt.

From Their Point of View.

Mr. Bryan may have noticed that you must first catch your hog before putting a ring in his nose.—Chicago Record.

A Berlin, Ont., German paper springs this on the unsuspecting public:

Mueller—"That is certainly a great mixture about those Filipinos."

Schultz—"How so?"

Mueller—"First they were great friends of the soldiers and diplomats of Uncle Sam and then—"

Schultz—"And then?"

Mueller—"Then they became bandits and robbers—"

Schultz—"And then?"

Mueller—"And then they will become American citizens.

NO "CALL" FOR IGNORANT NEGROES.

A correspondent writes to the "Tribune" announcing a growing sentiment in Maryland in favor of withdrawing the franchise and the public school from the negro. Probably he speaks for himself more than for his State, but there is no reason why even one man should harbor a "growing sentiment" of that sort. Certain Southern States have undertaken to disfranchise the negro in defiance of the constitution, but we have not yet heard of any concerted movement to keep the blacks from attending schools of all kinds. This correspondent, who sneers at the "Northern philanthropista" and charges them with increasing crime among the negroes by educating them, is a third of a century behind the times in his own State. His idea that an ignorant negro is a better citizen than an educated negro needs only to be stated to show that it it is ridiculous.—Chicago Tribune.

HE HADN'T MARRIED HIS COOK.

A colored cook was employed by a wealthy Louisvillian who swore by the wholesale. Economy was no object to him when it came to cuss words, and he scattered these pearls of speech over all subjects. The cook was a past grand mistress of her art. She knew what she knew and could turn out dreams from the skillet and oven, but she had ideas of her own dignity.

"One mawnin'," said she, "I done cook a elegant brekfuss. Dere wuz chickin an' 'taters an' best biskit, an' coffey, an' muff'ns' an' dat man he come down stairs an' he do talk scandlous. I lissen an' I lissen. He cuss dis an' he cuss dat, an' he mumble to hisself, an' I jes' could'n stan' hit. I marches out an' I says: 'Sah, ef you don't like dis hyar cookin', say so, an' I goes but I ain't gwine hear you cuss me an' my wuk.'

"'Hyer, gal,' says he. 'I likes dis cookin'. What you mean 'busin' me when I cusses my own wife?'

"'Dat's all right,' I says, mighty brash, 'but you don't cuss me er I goes.'

"An' sence den," declared the colored upholderof her rights and dignity, "ole Marse jes' stuck on my cookin' an' I'se de only pusson on de lot he neber cusses."—Louisville Times.

The Monday noon lectures at Willard hall have been resumed. Among the prominent speakers who will deliver addresses are Ernest H. Crosby, Prof. Herron, and Mayor Jones.

VARIOUS VOICES.

C. B. Hoffman, Enterprise, Kas.—Now a word concerning Lucifer. The work you are doing is much needed and you are doing it effectively upon the plane on which you are working. I have not a word but of praise and encouragement—but you should go deeper into the question. You dwell chiefly, if not altogether, upon the material side of the sex question, the physical relation and its result. Do not misunderstand me; I do not underestimate the importance of even the purely physical aspect of the problem—but sex has a much deeper meaning, (as all other physical facts have.) It is the highest function of the creator, and has its correspondence upon psychical planes. Should you give this more recondite side of the problem the careful, conscientious attention which you have given and are giving the more palpable, your journal would become even more useful. We must build for eternity. It is our prerogative. We must bring out the spiritual meaning of material facts and none is more pregnant with important truths than the fact that sex appears in nature upon every phase of manifestation from the lowest mineral to the highest spiritual.

H. F. Hadley, Napavine, Wash.—Will you kindly allow me space to correct the impression that your remarks accompanying my article in last week's issue unintentionally, I am sure, generated? Following your statement that "it is the writings of the 'beginner' that the editorial pencil has to be exercised most freely upon," you add that you thought it necessary to eliminate considerable matter from the article of Mr. Hadley, and to substitute euphemisms for several words which experience and observation had taught you were dangerous to send through the mails. By not explaining further, the general impression would be that if you were obliged to substitute new words and terms in the part that you did publish, that the rejected portion was likewise objectionable for the same cause, and therefore unsuitable to appear in print; which I am certain you will concede was not the case; but rather was obnoxious because of its severe personal criticism of certain noted writers for your paper. When I penned those personalities I was half certain they would be rejected, as your editorial utterances have been strong against this style—and I am forced to admit your stand is both wise and just; but being stung by the open declarations of these daring moralists (referred to in the canceled manuscript), I felt justified in "calling them to order" in my blunt way for advocating what I then believed to be the impractical and unholy theory of promiscuity.

Upon further reflection I can see that the question of free love is one which requires deep study and patient reasoning on the part of investigators before it can be even partially understood; and that it is not safe to "shoot" one's anathemas at random in a heterogeneous crowd, as one is just as liable to hit an honest reformer, with his poisoned arrow, as he is a scoundrel or libertine.

Regarding the words which you replaced with others, let me say I borrowed these terms and expressions from a standard medical work which I have had in the house for years. Just where Comstock can draw the line between the words you employ and those I used is a mystery to me, and would be to any man unacquainted with the postal laws relating to obscenity, as their meaning is identical and when used without reference to "sex" are as innocent as the words water and air. I must have been mistaken in my man when I referred to Walter Barton, as I did not see the letters of which you speak. It may have been Francis Barry I had in my mind, but my memory "slipped a cog."

I agree with you in condemning conservatives who resort to "snut" to show up their side of the social problem. There are words enough in the English vocabulary to express our views in decent language. You are justified in "drawing the line" at vulgarity. Yes, I am no doubt a great iconoclast, but one thing in my favor, I am willing to listen and learn, even if hasty and unreasonable at times, and when once convinced, will "stand by my colors" though the heavens fall. I do not assume to "know it all," and am willing to concede that in many ways I may be wrong in my moral deductions, but I am nevertheless firm in my convictions, and will not "budge" till forced to do so by the strong arm of truth and rational argument.

Your comments can well be termed sledge-hammer blows earnestly dealt at the trunk of the tree of "conservatism," but whether you have in a measure loosened or severed its roots, will require more time and patience to fully demonstrate. I thank you however, for the light you have so kindly turned upon this knotty problem, and I promise to utilize every ray in solving this most important of all reforms,—the sexual freedom of woman.

AZTEC CALENDAR.

Send 25 cents to C. A. Higgins, A. G. P. A., A. T. & S. F. Ry., Great Northern Bldg., Chicago, for copy of Aztec Calendar, July to December. Contains six separate reproductions in colors (8 x 11 inches) of Burbank's Pueblo Indian portraits—the season's art sensation. Also engraved cover representing ancient Aztec calendar stone. A handsome and unique souvenir; edition limited; order early.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hun reds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.
This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 607 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

THE BALLAD OF READING JAIL. BY C. 3.3.

This powerful poem of more than 600 lines, is the work of OSCAR WILDE C. 3. 3. having been the poets prison number during his confinement in Reading Jail. It is dedicated to the memory of a trooper of the Horse Guards who was hanged in the jail at that time, and it depicts the terrible sensations of the author and his fellow prisoners before and after the execution.
Just issued; price, in cloth, blue, vellum back, beautifully printed from large type on hand-made antique paper, deckle edges; reading matter on one side of the paper; a sumptuous book of 96 pages, 7 inches by 5.81. In paper, 64 pages, 10 cents. Mailed postpaid on receipt of price, by M. Harman, 607 Carroll Avenue, Chicago.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW. A primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. A valua compendium on Sex Ethics. Startling and Scientific Price, 10 cents.

LOVE AND THE LAW. By E. C. Walker. A clear, concise st. ement of social liberty in contradistinction to the much lauded legal bondage now almost universally upheld. An excellent missionary document. Two copies, 5 cents; 20 cop ies per dozen.

THE CHICAGO & ALTON R. R. is the best line to all points in the South, South-west and West. Free reclining Chair Cars, Pullman Palace Cars. Ticket office 101 Adams st., Chicago.

James Charlton, Gen. Pass. & Tkt Agent.
George J. Charlton, Asst Gen. Pass. & Tkt Agt.

780.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

Only ONE Week More!

Our Special Offer of valuable books at HALF PRICE during the month of September has resulted in distributing a great amount of radical literature among the readers of Lucifer. Many letters have been received from purchasers expressing surprise that so much should be given for so little money. We have explained that many of the books were given to Lucifer by friends who wished to aid in its educational work. All the money received for books which are donated is profit (except the expense of postage, which in some instances is almost half as much as the book is sold for) to be used in defraying the expense of publishing Lucifer. Radical papers, as a rule do not pay the expense of publication, and Lucifer is no exception to the rule. The deficit must be made up by friends of the cause for which the paper is published. Rather than ask for contributions to keep The Light Bearer alive we prefer to circulate as much radical literature as possible and those who purchase books of us thereby aid in sustaining the paper.

Those who have the means should take advantage of our Special Half Price offer to purchase books for distribution among their friends who are in need of light on the terrible evils of marriage slavery. Copies of "Our New Humanity" are particularly valuable for this purpose. No better reading to open the eyes of men and women to the horrors of legal marriage and its twin sister illegal prostitution than Rachel Campbell's powerful essay "The Prodigal Daughter," can be found anywhere. It is printed in full in No. III. of Our New Humanity. Orders are coming in more rapidly as the end of the month approaches, for the offer will be withdrawn on the last day of September. The supply of some of the books in the list is limited and purchasers in making selections should indicate those they arewilling to take as secondchoice if the onest hey desire most are all sold before their orders are received.

Remember these books will not be sold at half price unless the order amounts to ONE DOLLAR at least. Pick out the books you want to the amount of TWO DOLLARS or more and send us just ONE-HALF the marked price.

Ideala. By Sarah Grand. This is the story of a woman too thoughtful, too honest, too true for the conventional "middle class" English society in which she lived. Her life story furnishes much food for thought for those who like to study the facts of life when disguised as fiction. Handsomely bound in cloth. 195 pages. .40

Our New Humanity, No. II. Part of the contents: The Prodigal Daughter, or the Price of Virtue, by Rachel Campbell; Pioneer Chips. Extracts from the private letters of Rachel Campbell, by M. Florence Johnson; Marriage, What It Was and Is—Will the coming woman marry? By "X." (M. Harman); Reminiscences of the Long Ago, II., III. and IV. By Lucy N. Colman; The Ascent of Life, by Moses Harman; Legal Wifehood, by Lucinda B. Chandler; Whose is the Child? by Lex; Tombstone Texts. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. III. Part of the contents: The Unwomanly Woman, by Lizzie M. Holmes; That Great Fraud Yclept Society, by Moses Hull—with comments by his daughter, M. Florence Johnson; Normal Sexual Action, by Ernest Winne; Evolution of Familism, by Albert Chavannes; Virgin Soil, (story); Love in Liberty, by J. Wm. Lloyd; Reminiscences of the Long Ago, V., VI., by Lucy N. Colman; At What Age? 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. IV. Contents: The Abolition of Marriage, by John Beverly Robinson; Isabel's Intention, (story) by Mariette; Reminiscences of Berlin Heights, by A. Warren; The Sexes and Love in Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; A Woman-Child, by J. Wm. Lloyd; Burmese Women; The Great Conflict, by James P. Morton, Jr.; "The Truth About Love," by Moses Harman; Reminiscences—Then and Now, by Moses Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. V. Contents: Priestly Celibacy, by A. L. Rawson; Sex Love Analytically Defined, by Ernest Winne; The Other Side, by May Clifford Hurd; The Incoherence of Transition, by E. C. Walker; The Greatest Sin, (an allegory,) by R. B. Kerr; Our New Savior—the Surgeon, by C. T. Brown; Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; To Man, (poem) by Charlotte Perkins Stetson; Motherhood in Freedom, by M. Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. VI. Contents: Woman's Primal Right, by Francis Barry; The Curse of Maternity, From the French of Henry Fevre; How to Escape the Curse, by Jonathan Mayo Crane; Can Marriage be Abolished? by Albert Chavannes; Woman's "Duty" to Bear Children, by E. C. Walker; Love's Law, by William Francis Barnard; The Freedom Not to Do, by C. L. Swartz; True and False Morality, by C. L. James; Wanted: A New Adam; A Brood Mare, (poem) by Charlotte Perkins Stetson; Life, Health and Longevity, by Moses Harman. 96 pages. .25

Our New Humanity, No. VII. Contents. The Rights of Children, by R. B. Kerr; Incineration, by Walter Breen; What Are Women Here For? by E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.; What the Young Need to Know—A Primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker; The New Martyrdom, by Lillian Harman; The Will, (story, from the French of Guy de Maupassant; A Free Man's Creed, by Moses Harman. .25

Leaflets by Austin Kent: Conjugal Love, the True and False; A Letter to a Magdalene; My Creed, or What I Believe and What I Know; An Open Letter to Andrew Jackson Davis, or, What I Call Conjugal Love; A Letter to My Atheistical Bretheren. Each, 3 cents; the lot, .12

The Dawn of Civilization; or, England in the Nineteenth Century, by J. C. Spence. With portrait of author, 190 pages. .25

What the Young Need to Know,—A Primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. .10

Economics of Anarchy. A Study of the Industrial Type. By Dyer D. Lum. Paper, 60 pages. (Scarce) .25

Government Analyzed. By John R. Kelso, A. M. This book seeks to show that all governments, like all gods, are the mere personifications of mythical monsters invented by selfish and crafty men as instruments with which to rob and enslave the ignorant toiling masses. A book which is sure to open the eyes of governmentalists who read it. Bound in cloth; 520 pages; edition limited; 1.50.

Liberty, Political, Religious, Social and Sexual. By A. F. Tindall. .10

Catechism on the Science of a Universal Religion. Or what we can, and must do, in co-operation to secure a true religion and universal happiness. By Gabriel Z. Wacht. 118 pages. .25

Vistae Vitae. By M. T. Martin, M. D. .25

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs. By Oswald Dawson. Contains fine full-page portraits of E. H. Heywood, Lois Waisbrooker, M. Harman and Lillian Harman. .25

Free Press. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock Law. By G. C. Clemens and David Overmyer. Also Judge Foster's decision overruling the demurrer. .25

In Brighter Climes; or Life in Socioland. A realistic novel. By Albert Chavannes. 260 pages. .25

A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers. By Henry D. Thoreau. 356 pages. Paper covers, .25

Dreams By Olive Schreiner. The Lost Joy; The Hunter; The Gardens of Pleasure; In a Far-off World; Three Dreams in a Desert; A Dream of Wild Bees; In a Ruined Chapel; Life's Gifts; The Artist's Secret; I Thought I Stood; The Sunlight Lay Across my Bed. 128 Pages. Red cloth: silver lettering. .50

Auld Licht Idyls. By J. M. Barrie. 192 pages. Blue cloth, silver lettering. .50

The Coming Race. By Edward Bulwer, Lord Lytton. 218 pages. Maroon cloth, .50

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., NO. 38. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, SEPT. 30, E. M. 299. [C. E 1899.] WHOLE NO. 781

The Better Part.

Better to know the truth, that maketh free,
Than revel in the treasures of the dead;
Better to open thine own eyes and see
Than blindly trust to what men may have said.

Better than dreams of heaven's future bliss,
Or phantom pictures of another life,
It is to live thy future life in this—
Bring heaven down into this vale of strife.

Better to touch with gentle hand a heart
That hath been wounded in the shade of death,
Than from the sinful turmoil stand apart
And gaze enraptured and with bated breath

Into a vision-land that fancy weaves
Beyond the clouds that deck eternity.
Better than pain ing angels on the leaves
Of book or sermon, tale or homily.

It is to show that angels walk the earth
Clad in the flesh of pure humanity;
To open well springs in a land of dearth,
And prove man's strength in his infirmity.

—Harvey Reese.

Our Name and Purpose.

In answer to many questions we say:

The name Lucifer is astronomical, not theological.

Lucifer means Light bringer, or Light bearer, and is the ancient name of the morning star—"Herald of the Dawn."

In accord with this symbolism—drawn from one of the most impressive of Nature's phenomena—we try to make our weekly journal a true Light Bringer, a realistic herald or harbinger of a brighter and better day for mankind.

With Shakespeare we believe that "Ignorance is the only darkness." To destroy both darkness and ignorance, then, we have only to bring in the light of Knowledge—of Science.

With Ingersoll we believe that the reason why reformers have hitherto failed to reform the world is because "Ignorance, poverty and vice are populating the world." We believe that the greatest orator of modern times sent an arrow straight to the core of truth when he said, "There is but one hope. Ignorance, poverty and vice must stop populating the world. This cannot be done by talk or example. This cannot be done by religion or law; by priest or hangman. This cannot be done by force, physical or moral. To accomplish this there is but one way. Science must make woman the owner, the mistress of herself. Science, the only savior of mankind, must put it into the power of woman to decide for herself whether she will or will not become a mother. This is the solution of the whole question. This frees woman. The babes that are born will be welcome. They will be clasped by glad hands to happy breasts. They will fill homes with light and joy. . . . When that time comes the prison walls will fall, the dungeons will be flooded with light, and the shadow of the scaffold will cease to curse the earth."

With Gerald Massey we believe that, "We must begin in the creatory if we would benefit the race, and woman must rescue herself and consciously assume all responsibility of maternity [including choice of paternity] on behalf of the children."

We believe in the motto, "Truth for authority and not authority for truth," and that to "get all of truth we must hear all sides." Hence we try to make the pages of Lucifer a free platform—free for the utterance of honest thought upon all subjects of human interest, but especially for the free expression of thought upon the transcendentally important subject of how to practicalize freedom for the mothers of the race of human kind.

"Washing Out" the Color Line.

BY C. L. JAMES.

Reading Mrs. M. E. W. reminds me that I have long had a misgiving free love and anarchism were becoming too respectable for my taste; and I should have to shy them, as readers of the radical papers know that I did infidelity some years since. All this time it has been on my mind that my next hobby would have to be miscegenation. No, I don't want to "marry a nigger." I have been among the "niggers" a good deal; and never felt any sexual attraction that way. (Southern readers who can say as much without danger of a blister on the tongue, are requested not all to speak at once.) But it appears there are some who cannot; else where do all the mulattoes come from? And yet Mrs. M. E. W. informs us that if a white man should escort a negro woman through the streets of Montgomery, he would soon be in the lockup! How very like respectability under all its hydra-headed phases of the Absurd! The white southerner has ruled the negro race for a century, and greatly improved it, Mrs. M. E. W. assures us, by plentiful infusion of his purer blood. He eats what negroes cook; rides with them "so long as the appearance of a servant is maintained," sucks his first nourishment out of a black breast; is dressed and undressed and put to bed, at last, with a shovel, all by negro hands; but if he escorts a negro woman, that is "associating with negroes," and forthwith the lock up, tar, feathers, ropes, fire! in short, the devil to pay! All this where white people associate with negroes much more than they do anywhere else. What roaring comedy it would be if it were not also such melancholy tragedy.

The truth is that the mutual repulsion sometimes said to exist between the races is merely the repulsion always excited by what is unfamiliar. We northerners, who seldom see a negro, really know something of it. But at the south, where the races are in continual contact, it quickly gives place to such mutual attraction that "honest, virtuous white men" need a good deal of "stamina" not to sneak after the dirty colored drabs who "stand on the streets," (of course they would not "escort" them.) This mutual attraction was all right as long as mulatto babies were simply valuable property; but it became a dreadful thing when they meant a softening of the "color" line, no longer artificially maintained by slavery.

The south is not the only country where similar feelings have produced similar regulations. In India, there were originally only two "castes," Aryan and Dravidian, or white and black. Now there are an infinite number, just as in parts of the south the ex-slave and the "free nigger," the black and the mulatto, won't associate. The caste system is the bane and curse of India. (See Julian Hawthorne on the famine in that country.) All reformers of India, the Buddhist, the Mussulman, the Christian and the Secularist, have considered attacking it their first duty. But their assaults, though not without effect, have so far been without success. Railroads and other modern appliances have done more than anything else to weaken it; but we have more of them here than in India, yet here, under their very tramp, the caste system, in our own time, has raised its miscreated head. However, the conflict between civilization and caste is to the death. In whatever countries they exist together one must eventually destroy the other. I need not say with which my sympathies are. But I can vindicate them by Mrs. M. E. W's. own observations. She says the negro is a mere animal, while a "talented business colored man"—a mulatto, like Booker Washington, is very different. She wishes all the negroes were like him. Well, then, surely the remedy is simple. It is the same recipe as for all social problems—liberty. Dispense with the lock up, discourage the spirit of caste, let the mutual attraction work naturally, instead of forcing it into the crooked channel of hypocrisy; and they soon all will be like him. The ancient gods of love and war, Eros and Ares, are bound to mix the African and Caucasian blood; but only the little fellow with the bow and arrows can mix it so that the result will be satisfactory. The true and only solution of the negro problem is to give him a chance. He will soon wash the negro white if he is allowed his own way.

Home, Sweet Home.

BY EDGAR D. BRINKERHOFF.

In the days gone by when home meant father and mother, fireside and chimney corner, and log cabin or cottage, it was the fashion to approve the maxim, "there is no place like home." In still higher esteem will be held the home of the future when evolution shall have improved the dwelling places of the race and every individual shall have become free to choose a place and manner of living to his own liking. In that happy day, homesickness will more surely than ever befall the new man or new woman or new child who tries to make the world his or her home. "Give me the pleasures of home" will be the universal sentiment and the intensest aspiration of a people that have learned how to live.

Man's wants are infinite. No two persons desire homes just alike in all respects. One must have accessibility to the laundry of commerce, another must launder in his own house to keep his clothes out of scrofulous tubs where disinfectants might be carelessly used, a third must wear paper clothing so that no laundering will be required. These may be whims, but happiness comes through the indulgence of whims. To one, the output of the canneries is indispensible, to another commercial canned goods have been abhorrent since the day he observed a factory hand expectorate tobacco juice into a tomato vat, to a third even home made canning is undesirable as he finds frozen fruit more to his taste. Many men of many minds. Some will not bear the trouble of baking at home; others must have home made bread to make sure of the absence of alum or live yeast or unsifted flour; others do not believe in baking, preferring starch in small quantities raw as one of the first natural foods of the race; still others dismiss starch food altogether. Some like restaurants, others are afraid of flies and hold home cooking in higher regard. Some are satisfied in a flat, others incline toward a cottage where can be had the ozone of nature. One frequents libraries, another prefers a separate home of his own even if he must travel some distance to get to his reading room. One would be willing to live in a moving railway coach, another rejoices that there are railroads to take him away often and bring him back soon to the home that is dear to his heart; "a charm from the skies seems to hallow him there." Some like a boarding house, others think that any house may offer on a small scale the cheif advantage of a boarding house which is that all services are rendered for co-operation not out of duty. Some think that palatial hotels are capable of being more sanitary and cosmopolitan; others perceive that science may cheaply make the cottage at seaside or in mountain just as sanitary while cosmopolitanism depends more on rapid transit than on a crowded center. Some rejoice in the female lawyer and stenographer as the only alternative to the good wife and her loom, others are glad to see the farm house loom superseded by machines run by men in manufacturing places while the women are left free to eschew law and reporting if they elect in favor of the more womanly occupation of child nurturing and happiness making in the highly evolved, well supported home.

It would be a rash theorist who would cut all future homes to one pattern and yet it is safe to say that a permanent, separate home of one's own will always be a thing desired by many persons in each community; if not for washing and cooking or ozone, then for some other purpose. One wants to use musical instruments where he will not disturb others, another wants a piece of ground that he can leave to the next generation, another wants to avoid the necessity of making warfare on bedbugs, another wants to teach more radical doctrines than would be permissible on other people's premises. An individual may patronize a hotel or furnished rooms for a while, but he will always look forward to the day when he can settle down and stay at home at least a part of the time.

The liberty loving individualist unless unable to rid himself of the notions of artificial intentional co-working learned from his first teacher in sociology, the communist delights to contemplate the home evolving in a natural manner and does not think it necessary to depict the dwellings of the future as constituted on the hot house plan of co-operation. Congested centers of population will disappear, while on the other hand millions will be relieved of the necessity of living in the wilderness. The home will thus escape the fate of an ultra-development in the direction of economy at the expense of personal idiosyncrasies at the same time avoiding the poverty of isolation. That would be a suspicious social progress in which the home would seem to be played out; when it is found that the separate home must go to make room for the co-operative home we may feel sure that something is wrong in the state of Denmark.

Home is the most lovable object in the universe. Lovers of home compare favorably with lovers of God. And yet it would be hard to tell what are the essential characteristics of a good home. This is not strange when we consider that men are not all made in one mold and a home that would make one person happy might fail to meet the wants of another. Mother seems essential to the home life of a child, and yet homes have been loved by many a child that never saw mother. A child may be happy, but as a man he needs a new home. To many men a most important feature of home is a woman that has learned all his ways—not to minister to his wants to her own loss but to her own independent profit. To many women an essential feature of home is the comfortable feeling, "the peace of mind," that comes from the knowledge that she lives in her own house, on her own ground, and that she will never be dispossessed for rent or taxes or debt.

The strongest plea that can be made for freedom is in behalf of the home. Let us pray that society will soon accord the blessing of freedom to all who desire to build up for themselves separate homes modeled after a plan of their own selection.

God pity the doctor who cannot compete
With a quack for a medical fee;
But must have some laws, with teeth and claws,
To keep the pretenders away.

God pity the men that make the laws
That would send a man to jail
For taking a fee for curing the sick,
Where the licensed doctors fail.

Anonymous.

A Statement from the Editor of "Christian Life."

Your kindly criticism of the statement of our articles in No. 50 of Christian Life, both by Rev. Sidney Holmes, and L. H. have been read with interest.

It is hardly fair, however, to put an unjust construction on our words, and then set that construction up as a target.

Whatever else I have advised, in all the fifty issues of "Christian Life," and in all the letters I have written, I have never been guilty of advising any woman to submit to the unjust, tyranical, or the undesirable demands of any man, whether husband, father, brother or minister.

In all my twelve years of active work I have considered the subjection of woman to man as one of the greatest hindrances to progress that humanity has to contend with.

My idea and teaching has ever been that no man is good enough, nor fit, nor is it right, or just, or Christian, for him to rule over the conscience, body, or actions of any woman.

In my article, this was implied, though not stated, and all the teaching of Christian Life is in harmony therewith.

"If she has tried love, coupled with firmness, and enforced by heavenly wisdom, patiently and persistently, without effect let her keep on."

With some, love and submission are synonymous. But true love does that which is best for the object loved. A person, woman or man having such love, has or should have, firmness to stand by it and enforce it, and to make it more effective, use the highest or heavenly wisdom.

This is the reverse of advising submission, or cowardly desertion. It means to stand by your principles of right, justice and truth; for in doing so the highest qualities of soul are developed, and the man will be won to a better life if not an ideal one.

J. B. CALDWELL.

Uncle Sam as a Slave-Catcher.

From the New York "World."

A young woman and her son, in his seventh year, of aristocratic appearance, arrived on the French steamship La Bretagne on Sunday, and are detained at the Barge Office at the request of the French Consul-General.

She gave her name as Louise Mouret, but it is Elonore Girard. She has fled from her husband, Louis Girard, with their child, and this offense is grave. But she defends herself, impressively, with resigned smiles and lights of pride, of bravery and of indelible sincerity in her large brown eyes.

She said yesterday: "I know that my husband has the legal right to expect that I shall be led back to him between two gendarmes. I have not been clever enough to elude him; I have been caught; I have lost. But if I am forced to return to him, this will not palliate his fault.

"He beats me, he threatens to kill me with a revolver; he is a despot. I refuse to be his slave. I have been patient for seven years. I have hesitated to punish him. I have asked myself if I had the right to run away and to deprive him of his child.

Nothing in my behavior explained or excused his cruelty. He was violent at one moment, and at the next obsequious. He aimed the revolver at my head, and then let it fall, begging my pardon with tears that were real. I have sometimes thought that he might be crazy; but he isn't.

A Burgundian, twenty-nine years of age, strong, handsome, successful in his affairs as a lace merchant in Luray, France, he lacks common sense. That is all. He imagines that a wife is a victim, naturally. He has seen Punch beat his wife in a puppet show and taken him as a model.

"Oh, I suppose I shall have to return to him. But I will not endure the caprices of his temperament again. I wanted a divorce from him, but I would have to prove his cruelty, and I cannot. He never made a physical mark of his violence. My sufferings were principally mental.

I had a witness—my maid. But my lawyer said that the French tribunal would discredit her because she was my servant. In company, in the presence of his friends, there never was a more gentle, amiable husband than Louis Girard. But when we were alone how different he was!

"I could not live in that hypocrisy. I saved from my household expenses all the funds I could gather until I had money enough to pay for my fare to New York and about $300 more. Then I fled with my son. His father's example would have ruined him.

"I have never worked, but I can work. I will do anything that is honorable rather than return to my husband. I came to America because I have always heard that women here have the rights that men have. I hope that my appeal for protection may not be rejected.

"If it is rejected—well, then, I will go to some other country when I run away again from my husband's tyranny. My parents are dead, I have no relatives. My son depends upon me entirely to become a strong, praiseworthy man. I cannot speak English, but I will learn it quickly."

The boy, in blue sailor dress, wore a wide-brimmed straw hat, on the black band of which was inscribed in silver letters the heroic name of Brennus. He has a round, white and pink, healthy face and blue eyes. He is enchantingly turbulent.

Mrs. Girard's expression had infinite tenderness when she looked at him. The Consul-General said that he knew no details of her husband's complaint against her. The Consul-General's action in asking the Commissioners to detain her was in obedience to an order by cable dispatch. He is to receive formal papers. Until they are received the question of Mrs. Girard's deportation is to be deferred.

Radix.

Helen M. Tufts, in "The Conservator."

There was a radish that grew at the end of a row of lettuces in a garden. The radish was unhappy. Anyone who understands radish language could have heard his frequent plaints at any hour of the day under the lettuce leaves, and might have felt moved to investigate the reason of his trouble. The lettuces themselves, though, had no feelings of sympathy, and were well wearied of their neighbor's peevish clamorings. If they could, they would have gone away, to be rid of him. The truth is, the radish was a most disagreeable vegetable to live near. But he had a history which may account for his peculiarities.

When he was small and young, and his first two leaves were scarcely out of the ground, it was his ambition to grow into a large and perfect specimen of his race. It was a joy to lie in the warm sun, and in the evening dew, to feel the stir of nature about him, and to unfold each day his new leaves and pierce further down into the earth. He felt that all things were good, and he looked confidently forward to the time when he should attain the perfection toward which he was bending his energies.

But one day he became conscious of an uncomfortable squeezing somewhere down in his red root. This squeezing grew day by day until it had become an intolerable pain, and occupied all his thought. He found at last that his crisp leaves were turning yellow, and he knew that he had stopped growing. This was a dreadful blow to the radish, but he was not willing to give up the fight, and so he tried to think less of his pain and to struggle for existence. And after some time the pain subsided into a dull ache, and at last it ceased altogether.

The radish raised his drooping leaves, and tried to put forth new energy, for he thought, "Perhaps it is not too late." But he had no new energy to put forth. He was withered and broken. And so he burst out into complainings, and the lettuces wished they could move away. . . .

One morning the gardener came along, and laid hold of the radish to pull it up. But he only pulled the leaves away for something held the root in the ground.

And when the gardener tried again, and the radish struggled up, lo, embedded in the root was a stone; and the radish had nearly grown around it. The gardener looked a moment, for this was a curious freak of nature; then he tossed them both under a cherry tree.

"Alas," cried the radish, bitterly, "it was you who spoiled my life."

"You were in my way," said the stone.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

THE NAME LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper in it has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

Kansas Notes—Continued.

On Wednesday, September 20, after a very pleasant and, it is hoped, not unprofitable outing of some five weeks in Kansas, I returned once more to Lucifer's office, to find everything moving on there much the same as before. The transition from Kansas City to Chicago requires little more than fifteen hours of time, and as the trip was made mainly by night it would need but little effort of the imagination to believe oneself still west of the "Big Muddy," as the Missouri river is called, were it not for one thing, and that is the change in atmospheric conditions. As soon as the latitude and longitude of Lake Michigan is reached we note a radical change from the comparatively dry air of Kansas to the more humid—the decidedly damp and chilly conditions that prevail in Chicago, for the most part, during the fall, winter and spring months.

While in Kansas, besides the towns already mentioned in late letters, I visited Valley Falls, Burlingame, Harveyville and a few others. At Valley Falls in Jefferson County—half way between Topeka and Atchison, on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway, I spent nearly a week renewing acquaintance with relatives and neighbors among whom I had made my home for more than ten years—years fraught with changes and experiences that left some of the deepest and most indelible impressions that have hitherto been made upon the tablets of memory during the present "incarnation" of the individualized entity known as Moses Harman.

Near Harveyville, Kan., at a little farm house owned by a radical thinker and earnest worker along Lucifer's lines, I spent two or three days resting, writing, conferring, planning, helping to elaborate a scheme for putting into immediate practice some of the ideas presented by Rosa Graul in "Hilda's Home," and by others in Lucifer's pages, for the last ten years or more. This scheme is nothing less than a plan to build a home for the use of expectant mothers, married or unmarried, whose home environments are such as to render perfect work in child building impracticable or impossible. The location selected for this home is one of the best I have seen anywhere. The land is high and rolling—well drained—near the head sources of the Marais des Cygnes river. Though hilly it is not too rough for cultivation. The soil is rich and well suited to producing the various fruits, grains, grasses, root-crops, etc., of the great "Middle West." The little farm of thirty-six acres, owned and occupied by our friend is located two miles from Harveyville, a station on the Manhattan branch of the A. T. and S. F. R. R., about twenty-five miles southwest of Topeka, the capital of the state. This farm has a small orchard of apple and other fruit trees, several acres of plow land suitable for garden and "truck" raising, and the rest in grass and timber. The groves on this and adjoining tracts are well adapted to "camping out"—or "tenting," for those who might wish to spend a few weeks in summer or early autumn away from the turmoil, the heat and dust of city life, and without incurring the expense of a trip to the Rocky Mountains, to California or to the Atlantic coast.

Though her own house is too small for immediate use, for the purpose named, our friend showed me through a large house on an adjoining tract that had once been her own home, and which can now be bought or leased on very reasonable terms. In fact the scheme as outlined to me includes the purchase of this large house—two stories with basement, with a tower or third story from which an enchanting view of many miles in all directions can be obtained. The place belongs to non-resident heirs who wish to sell, and who would probably take an interest—a co-operative interest, in a home such as is now contemplated by this worker friend, mine hostess, who seems imbued with a purpose and with an enthusiasm that means success, if I do not sadly mistake the personality of the owner and the outlook for the movement as seen from "Wren's Nest"—the name given to the little cottage among the hills aforesaid.

To those wishing to know the name of the person of whom and of whose plans I am now writing I would say a letter of inquiry addressed, "Kansas Movement for Motherhood in Freedom," and sent under cover to this office, will be forwarded to the proper address, that is, to the good lady worker in Wabaunsee County, Kansas, who prefers that her name be kept out of the public eye until certain business arrangements, now under way, can be perfected.

I would only add to this brief statement that this Kansas friend asks no financial co-operation, or co-operation of any kind, without thorough investigation into the feasibility of her plans, and also that she desires no money to be placed into her hands subject to her management only. She wants all such responsibility to rest upon other shoulders; details of which proposed management will be given upon application.

At Burlingame I had the pleasure of meeting a few of Lucifer's old-time friends and helpers. Of these I would mention the names of Mrs. E. W. Crumb, Mrs. and Mr. Mayberry, the Jamison family—at whose hospitable home I had the pleasure and the honor of being entertained while stopping in this beautiful and enterprising little city.

Near to Lawrence—some references to the early history of which place were given in last issue, I had the honor of a brief visit to the home of Mrs. S. T. D. Robinson, widow of Charles Robinson, first governor of the state of Kansas—a name second to none in the memory of every citizen of the Sunflower state who recalls the part that "Doctor Robinson" (as he was called previous to his election as governor) took in making Kansas a "free state," and in developing its capabilities afterwards.

Mrs. Robinson came to Kansas with her husband in 1855, and with him shared the hardships and the dangers incident to "border" life and to the struggle between the "Free State" party and the forces that seemed determined, with the help of the then Federal government at Washington, to extend the area of Afro-American slavery. In October 1856 Mrs. Robinson published her book entitled, "Kansas; Its Interior and Exterior Life." In the preface to that book she says,

"This book has been written amid all the inconveniences of tent life. Its pages were penned during a three months residence of the authoress in the United States camp at Lecompton, with her husband, one of the state prisoners. If a bitterness against the 'powers that be' betrays itself, let the continual clanking of sabres, and the deafening sound of heavy artillery in the daily drills of the soldiery, aids in crushing freemen in Kansas,—the outrages hourly committed upon peaceable and unarmed men,—the daily news of some friend made prisoner, or butchered with a malignity more than human,—the devastation of burning homes, by the connivance of the Governor, under the eye of the troops, and no power given them to save an oppressed people,—be placed in the balance against a severe judgment."

Her preface to the first edition of "Kansas," closes fittingly with the famous poem of J. G. Holland:

"God give us men! A time like this demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith, and ready hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possess opinion and a will;
Men who have honor,—men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue,
And damn his treacherous flattery without winking!
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty, and in private thinking;
For while the rabble, with their thumb-worn creeds,

Their large professions, and their little deeds,—
Mingle in selfish strife, lo! Freedom weeps,
Wrong rules the land, and waiting Justice sleeps!"

So great was the demand for Mrs. Robinson's book that it ran through nine editions, and then, for some years, was practically out of print. In response to urgent requests of many friends she has lately issued the tenth edition thereof, with an appendix that adds greatly to the value of the work. This appendix is mainly composed of letters corroborative of the statements made by her husband, Charles Robinson, in his book, published near the close of his long, very useful and very eventful life, and entitled, "The Kansas Conflict." Of this book, and also of this last edition of "Kansas; Its Interior and Exterior Life," by Mrs. S. T. D. Robinson, I hope to find time and space to say something more in these columns, in the near future.

M. HARMAN.

From My Point of View.

BY LILLIAN HARMAN.

In another column we give the story of a runaway slave who is to be returned to her master by our government. It is a serious crime for a married woman to steal her own child. A similar case was recently decided in England. Gladys Perot, aged eleven, was "abducted" by her mother from her paternal grandfather in Baltimore, and taken to London. The grandfather followed, and by the aid of English law, tore the child from the mother's arms, and brought her, unwilling and rebellious though she felt, back to this country. And thus does marriage "protect" women and children—for the use of their legal owners.

* * *

In this issue we give a statement of the case of Jesse N. Lee, which was forwarded to us by one of his friends. Lucifer believes in giving all sides a hearing. So far as I am personally concerned, I care to say little about this case. I will remark, in passing, however that the fact, if fact it be, that Lee is a "leader" in the free love movement is news to me, as is also the further alleged fact that free lovers have a "creed." Mr. Lee has never been a subscriber or contributor to the columns of Lucifer, nor have I ever seen any of his ideas in print elsewhere, therefore I cannot say what his views are. It seems, however, that he and Mrs. Chinn have written letters to each other in which they made statements or used expressions which they did not feel able to defend in court. The moral of this case, as well as of several others of recent occurrence, seems to me to be that people should carefully weigh their written, printed, and spoken words, and ask themselves,

"Is it right for me to say this? And if it is right, have I the courage and the strength to face it out unflinchingly in court, if necessary?"

"The fog that buries and runs away
MAY live to fight another day."

But the probabilities are that it will live to run, another day. So my advice to all dogs, little and big, and to all writers, would be, Don't bark and call the attention of the enemy to yourselves, unless you mean business.

* * *

I am glad to be informed that Mr. Caldwell did not mean to counsel submission of the wife to the husband; but I am sorry he did not make what he did mean a little more clear. If the wife has followed Mr. Caldwell's advice "without effect" the meaning must be that she is forced to live in a way which she does not desire, for otherwise she could not say that her prayers, etc., are without effect. If a man to whom I am not married beats and robs me, I may try argument and persuasion and prayers; but if they were without effect I should consider that the person who advised me to continue those tactics, instead of fighting or running away or calling for help, was thereby advising me to endure the abuse. Too long have women, with prayers and tears, submitted to such treatment. It has been held that the woman may and should save the man. Better, a thousand times, let him understand that the only way in which he can enjoy the companionship of a good woman is to treat her with at least the courtesy and consideration he showed to her when she was his sweetheart, before the law placed her in his power.

Criticisms and Comments.

BY C. F. HUNT.

Private Hoon of Ohio has been imprisoned at Manila one year for addressing a letter directly to Gen. Otis. We rejoice when a traitor is properly punished, but in this case we should be told whether the treason is against the flag, military form, or Gen Otis, so that we may rejoice intelligently.

* * *

The Chicago Journal holds that there is a defect in our laws which allows the well paid, free and enlightened laborers of one glorious commonwealth to be replaced by the pauper labor of another g. c. Thus does land monopoly make fools of editors.

* * *

According to the New York World, the effect of the death of Cornelius Vanderbilt will be felt for a year in the business world, and the social thrill it causes will be equally intense and prolonged. The parquet and boxes in every theater will be thinly settled this winter, and other horrors will occur. It is time that society begged for mercy from these Vanderbilts. It seems but a day since a niece of of the recently deceased, thrilled society by marrying a duke, and went to England where her long neck revolutionized diamond necklaces, and drove short necked dames to a depth of despair which was hardly offset by the joy of the makers of wide necklaces. We tremble at the thought that imitators may try to reproduce the Vanderbilt thrill in a small way by dying; and many a loyal admirer would be glad to die if he were sure his little thrill would last even a week.

To the Freethinkers of America.

The twenty-third Annual Congress of the American Secular Union and Freethought Federation will be held in Boston, Nov. 17., 18th and 19th. For the first time in the history of the Society a Congress is to be held in New England. Paine Hall has been tendered for the occasion and Boston Freethinkers will do all in their power to make it a notable gathering. The success of the coming Congress is assured.

While the results of the present year are not all that could be desired, the Society has accomplished much good. Thousands of pamphlets and papers advocating the principles of Freethought have been distributed. Documents relating to state Secularization have been sent to Members of Congress and State Legislators. In California, Montana and other states, legislation inimical to religious liberty has been defeated. In several states bills for the repeal or modification of the Sunday laws were introduced and found many supporters. In Nebraska a bill providing for the taxation of church property was passed by the House. The Society is preparing for more effective work in this field. In nearly every state, committees have been appointed to look after legislation and other matters of interest to the Society. In every state a bill providing for the taxation of church property, the repeal of the Sunday laws, or the prohibition of religious teaching in the public schools, should be introduced at the next session of the legislature. The Union is now in a condition to render efficient aid in this work, and all efforts for that and similar purposes should be reported to the Secretary so as to receive the support and aid of the National organization. The further organization of the Liberals in every state will be prominently brought before the Congress and representatives from every section of our country are necessary to make this union of the friends of intellectual liberty effective, for both our own defense and the furtherance of the cause they have at heart. Let every Eastern Freethinker attend this Congress. Let as many as possible of our Western friends attend. Able speakers will address the Congress, inspiring music will be fur nished and good fellowship will abound. With the roses of joy will be mingled the rue of grief. Since we last met two of our former Presidents have died—our great and beloved leader, Col. Ingersoll, and our able and worthy brother, Dr. Westbrook. Arrangements have already been made for an Ingersoll Memorial meeting to occupy one session of the Congress.

The expenses attending a great National Convention are large. To meet these expenses we shall rely as heretofore upon the generosity of our Liberal friends. Contributions for this purpose should be sent at once to the Treasurer, Otto Wettstein, Rochelle, Ill.; to the Secretary, E. C. Reichwald, 141 S. Water st Chicago, Ill., or to the editor of this paper.

E. C. REICHWALD, Sec., 141 S. Water St. Chicago, Ill.

J. E. REMSBURG, Pres. Atchison, Kansas.

From the Communistic Point of View.

BY GEORGE BROWN.

That woman does not occupy at present a position of equality with man is admitted by all. That she does not possess in an equal measure the qualities which make for success in a competitive order of society—as intelligence, strength and moral force—is sometimes disputed by cranks and courtiers, but is agreed to by all who are competent to form a correct judgment. The proof of this proposition is to be found in all written history and in all myths and traditions that have come down to us from the past. It may perhaps be urged that this is due to the limited competition that has always obtained and that still obtains under capitalism. A little thought will be enough to show that the evil is not in the limitation but in the principle itself. For in entirely free competition the advantage would be to the best equipped and we should still have an aristocracy of intelligence and strength, and as woman is clearly lacking in these qualities it is not under competition that she will find her just position in the social order.

Neither will she find salvation in equality, for this is precisely the most unsatisfactory principle ever proposed as a foundation for social organization. It never has existed nor ever can exist. Men are unequal among themselves; women are unequal among themselves and are again unequal to men; children to either. If only equality of opportunity is meant, the question arises, how can unequal persons use opportunities to equal advantage? Would not inequalities at once reappear and the old, old story be repeated? If this be true, then it appears that neither economic independence nor equality will be sufficient to free woman from her present unjust position, though both would be steps in the right direction; and both would be concessions from man. It appears quite plain that all the gains that woman has made in the past have been by courtesy of man, for man is as able to subdue woman to his use now as at any time in the past, and that he was able in the past is evidenced by her position now. During his long history, from the time he did his courting with a club up to today he has been evolving a sentiment of humanity, of solidarity, and this has prompted him to a milder, more considerate treatment of those dependent upon him, as wife and child, and the old and weak. Today there are many men who are shocked by any act of cruelty to dependents, and it is on the growth of this feeling that progress depends.

Great has been the improvement in this direction. Many of the most hateful of the practices of our ancestors have been done away with on this account. And sentiment becomes so strong that it forms a new test higher than reason, becomes in fact a new base from which reason starts.

May not this sentiment be so highly developed that it will extend to all departments of human life and action, to all our methods of production and distribution, and so humanize them that there will be no more exploitation of the weak by the strong? No more ownership, no more denial of the right to use the land and its yield?

When this stage is reached then all may enjoy without any sense of humiliation, all that has been jointly produced whether things, ideas or sentiments. And then will woman become entirely free. For then she will be able to realize her own life in her own way and no one will feel any desire to say her nay. Then none will have to obey for there will be none to command. This is the ideal of the free communist and offers the only solution to questions of the maintenaace of women and children. Is there any other?

REMARKS.

Yes; it is doubtless true that "neither economic independence nor equality [of rights and privileges] will be sufficient to free woman from her present unjust position." Woman's needs are radically and constitutionally different from those of man. Woman needs more than equality of rights and privileges, simply because she is woman; because nature has placed upon her shoulders all the real burdens—all the real labors, pains and perils, all the disabilities connected with the creation of new human beings. To fit woman for the better performance of this transcendentally important work nature has made her less strong physically, less brave or courageous physically and less severely logical than man; but, as compensation, nature has made her more intuitional, more loving, more spiritual; less of the animal and more of the psychic; less of the brutal and more of the human.

"Today there are many men who are shocked by any act of cruelty to dependents." This is saying that man is growing more womanly. It is certainly true that as the race advances towards perfection the differences of sex diminish, and as these differences diminish in like ratio will reproduction diminish, until in time it will wholly cease. And herein is found the rational solution of the Malthusian problem, and the solution of the millenium problem. To hasten these solutions we have only to make conditions such as will allow "equality of opportunity" to be born well! the practicalization of which must come through the freedom of woman, as mother, supplemented by her enlightenment. That is to say Freedom must join hands with Love and Wisdom. Hence the Trinity, Freedom, Love [Mother love] and Wisdom must and will be the savior of mankind.

M. HARMAN.

The Case of Jesse N. Lee.

Numerous inquiries, chiefly from readers of Lucifer are still coming in, concerning the case of Jesse N. Lee and Laura L. Chinn. Will you kindly publish the following brief statement, trusting to the intelligence of all friends of liberty and justice to arrive at a correct conclusion upon reading the "facts" as given by the daily press.

From "Ottawa Daily Republican." "Lee has relatives in this city. . . . . It was a knowledge of this fact . . . . that led the officer to place espionage over the Ottawa post office.

"In all of the manuscript so submitted to the reporter there was neither word, sentence, drawing or intimation of any sentiment that could be construed as being obscene or even vulgar.

"He denies the statement made in our cotemporary, that he has been 'spreading this sort of literature.'

"He speaks very highly of the character of the lady concerned, whom he proposes to protect at all personal cost.

"If the charge against Lee is based on the documents submitted to the reporter, he is a victim of misdirected official activity, to put the mildest possible construction on the act of Inspector McAffee; it would look a good bit like an effort to build up a reputation for vigilance at the expense of a man innocent of wrong intent or act."

From "Ottawa Weekly Herald." "Mr. Lee is a follower of the peculiar tenets of the free love doctrine and it was through his faith that he came to grief. . . . . He is also a descendant of 'Light-Horse Harry' and other heroes of revolutionary fame and signers of the Declaration of Independence, as well as a relative of later heroes who fought for 'Cuba Libre.'"

From "Wichita Daily Eagle." "Reporter: 'Have you ever seen Mrs. Chinn?' Lee: 'No, I have never seen her.' . . . .

Jesse N. Lee, one of the leading advocates of the free love doctrine in this country, who has been in jail for several weeks awaiting trial in the federal court on the charge of sending obscene matter through the mails, plead guilty before Judge Hook yesterday, and was sentenced to a term of eighteen months in the government penitentiary at Fort Leavenworth. Lee's attorney, John Adams, advised him to plead guilty, as Mrs. Chinn, of Arkansas City, who is alleged to be an accessory in the crime, had turned evidence against him. . . . . Reporter 'The obscenity of those letters, then, etc. are not considered disrespectful or criminal, according to your creed?' Lee: 'No sir. They are pure to the pure in thought and only obscene to those who evil think.'"

From private letter of Jesse N. Lee. "Why did I plead guilty?" "The first indictment was worded wrong. . . . . The grand jury reconvened and got out a new indictment and again got it wrong. . . . . If I had stood trial on the count as it read then, Mrs. Chinn would have been convicted with me. . . . . So, to leave her out, I plead guilty as the count read. Did I do right? . . . . But the Comstockers were bound to have Mrs. C. anyway, so they fined her $1,000 for the letters. . . . . She went home without coming to see me. Don't know just when I'll be taken to Leavenworth, etc. . . . . If Laura had not talked so much to McAffee, nothing could have been done to either of us. But she 'fessed up'—turned state's evidence."

"There was much fluttering of 'ribbons and calico' around the rotary (of the jail). People came to see what sort of animal a free lover is. The 'bontons' would have turned out en masse had there been any likelihood of their being able to hear the reading of the letters."

From "Evening Herald," Ottawa, Kan. "Lee kept up his bluff untill the very last. He stated while in jail here he would fight the case and prove that the matter sent through the mails was not lascivious. He said he would attempt this by reading sections of the old testament of the Bible to show that it is more smutty than his literature. He said he would plead his own case before the jury. He put up the same story at Wichita but when confronted with the charge, he wilted and pleaded guilty.

"Mrs. Laura Chinn, of Arkansas City, who implicated herself in the case, by writing him letters, said to be fully as lascivious as those written by Lee himself, acknowledged her guilt before Judge Hook in the federal court this morning and threw herself upon the mercy of the court. Judge Hook imposed a fine of $1000, subject to execution. Mrs. Chinn was released at once and during good behavior will not be compelled to pay the fine.

In response to the call for aid, ninety cents were received and was used for postage, the prisoner's laundry etc. Personal letters have been written to the donors. Many inquiries came and some expressions of genuine sympathy. Some good friends have done all they could. The time from the arrest, Aug. 3 to the date of conviction, Sept. 12 was short. It seems, now, that it was needless to prepare a defense as the defendants were judged, condemned, by Comstock et al. long before the "trial"—a mere formality that enabled them to give some semblance of justice to the proceedings.

Of one thing I am convinced,—the bandage is falling from the eyes of Justice; or at least that august personage does not scorn to "peep" once in a while, or else she is developing a sixth sense, for if the defendant, though guilty before the law, proves to be a good looking dame; Justice may feel constrained to pronounce a sentence according to the letter of man-made laws, but in view of the sex of the culprit the Judge—beg pardon, I meant Justice—at once remits the fine or stays the execution of the sentence.

So let all our sisters—at least, those who are fair to look upon take hope. Woman's day is coming.

GUARDIAN ANGEL.

One whom the prisoner called his

Query: Would not government ownership of all public utilities be desirable, so the argus eyed patercould extend his loving care to all the goings and comings of his children, as well as to their "private correspondence?"

G. A.

Nor is truth arid or disconsolate, for it is in the very nature of true knowladge to restore more with one hand than what it seems to take away or destroy with the other.—Buchner.

VARIOUS VOICES.

E. P. Bly, Marietta O.—After this long delay I write you and enclose six dollars for which please send "The Social Question," "Life and Health," "Religious, Political, and Social Freedom," together with the whole list of books advertised on page 288 of Lucifer; the balance to pay up to next January; and if any more it is yours for not stopping the paper. Hope to do better hereafter. Let me know if I am right about subscription. I want to pay every cent and as much more as I can, and I want Lucifer to come every week as long as it is the honest, fearless publication it is at present.

Mabel Fleming:—In No. 779 Mrs. "M. E. W." told us of the southern colored woman who "stands on the streets and lures the honest, virtuous white man in her web if he has not stamina enough to resist temptation."

Her remarks were forcibly recalled to my mind a few evenings ago. A small party of us went, after the theater, to a police station to see the sergeant in charge who besides sharing our "cranky notions," is, like most of the sons of Erin, a very entertaining story teller. We were enjoying a pleasant conversation when a policeman entered accompanied by a great, burly, red-faced man. The stranger was well dressed and prosperous in appearance.

"Ah," said our friend the Sergeant, "here's a man who has met a woman and lost about a hundred dollars, and has come to pour out his troubks to us."

On his return to us, after listening to the story of the stranger, he remarked:

"It was eighty dollars. He is on his way to San Francisco, and he met a little quadroon. I recognize her from his description; she's a little bit of a thing,—weighs about ninety pounds. She got away with his eighty dollars."

"What will be done with her?" I asked.

"Done? O, he'll never prosecute. She'll go away to a summer resort for a week or so, and then come back. They are afraid to prosecute."

Such are the trials and temptations of the "honest, virtuous, white man" who finds himself alone and unprotected in a great city, even in the north. Hence these tears!

AZTEC CALENDAR.

Send 25 cents to C. A. Higgins, A. G. P. A., A. T. & S. F. Ry., Great Northern Bldg., Chicago, for copy of Aztec Calendar, July to December. Contains six separate reproductions in color (8 x 11 inches) of Burbank's Pueblo Indian portraits—the season's art sensation. Also engraved cover representing ancient Aztec calendar stone. A handsome and unique souvenir; edition limited—order early.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW. A primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. A valuable compendium on Sex Ethics. Startling and scientific. Price, 10 cents.

LOVE AND THE LAW. By E. C. Walker. A clear, concise statement of social liberty in contradistinction to the much lauded legal bondage now almost universally upheld. An excellent missionary document. Two copies, 5 cents; 20 cents per dozen.

Government Analyzed. By John E. Kelso. The chapter headings are: "Derivations and Definitions of Political Terms; Various Forms of Government; General Principles of Government; Functions of Government; Origin of Government; Declaration of Independence; Articles of Confederation; Defects of the Confederation; Formation of the Constitution of the United States; Constitution of the United States; Taxation; Tariff or Protection; War; Punishments; Marriage; Religion; Prohibition; Money; What a Government Should Be." 320 pages. Price reduced to $1.00.

With Lucifer one year to a new subscriber, $1.50

Ideala was a woman too thoughtful, too honest, too true for the conventional "middle class" English society in which she lived. Her life story furnishes much food for thought for those who like to study the fact of life when disguised as fiction. 195 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth with silver lettering. Price, postpaid, 25 cents.

781.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with his number. Please renew for another year.

WOMEN and ECONOMICS,

A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women. By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Here are a few of the page headings of this remarkable work: "Economic environment; The dependence of women; No inherent disability of sex; Marriage not a partnership; House service as a livehood; Motherhood and economic production; Modification to maternity; The usefulness of sex; Differentiation of sex; Sex and humanity; The peacock's tail; Sex distinctions; The eternal feminine; unreasoning devotion; Women as persons; Race-attributes and sex-attribute; The normal child; Personal profit and sex-relations; The influence of heredity; The young man and the young woman; The effect of custom; The sex relation personal; Innocence and ignorance; Marriage with independence; The increasing difficulty of marriage; Supporting one's family; Virtue and vice; The results of repression; The harm that women do; The development of love; The hope for the future; The martyr and the pioneer; The dropping of the bars; The meaning of the new woman; Motherhood in education; A criminal failure; Marriage and the family; Love's young dream; The heart and the stomach; Socializing the household industries; The stomach as a family tie; The servant wife; World-servants and house servants; A wider maternity; Between the old and the new; "The vices of the slave;" The outgrown stronghold. Printed on strong, heavy paper; 350 pages, bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale by M. Harman, 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY. Co-educational. Send for catalog. A. E. Gammage, President. 167 Dearborn St., Chicago.

RIGHTS OF WOMEN IN THE SEXUAL RELATIONS,

By Karl Heinzen. A new edition together with the startling letters of Louise Mayen" on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German women at Frauenstadt. A book of 266 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Price paper bound, 50 cents; cloth, $1

THE BALLAD OF READING JAIL. BY C. 3.3.

This powerful poem of more than 600 lines, is the work of OSCAR WILDE. C.3.3. having been the prois prison number during his confinement in Reading Jail. It is dedicated to the memory of a trooper of the Horse Guards who was hanged in the jail at that time, and it depicts the terrible sensations of the author and his fellow prisoners before and after the execution.

Just issued; price, in cloth, blue, vellum back, beautifully printed from large type on hand-made antique paper, deckle edges; reading matter on one side of the paper; a sumptuous book of 96 pages, 7 inches by 5, $1. In paper, 44 pages, 50 cents. Mailed postpaid on receipt of price, by M. Harman, 507 Carroll Avenue, Chicago.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be FREE; love of any man, or of men, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrially."—Page 265. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CITYLESS AND COUNTRYLESS WORLD", by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 470 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races." Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III., Co-operation; Chapter V., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, ten cts.

The Sanctity of Marriage, As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A woman protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

LIBERTY Political, Religious, Social and Sexual. An essay towards the formation of an anti-persecution society. By A. F. Tindall. Price 5 cents.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.

This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Women in Marriage Slavery

Will find in HILDA'S HOME a story exposing the horrors of their condition as faithfully and as fearlessly as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" exposed the horrors of Negro slavery in the South. The story is more entertaining than many modern works of fiction and the plain truths it tells will find responsive echoes in the aching, bursting hearts of many women who know the galling effects of marriage thralldom.

The book contains 425 pages. Price handsomely bound in cloth, $1. In paper cover 50 cents. Send in your order NOW—especially if you want extra copies for distribution among your friends.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Persons Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 20 cents. Address Moses Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. E. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.
"Union signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.
"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.
Sample pages free. Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 173 pages. Price 25 cents.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Missing Link Modern Spiritualism. By A. Leah Underhill. A book for all spiritualists and investigators. "Hear all sides, then decide." 28 chapters; 478 pages; 16 illustrations, including portraits of the Fox family. History of the Hydesville rappings, as given by eye-witnesses, the threats of mob violence; remarkable and well-attested manifestations; the "exposures" disposed of, etc. Handsomely bound in cloth. Publishers price, $1.50. On receipt of $1.27, and 13 cents for postage, we will send the book to any address.

Wanted: Position as housekeeper by refined woman unincumbered, would like position as housekeeper for club. Liberals prefered. Could furnish the furniture. Address M. W. 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

Furnished rooms to let in pleasant, sunny flat half block from Garfield B'l'd Near Halsted st cars and 56th st station. For terms, etc. apply to Mrs. M. L. Knowles 5631 Lowe Ave.

Wanted: A woman holding radical views to keep house for a family of three adults on a city in Massachusetts. A pleasant home for the right person. Write to M., 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

The Story of An African Farm. Olive Schreiner's masterpiece. A story of the struggle for light, the search for truth, the yearning for happiness of bright young Englian and German people, among the ignorant and coarse Boers and Kaffirs of South Africa. This is a work of art, and of truth. Well bound in cloth. 288 pages. Price, 45 cents, postage 10 cents. For sale at this office.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 39. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, OCT. 7, E. M. 299. [C. E 1899.] WHOLE No. 782

A Human Habitation.

The sky was like a low-hung purple dusk,
The plain its counterpart. Eastward, between These infinite disks of variant purple, the train
Rushed steadily, entering a belt of orange-colored sky,
Wherein the spring-time sunlight grew in power.

Against the glowing band,
A tooth of purple sod upreared, to notch
The otherwise unbroken, splendid sweep
Of intersecting sky and plain. From it
A thin blue smoke arose.

It was a human habitation,
It was not a prison. A prison
Resounds with songs, yells, the crash of gates,
The click of locks and grind of chains,
Voice shouts to voice. Bars do not exclude
The interchange of words.
This was solitary confinement!

The sun upsprang;
Its light swept the plain like a sea
Of golden water, and the blue-gray dome
That soared above the settler's shack,
Was lighted into magical splendor.

To some worn woman
Another monotonous day was born.

—Hamlin Garland.

Freedom in Love.

At a woman's convention in "Frauenstadt," as told by Karl Heinzen in his book "Woman and the Sexual Relations," the usual objection to woman's freedom was made that it would break up the home and family, would destroy the virtue of woman and end in "moral anarchy"—commonly known as "free love." The following paragraphs give the popular objection in few words, and also the answer—as the question is seen by those from whose eyes the bandages of ignorance and prejudice have been removed:

MR. MORALITY—One of your resolutions demands the free, unrestrained contraction and dissolution of marriage. Is that not merely another way of saying free love? I am astonished to see German women make a demand which even among American women has called out disgust. What would it lead to, if it were left to the option of every woman to run away from her husband, as soon as he had crossed her whims, and offended her sensibilities in any way, or as soon as another one pleased her better? What would become of feminine dignity and virtue if our women could rush into the arms of another man every day? Indeed, what would become of marriage, and love, that divine theme of our songs, if all were chasing after sensual pleasures in perpetual change? Think of the moral anarchy that would be the inevitable consequence of your new institution. I must confess that I am horrified, and can hardly believe it possible that the moral sense of our German women can be put to shame by men.

JULIE VON BERG—The gentleman's objections, which so pathetically appeal to our conscience, and are so anxiously concerned about our dignity, are most welcome. They give me an opportunity to speak openly on this subject, which even in this country is still treated with the most unbecoming prudery, and the most senseless reserve. I do not know the gentleman whom I am to answer. He need not take my remarks personally—they are aimed at the masculine world in general.

I begin with the declaration that I advocate "free love" completely and decidedly. But the expression is incorrect and ought to be "freedom in love." Indeed, can any other kind of love exist except free love? Can love be commanded or forced? Something of this sort seems hitherto to have been in the minds of our philosophers of love, who have learned their philosophy in Constantinople or Utah apparently, and who can let a slave pass as their beloved. Among all the daughters of the goddess Liberty there is none, who, according to her nature, must possess the properties of her mother in a higher degree than Love. Love and free love are therefore synonymous. It ought not to be necessary to talk of free love, any more than of wet water, or hot fire. I might, however, conceive of love as not free in the sense that the feeling, the necessity, the passion that unites two beings, binds them completely, destroys their free will, turns them irresistibly away from everything else. But just because true love has this effect, exerts this power, creates this necessity, it ought no more to be hindered in its choice, by external force, than it will require external bonds to insure its permanence. A man and woman who do not love each other ought not to be united, or where they are united, they ought again to be separated; a man and woman who love each other ought not to be kept apart, and they need no external force to remain together. This is the simple statement of what I understand by freedom in love, which is the only means of securing what has now become so rare—a true marriage and a happy family life. Let him who does not agree with me have the courage to postulate the opposite and declare, that those who do not love each other ought to be united, and to be kept together by force, those who love each other ought to be separated and to be kept apart by force—both in the interest of humanity and human happiness!

A Call.

I write this to call your attention to the work now being prosecuted by the National Afro-American Council for the benefit of the colored race. It is a broad unselfish work in the cause of humanity and is based upon the belief that the moral, mental and financial improvement of the colored people will help not only the race but will bless and benefit the nation. . . . .

During the past ten years more than two thousand men, women and children have been shot, hanged or burned to death, all of them without trial, many of them absolutely innocent of any crime whatever. Is it not our duty to let the Nation know this awful record as it is being made from day to day? Is it not a duty we owe to ourselves, to humanity and to God?

Our work is educational for we believe that truth and justice go hand in hand. Our purpose is to give the world the truth, by honestly investigating all lynchings and promptly publishing candid, unbiased reports, not only of the lynchings but the causes which lead to them.

We want your aid and support. The Anti-Lynching Bureau of the Afro-American Council wants ten thousand members to enlist in the work. Will you lend a hand? We desire to enroll you in this cause so that we may send out correct reports and rely upon you to aid in circulating the same and thus appeal to the christian sentiment of the Nation.

We have held meetings and passed resolutions time without number, but there has been no money—no fund upon wh ch we could call to make these resolutions effective. The Anti-Lynching Bureau proposes first to secure the sinews of war. This can easily be done, without burden to any one, by securing members for the Anti-Lynching Bureau at the small fee of twenty-five cents a year. You are at liberty to contribute as much more to the cause as you wish, but anyone can become a member, and thus have a share in this great work, by paying twenty-five cents. This will entitle you to receive reports of the progress of the work, direct from this office, and also to participate in the prosecution of such other plans as may be formulated. On application we will send a blank to enroll your name, also a blank for the names of friends you may be able to enlist in this cause.

The colored people have thus far done but little for themselves. We have made no united effort in our own behalf. Should we not try to help ourselves? I hope this cause will appeal to your head and heart, and that you will engage in this humble service for our race and thus forward the work so auspiciously begun. Yours for the race,

IDA B. WELLS-BARNETT,
Chairman Anti-Lynching Bureau.

2939 Princeton Ave., Chicago.

And She Doesn't Live on "Black Bread," Either.

The following letter was not written for publication, therefore the name of the writer is suppressed. As a matter of fact, the majority of prospective mothers—women of moderate means—put in enough hours at useful labor to support themselves if fairly compensated therefor. Of course a great many not only do this, but are excessively overworked in their household cares—"slave labor," for which no compensation is expected or received. The writer of this letter is a self-supporting woman, in receipt of a moderate salary. She writes that she is quite well, and happy in anticipation of the near advent of a longed-for little one. L. H.

MY DEAR LILLIAN:—I am enclosing you a small cutting from a Northampton, (Eng.) paper which may interest you. How great is the interest attaching to breeding horses. How important is it to exclude from breeding the inferior animals! How little do we think of applying the same reasoning to man.

"ROYAL COMMISSION ON HORSE BREEDING.

"The report of the Royal Commission which administers the Royal Bounty as well as the Parliamentary grant for the encouragement of horse breeding in Great Britain, has just been published. Two shows have been held in London since the last report, both in conjunction with the Hunters' Improvement Society. The Commissioners found the general quality of the horses good, and an improvement on what they have seen at similar exhibitions, but they noticed that several otherwise desirable horses were unable to show their action from having contracted feet, chiefly the result of neglect. Professor Sir George Brown, on behalf of the veterinary inspectors at the 1898 show, reports that a remarkable success has attended the efforts to prevent the use of animals for breeding purposes affected with such hereditary disease as cataract, navicular disease, ring-bones and spavin. With regard to the desirability of limiting the age of stallions, and preventing those which are unfruitful from competing for Queen's premiums, the following regulations have been formulated: That no stallion over 20 years of age or any stallion whose average percentage of foals does not amount to at least 40 per cent. should be eligible to compete for a Queen's premium. The question of improving the quality of the mares has also received the careful consideration of the Commission."

I protest against one thing in Mr. Brinkerhoff's article recently on the support of women. He seems to assume that woman is incapable of self-support during pregnancy. Now I don't think factory work for ten or more hours per day during the whole period likely to produce the best results for either mother or child, but I worked up to four and a half months without any inconvenience and only left off because of the conventionalities. Otherwise, I am quite sure I was fit for sufficient self-support for six or more of the nine months, and I don't claim to be exceptional either. Surely in any approach to an ideal state we shall not expect the pregnant woman to be treated as the invalid she too often is now. A proper amount of care of herself is quite consistent with an avocation that shall not be too arduous. In fact it may be doubted if she will not be the better for it.

Why Women Are Over-sexed.

Charlotte Perkins Stetson, in "Women and Economics."

To the young man confronting life the world lies wide. Such powers as he has he may use, must use. If he chooses wrong at first, he may choose again, and yet again. Not effective or successful in one channel, he may do better in another. The growing, varied needs of all mankind call on him for the varied service in which he finds his growth. What he wants to be, he may strive to be. What he wants to get, he may strive to get. Wealth, power, social distinction, fame,—what he wants he can try for.

To the young woman confronting life there is the same world beyond, there are the same human energies and human desires and ambition within. But all that she may wish to have, all that she may wish to do, must come through a single channel and a single choice. Wealth, power, social distinction, fame,—not only these, but home and happiness, reputation, ease and pleasure, her bread and butter,—all, must come to her through a small gold ring. This is a heavy pressure. It has accumulated behind her through heredity, and continued about her through environment. It has been subtly trained into her through education, till she herself has come to think it a right condition, and pours its influence upon her daughter with increasing impetus. Is it any wonder that women are oversexed? But for the constant inheritance from the more human male, we should have been queen bees, indeed, long before this. But the daughter of the soldier and the sailor, of the artist, the inventor, the great merchant, has inherited in body and brain her share of his development in each generation, and so stayed somewhat human for all her femininity.

"The minor gods survive the changes in the pantheon of every race. Of the Greek peasant of today, Mr. Rennel Rodd testifies, in his 'Custom and Lore of Modern Greece,' that much as he would shudder at the accusation of any taint of paganism, the ruling of the Fates is more immediately real to him than divine omnipotence. Mr. Tozer confirms this in his 'Highlands of Turkey.' He says: 'It is rather the minor deities and those associated with man's ordinary life that have escaped the brunt of the storm, and returned to live in a dim twilight of popular belief.' In India, Sir Alfred Lyall tells us that, 'even the supreme triad of Hindu allegory, which represents the almighty powers of creation, perservation and destruction, have long ceased to preside actively over any such corresponding distribution of functions.' Like limited monarchs, they reign, but do not govern. They are superseded by the ever-increasing crowd of godlings whose influence is personal and special, as shown by Mr. Crooke in his instructive 'Introduction to the Popular Religion and Folk-Lore of Northern India.'"—Edward Clodd, "The Pioneers of Evolution," 29.

Realism in Art and Literature.

This essay, by Clarence S. Darrow, is now placed before the public in the form of an attractive little booklet, by C. H. Kerr. We have several times quoted paragraphs from it, and the following sentences are taken almost at random from its pages:

"Only the vulgar superstition of the past ever suggested that the reproduction of the human form in stone was an unholy work. Through long dark centuries religion taught that the flesh was vile and bad, and that the soul of man was imprisoned in a charnel house, unfit for human sight. The early Christians wounded, bruised, and maimed their house of clay; they covered it with skins, which under no circumstances could be removed, and many ancient saints lived and died without ever having looked upon the bodies nature gave. The images of saints and martyrs, which in the name of religion were scattered through Europe, were covered with paint and clothes, and were nearly as hideous as the monks that placed them there.

"The church had taught that the death of the flesh was the birth of the soul, and it therefore believed that the artist's resurrection of the flesh was the death of the soul. This old religious prejudice, born of a misty, superstitious past, has slowly faded from the minds of men, but we find its traces even yet. The origin of the feeling against realistic art has well nigh been forgot, but much of the feeling yet remains. No one would now pretend to say that all the body was unholy or unfit for sight, and yet years of custom and inherited belief have made us think that a part is good and the rest is bad; that nature, in her work of building up the human form, has made one part sacred and another vile. It is so easy to mistake custom for nature and inherited prejudice for morality. There is scarcely a portion of the human body but that some people have thought it holy, and scarcely a single portion but that some have believed it vile.

The price of this little work is only five cents a copy. When ordered in quantities for distribution we can supply them at the rate of ten copies for 25 cents.

The Meaning of Freedom.

Juliet H. Severance, in "A Discussion of the Social Question."

I am not only a believer in social freedom, but I am a believer in free love; and that word free-love, signifies to me the most exalted condition ever reached by mortal or angel. Freedom, the very soil of growth and progress, and Love, the highest attribute of the Gods. The two grand principles combined forming a name that in the coming future will be honored more than any other name, and its martyrs will receive a brighter crown of glory. . . .

As a wrong sexuality is the most debasing of all conditions, sapping the very foundations of life physically and morally, so a rightly adjusted and harmonized sexuality is the most health-giving and spiritualizing of all the relations people are capable of entering. . . .

Who are the opposers of free love? There is a class of persons who from misrepresentations of others, and never having heard it explained, honestly think that it means licentiousness; but a far greater number are those who are living lives that they are anxious to cover from the public gaze, so they cry out "stop thief" to turn attention from themselves. . . .

The laws give man what is called "marital rights" and under these rights a brute can outrage his wife no matter how often and she has no legal redress, no appeal but death. Let her go to any lawyer and ask for a divorce on any such ground and he would laugh at her. Does woman own her own body? Let her assert that and act accordingly, if contrary to her husband's "marital rights" and she will soon find out to whom her body belongs. Children are born continually, the result of relations not founded upon mutual love and desire, but the result of rapacious lust and tyranny on the one hand and disgust and servile submission on the other or else hatred and resentment; and this is legal. But in your classic language it is "damnable." . . .

You seem to think it a terrible thing to assert that a woman should choose the father of her child. Will you please inform us who is more competent or has a better right? . . .

Morality must come as a result of organization and development, and not by legal enactment. . . .

The hope of the world lies in a thorough understanding of the laws of heredity, the laws of sexuality, upon which this is based, and the proper culture of the individual. . . .

There is nothing that will exalt manhood and womanhood equal to human love. It makes woman angelic and man God-like. It develops justice, goodness, and wrongs no one. It is free in its action. It loves when it wills, and where it must. It will have its own, that which belongs by natural law to it, no more nor any less, and with this it is conscientiously content in the heaven of its own harmonies.

Shooting the "Niggers."

When soldiers' letters, detailing the horrors of the war on the Philippine "rebels" have been published a storm of protest has ensued. The letters have been characterized as "lying reports," written and printed by unpatriotic enemies of the flag of this glorious country. But what shall be said of the words of Colonel Kessler, of the recently returned First Montana Volunteers? Listen to his story of the pursuit of the "niggers":

"Colonel Kessler was as joyful as a schoolboy out for a holiday over the auspicious return of his men.

"I am a veteran of the army of the Potomac," said he, "but the seasoned veterans of that command were no better soldiers than those of the First Montana volunteers. From private to commanding officer we worked in perfect harmony from the beginning to the end. The boys fought as though they loved the business. It was a sight to watch them wait for the 'niggers' as the Filipinos are termed, run for the trenches. 'There goes a nigger,' some soldier would cry, and the lead would go pouring after him. Some one else would cry 'There goes another,' and the lead would fly again. The boys were in a number of the hottest kind of engagements, under a withering fire. I never saw the slightest exhibition of 'cold feet' on the part of the officers or men of Montana. There isn't a 'knocker' in the entire command."

How Criminals are Made.

Rosa Graul, in "Hilda's Home."

Go where you will, into lordly mansions of the rich, into the hovels of the lowly poor, and see the subjection of woman unto man. He rides roughshod over her most sacred and tender ideals. Every hope in the once bounding heart has been crushed. Her fate is to please her "lord and master,"—to keep his home for him; to entertain his guests; to bear his children; to rear them for him to dispose of as he may see fit—thus forcing her to bring into the world a race of slaves, a race degenerated by having implanted in the heart of the unborn child all the evil passions that naturally rankle in the breast of woman so enslaved and outraged.

The soul is unthought of in this reproduction, which merely takes place to satisfy the animal in man. The desire, the inclinations of the mother, are not considered. To cater to the passions of man, to be the mother of undesired children is her natural sphere in life. She must thank God that she has been selected thus to be the instrument to perpetuate the race. Home, sweet home, has been sung until it echoes and re-echoes throughout the land, but to millions of women it has been simply a prison, a hellish prison.

The church, "the man of God," its instrument, stands upon one side. On the other stands the state. In case the church is not strong enough to control woman, the state holds up to her aching eyes the terrors of the "law of the land."

A revealed dogma is always opposed to the free research that may contradict it.—Ernest Renan, "Islamism and Science."

LIBERTY Political, Religious, Social and Sexual. An essay towards the formation of an anti-persecution society. By A. F. Tindall. Price 5 cents.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper to it has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

"Arrested in Development."

"I look forward to the time when men and women, by reason of their knowledge of consequences, by reason of the morality born of intelligence, will refuse to perpetuate disease and pain—will refuse to fill the world with failures."—R. G. Ingersoll.

In the Chicago "Tribune" of Sept. 29, there is outlined a plan by which a few, a very few, of humanity's failures are to be cared for. This plan is called "An Experiment in Child Study." This experiment is to take the form of a "School for the Training and Surveillance of Youth Arrested in Development," and is thus described:

"The Chicago Physiological School was incorporated yesterday under the laws of the State of Illinois by President Harper, Miss Mary R. Campbell and George H. Mead, and will open with the fall quarter of the University of Chicago next week. The school is one for the study and training of children arrested in development.

"Professor George H. Mead, the third incorporator, is in the department of psychology. The school is to be an experimental one in child training. There will be the three departments, physiological, psychological and pedagogical. Those who are to be in charge of the school will keep the pupils under constant surveillance. A close study is to be made of the peculiarities of each one and records of every observation that may be made will be kept. It is thought by this method to get at some logical conclusions of cause and effect and to determine what environment will do for the children who fail to develop normally. Owing to the closeness of study that is to be made the school will accommodate only fifteen pupils to begin with. More than fifty applications have been received. The children will be boarded in the school. The building to be used is located in Drexel avenue, between Fifty-second and Fifty-third streets."

President Harper, of the University of Chicago, the first named of the three incorporators, tells the reporter that this experimental school is not yet "affiliated with the University," but that it may become so in time, and will then, it is to be presumed, be supported and managed in much the same way as the University itself is supported and its policies managed; that is, by its plutocratic benefactors.

But would it not be a more sensible plan to endow a school, or a professorship in the University, for the study of Stirpiculture, including Heredity and Prenatal Impression—the object of which would be to inquire into the causes of the "arrested development" of so many children? Why so much attention—why so much time and money spent in the effort to cure the effects, while the causes are ignored?

In Kansas there is, or was, a school similar in design to that described by the "Tribune," and connected with the University of Kansas, if I mistake not. Some years ago a subscriber of Lucifer and one of the best known and most highly esteemed of the citizens of the Sunflower state, told me of the terrible affliction that had saddened his life and that of his wife. He was then on his way to visit two of their daughters who had been for years cared for in the "Kansas School for Imbecile Children." The parents were far above average in intelligence—the husband and father had held many offices of public trust,—and yet of the seven children born to them, all were physically and mentally imbecile; not able to care for themselves in any way. "Arrested development," would probably be the diagnosis of President Harper and of his associate incorporators.

Man uses his reason in breeding calves, colts and pigs, but in breeding human beings he leaves it all to chance, to "Providence," or to the unreasoning forces of nature, handicapped as these forces are by artificial or conventional laws and customs.

M. HARMAN.

Kansas Notes—Concluded.

An eastern correspondent—see "Various Voices" in this issue—doubts the accuracy of the report of the Quantrell raid, published in No. 780. I copied this report from what I believed a trustworthy record. I was at the time stopping at the house of Mr. A. Palm, an old and much respected citizen of Lawrence, who, as already stated, was on the ground at the time of the massacre, not three days afterwards, only, as was our good friend J. H. Young. If Mr. Palm had not believed the statement of Mr. Caldwell to be substantially correct he certainly should have made the necessary correction. Lucifer's space is too small to permit extended discussion in regard to matters of history, and yet when important historical errors are made in our columns we much prefer to be set right.

At Topeka, the capital of Kansas, at which place our little journal was published about six years, I had the pleasure of meeting and greeting many oldtime friends and acquaintances, all of whom seemed glad to see Lucifer's editor once more. Prominent among these I wish to mention the names of Elizabeth and Alonzo Wardall; Albert Griffin and Miss Griffin; Mrs. M. B. Sharrai and daughter Myrtle, also the husband of the latter, Mr. Gerberich; J. Robinson; W. Curry and family, and Solomon Harman; to all of whom I am indebted for hospitality during my week's stay in the city.

I wish also to acknowledge my indebtedness for courtesies shown me by Miss Adams, daughter of Judge Adams who for twenty years or more has been librarian of the Kansas State Historical Society, and also by her gentlemanly assistant, whose name I did not learn. I spent a part of each day for several days, examining the records of that society, looking up matters that I hope to make use of, sometime, in connection with Lucifer's work.

I was also much pleased to meet again Mrs. Annie L. Diggs, librarian of the Kansas State Library. Some of the older of our readers will remember that Mrs. Diggs was once assistant editor of Lucifer when, as "The Kansas Liberal" it was published at Lawrence, Kansas. As a lecturer and writer on reform topics Mrs. Diggs has achieved a national reputation of which any woman—or man either—might justly feel proud.

Although the number of our subscribers in Topeka and in Kansas is not as large as it once was I am glad to be able to report that quite a large proportion of those who helped us to fight the battle for freedom of speech in that state remain with us still, and that they continue—with few exceptions, to help us with the necessary "sinews of war," as well as with their moral aid and comfort.

Before closing this report I wish once more to thank all who in any way helped to make my recent visit to Kansas enjoyable as well as financially successful. Though my trip was made principally in the interest of health—of mental and physical recuperation, I am glad to be able to report that it was not a failure from a business point of view. Many of our old friends renewed their subscription, some new names were added to the list, while quite a number more ordered books for their own reading and for missionary purposes.

I wish also to thank all whose kindly invitations I was obliged to decline—for lack of time and also on account of distance and cost of transportation. Hoping to be able to meet again all I had the pleasure of meeting on this trip and all I did not meet, and cordially inviting all to call on us at our Chicago office, I once more bid our Kansas friends a kind good bye.

M. HARMAN.

"Wants."

"Man wants but little here below," may have been true in Oliver Goldsmith's time, but it is scarcely true today. Speaking from our own personal standpoint, man—man embraces woman, you know—man wants many things he cannot get. Some things, however, can be had for the asking. "Ask and ye shall receive," and "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again," are good mottoes, provided, of course, we do not "ask amiss," or for what we should not have.

Acting upon the suggestion contained in these mottoes we, of the Lucifer office, now ask every reader who feels that we are doing a much needed work, to show this issue of Lucifer to some friend who is not a reader thereof. Call her or his attention to the statement, "Our Name and Purpose." Ask her or him to read all the articles of this number, and of recent numbers,—if you care to lend or give them away—then ask if such friend or neighbor is not in sympathy with the aims or purposes therein outlined, and if so, ask the person in question to allow you to send her or his name to us for a trial subscription to our "Morning Star."

If extra copies are needed for the purpose we will gladly send them, on application, or, if our subscribers wish to keep a file of the paper we will gladly replace such numbers as may be lost in the effort to extend our subscription list.

"Servitude" in Chicago.

The Chicago "Chronicle" is again wrestling with the "servant-girl problem." It says there is a dearth of "servants" in Chicago, and of those who are willing to work in "domestic servitude" but few are efficient. Even when a "mistress" finds a treasure she is not sure of keeping her, for as we are gravely informed by the "Chronicle" writer, "In such cases women seem to reck little of the finer sense of honor."

This declaration is called forth by the complaint of one mistress that her servant had left her because a "friend" had offered the girl fifty cents a week more than she was receiving. This is really dreadful! But how would the "finer sense of honor" affect this writer, I wonder, if the "Tribune" should offer him—or her—five dollars a week more than the "Chronicle" pays? And what of the "sense of honor" of the preacher who accepts the "call" of the wealthier congregation or of the man in any other line who changes his place of occupation in the hope of improving his condition?

One man is driven nearly to desperation by the depravity of these girls. His wife is unable to do the work; therefore they must have a servant. He says they have "had a dozen in about as many weeks." Various causes for dissatisfaction are given, among which are that one "doesn't like her room," and another "will not stay where she cannot receive company." I wonder how this man would like to stay where he could not receive company; where he had no time of his own except one afternoon in two weeks; and then would be obliged to be in before ten o'clock at night? Imagine a man working under such conditions!

Every one knows that the "servant's room" is the most uncomfortable and inconvenient in the house; she cannot receive company, and she can go out only once in two weeks, as a rule. The mistress appoints herself a committee of one to regulate the girl's morals; but if her vigilance is unavailing, the girl is thrown out just the same as if the mistress had not assumed that responsibility. In other fields of employment the hours and work, no matter how long and hard, are clearly defined, and the time away from the work is the girl's own. Therefore domestic service is shunned by all who have intelligence and ability to do anything else, and the "service" is left to the ignorant and inefficient.

Household work has been degraded as slave labor. The time must come when it will be given into the hands of well-paid, efficient workers, who have certain hours in which to perform the labor—all the time outside those hours being their own, to dispose of as they will. Until that time comes we will bear the wails, ever-increasing in volume, of would-be masters and mistresses who are unable to obtain women to "serve" them.

L. H.

Chicago Society of Anthropology.

One of Chicago's chief attractions for the independent thinker is its "Society of Anthropology." This society is said to be the sequence or outgrowth of the "Congress of Religions," held in this city during the World's Fair of 1893. That Congress was supposed to offer a free platform to the representatives of all religions, and of no religion. In other words those who have no religion but that of Science—demonstrated facts—or those whose only religion is love for humanity—with no reference to the hypothesis called theological, or to the existence of alleged extra-mundane intelligences—all these were supposed to have equal right to a free expression of thought; equality of rights and privileges for the broadest and most inclusive heterodoxy with the narrowest and most exclusive orthodoxy, being the motto of the World's Congress of Religions.

Whether this statement is historically exact or not, as to the object and management of that celebrated congress, I am not quite certain, but that these are the avowed objects of its successor, the Chicago Society of Anthropology, I happen to know; having been a member—though not always a "paid-up" member—of that society for the past three years or more.

The membership of this society is not large, but includes names of some of Chicago's best known and most favorably known scientists—women and men who, laying aside the prejudices of early training are now honestly and earnestly trying to solve the problems of the universe, as they see them, or as they find them, including the very perplexing political and social problems that confront us on every hand.

The Society meets every Sunday afternoon at three o'clock, at Handel Hall, 40 Randolph street. Readers of Lucifer who reside in the city, as well as visitors from a distance are cordially invited to attend these meetings and take part in the discussions. Membership dues are fifty cents per month, but none are excluded from participation in discussions because of non-membership.

The list of subjects for the fall and winter months as announced at last meeting, would seem to cover the whole field of human interest; prominence being given to such disturbing questions as "Marriage and Divorce," "Stirpiculture, or Homoculture," "Philosophic Anarchism," "The Negro in North America," etc., etc.

M. H.

Our Name and Purpose.

In answer to many questions we say:

The name Lucifer is astronomical, not theological.

Lucifer means Light bringer, or Light bearer, and is the ancient name of the morning star—"Herald of the Dawn."

In accord with this symbolism—drawn from one of the most impressive of Nature's phenomena—we try to make our weekly journal a true Light Bringer, a realistic herald or harbinger of a brighter and better day for mankind.

With Shakespeare we believe that "Ignorance is the only darkness." To destroy both darkness and ignorance, then, we have only to bring in the light of Knowledge—of Science.

With Ingersoll we believe that the reason why reformers have hitherto failed to reform the world is because "Ignorance, poverty and vice are populating the world." We believe that the greatest orator of modern times sent an arrow straight to the core of truth when he said, "There is but one hope. Ignorance, poverty and vice must stop populating the world. This cannot be done by talk or example. This cannot be done by religion or law; by priest or hangman. This cannot be done by force, physical or moral. To accomplish this there is but one way. Science must make woman the owner, the mistress of herself. Science, the only savior of mankind, must put it into the power of woman to decide for herself whether she will or will not become a mother. This is the solution of the whole question. This frees woman. The babes that are born will be welcome. They will be clasped by glad hands to happy breasts. They will fill homes with light and joy. . . . When that time comes the prison walls will fall, the dungeons will be flooded with light, and the shadow of the scaffold will cease to curse the earth."

With Gerald Massey we believe that, "We must begin in the creatory if we would benefit the race, and woman must rescue herself and consciously assume all responsibility of maternity [including choice of paternity] on behalf of the children."

We believe in the motto, "Truth for authority and not authority for truth," and that to "get all of truth we must hear all sides." Hence we try to make the pages of Lucifer a free platform—free for the utterance of honest thought upon all subjects of human interest, but especially for the free expression of thought upon the transcendentally important subject of how to practicalize freedom for the mothers of the race of human kind.

The Filipino Question.

Under the head "Canters and Hypocrites," Samuel William Cooper in "The Conservator" for August, has a three column article that should be read and carefully considered by every American citizen. This article is, in the main, a reply to those who call the opponents of Filipino war "canters and hypocrites," and who say that "Aguinaldo is a mere treacherous outlaw." Here are a few of the points made by Mr. Cooper:

"It would be the absolute truth to say that the United States is a treacherous nation as evidenced by its government. Spencer Pratt, the American Consul General at Singapore; R. Wildman, United States Consul General at Hong Kong, and treasurer of the Fund of the Patriotic League of Filipinos; Admiral Dewey; the government documents—all can speak loud on this point. We made a contract with the Filipinos that they were to be free. We gave them arms and ammunition, and they carried out their part of the bargain to the letter. We broke our promises. Read this, O doubting ones, and blush for very shame. It is one of the most discreditable pages in the history of the world. And so our soldiers seem to regard it. General King, General Funston and other leaders have spoken, and now comes back the Tenth Regiment of Pennsylvania, saying, through the mouths of its members (Philadelphia North American, August 7th) 'the sympathies of the entire regiment are with the Filipinos. They are entitled to make the same fight for liberty that our forefathers were, and they are under the laws of humanity worthy the same rights.' . . . .

"The Filipinos may be a bad people, but they do not burn those of a different color at the stake, or chop them to pieces, every day, as we do, without trial, on public clamor. Nor do they have strikes where troops shoot down unarmed workmen. They do not seem to have family feuds, where reason is powerless and murder runs riot as it does in many places in our own country. They do not shell inoffensive cities. Nor, in fact, do they seem to have any of those peculiar habits which may be the privileges of civilization. No, they are savages, and their leader is a 'treacherous outlaw.' We alone are good and true and beautiful. . . . .

"Our government is engaged in a war of pillage and extermination against a people who owe us no allegiance, to whom we promised freedom. It is an evil work; it is absolutely without justification. Those who approve of it are the traitors to whom the country will owe a burden of evil that may be too great for her to carry."

In the same issue of the "Conservator," the editor, Mr. Traubel, thus closes his monthly "Collect."

The problem of the Philippines is not a quarrel between Aguinaldo and McKinley but a crisis in national history which brings out antagonistically face to face one America with another. America has been going one way. Now it is proposed that she should reverse and revise. Nor has this been brought about by any deliberate act of the country. So far the nation has not passed upon the question. It is evident that if the executive regime is to secure a popular endorsemect America will have to be reborn in the strange likeness of aggression. Will it be an America of greater liberty or less? Will it be a sea to sustain or a rock to wreck? Expansion may run up an honest flag. Imperialism's flag is black. It has all the panoplia of piracy. We may win the Philippines. So far we have been licked. But, winning the Philippines, must we lose America?

The Crime of Government.

When defending the right of the American colonists to self government Edmund Burke, in the British parliament, is reported to have said, "Speak not of the abuses of artificial government; the thing, the thing itself is the abuse." All governments of man—or by man—over his fellow man are artificial governments. In his "Data of Ethics," Herbert Spencer lays down as an axiomatic truth, or basic principle in human sociology the following:

"Every person has the right to do as he pleases so long as he does not invade the equal right of others."

The practicalization of this axiomatic truth in the affairs of humam beings, would necessarily abolish all existing governments, whether they be called monarchies, aristocracies or republics, and would also abolish the everywhere existing rulership of man over woman.

John R. Kelso, in "Government Analyzed" pertinently asks this question:

"Practically, then, the question at issue before us is as follows: Which is better, an archy or government with its thousands of unnatural laws, and its need of thousands more, all tending to promote inequality, want of confidence and antagonism among the people—all tending to promote, in the former class, a criminal greed and extravagance, and in the latter, those prolific breeders of crime, servility, want and desperation."

By "archy" is meant rulership of man by his fellow man, and is the antithesis or opposite of anarchy which means the absence of rulership of man by his fellow man.

Speaking of the condition of things, in the country now called the United States, immediately after the "war of the revolution," Mr. Kelso says:

"After they had thrown off the government of Great Britain, the great body of the people of the United States never, so far as I can learn, either demanded or desired any other government in its stead. They preferred freedom, and this they could not enjoy under any form of government. Hence, for a long time, they resisted every attempt of their would-be masters to reduce them to a condition of governmental slavery. By fraud alone, were they finally reduced to that condition."

While it may not be strictly true that the people who had thrown off the British government were in a state of anarchy, or freedom, it is doubtless true that as compared to present conditions in this country the people were their own rulers. There was no national government, national tariffs, national debt, no kingly President with power to carry on a war of invasion against a freedom-loving people on the opposite side of the globe; no U. S. Senate (American "House of Lords) and no life tenure Supreme Court, with power to nullify—in the interest of plutocracy—the demand of the common people for freedom and equality of rights and privileges.

In his book of five hundred and nineteen pages Mr. Kelso has shown in a clear and logical manner, seldom equalled, how freedom was lost to the people of this country, by the treachery and fraud almost unparalled, of the so called "Constitutional convention" of 1787. He also shows, as few writers have ever shown, what the crime of government really is; how it gradually grew up from the ignorance and superstitions of the barbaric past, to be what we find it today.

The latter half the book outlines a plan, or plans, by which the evils of our government may be minimized or nullified. Whether these proposed methods are practicable, or whether they are consistent with the logical deductions of the first half of the book are questions upon which all readers will not be agreed. It is largely a question of expediency, a question of what should be done, or can be done, to cure the evils under which the burden bearers of this country, and of the world, now suffer.

M. H.

How Government Protects.

"Free Society," San Francisco.

According to our German contemporary of Chicago, a policeman happened to meet several Italians on the street who were discussing harmless affairs in their own language. This guardian of "law and order" imagined that these men were plotting a conspiracy and interfered. Not understanding the English language the Italians were scared and started to run, and one of them was killed. The policeman has been charged with manslaughter to soothe the indignation, but "money rules," you know. The chief of police has given his force to understand that every member ought to contribute one dollar for the defense of the murderer, and as that means $2,500 to begin with and having "influence" behind him, "justice" will evidently be smothered.

VARIOUS VOICES.

James H. Young, Onset, Mass.:—Find enclosed one dollar for which send me the inclosed list of books. I was at Lawrence, Kan., three days after the Quantrell raid but saw no such destruction of life or property as related by E. F. Caldwell. Quantrell had 100 men.

—

O. N. Bancroft, Falls Church, Va.:—I enjoy the weekly visits of the good paper Lucifer. It is truly a light bearer. May its rays penetrate every foggy brain, resulting in the betterment of humanity. All healthy minds are readily penetrated by its sterling truths. With best wishes for all the workers for real liberty.

—

T. W. S., Dunellen, N. J.:—M. Florence Johnson kindly directed me to inquire of you what books I should purchase in order to gain some knowledge relative to free love. While I have, probably, a clear general idea, I have never read or heard the ideas of others. I notice a special offer you make in your last edition which partly satisfies my inquiry but if my choice is astray please advise me and I may purchase what you might suggest later on. "Ideala," "New Humanity," "What Young Need to Know," "Economics of Anarchy" and "Sanctity of Marriage" and any others to amount of the $2.00 I send.

—

Frederick Brown, Lincoln, Neb.:—While in Chicago two weeks ago, I tried to find you on Congress St., but was told that you had moved. I have been in Europe (Germany) engaged in study, for over a year, and have lost track of you. I hope you will resume sending Lucifer to my address. I missed it very much. Would you also kindly send me the addresses of anarchistic journals published in English, Spanish and French? I am studying at State University of Nebraska this year and expenses are high, but will assist you financially just as far as I possibly can, and to a greater degree next year when I begin to teach again. With best wishes for your health and success.

[The easiest way for friends from out of town to find us, is to take a Lake St. elevated train (which is near all railway stations,) and come on it to Sheldon St. station. Walk north two blocks to Carroll Ave. and west a block and a half to 507. We are always sorry when our friends fail to find us. "Liberty," Box 1312, N. Y. City, is the organ of the Individualist Anarchists, and "Free Society," 43 Sheridan St., San Francisco, the organ of the Communist Anarchists.]

—

Edgar D. Brinkerhoff, Morrisville, Pa.—A company of ten persons are engaged in intellectual conversation. They are talking animatedly and informally and yet only one speaks at a time. Each turns his eyes toward the one to whom he is making response. This is politeness. There is one ill-mannered fellow, however, who looks into vacant space when taking up the thread of the discourse as dropped by another, or, worse still, when he responds to A's remarks, he addresses B, a most exasperating form of incivility.

We see something like this sometimes in weekly papers. For example, see Lucifer of Aug. 5, page 234, second column, lines seventeen and eighteen, in fact the whole paragraph. Also, Lucifer of Sept. 2, page 265, second column, lines twenty to fifty, both in articles of C. L. James. This is no reflection upon Mr. James, who no doubt would have turned his head politely toward the one to whose observations he was offering rejoinder if it had not been for certain journalistic rules. This is no reflection upon Lucifer either, for editors get so tired of the frequent exhibitions of resentment by people not cut out for discussion that they feel like making cast-iron rules for all.

—

Fannie Wooten Hanson, Aurora, Ill.:—Enclosed you will find fifty cents to apply on H. C. Hanson's subscription which expired with No. 773. I like Lucifer very much, and would not be without it for anything. I have a little girl five months old and have named her Virna for your little girl. I hope they may both grow up to be as useful to the world as you are. I notice your correspondent, Mrs. M. E. W., of Montgomery, thinks the negroes in the South are treated kindly by the white people. I have lived in the South all my life until the past four years and according to my way of thinking they are not treated kindly. They are kept in poverty and ignorance by the white people, and so long as this condition exists there will be criminals among them. I have often wondered that there were not more crimes committed when I saw how they were treated. In the country districts very few own any land, nearly all being renters. In some instances, the renter, after a hard year's work, and a scanty living is, according to the landlord's books, in debt. I knew a case in Kentucky of a negro family consisting of man and wife, the man working hard all the year living on poor food, wearing cheap clothes, and at the end of the year when the landlord sold the crop and took out what was due him according to his books, the negro got $2.50. This is only a sample case. Is that good treatment?

AZTEC CALENDAR.

Send 25 cents to C. A. Higgins, A. G. P. A., A. T. & S. F. R'y, Great Northern Bldg., Chicago, for copy of Aztec Calendar, July to December. Contains six separate reproductions in color (9 x 11 inches) of Burbank's Pueblo Indian portraits—the season's art sensation. Also engraved cover representing ancient Aztec calendar stone. A handsome and unique souvenir; edition limited: order early.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW. A primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. A valuable compendium on Sex Ethics. Startling and Scientific Price, 10 cents.

LOVE AND THE LAW. By E. C. Walker. A clear, concise statement of social liberty in contradistinction to the much lauded legal bondage now almost universally upheld. An excellent missionary document. Two copies, 5 cents; 20 cop ies per dozen.

Government Analyzed. By John E. Kelso. The chapter headings are: "Derivations and Definitions of Political Terms; Various Forms of Government; General Principles of Government; Functions of Government; Origin of Government; Declaration of Independence; Articles of Confederation; Defects of the Confederation; Formation of the Constitution of the United States; Constitution of the United States; Taxation; Tariff or Protection; War; Punishments; Marriage; Religion; Prohibition; Money; What a Government Should Be." 520 pages. Price reduced to $1.00.

With Lucifer one year to a new subscriber, $1.50.

Free Love: A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of connubial love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 1871, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence. 140 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Free Society is an advocate of Anarchist Communism, and in its advocacy of liberty in all things does not overlook sexual liberty. It is an eight-page weekly published at 50 cents a year. A specimen copy will be cheerfully furnished upon request. We also publish a monthly Anarchist library. If you want two good treatises on our theories send 10 cents for Kropotkin's "Law and Authority" and Malatesta's "Talk About Anarchist Communism." Nos. 1 and 2 of our new monthly. Free Society, 10 Oak Grove Ave., San Francisco, Cal.

782.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

WOMEN and ECONOMICS,

A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women. By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Here are a few of the page headings of this remarkable work: "Economic environment; The dependence of women; No inherent disability of sex; Marriage not a partnership; House service as a livehood; Motherhood and economic production; Modification to maternity; The usefulness of sex; Differentiation of sex; Sex and humanity; The peacock's tail; Sex distinctions; The eternal feminine; unreasoning devotion; Women as persons; Race-attributes and sex-attribute; The normal child; Personal profit and sex-relations; The influence of heredity; The young man and the young woman; The effect of custom; The sex relation personal; Innocence and ignorance; Marriage with independence; The increasing difficulty of marriage; Supporting one's family; Virtue and vice; The results of repression; The harm that women do; The development of love; The hope for the future; The martyr and the pioneer; The dropping of the bars; The meaning of the new woman; Motherhood in education; A criminal failure; Marriage and the family; Love's young dream; The heart and the stomach; Socializing the household industries; The stomach as a family tie; The servant wife; World-servants and house-servants; A wider maternity; Between the old and the new; "The vices of the slave;" The outgrown stronghold. Printed on strong, heavy paper; 350 pages, bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale by M. Harman, 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY. Co-educational. Send for catalog. A. E. Gammage, President. 167 Dearborn St., Chicago.

RIGHTS OF WOMEN IN THE SEXUAL RELATIONS,

By Karl Heinzen. A newedition together with the startling letters of Louise Mayer" on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German women at Frankenstadt. A book of 256 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Price paper bound, 50 cents; cloth, $1

THE BALLAD OF READING JAIL. BY C. 3.3.

This powerful poem of more than 600 lines, is the work of OSCAR WILDE C. 3. 3. having been the poets prison number during his confinement in Reading Jail. It is dedicated to the memory of a trooper of the Horse Guards who was hanged in the jail at that time, and it depicts the terrible sensations of the author and his fellow prisoners before and after the execution.

Just issued; price, in cloth, blue, vellum back, beautifully printed from large type on hand-made antique paper, deckle edges; reading matter on one side of the paper; a sumptuous book of 96 pages, 7 inches by 5, $1. In paper, 44 pages, 10 cents. Mailed postpaid on receipt of price, by M. Harman, 507 Carroll Avenue, Chicago.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be FREE; love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrially."—Page 265. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A Cityless and Country-Less World," by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 400 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races." Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III ,Co-operation; Chapter V., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, ten cts.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint: A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

Personal. Readers of Lucifer who would like a quiet, home-like room in a private family when visiting Chicago, should communicate with X. Y. Z., care of Lucifer, 507 Carroll Ave.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.

This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Women in Marriage Slavery

Will find in HILDA'S HOME a story exposing the horrors of their condition as faithfully and as fearlessly as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" exposed the horrors of Negro slavery in the South. The story is more entertaining than many modern works of fiction and the plain truths it tells will find responsive echoes in the sobbing, bursting hearts of many women who know the galling effects of marriage thralldom.

The book contains 425 pages. Price handsomely bound in cloth, $1. In paper cover 50 cents. Send in your order NOW—especially if you want extra copies for distribution among your friends.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Personal Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 25 cents. Address Moses Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. E. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 25 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage.
A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.
"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.
"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.
Sample pages free Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 122 pages. Price 25 cents.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Missing Link Modern Spiritualism. By A. Leah Underhill. A book for all spiritualists and investigators. "Hear all sides, then decide." 23 chapters; 478 pages; 16 illustrations, including portraits of the Fox family. History of the Hydesville rappings, as given by eye-witnesses, the threats of mob violence; remarkable and well-attested manifestations; the "exposures" disposed of, etc. Handsomely bound in cloth. Publishers price, $1.50. On receipt of $1.27, and 13 cents for postage, we will send the book to any address.

Wanted: Position as housekeeper by refined woman unincumbered, would like position as housekeeper for club. Liberals prefered. Could furnish the furniture. Address M. V. 507 Carroll ave, Chicago.

Furnished rooms to let in pleasant, sunny flat half block from Garfield B'l'd Near Halsted st cars and 55th st station. For terms, etc. apply to Mrs. M. L. Knowles 5631 Lowe Ave,

Wanted: A woman holding radical views to keep house for a family of three adults in a city in Massachusetts. A pleasant home for the right person. Write to M., 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

The Story of An African Farm. Olive Schreiner's master piece. A story of the struggle for light, the search for truth, the yearning for happiness of bright young English and German people, among the ignorant and coarse Boers and Kaffirs of south Africa. This is a work of art, and of truth. Well bound in cloth. 288 pages. Price, 40 cents, postage 10 cents. For sale at this office.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 40. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, OCT. 14, E. M. 299. [C. E. 1899.] WHOLE No. 783

For the Right.

There are brighter things in this world than gold—
There are nobler things in this world than fame;
To silently do with your deeds untold,
To silently die, unnoised to fame.
Then forth to fight, unnamed and alone;
Let us lead the world to its destined height;
Enough to know, if but this be known,
We live and we die for the right!

—Joaquin Miller.

"Women Talk About Men."

Under this title the "New York Times" of October 6th gives a somewhat extended report of a meeting of "The Society for the Study of Life," "an organization of women," presumably of New York City. "This society boasts among its members," says the "Times," "women physicians, preachers and teachers. Men are excluded from the ordinary meetings."

At the meeting reported by the "Times" about forty members were present to hear a paper on "Heredity and Regeneration," by Dr. M. A. Stewart, a part of which is here reproduced:

"That heredity," said Dr. Stewart, "is the vital law through which the life elements transmit characteristics and tendencies from generation to generation in the physical realm, is accepted by all students of biology. The moral and physical are co-related factors in the life of the human race that are equally transmissible through successive generations. There is in human nature and experience a great moral condemnation or curse upon the source of human life—a curse made manifest by the spirit of irreverence and the sense of shame which rest upon active generation. This condition is so deep-seated and unholy that theologians have rightly named it 'total depravity.'

"Woman," continued the lecturer, "is the central figure in the tragedy of the fall of man in the garden of Eden; and in the history of womankind down through the ages we see the pitiless fulfilling of her curse: 'I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children; and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee.' Every child born into the world is born under that curse which was due to the subordination of motherhood to the will of man. This blight upon woman which through her motherhood rests upon the whole race, is no arbitrary decree of an offended God, but the inevitable effect of perverting the order of the Creator in the source of human life. The subordination of motherhood in marriage is the forbidden fruit—the original sin; the sense of shame is the fall of man."

Summing up her address and the criticisms that followed, the "Times" proceeds to say:

"The speaker went on to talk about the subjection of woman in the Church, the State and the home, which she said is simply a form of paganism, and the spirit that holds her subject is the same Satanic influence that worked such evil at the world's beginning. 'We have had the Christian religion or nineteen centuries,' she said, 'but Christian marriage has yet to come. Salvation can mean no more nor less than freedom from prevailing conditions and tendencies, and regeneration means making us the parents of those whose tendencies shall be upward. It is impossible for the ignorant to sin so deliberately, so disastrously, as those who are educated.'

"Dr. Stewart expressed the opinion that mankind had reached the utmost limit of advance in vice, and that the ebb tide had set in that would sweep us down to chaos unless something were done to avert it; and, in this connection she referred to what she called the 'moral obliquity of the French people today as shown in their family life.'

"Mrs. Hensley, the President, observed that the paper was a radical one, but it was through the discussion of such radical views that they were going to accomplish the purpose for which the society was established.

"Mrs. Bender wanted to know how the regeneration of mankind was to be brought about and man made more spiritual.

"'I don't think it is possible to regenerate men!' exclaimed Dr. Stewart.

"Dr. Stewart went on to say that the question was whether woman would stand by man and bring children into the world under the curse, or leave him rather than do so.

"Mrs. Burnham ventured the view that 'most men have a better nature.'

"Mrs. Leroy thought the right way to regenerate mankind was to begin with the boys.

"Mrs. Riggs thought Dr. Stewart had taken a most depressing view of the situation, of marriage and of human nature. 'She speaks as though woman were a victim and man her oppressor,' continued the speaker warmly. 'Now, I haven't found this to be so in the majority of cases that have come under my observation. There should be but one basis upon which girls should choose their husbands. That is spiritual affinity; or, in other words, love. Girls ought to marry, not for a home or dress and hat, but the man they love, and would be willing to die for. No man ever inspired that feeling who was not worthy of it. I don't think we need laws of any kind nearly so much as love.'"

Criticisms and Comments.

BY C. P. HUNT.

President Hyde of Bowdoin College declared that "to tie up the teachings of an educational institution to an ancient creed is simply outrageous." Some of his hearers in the Congregational Council said, not that he had said anything wrong, but that he had "gone too far," which being interpreted means: Let us not knock our own game.

* * *

McKinley did not want even the core of the New York festivities, probably because he was afraid "there wasn't a goin' to be no core."

* * *

"When you have been very good, or when you have done a bit of work that makes mamma glad, do you think in your heart, 'I am very good,' or, 'I can work as well as big people?' That is not the right way to think, for God only is good, and we could not be good of ourselves, nor could we do a good work, for he says, 'Without me ye can do nothing.' It is the holy spirit of God flowing down to us from heaven that helps us to think and speak and act right. And we must not call it our own goodness, for that would do us harm."—Picture Lesson Paper.

The above was read to Willie and Walter on Sunday. On Monday little Willie, having been "licked" by Walter, ran to his mother crying: "Ma, you'd better pray. The flow has stopped on Wal."

* * *

Many good people still seem to think the Malthusian theory needs a "solution." The idea has no standing in logic or fact, as any one will realize on considering the following:

1. Show a logical connection between the alleged "checks" and overpopulation; for instance, how does possible future overpopulation cause war, unless men fight directly for food, or pestilence, unless future want causes present disease.

2. Name an available food plant or animal that does not increase many times faster than man increases. If there be none, how can there be want so long as there remains vacant land to yield food?

* * *

We understand Capt. Dreyfus will reside in London. Any mention of "dossier" or "bordereau" in the captain's presence will be as dangerous as "snipe hunting" uttered in the hearing of the two street car conductors who held a large sack till one A. M. at the mouth of a ravine on the north shore recently, waiting for other conductors to drive in the snipes.

* * *

A monument to sycophancy may be seen in the ornaments placed upon the elevated railroad structures of Chicago at the boulevard crossings, where plain iron and wooden ties would offend the sight of a noble in his carriage. Organized labor should rise in its might and—not tear off the ornaments, but insist upon ornaments over common streets where organized labor's brothers the grocery man and the ice man wend their weary ways; and even also at alleys where the rag and iron broker and the banana man—labor's second cousins at least—mete and vend their wares.

Freedom of Thought and Action.

George E. Macdonald, in The Truth Seeker.

For the reason that I have said, were I a member of a co operative colony, I would not allow such issues as free love and anarchy to break it up, as happened to Ruskin, an Oregon paper gets the idea that "the Macdonalds have but little objection to free love and anarchy."

Now, that is a fond thing vainly imagined. It is not deducible from what I said. In my previous remarks I should perhaps have explained more fully that my belief is stronger than my dissent; that is, that I would not depart from my chosen course in order to show my disapproval of the belief of some other person. As a member of a co-operative association, I could ask only that my fellow member should be a true co-operator, and not that he should be orthodox in religion, politics or morals. And, on the other hand, were the society a religious, political, or ethical one, and I a member of it, I could not object to another member, so long as he was faithful to the purposes of the organization, were he a fanatical co-operator. It does not in the least modify my mistrust of Christian truths to know that free lovers and anarchists often doubt them, and I should still believe in Freethought though I were convinced by an argument derived from observation, experiment and ratiocination that it leads directly to the conclusions reached by those thinkers. When a man is satisfied that he is on the right track, nothing but the discovery that he is mistaken should cause him to shy. I admire the devotion of Paul, who, having chosen his course, said he was persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, should be able to separate him from the same. My trust in Freethought is of the unfaltering kind that enabled the apostle to defy a whole bunch of things, confident that they could not make shipwreck of his faith. Therefore I do not get rattled if the consequences of free thinking are sometimes different from what I expected. If we knew beforehand the outcome of Freethought we should have no use for it. There is nothing to be learned by exploring a road if you know where it leads to. There may be some gentlemen in the West who can state with certainty the final word of Freethought on political economy and the sex question, but I ask to be pardoned for doubting it. Besides, the fellow that knows it all is a nuisance, like the garrulous and obtrusive individual who insists on telling you in advance of the author how a story you are reading turns out.

Sociologic Lessons.

BY HENRY M. PARKHURST.

No. 89. (To be added; Lucifer No. 777.) An essential element in financial independence is that the minimum of subsistence shall be irrevocable. The member devotes to objects of immediate usefulness means which he would otherwise reserve for future needs, in consideration of the pledge of the association; and it is not only an equitable but a legal consideration. Those to whom it is once promised cannot thereafter be honestly deprived of it even by the dissolution of the association.

No. 93. THE FINAL AWARD. At the end of the year each member will have been credited with a certain number of franks, determined in the mode described in No. 86. This amount of labor performed, irrespective of payments in franks on account, furnishes the basis of the annual award to labor. The association will take account of stock, and ascertain the profits for the year, to be distributed to labor and capital, according to the original agreement. It should be the aim to establish such a scale of prices for the products of the association that the final distribution independent of the fixed percentage paid to capital, and the fixed payments to labor in the redemption of franks, shall be as small as practicable, without risk of loss. Low prices would be in themselves an award to members as consumers, and would promote commercial exchanges.

No. 94. CURRENCY AND TAXATION. The frank will be a convenient standard currency, to be issued by the association. It will be redeemable in two ways, at the option of the holder; first, in gold, or other basis employed outside of the association, enabling members to purchase freely in the markets of the world; second, in products furnished by the association, at prices fixed by the association. The fixing of the prices includes the element of taxation for expenses; and the rate at which the frank is redeemed in gold, also includes indirect taxation. There is therefore no occasion for any other taxation.

It is important that the frank should state upon its face the rate at which it will be redeemed by the association in gold; for it would be a breach of contract to vary the rate after the franks are issued. It is unnecessary to explain the circumstances connected with the change of the rate in a new issue.

No. 95. THE ISSUE OF BONDS. Money will be needed for the purchase of materials and tools, for payments for labor, especially to non-members, and for other transient needs. Instead of providing for this by increasing the capital stock, I think it is better to borrow it upon bonds redeemable at a fixed time, and to be sold to the highest bidder. No representation should be allowed to the holders of bonds as such. These bonds would afford temporary investments for money saved; and could be readily converted into money without material loss. They would also assist in fixing the market value of the frank and keeping it uniform. They would assist in fixing an equitable rate for the use of capital, and thus enable individuals to borrow when it would be for their advantage. When money can be readily obtained for useful purposes, there will be no opportunity for speculation in the money market.

No. 96. UNINVASIVE INDIVIDUAL SOVEREIGNTY. The details which have been given in these Lessons have been almost exclusively with regard to financial consideration, for the reason that they have been written for those who are already in full sympathy with the doctrine of uninvasive individual sovereignty, and who only need to learn how to prevent invasion, and it is from the financial interdependence of men that invasion is most likely to arise. The principle of the minimum of subsistence, which can be withdrawn from those who infringe the rights of others will enable each association to protect its members. Those who are not in harmony with the rules laid down in one association may seek elsewhere for associations more congenial to them, and need not sacrifice their modes of life unless they are such as necessarily to make them objectionable everywhere; in which case they must choose between adapting themselves to society or excluding themselves from society. The financial principles I have laid down will give equal freedom to all, and open the way for progress in all departments of life.

"The Duty of Parents to Children."

Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in New York Journal.

"Honor thy father and mother" is a good commandment.

"Make thyself worthy the honor of thy children" should be its modern supplement.

A tie of blood—an accident of birth—does not make it possible for a thinking child to respect and honor a person who is in no other way deserving of either emotion.

It is all very well to talk about the duty of children to their parents. It is true in a measure, and is always a good rule for children to observe. The youth who feels he owes a duty to his parents will be far more likely to be true to his best self than one who ignores the thought.

But much greater than the duty of child to parent is the duty of parent to child. No child ever called his father to become his parent. Every parent is responsible for his child's existence.

Having brought a child into the world a father and mother should feel the tremendous duty they owe that offspring.

They owe it good care, but not too much physical coddling.

They owe it fair opportunities, but they need to leave it room to grow in its own way without too much help.

They owe it a happy home first and foremost of all considerations. No blight is more lasting and cruel than the memory of an unhappy, discordant home in childhood.

In order to be worthy of their children's respect, parents must control their tempers, and overcome their selfishness.

They must keep pace with the march of time, and keep in sympathy with their children's expanding minds and growing needs.

A Spiritualistic View.

The following paragraphs, from a little book entitled "Godism," give what seems to be a spiritualistic explanation of the origin of woman's enslavement. Whatever may be thought of the spiritualistic hypothesis in general, it must be conceded that many of its leading teachers are doing much to destroy the old theological myths and traditions which, in all the past, have held the minds and bodies of mankind in bondage.

"Your kings and priests on that side [the earth plane] became the Gods on this side, and like Abraham and Lot in the fabled story, they divided the land between them. Finally, a mighty spirit—one who had drunk of the life force of thousands of women, and had grown wonderfully magnetic, became intoxicated with the flavor of his own power, and conceived the idea of universal dominion; so he called his courtiers around him—those who made it a business to flatter him to gain their own ends, and laid the idea before them. He pointed out abuses that existed in the domain of some of his compeers, and urged the welfare of this your material plane of life, as one of the reasons for consolidated power—used all possible argument to induce them to join with him in the attempt to subdue the whole earth; and there is where your one-God-idea came from.

"This spirit had learned that power—strong magnetic attraction and executive ability always went with a strong sex life; and regarding man as superior he looked upon women as especially made to gratify man and bear children. This for the common people, the rank and file of humanity; and the first step toward the dominion sought was to formulate a sex morality that would keep women in subjection, and make it her highest honor to be faithful to her husband. This as we say, for the masses. But those in power, those who were needed to fill positions of command, were not held to this kind of morality. Kings, bishops, popes, rich men who could support them, could have as many victims, could drink up the life and soul of as many women as they pleased.

"We mean it; 'The life and soul,' the very identity of women have been absorbed by men, making them stronger, while their victims have passed out into spirit life. The marriage law as it exists in your sphere today, is a part of your individual Godism, and gives women no identity. But humanity has grown in spite of this dwarfing method. The only way to keep people subject, is to keep them ignorant. Hence the effort to confine the knowledge of life's finer forces, of the sciences, and all that tends to elevate the race; hence the effort to confine these things to the few, 'The tree of knowledge of good and evil' is, and has been forbidden fruit, and we here say to woman: that which has been counted your shame shall yet be your highest glory. Eat; we say eat! and continue to eat of the fruit of this tree! eat and give to your children, for knowledge is power.

"Humanity has grown in spite of this Godism that has hung over it like the pall of night. Man thinks, questions, even when buried in dungeons, stretched on the rack, burned at the stake, passing through the thousand forms of torture that have been meted out by those who claimed that the end justified the means. That end, consolidated power, with 'kings and priests unto God forever,' as the promised heritage of obedience, in spite of all this, there has been a slow, steady growth; even till reason and science are today disputing the idea of there being a God, or a throne for one to sit upon. Light from the spirit world has penetrated a few brains within the earth sphere; and by that light they are gathering the material for the fire which is to consume Godism, both root and branch. For ages the spirit world to which you have had access, has been ruled by this self appointed God and his priesthood, and those who dared to question, either upon the earth plane or in the spirit life, have been martyred, set aside, kept back; and finally the priesthood took charge of the avenues of communication between this and your sphere, and declared that all outside intercourse was of the devil, and worthy of death.

"Think of the millions called witches who have been sacrificed upon the altar of Godism! and mostly women; because being more susceptible to spirit influence, and of the tender mother heart sphere, the dreadful walls of terror erected to keep the surging hosts of progress from unseating God, were in danger of being broken down if she got hold of the lines of power. Oh! if we could make women see what we see, how they would rally to the support of every out-spoken, determined woman. Fashion, man's idea of womanhood, the line he has laid down for her to go by, all this would be laid aside, and the pressure that now rests upon such workers would be divided."

The author of the pamphlet from which we quote is Mrs. Josie K. Folsom of Springfield, Mo., of whom copies may be ordered. Price, twenty-five cents each. M. H.

SPIRITUALIST CONVENTION. The annual convention of the N. S. A. will be held in America Auditorium Hall, 77-79 31st St., Chicago, Oct. 17, 18, 19 and 20. While we of Lucifer's office may not be able to attend at all the sessions we shall be glad to meet all our friends who may come from a distance to attend this convention. Also will be glad to have them call upon us at our office. Take Lake St. "L." to Sheldon, walk north two blocks to Carroll Ave., then west to No. 507.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper that it has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

Personal and Impersonal.

"We live in deeds not years."

The custom of celebrating anniversaries of birth, national or personal, may be one that is "honored more in the breach than in the observance," and yet it may not be without interest to some of our readers to know that on the day that this issue of Lucifer goes to press its editor enters upon the seventieth year of his earthly pilgrimage. "Three-score years and ten!"

Advancing years and the "often infirmities" for which Paul advised Timothy to "drink no longer water but use a little wine," admonish me that the time is coming, in the course of nature, when I must lay down the pen and surrender to other hands the helm of the paper—now well advanced in its twentieth year, for whose existence and working policy I have been chiefly responsible since its first issue. This new reminder of the fact that "men may come and men may go"—must go, makes me all the more anxious for the welfare of the child of my declining years—Lucifer—"Herald of the Dawn," and therefore our friends and helpers will please bear with me if I should make this birthday anniversary the occasion for a brief but very earnest appeal for a little more of their active co-operation.

How, or in what shape this co-operation shall come, if at all, must be left entirely to each reader, but if a suggestion is in order, then I would say that the most welcome as well as effective and lasting aid is doubtless that which comes in the shape of new subscribers, and orders for books in the line of Lucifer's work. Some of our friends have long been in the habit of sending the names of those to whom, in their opinion a trial subscription to Lucifer would be welcome and helpful, accompanied with the money for the same. If any others feel that they can afford to do likewise the favor would be greatly appreciated, by the publishers, and, judging from past experience, would be very thankfully received by many of those to whom the paper is, by this means, introduced.

In next issue a more detailed plan for the fall and winter campaign will probably be outlined in these columns.

* * *

Mrs. Riggs in her reply to Dr. Stewart's lecture on "Heredity and Regeneration," in the article "Women Talk about Men," is certainly in the right when she says. "I don't think we need laws of any kind nearly so much as love."

I think she would have been quite justified in making her assertion a little more sweeping—like this: "The only law we need is the law of love"—in the sex relations of women and men.

But when she says, "No man ever inspired that feeling [love] who was not worthy of it," I think she is in the wrong. That women love unworthy men is a fact of every day observation. Perhaps it is due to ignorance; perhaps to the fact that women clothe men with ideal virtues—virtues they do not possess, and then "fall in love" with that ideal. In any case the remedy is liberty to correct our mistakes and to profit by experience.

* * *

Susan Patton, see "Various Voices," takes exception to one of Lucifer's adopted mottoes, "Woman must rescue herself and assume all responsibility of maternity on behalf of the children," and says, "If the relationship held by two produce a certain result, it seems one-sided logic to assume that only one of them shall bear the responsibility," etc.

If it were true that the relationship [to the child] held by mother and father were equally important to the life, endowment and welfare of that child, then the reasoning of our friend would be unimpeachable, but is this the fact? Is it true? Let us see.

To build a child to the point or period when it draws the breath of life requires, on the average let us say, nine months. Is the reciprocal relationship of father and child during all these months of gestation, as important to the life and development of that child as is the reciprocal relationship existing between mother and child? Granting that the parents are equal in volitional responsibility for the fact, the momentary fact, of conception—which I do not grant—how is it afterwards? Upon which of the parents falls, naturally and logically, the responsibility for the sustenance, the growth, the education—prenatal impressions—of that child during the nine months of gestation? Then, during the nine months, more or less, of lactation or nursing, are the functions, and therefore the responsibility, of the parents equal?

To ask such questions is to answer them. And when our correspondent says "That is the theory believed by men today"—i. e. that the responsibility should rest upon woman, I think she is equally in error. Both in law and custom man is held chiefly responsible for the generation, the support and education of the child, and because of this responsibility man claims, man arrogates to himself—and woman grants—that he should have control, not only of the child but of the mother also. To this fact, to this assumption of responsibility by man, is largely if not chiefly due the almost universal enslavement of woman to man in the sex relation, and also the flooding of the land with failures! with undesigned and undesired children; with children that should never have been born!

"But," it will be objected, "should man be relieved of all responsibility? Are there no responsibilities of fatherhood?" To this I answer, No and Yes. In the sense of ownership, or as giving authority, or as pay for fatherhood, man has no responsibility in the matter. Woman is the real owner, the real architect and builder, and is therefore the really responsible party—responsible to her child, to herself and to the race of which she is a part—for the quantity and quality of her work in child-building. But man is not thereby relieved of responsibility. Being relieved by nature of all the real labor, all the disabilities, all the pains and perils of race-reproduction, he is thereby left free to devote his time and his energies to altruistic labors—for the benefit of the woman he loves, and for the benefit of her children, and for the benefit of the race of which he is a part.

Man is not destitute of parental affection—often his love of children is greater than is woman's, but in the order of nature, as I think, man's love for children is racial, rather than individualistic, and if he loves one child more than another, and if he wants to work for one child more than another it is chiefly because he loves the mother of that child more than he loves the mothers of other children.

Man's responsibility, then, is to the woman who elects him to be her co-operator, and to the race at large, including all the children of that race, rather than to the child or children of whom he may be the father, in the order of physical generation.

The subject is too large for the space allowed in this issue. If our readers wish to see the subject further elaborated I recommend for their perusal, "Motherhood in Freedom," a principal article in "Our New Humanity" No. V. Price, twenty-five cents.

MOSES HARMAN.

Chicago Day.

Monday, October 9, was celebrated as Chicago Day. "The Inter-Ocean" of Tuesday opens its half-dozen pages of description in these words:

"A million spectators, 15,000 men in line, an imposing pageant, a great outburst of patriotism, and faultless weather were the features of the Chicago day parade. Chicago again felt a thrill like those of World's Fair days. But there were deeper memories stirring than those of World's Fair days; the United States has been making much history since the White City astonished the world. Memories of war and the rejoicings of victory were in the air. William McKinley, commander-in-chief of the army and navy, and standing for all that that army and navy have done and are yet to do, was here at the head of 'the men behind the guns.' And Chicago, having done her share in making that history, remembered and made glad and welcomed the Nation's heroes as only Chicago can."

The immediate cause or occasion of this enormous pageant was the placing of the "corner stone" of the new federal building in Chicago. Not that this federal building was just begun yesterday. It seems common and popular nowadays to put in corner stones when the building is well under way towards completion. So in this case; the frame work of the new two million dollar post office building seems to be nearly complete before the corner stone was laid—laid with great pomp and ceremony by the president of the United States, William McKinley.

That is to say, William McKinley gets the credit of laying the corner stone although his share of work was next to nothing. Here is the "Inter Ocean's" account of the "official" acts:

"At 11:15 o'clock yesterday morning President McKinley received a trowel from the hand of Architect Henry Ives Cobb, dipped it into a mortar box, and threw the mortar under the corner stone of the new government building. Five minutes later, after the stone had been lowered onto its bed, Lyman J. Gage, Secretary of the Treasury, stepped down from the raised platform on which the official party sat, and, tapping the stone with his gavel, formally declared the corner stone to be officially and finally laid."

Is not this scene typical of the relations of government with the governed? Of plutocracy with labor? Of the classes with the masses? That is to say, all the real work—the work of taking the stone from the quarry, of dressing it down to proper size and shape, of conveying it to the site of the new building, of chiselling the inscriptions thereon, of placing it in its destined position—all this was done by laboring men who are not invited to say a word when speeches are to be made.

Continuing, the report says:

"Grouped about the corner-stone were the representatives of organized labor who had presented the stone, and who did the technical work of laying it. From the windows of the adjoining buildings and the roofs thousands of people—not official or distinguished, but just the plain people—viewed the ceremonies and strained their ears to catch the words of the speakers."

Yes, "the plain people," the unofficial people are "not in it," to use a somewhat slangy phrase; but the "diplomatic representatives from many foreign governments of Europe and Asia, and men of national, state and local fame, together with their wives" held front seats at the entertainment. To prevent a rush of the common herd a cordon of policemen was drawn around the place, so that the "people who were not distinguished enough to gain admission to the grand stand or fortunate enough to have access to the surrounding buildings had to content themselves with a view of the broad backs of double rows of giant policemen."

In his speech at the banquet at the Auditorium, President McKinley recounted the increase, in population, wealth, and territory, of the American nation, and among other things, said, "The United States has never repudiated a national obligation, either to its creditors or to humanity. It never struck a blow except for civilization." "Our steps have been forward, not backward. 'From Plymouth Rock to the Philippines the grand, triumphal march of humanity has never paused. Freedom under the flag is more universal than when the Union was formed," and much more of similar tenor.

I leave it to the readers of Lucifer to say how much of truth there is in these utterances.

M. HARMAN.

The Clifford Case.

The latest case of press censorship under the Comstock law is against J. R. Clifford, editor of "The Pioneer Press," a little paper published in Martinsburg, West Virginia, in the interest of the colored race. It is always the little papers that are attacked in this way, and it is most pitiful that the bigger and more influential papers do not put a stop to it.

Mr. Clifford was indicted October 4 for mailing alleged obscene matter. The inculpated matter is an attack upon J. C. Newman, the justice or injustice of which we have no means of deciding upon, but it is very certain that by proceeding against Mr. Clifford in a court and under a law which preclude the possibility of a fair trial of the real issues, and which furnish opportunities for exciting the most violent prejudice, the presumption is fairly established that Mr. Clifford was right. At all events it is as necessary to protest against this new outrage as it was to protest against the persecution of Bennett, Heywood, or the editor of Lucifer. No case of this kind should go unrebuked.

The Ingersoll Controversy.

In a recent number of "Free Society," San Francisco, T. P. Quinn of Chicago, makes a defense of the attitude of Robert G. Ingersoll towards the Chicago martyrs of 1887, that will be interesting to all lovers of justice, whether friendly to the memory of the "Great Agnostic" or not. Though somewhat long we gladly give place to the entire letter:

In your comment on Kate DePentt's eulogy of Robert G. Ingersoll, published August 6, you wrote: . . . "He (Ingersoll) believed in the innocence of the Chicago Anarchists and regarded their conviction and execution as a judicial murder, but would not defend them before the supreme court unless the stipulated sum of $10,000—a sum too exorbitant for the poor defense committee—could be guaranteed."

I do not know where you got your information, but I am sure it is incorrect. The "defense association" as such never asked Ingersoll to get into the case, and to make sure of this point, I, a few days ago asked Mr. George A. Schilling, a member of the defense committee, the same man that went east and secured the services of Generals Butler and Pryor, if there was any foundation for the statement, and he assured me there was not.

The nearest approach to it was a request by Capt. Black to enter the case, but Ingersoll without any money consideration being mentioned, promptly and strongly advised the captain to secure a counsellor whose church orthodoxy was unquestioned. He believed and urged that his public advocacy of the Anarchists would only harm their case and he tenaciously clung to this policy to the last.

District Assembly 49 Knights of Labor appointed a committee to see and request representative men of New York to intercede with the governor of Illinois, and as a member of that committee I suggested Col. R. G. Ingersoll, Courtland Palmer and Patrick Ford of the "Irish World." Ingersoll refused for the reasons already given, but added: "I will tell you why I am with you in this thing and what I propose to do:

"Those men were not tried by a jury of their peers; every fellow on that jury was opposed to them and their doctrines and you may as well try me before a jury of orthodox clergymen for Infidelity and expect my acquittal as to expect an impartial verdict from that jury for those men. My jury would hang me sky-high and their jury, at the command of capitalists want their blood. As a matter of self-defense I am on your side, but I cannot go to Illinois. I could not go to Jersey without being seen and known, so you see how impossible it would be to go to Illinois, and if the newspapers raised a cry—and they would—about the interests of Infidelity and Anarchy, every hope of saving the lives of your friends would be shattered.

"No, I'll not go, but I'll tell you what I intend to do. I'll sit down and write my reasons out fully why those men should not be hanged. I'll go as deeply as I can into the history of the world, and I'll point out where every age had its martyr to progress, and as my daughter is on the best social terms with Oglesby's family and as she can go where she pleases without being followed by the newspaper fellows, she will gladly undertake the task, for she feels for the men as much as we do, and the effect will be much better. Oglesby is a large and tender-hearted man and if the pressure were not so great from the other side, it would be easy to deal with him when the lives of men are at stake, but remember, he is a politician, and all politicians are whores; if they can't get what they want, they'll take what they get. Oglesby wants to be vice-president; if he can't get this he'll take a governorship; if he can't get that, he'll want to go to congress; and if I went to Illinois and the newspapers raised a howl that would injure his political chances,—by God! he'd hang those men to prove that he was not under the influence of Ingersoll. You know Arthur insulted the man that raised him from the gutter and Oglesby is not above it.

"No, I'll not go, and if you want me to help those men, allow me to remain in the background. Don't get the preachers after you any hotter than they are!"

I am not going to discuss the other questions raised in your criticism, beyond suggesting that Ingersoll studiously avoided mixing up in the economic struggle. At Central Music Hall, Chicago, he said: "I know the remedy for this general distress, but I won't tell you—I don't propose to be a martyr." In 1886 he said to me: "O—, the working people may be worth living and dying for in a thousand billion years from now, but the dirty set are not worth it today." In his address on Voltaire you will find that he eulogizes the French philosopher because the latter sold the product of his genius for the "highest price and lived like a prince," and Ingersoll followed his example. In 1887 he said to a few of us: "My life's work is to destroy the power of the priests, and if I can drive a dagger into the heart of that old whore—the church—I'll have made my contribution to the liberties of men."

District Assembly 49's committee was composed of the undersigned and James B. Quinn, at that time master workman of district 49, and while the conversation was general, I only seek to throw a little light on the canvas that others may be warned of the error. We must live in the truth.

T. P. QUINN.

Yes, let truth and justice be heard though the heavens fall. That Ingersoll was right, from his standpoint, in regard to helping the condemned Socialists, is very evident to some of us. Whether he was right in regard to the "working people" and the duty of reformers to try to help them, is a question upon which all will not be agreed. But admitting that Ingersoll was right in the opinion that the working people of today are not worth saving, what is the remedy? He said to Mr. Quinn that he knew the "remedy for this general distress" but would not tell him. Was it because he was not ready? Was it because he thought it would injure his central object—his work against the church?

This explanation, to me, seems probable. Then, when nearing what he believed to be the close of his career he felt that he could afford to give to the world his remedy, and he gave it in his address to the "Free Religious Association" of Boston, on the 2nd day of June last.

M. HARMAN.

"Better Dead."

From time to time we see discussions in the papers in regard to the propriety of shortening human life—either by one's own hand or by the hand or advice of the physician, when from disease or old age life becomes a burden to its owner and to the friends of the hopelessly afflicted one, and now we read of a society in England called the "Society for Doing Without Some People," which in plainer language means a society for weeding out the surplus population by assassination.

J. M. Barrie, author of "Auld Licht Idylls," "A Window in Thrums," etc., has written a history of this society. The story is that a young Scotchman named Andrew Raich, well educated, talented and well recommended, came to London to find employment. After several months of fruitless effort he became desperate enough to join the society for limiting population by a method that would scarcely be sanctioned even by Malthus. After giving a thrillingly interesting account of the adventures of Mr. Raich the author tells us of a meeting of the society at which this young man reads a "thesis," or essay, giving his views in regard to the proper method of accomplishing the objects of the society. Here is the thesis:

Then Andrew began.

"The Society for Doing Without," he read, "has been tried and found wanting. It has now been in existence for some years, and its members have worked zealously, though unostentatiously.

"I am far from saying a word against them. They are patriots as true as ever petitioned against the Channel Tunnel."

"No compliments," whispered the president, warningly. Andrew hastily turned a page, and continued:

"But what have they done? Removed an individual here and there. That is the extent of it.

"You have been pursuing a half-hearted policy. You might go on for centuries at this rate before you made any perceptible difference in the streets.

"Have you ever seen a farmer thinning turnips? Gentlemen, here is an example for you. My proposal is that everybody should have to die on reaching the age of forty-five years.

"It has been the wish of this society to avoid the prejudices engendered of party strife. But though you are a social rather than a political organization, you cannot escape politics. You do not call yourselves Radicals, but you work for Radicalism. What is Radicalism? It is a desire to get a chance. This is an aspiration inherent in the human breast. It is felt most keenly by the poor.

"Make the poor rich, and the hovels, the misery, the immorality, and the crime of the East End disappear. It is infamous, say the socialists, that this is not done at once. Yes, but how is it to be done? Not, as they hold, by making the classes and the masses change places. Not on the lines on which the society has hitherto worked. There is only one way, and I make it my text tonight. Fortunately, it presents no considerable difficulties.

"It is well known in medicine that the simples'—in other words, the most natural—remedies may be the most efficacious.

"So it is in the social life. What shall we do, society asks, with our boys? I reply, Kill off the parents.

"There can be little doubt that forty-five years is long enough for a man to live. Parents must see that. Youth is the time to have your fling.

"Let us see how this plan would revolutionize the world. It would make statesmen hurry up. At present, they are nearly fifty before you hear of them. How can we expect the country to be properly governed by men in their dotage?

"Again, take the world of letters. Why does the literary aspirant have such a struggle? Simply because the profession is overstocked with seniors. I would like to know what Tennyson's age is, and Ruskin's, and Browning's. Every one of them is over seventy, and all writing away yet as lively as you like. It is a crying scandal.

"Things are the same in medicine, art, divinity, law—in short, in every profession and in every trade.

"Young ladies cry out that this is not a marrying age. How can it be a marrying age, with gray-headed parents everywhere? Give young men their chance, and they will marry younger than ever, if only to see their children grow up before they die.

"A word in conclusion. Looking around me, I cannot but see that most, if not all, of my hearers have passed what should plainly be the allotted span of life to man. You would have to go.

"But, gentlemen, you would do so feeling that you were setting a noble example. Younger, and—may I say?—more energetic men would fill your places and carry on your work. You would hardly be missed."

Evidently Mr. Raich and his society had not heard of the newer, more rational and more natural way of limiting population by freeing motherhood and putting it in the power of woman—of educated or enlightened womanhood—to limit reproduction and thereby prevent overcrowding in the great human hive.

M. HARMAN.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Edgar D. Brinkerhoff, Morrisville, Pa.—I herewith enclose fifty cents for extra copies. Lucifer deserves the heartiest support, and if its friends cannot afford to help it financially they should at least avoid making any draft upon its resources.

J. Allen Evans, 210 E. Warren Ave., Cripple Creek, Colo.:—I could write an interesting letter about this great gold producing district if Lucifer's space were not pre-empted by subjects of more importance from more able pens. I find every shade of belief represented here. The church, the Salvation Army street mission, even to the colored elder, hold forth on the public streets. There are many Spiritualists and the Christian Scientists have a church here. Saloons and many other places of business keep open Sundays and building goes on in some instances the same as on other days of the week. Several dance halls are in full blast where the finest dancing in the world may be witnessed every night. Sunday night is the favorite or opening night for traveling troups at the Opera House. The courtesan elbows the upper ten on the crowded thoroughfares.

Labor unions rule all classes of labor and eight hours constitutes a day's work in all mechanical pursuits or in common labor. Wages range from $2.50 per day for common labor and $5.00 per day for brick laying and stone cutting. I have had the pleasure of meeting a few of my old friends whom I formerly knew in Aspen, Colo. Among them two or three Anarchists who received their first lessons in freedom from me. I shall make an effort to revive an interest in radical literature among my former comrades and to make a few new converts to the cause. I had a most enjoyable time with friends in Kansas City and spent nearly a week in Denver where I met Georgia Replogle, Lizzie M. and Wm. Holmes, Prof. W. S. Bell, Henry Cohen and Francis D. Tandy, author of "Free Socialism," and many more bright and genial comrades. I am once more in business for myself thanks to a loved comrade who is now well to do and whose eyes I first opened to the beauties of our philosophy. He has not been governed in his life by its teachings but has had and is still having cause to regret that he did not adhere to freedom especially in the realm of sex ethics. He is one of nature's noblemen but would gladly yield up half his fortune to be high and dry out of the legal matrimonial net into which in an unguarded moment he allowed himself to be drawn. I must say a loving good by to all friendly comrades and hope to meet or hear from any of them who may happen to live in or near Cripple Creek or Victor or other mining towns of this district.

Susan A. Patton, Philadelphia:—I am anxious to see Lucifer always successful and know it is the only paper dealing with the cause of our present low moral status, but I cannot understand how "woman assuming all responsibility for maternity" is going to benefit the race. If the relationship held by two individuals produces a result, it seems one sided logic to assume that only one of them shall bear the responsibility. That is the theory believed by men today, and woman is compelled to bear a much greater share of responsibility than the man. It seems to me that the help comes in decidedly the opposite teaching, that men shall consider it ignoble to refuse to be responsible creatures for their own acts, as are the so-called lower forms of life, many birds and animals.

I would like to know what is the use of friend Brinkerhoff's beautiful wind up, "Let us pray that society will soon accord the blessing of freedom to all who desire to build homes of their own selection," if that same society permits that anti-social individualist the fellow who wants a piece of ground that he can leave to the next generation. That's like paying for a seat in a trolley car with the right to say who shall sit there forever after. It is worse—it is being "ruled by the tomb" on a big scale.

Oh! here is Geo. Brown, with his hobby of "concessions granted by man" and his statement that "woman has been and always will be inferior in strength and intellectuality to man," and says, "Since the time men did their courting with the club up till today, when he does it by quoting sentimental poetry." Why has man changed his tactics in courting woman? Has nature been perfecting man while the feminine element has stood still waiting for concessions, or has the feminine element been becoming more acute and the masculine been compelled to develop finer faculties to satisfy its own needs?

"Man moves along the line of least resistance" and if he can gain a woman by upholding a system which will necessitate her yielding to him he will not have to make such efforts to please, but where she is able to support herself he will have to make concessions in order to be able to continue his own existence. Concessions are only granted because they must be, just as the capitalist grants them because the workers "see the window and walk out." When woman will work her own way in the future as she has the past through the valley of suffering alone and man finds himself alone for the qualities he most desires in a consort then he very gladly will be courteous in the future as he sometimes has been in the past—for his own benefit.

Mr. Brown says, "May not the sentiment of solidarity be so developed to the point of no ownership? Then will woman be free." But how will this be accomplished? By those who have rights (the male portion) relinquishing those privileges? Did anyone ever see this done? Brown won't listen to this argument in economics; he knows that not till the exploited deny the rights of the exploiter can economic freedom come; and he argues like the capitalist when it comes to the sex question—woman must be gentle and yielding and then man will grant concessions—yes! as the traction company does. Give up your whole judgment into their hands, then they will tell you you have neither intelligence, strength, or moral courage, and point like the capitalist theologian to the facts of history. "The poor ye have always with you"—or like Brown, "Woman always has been dependent," although Geddes and Thompson in "The Evolution of Sex" show quite plainly that during the time Brown says "woman was dependent" she was really designing all the "peaceful arts."

Why did not Brown ring in his oft repeated sentence that "a woman has no right to change her opinion of the man she once loved under pain of excommunication to the ranks that the prostitute now holds, while the man ought to be true but may be "frisky." I am very glad to see the article in print. The "Ladies' Liberal League" know this litany of Brown's almost by heart; but while in my opinion Brown has never formed a correct judgment of woman as a factor in human evolution he has done much to free the minds of the wage slaves from servility to their masters. I wonder if he remembers how courteously men pelted women with mud and eggs when studying as doctors in this city.

Government Analyzed. By John E. Kelso. The chapter headings are: "Derivations and Definitions of Political Terms; Various Forms of Government; General Principles of Government; Functions of Government; Origin of Government: Declaration of Independence; Articles of Confederation; Defects of the Confederation; Formation of the Constitution of the United States; Constitution of the United States; Taxation; Tariff or Protection; War; Punishments; Marriage; Religion; Prohibition; Money; What a Government Should Be." 320 pages. Price reduced to $1.00.

With Lucifer one year to a new subscriber, $1.50.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW. A primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. A valuable compendium on Sex Ethics. Startling and Scientific Price, 10 cents.

783.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

WOMEN and ECONOMICS,

A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women. By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Here are a few of the page headings of this remarkable work: "Economic environment; The dependence of women; No inherent disability of sex; Marriage not a partnership; House service as a livehood; Motherhood and economic production; Modification to maternity; The usefulness of sex; Differentiation of sex; Sex and humanity; The peacock's tail; Sex distinctions; The eternal feminine; unreasoning devotion; Women as persons; Race-attributes and sex-attribute; The normal child; Personal profit and sex-relations; The influence of heredity; The young man and the young woman; The effect of custom; The sex relation personal; Innocence and ignorance; Marriage with independence; The increasing difficulty of marriage; Supporting one's family; Virtue and vice; The results of repression; The harm that women do; The development of love; The hope for the future; The martyr and the pioneer; The dropping of the bars; The meaning of the new woman; Motherhood in education; A criminal failure; Marriage and the family; Love's young dream; The heart and the stomach; Socializing the household industries; The stomach as a family tie; The servant wife; World-servants and house-servants; A wider maternity; Between the old and the new; "The vices of the slave;" The outgrown stronghold. Printed on strong, heavy paper, 350 pages, bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale by M. Harman, 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY. Co-educational. Send for catalog. A. E. Gammage, President. 167 Dearborn St., Chicago.

RIGHTS OF WOMEN IN THE SEXUAL RELATIONS,

By Karl Heinzen. A new edition together with the startling letters of Louise Mayer" on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German women at Frauenstadt. A book of 386 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Price paper bound, 50 cents; cloth, $1

THE BALLAD OF READING JAIL. BY C. 3.3.

This powerful poem of more than 600 lines, is the work of OSCAR WILDE C. 3. having been the poets prison number during his confinement in Reading Jail. It is dedicated to the memory of a trooper of the Horse Guards who was hanged in the jail at that time, and it depicts the terrible sensations of the author and his fellow prisoners before and after the execution.

Just issued; price, in cloth, blue, vellum back, beautifully printed from large type on hand-made antique paper, deckle edges; reading matter on one side of the paper; a sumptuous book of 96 pages, 7 inches by 5.31. In paper, 44 pages, 10 cents. Mailed postpaid on receipt of price, by M. Harman, 507 Carroll Avenue, Chicago.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be FREE; must enjoy the full privilege of soliciting the love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrially."—Page 265. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CITYLESS AND COUNTRYLESS WORLD," by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 4'0 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by R. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races." Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III., Co-operation; Chapter V., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, ten cts.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint: A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution: Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

Personal. Readers of Lucifer who would like a quiet, home-like room in a private family when visiting Chicago, should communicate with X. Y. Z., care of Lucifer, 507 Carroll Ave.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.
This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Women in Marriage Slavery

Will find in HILDA'S HOME a story exposing the horrors of their condition as faithfully and as fearlessly as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" exposed the horrors of Negro slavery in the South. The story is more entertaining than many modern works of fiction and the plain truths it tells will find responsive echoes in the aching, bursting hearts of many women who know the galling effects of marriage thralldom.

The book contains 425 pages. Price handsomely bound in cloth, $1. In paper cover 50 cents. Send in your order NOW—especially if you want extra copies for distribution among your friends.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Personal Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 30 cents. Address Moses Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. E. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.

"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.

"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.

Sample pages free Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Missing Link Modern Spiritualism. By A. Leah Underhill. A book for all spiritualists and investigators. "Hear all sides, then decide." 23 chapters; 478 pages; 16 illustrations, including portraits of the Fox family. History of the Hydesville rappings, as given by eye-witnesses, the threats or mob violence; remarkable and well-attested manifestations; the "exposures" disposed of, etc. Handsomely bound in cloth. Publishers price, $1.25. On receipt of $1.37, and 13 cents for postage, we will send the book to any address.

A Gentleman of liberal views and a freedom lover wants lady correspondent living in and within a radius of 100 miles of Decatur, Ill. Address, R. C., care of Lucifer.

Wanted: A woman holding radical views to keep house for a family of three adults in a city in Massachusetts. A pleasant home for the right person. Write to M., 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

The Story of An African Farm. Olive Schreiner's master piece. A story of the struggle for light, the search for truth, the yearning for happiness of brave young English and German people, among the ignorant and coarse Boers and Kaffirs of South Africa. This is a work of art, and of truth. Well bound in cloth. 307 pages. Price, 40 cents, postage 10 cents. For sale at this office.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 41. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, OCT. 21, E. M. 299. [C. E. 1899.] WHOLE No. 784

Who Are Slaves?

They are slaves who dare not speak
For the fallen and the weak;
They are slaves who will not choose
Hatred, scoffing and abuse,
Rather than in silence shrink
From the truth they needs must think:
They are slaves who dare not be
In the right with two or three.

—James Russel Lowell.

Ingersoll.

BY MAY CLIFFORD HURD.

Biography for many years has been pleasant reading for me; and sometimes I have found the "Life" of an author more interesting than his writings. There may be several causes for this, but I think one is that the biographer had a finer power of expression than had the author of whom he wrote, but I doubt if Ingersoll will ever have a biographer who will excel him in beauty of expression. Many articles have been written about him, since his death, describing and explaining him as a man and author, and I am not objecting to this. Of a man so loved and so hated it could not be otherwise. But to those who have seen and heard Ingersoll no description of his personality is necessary and it would be impossible to give a correct idea of it to those who have missed this privilege.

Knowledge of the man, Ingersoll, is the possession of the generation that knew him.

One writer has said recently, "Nothing that Ingersoll has written will live—" I cannot say that this man does not possess knowledge of the fate of our race that is denied me, but I hope he is mistaken. If our descendants go back to lower conditions of intellectual and emotional life, I presume they may not enjoy reading Ingersoll and other authors whom we consider great and good, but if our race goes on to higher mentality, until a greater than Ingersoll is produced he will be read with pleasure and profit.

I have heard Ingersoll many times, the last time at the thirty-second annual convention of the Free Religious Association held in the Hollis street Theatre, Boston, June 2nd 1899.

His lecture has been reported in part in some papers and magazines and printed in full in others but I have seen no quotation of a remark which seemed to me significant. "I have wanted to say this for years, and I say it for the first time to you," had reference to the last half of his lecture, his true brave words in regard to women and the race.

For many years I had been grateful to Ingersoll for the work he had done in tearing down the old superstitions, but so many times I had thought, if he would only use his eloquence and influence against the last and most harmful of all superstitions, the false modesty that shuts out light and prevents knowledge of the very source of all life, that causes the word "sex" to be considered by thousands of otherwise intelligent men and women a word of shame not to be spoken aloud, but I had come to expect this from Ingersoll, and I did not blame him—for it is not for me to tell another how, or when or where he shall do his work—and so the last half of his lecture on the second of June came to me as a glad surprise. I listened, hardly daring to breathe, lest I should lose one word, and at the close, the applause was grand.

I think every one in that great audience felt that Ingersoll had spoken true, brave words. Ingersoll had considered his subject well for years, and he did not wait too long. His last public words were spoken for the freedom of woman and the salvation of the race.

Women and the Cook Stove.

An interesting discussion on this question is found in the editorial columns of the New York "Journal." In its issue of Oct. 3, the "Journal" prints a letter from H. Jones, of Lakewood, N. J., in which he says:

"Editor Evening 'Journal': I cannot help criticising your editorial in the Evening 'Journal' of today about 'Who Will Free the Slaves of the Cook Stove?' In the first place, it is ridiculous to put such a thing in the paper. It would be the means of bringing women up perfect fools. Of what use to a workingman is a woman who cannot cook a dinner? A woman who is too lazy to cook a dinner for her husband is a disgrace to her race. How can you expect the men to do the cooking, as you say in your editorial? Don't you think it is sufficient for a man to earn the food without cooking it?"

To this criticism the editor replies, in part, as follows:

"We call your attention to the fact that different races and different types of men take very different views of what woman should be and do. The higher a man's conception of woman's proper position, the higher the man.

"You say: 'What is the use of a woman who can't cook?' You are superior to the North American savage.

"He says: 'What is the use of a squaw who can't carry the tent and plant the corn and nurse the baby and do all the work, while I sit in the sun?'

"The North American savage is higher morally than some other savages, described by the great Reclus. When they first marry a woman, they put her head against the trunk of a tree and knock out two of her front teeth with a stone. Those savages would say:

"'What is the use of a woman, if you can't knock out her front teeth?'

"Of course, you mean well. You are probably a hard-working man, and you think that your wife should enjoy being a hard-working women. So she ought, if it is necessary for you and her children that she should be.

"Incidentally, we have noticed that women are only too willing to work hard for their husbands and children when they have to. In fact, the trouble with them is that they work too hard and let too much be taken for granted.

"But, while a woman should willingly do what she may have to do, is it wrong for her to aspire better conditions? Is it wrong for a newspaper to endeavor to improve her condition?

"As a workingman, Mr. Jones is doubtless always looking out for better pay, with shorter hours, and for a class of work with as little drudgery as possible about it.

"If a newspaper helps you in these directions, you praise it; you think it is a very fine newspaper; you pat it on the back.

"Why don't you praise a newspaper that wants to take women away from hot stoves, if it can be done?

"The editorial which you denounce was not part of a conspiracy to starve you to death or make you cook your own dinner. It said simply: Better for a hundred men to do the cooking for ten thousand women than to have ten thousand women working over ten thousand separate cooking stoves. Our idea contemplated among other things a reduction in the actual cost of your dinner. Co-operation and combination always mean economy.

"A few years ago, and every woman in city or country had to haul her own water in heavy pails. If in those days we had advocated one great reservoir, instead of ten thousand wells, you would probably have said:

"'What good is a woman who is not willing to haul water upstairs?'

"But you probably have no objection now to the tap in your kitchen which gives you water as you want it without perceptible cost—and without making your wife a beast of burden.

"The time will come when woman will be rid of her present kitchen drudgery, just as she is now rid of the drudgery of hauling water. You, perhaps, had never thought about that. That is just why we write about it."

Such discussions as this, in papers of such enormous circulation and influence as the New York "Journal" possesses and wields, may be counted among the most hopeful signs of the times. "The higher a man's conception of woman's proper position the higher the man," is a noble utterance, and one that does honor to the man who wrote it and to the columns of the paper in which it appears.

"The ascent of life is the ascent of ideals," is true, in this matter of kitchen work, as in all other departments of associative human life. The prediction that "The time will come when woman will be rid of her present kitchen drudgery" is in line with the ideals outlined in "Hilda's Home," "Cityless and Countryless World," and other epoch-making books that have appeared in the world of letters within the last few years.

M. H.

Rights of Fathers.

BY LILLIE D. WHITE.

In these iconoclastic days, when our institutions are tottering, our idols falling—in the turmoil and confusion of a better adjustment of our domestic arrangements—the question of mothers', fathers' and children's rights is a most important one.

None of us who are working for human liberty will deny the injustice of laws and customs that grant the father absolute control and ownership of children. But under the new dispensation when woman's and mother's rights are being recognized and she is granted absolute control and ownership of children (in case of a legal separation) there is as great danger of injustice being done to the father and children as there is when the mother and children are the victims of the father's legal rights.

The spectacle of a man thrashing his child to stifle its cries and prevent its eager endeavor to reach its mother's arms for a few minutes enjoyment with her on the occasion of a rare visit—would be one to make gods and angels weep. It would meet the disapproval of every one possessing a spark of human feeling or sense of justice. It would furnish a text for innumerable dissertations by emancipators of woman from sex slavery to express their wrath and indignation over the outrage. Yet just such a circumstance lately came under my immediate observation, except that it was a mother instead of a "brutal father" that had the power, legal and physical to prevent a few hours visit between the child and its father, it being an occasion other than the time specified and permitted by law.

Is the wrong and injustice of such an act any less when committed by a woman, and a man and his children the sufferers? Has a father no parental affection worthy of respect or consideration? Is it right that his relation to his sons and daughters shall be totally ignored and trampled upon by a narrow, selfish woman who presumes on her "superior rights of motherhood?" Injustice appears equally unjust to me whether the victims are men or women. Rachel weeping for her children is no more pathetic than is the anguish of grief stricken David wailing for his son Absalom.

The solution of what shall be done about children in case of a separation of the father and mother is really a simple one. A thorough application of individual liberty will settle the question as it will every human relation. From the moment a child recognizes the tender solicitude and affection of its mother or the interest and hearty comradeship of its father or the absence of either, there is no person living more competent to decide the matter of association than the child itself. A fair acquaintance with both parents, freedom of choice, liberty to come and go, to visit or stay, will always be found most convenient and effective in adjusting these relations. The association or intimate companionship of any two people that is maintained solely by the authority, the legal power of one over the other or is enforced by whips and ropes has a very insecure foundation and is sure to be disrupted sooner or later.

I rejoice over every step that woman has taken toward liberty and individuality, toward self-poise, independence and equal rights with men, but when she assumes superior rights and becomes the tyrant and invader the sum of human happiness is not increased nor is wrong lessened.

When I see as, I often do, a broad-minded, generous man harassed and watched and tyrannized over by a little, selfish, narrow-minded woman who enforces her legal and social claims by her very weakness and helplessness—I feel as though the emancipators of woman from sex slavery have done their work too well, and will be obliged to reverse their batteries.

I see in the future a possibility of a deep felt want in the literary field for a journal that will advocate the emancipation of men from the tyranny of little women and also recognize the rights of fathers; one that will aim to develop and cultivate the comparatively weak parental instinct in man instead of discouraging and ignoring it.

The maternal instinct needs to grow and broaden into a fuller, nobler, more unselfish human love; a love that considers the highest maternal duty to be the recognition of her children's relations to others as well as to herself. A selfish, greedy, monopolistic, devouring, tigerish maternal feeling is often mistaken for an excess of mother love. Real mother love will consider that the tastes, desires, inclinations and rights of her children are more important in shaping their lives than her own authority or affection.

"An Experiment in Marriage."

Thousands if not millions of readers, in both hemispheres of the earth, have read with delight and doubtless with profit the book called "Looking Backward," written by Edward Bellamy. Few of Lucifer's readers need to be told that the revolution outlined in that book is one that pertains mainly to economics, or to our industrial system. The social system of the present time, or that part of it that relates to the conjugal or marital relations of women and men, was not disturbed to any great extent. Another book, by another Bellamy—Charles J.—seems to have been written to supply what its author probably considered a serious defect, or omission in the world famous work of his relative Edward. This later effort to outline an ideal life for human beings is called an "Experiment in Marriage."

Unlike his namesake, Charles J. Bellamy does not propose to wait a hundred years for the realization of his ideals. He believes that communities might now be formed that could practicalize the newer and higher ideals in conjugal life. He begins by telling us of the existence of a socialistic community called "Grape Valley," in which all are equal in rights and privileges, and so nearly free from governmental interference of any sort that each individual can without expense or obloquy, make as many experiments in marriage as her or his nature seems to call for; that is, without the difficulties and drawbacks that make marriage and divorce such blighting and often crime-breeding features of our social life today.

It will be impossible in this synopsis to give more than the barest outline of this very cleverly written and very entertaining book. In the following paragraphs Mr. Ward, a new comer, is represented as giving some of his objections to the institutions of "Grape Valley," as he finds them:

"You are destroying those feminine qualities which have been most admired. The woman of Grape Valley cannot long remain timid, shrinking, ingenuous. She must lose the quality of self-effacement for the sake of her dear ones. She must become self assertive, forward; shall I say immodest? In our old world, which you so despise, the maiden is shy, innocent, unsuspecting the wickedness of the world. The wife feels that her hopes, her dreams, her possibilities, are limited to her own home. She thinks, struggles and suffers only for her husband, and thus shows the full glory of womanhood. Under your system the distinctive feminine qualities will soon disappear. Our system intensifies and perpetuates them. As I close let me say that your industrial system I wholly approve. By it you insure to each individual satisfaction of his necessities and a certain modicum of pleasure. Men fight no longer for the privilege of doing a piece of work, but are all working together peacefully to perform it for the common benefit. If you had but preserved what seems to me the natural relations of the sexes, making marriage a permanent bond, and restoring the home, I should only have words of approval and good speed for you."

This is part of a debate at the public hall. When Mr. Ward had sat down and the applause had subsided, Mr. Vinton, an old friend and comrade in the outside world, but who had then been for some years an inhabitant of "Grape Valley" rose and said, in part:

"I am the more encouraged to expect his confession [of his error] because without assistance from me he has reached the point that he wholly approves the industrial system of Grape Valley. He approves the system which makes all adults equal sharers in the product of their joint labor. He admits that he approves of a system which makes women as materially independent as men. Now, it is this very system which permits and calls for new institutions of marriage. Women may naturally decline to be subject to men unless the men have a material basis for the authority they wish to exert. For countless years women have been dependent for their fate on attracting some man's favor, and thus securing a marriage which would relieve fathers or more remote relatives of the burden of their support, or in lack of relatives, would alone secure them against positive want. So, after marriage, came the necessity of clinging to that husband through good and ill report, of enduring everything at his hands, even although he might be morally repulsive or physically disgusting. If she parted from him there came the blasting of the lives of children, the loss of home and comforts, the deprivation of the very food her poor body required, and the raiment to protect her from the cold.

"The whole legal and moral force of society was accordingly exerted to make perpetual the marriage tie, to protect the home as it was called. Poets, novelists, preachers innumerable, have built up a mighty wall of tradition about this marriage. All other considerations are as nothing in the eye of the moral teacher of civilization compared to the maintenance of the inviolability of the marriage bond. That most marriages take place on insufficient acquaintance, and that the young and ardent are far more likely to make a mistake than a judicious choice, is of no account; that accident and not suitability are the causes of most marriages, and hence that love wanes with the honeymoon, and the marriage relation becomes, very commonly, a union for convenience, a mere friendly companionship, or a daily scourge. Marriage was the very foundation of the old order, and must be preserved as nominally perpetual long after every good or true element in the relation might have disappeared.

"At last we are shown a system of society where marriage can be regarded as a means for the intimacy of the sexes, as a relation which can double each soul's life and joy. Friendship does not enable us to overleap the bars which seclude the individual life. It is only through sex that perfect sympathy becomes possible, only through sex that one being can enter into the life and share the experiences and profit by the knowledge of another. But the forced intimacy of the sexes where the fullest form of love does not exist is the real offense against honor and chastity. The Grape Valley institutions make it possible for a man and woman to meet and know each other without fear or favor, without diffidence on her side for she has no cause to be ashamed, without patronage on his side, for he has no more to bestow than she. She is no longer a timid creature first to be captured like a shy bird and then held forever in the toils. Her sex is rehabilitated. Its place in progress and civilization, as a power for the spiritual development and intellectual culture of the world, is assured. The time has forever passed when shyness and shamefacedness must be considered her crowning attributes. Her longings for a union capable of perfecting her nature need no longer be concealed."

Of the many books that have been written to show a way out of the wilderness of old time traditions and superstitions in regard to the conjugal relations of women and men "An Experiment in Marriage" is one of the best, and deserves a wider circulation and better appreciation than it appears as yet to have received.

M. H.

The Negro Problem.

BY R. B. KERR.

Several southern persons have lately commented on the negro problem in Lucifer, but what they say is pooh-poohed on the ground that they are prejudiced. It seems to be taken for granted that a person who has lived among negroes all his life is incapable of forming an opinion about them, and that the only people worth listening to are those who know nothing about the subject. As I possess this qualification to perfection, I am sure that the readers of Lucifer will be delighted to hear what I have to say.

I have the great advantage of coming from the only important country in the world which is absolutely free from anything worth calling race antipathy. In the British Isles a negro can go to any school or college frequented by whites of his own social position, and be treated by all without a suggestion of inequality. An adult negro of education can marry an English lady of equal education without creating scandal, if she cares to have him. As Miss Elizabeth Banks points out in the "Nineteenth Century" for September, an English servant girl has no objection to have a negress as a fellow servant, and to sleep with her at night. Negro prostitutes are preferred to those of all other races. Jews, Chinese and natives of India, are regarded with equal freedom from all antipathy.

All other important nations have some race hatred, but they differ widely in their dislikes. The Georgians abhor a negro; the French a Jew; the Californians a Chinaman. All agree in thinking one another's antipathies very unreasonable.

Do I therefore think that all these race antipathies are mere prejudices? On the contrary, I believe that they are all well-grounded, because they exist. I know from experience that there are good reasons for the anti-Chinese feeling on the Pacific coast, and I am slow to believe that vast populations on every continent in the world are unanimously deceived about the facts of their daily experience.

(Concluded on page 326.)

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper th t has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

Personal and Impersonal.

I have lately been somewhat pointedly criticized for saying with emphasis, in a recent Lucifer, that "in more ways than one, woman is the race." This utterance to be fully understood should be quoted fully. In our issue No. 776, in replying to a criticism I said:

"Only in the perversion of this fact [the fact of sex] is there or can there be degradation of womanhood. And through the degradation of womanhood follows necessarily the degradation of the race, since, as we see it, in more ways than one, WOMAN IS THE RACE! As the mothers so are the sons and daughters. Woman is often spoken of as 'the sex.' 'Sex contains all,' says Whitman. Sex reform contains all reforms, says Lucifer."

Since penning these words I have seen no reason for recantation or for serious modification thereof. If there be somewhat of the hyperbolic—exaggerative, in this statement, it is because all axiomatic statements are more or less hyperbolic. "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world" is true only in the sense that the mother influence upon the child is the earliest and most lasting. As the home life, so is the national life, and woman is the central magnet of the home. There can be no home without the mother element. "There never was a great man who did not have a great mother," is another axiomatic saying the truth of which is not seriously questioned.

* * *

In line with this teaching is that of the editor of the New York "Journal," quoted in this issue—see article "Woman and the Cook Stove"—when he says "The higher a man's conception of woman's proper position the higher the man." But where does man get his conception of woman's proper position? Does he not get it where he gets all his earliest and most lasting impressions—from his mother? And if this be true, how important that women should take for themselves the highest, truest position possible for them to take? Some years ago a lady teacher among the Indians of Minnesota reported that when she reproved an Indian mother for doing all the work of the household, including carrying the water from a distant spring while her grown son was doing nothing at all—

"What do you mean?" asked the mother in great surprise. "Would you have my son disgrace himself?"

Whose fault was it that the young "brave" did not voluntarily take the heavy pail and bring the water for his mother? His earliest impression of his mother was that of a patient burden bearer, a household drudge, and for this impression the mother herself was responsible. She accepted this position as her fate because her mother had done so before her, and the son accepted his mother's view of what was proper and "respectable" for him to do, because to him there was no higher authority. Who can blame him? He did not want to disgrace himself and his mother also by doing what she had taught him was not proper for him to do. She had taught him that only war and the chase were honorable occupations for men. He was what his mother made him.

* * *

And what is true of the savage is equally true of the so-called civilized races. Why is war so popular as it is today, in America, in England, everywhere in fact? Is it not because women—who suffer most from wars—give the highest honors to the returning warrior? In Kansas we are told that an association of women has been formed who pledge themselves not to marry any man who has not enlisted as a soldier. What made the ancient Spartans for ages invincible in war? When sending her son to war the Spartan mother gave to him his shield with the parting injunction, "With this or upon this." That is, "Bring back your shield as a token of victory, or let it bear your lifeless body back to me." It is well known that the southern women were much harder to "reconstruct"—that it took much longer to make the wives and daughters of the "Confederacy" reconciled to the conditions of final surrender at Appomattox than it did the men who had fought the battle to the "last ditch."

Let the women of today say the word, and let them show by their treatment of men that they mean what they say, and the era of war and bloodshed would forever be at an end.

* * *

President McKinley said at Iowa Falls the other day: "It is no longer a question of expansion with us; we have expanded. If there is any question at all it is a question of contraction; and who is going to contract!?"

If the Filipinos, the Chinese or any foreign people had taken San Francisco and claimed sovereignty over the whole of California, saying "We have expanded, and who is going to contract?" What would McKinley say and do? Would he not say, "The sooner you 'contract' the better for your health," and if the command were not immediately obeyed he would summon the army and navy of the United States to compel the intruder to contract. It is the old fable of the lawyer and the farmer over again.

But our wise chief magistrate is not to be caught so easily. In the same speech he says, "We will not withdraw it, [the flag] because the territory over which it floats is ours by every tenet of international law." That is to say, it is ours by right of purchase from Spain.

It was Blackstone, I think, the great English jurist, who advised his friends not to pry too curiously into the origin of their land titles lest they should find, at last, that they held their lands by no better title than robbery and murder. Does Mr. McKinley need to be told that Spain's right to the Philippines has no better basis than robbery and murder?

Again, our chief ruler says he "has no policy against the will of the people." This is probably true. He looks for the drift of popular opinion. If he thought the people of the United States were opposed to expansion, opposed to holding the Philippines by conquest or by purchase, he would at once withdraw our forces and end the war. But wherever he goes McKinley meets with the evidence that the war is popular, and he has doubtless read American history well enough to know that every great political party that ever opposed war in this country and advocated peace, has been defeated at the polls.

McKinley is a politician of the politicians, and Ingersoll told the simple truth when he said, "All politicians are prostitutes." They have no moral standard for their conduct except political success, and political success means simply the votes of the unthinking mob which is swayed by passion and prejudice and not at all by reason or by enlightened humanitarian principles.

* * *

I shall be sorry to part company with so good a man as I believe Brother Beeson to be. See his letter in the "Voices" department. But the best of friends part, sometimes, and as Abraham said to Lot, the world is wide enough for us both. A word or two, however, in explanation, and in reply to the charge that Brother Beeson makes against the "management" of Lucifer.

Speaking for myself alone I can say with no twinges of conscience that my prejudices are and have been by no means wholly in favor of the "abolitionists" of the north and against the people of the south. I was born south of Mason and Dixon's line, was educated at a Southern Methodist college, was for a time an official member of that church, lived almost wholly in slave-holding states until long after the close of the civil war and have traveled somewhat extensively in four or five of these states, and therefore feel that I can speak understandingly and without sectional bias, of the matters touched upon by our evidently honest and sincere correspondent.

First, then, let me say, in regard to the much vexed and much vexing race problem. As to real human sympathy for and with the negro race I think there is much more of this to be found among the white people of the south than among the white people of the north. But this human sympathy is extended to the negro by the southern white people just so long, only so long, as he "keeps his place." To illustrate this I will relate the substance of a conversation with a very intelligent young Mississippian, a student in the State University of that state, while traveling in the south, only a few months ago.

Said he, "The people of the north seem utterly unable to understand us, of the south, and our attitude toward the colored race. We cherish no race hatred towards the negroes because of their color, but we know them, far better than the northern people can know them, and we know that they are not fit for social and political equality with white people. Intellectually and morally they are an inferior race and to admit them to political and social equality is doing an injury to both races. So long as the negro is a slave or a hired servant he is commonly well-behaved, industrious, honest and reliable, but when clothed with citizenship and his own master he becomes lazy, unreliable, dishonest, insolent, vain and misbehaved generally. Hence we do what we can to make the negro know his place and keep it, and while he does this we let him know that we are his best friends."

My observation in the south convinces me that this young man is quite honest in his views, and that he voices the popular feeling of the vast majority of the southern white race towards the colored people. This is why separate waiting rooms are provided for the negroes at all railway stations; this is why they are not allowed to travel in the same coaches with white people—except perhaps in the "smoker"—unless in the capacity of a servant; this is why the negroes are not permitted to attend the same schools or the same churches with white people, etc.

That there are other reasons for drawing the "color line" is perhaps true, though not so apparent to the average observer. One of these is doubtless the former condition of servitude of the black race. All men hate those they have injured, and most men despise those who have not the courage to maintain their liberty, or to die in the attempt. This explains why the American Indian—another inferior race, and certainly one quite as lazy and more filthy in his habits than is the negro—is treated with so much more respect than his darker colored brother.

Replying briefly to Friend Beeson's charge that Lucifer's writers have been unfair in treating of the outrages upon the colored men, north and south, I certainly fail to see it in that light. Proper mention may not have been made in our columns of shooting of negroes at Cartersville, Ind., but my accuser should remember that I have been absent on sick furlough, most of the time for many months last past; and he should also remember that the shooting of working men, white and black, at the behest of our plutocratic masters, has become so common of late years as to be regarded almost as a thing to be expected hence scarcely worthy of special mention. So long as the oppressed masses uphold by their votes the present industrial system, including the land and money system, we may expect such wholesale butcheries of workingmen to continue. Perhaps it is even best that they do continue,—as object lessons to show the stupid workers that no mere palliative measures will suffice to cure the evils and secure justice to all.

As to the lynchings that have startled and shocked thinking people everywhere, Friend Beeson must admit, if he lays aside sectional prejudice, that in proportion to population, black and white, these blots upon our boasted civilization have occurred far more frequently south than north of Mason and Dixon's line. He must admit, too, that burning and torture, and that, too, sanctioned by nearly the entire white population, has not been witnessed (so far as I now recall) north of said line, as they have been known to occur in the south, for many years. The main cause of this difference is not hard to find. It is doubtless chiefly owing to the fear of negro domination, and the desire to show to the world that he is a brutal, sensual savage, utterly unfit for political and social equality with the white race.

By this I mean to say that many if not most of the victims of the lynchings are innocent of the alleged crime. This is a serious charge to make against my white brethren, but I believe a careful examination of the facts will convince any fair-minded person of its truth.

The "Negro Question" has occupied considerable space in our columns for some months, and it is hoped that if Friend Beeson, Mrs. "M. E. W." or others wish to continue it further they will remember that our space is quite limited and that the race question, or the color line, is a side issue rather than a principal one in our work. I will also ask all who wish to use our columns to remember that epithets are not arguments, and that their frequent use weakens rather than strengthens the cause of truth.

* * *

L. D. White makes some very good points in her article in this issue and it may be my fault or my misfortune that I do not see that her points are all good. As my reply to Mrs. Patton in last Lucifer covers most of the ground whereon I am inclined to differ from Mrs. White I shall not repeat the argument so soon. Only in regard to one paragraph of hers I venture to ask whether she is really in earnest,—and that is when she speaks of the "broad-minded [and presumably broad-shouldered], generous man, harassed and watched and tyrannized over by a little, selfish, narrow-minded woman," etc. Mrs. W. had spoken in a previous paragraph of a spectacle that should make "gods and angels weep." It seems to me this other supposed spectacle would be one for "gods and men to howl at!" That is, to howl with laughter and derision. That any man could be "broad," in any sense who, would submit to such treatment, whether from a "little" or big woman, would seem to involve a glaring contradiction of some sort. I would recommend to any such man—and to any such woman—to read an "Experiment in Marriage," notice of which appears in this issue.

M. HARMAN.

Book Notices.

The monopoly of money—based as it is upon a government privilege whereby a few men are enabled to rob the producing masses by controlling the volume of legal tender money, the debt-paying, interest-paying and tax-paying money of the country—is one of the very worst of all the monopolies, combines and trusts, that now curse this falsely called "land of equal rights for all and special privileges for none."

There seems now to be a growing revolt against this government protected money trust. Hence the tremendous efforts put forth by those whose interest it is to preserve the integrity of this trust, to keep the people amused, or rather blinded, by the war question, by public pageants and by every scheme that diplomacy or state-craft can devise, whereby the masses can be kept quiet while this devil-fish monopoly sucks their life-blood.

Among the many books put forth in the interest of this revolt against the money trust is one by James Adleman, LL. D., and entitled "The Importance of Honest Money." This book of 330 pages professes to champion the "Rights of the Masses against the Privileges of the Classes," and aims to give a "Simple, Scientific and Invariable Standard of Price."

In the chapter upon "Political Parties" and the responsibility of these parties in fastening the present money system upon the people, the author says, in part:

"We all know that about the year 1858 the Whig party assumed the name Republican party. It changed its name, but not, on the whole, its principles. It was born in class legislation, and, with a few exceptions, it still promulgates these same pernicious doctrines. The Republican party of that early day is the same Republican party with which the masses are tussling today. The same Republican party that is today defending the gold standard for the interest of the classes against the interest of the masses. The same Republican party that passed the infamous class law in 1873, suspending the free and unlimited coinage of silver, which act contracted the volume of primary money nearly one-half, and thereby greatly appreciated the dollar, which is principally owned and controlled by the classes, and correspondingly reduced the price of all other property of the masses far below its former price. By the enactment of this infamous monopolistic law the Republican party enormously enriched the classes and correspondingly impoverished the masses. Hence it believes in the privileges of the classes. It is the same Republican party that enacted a high protective tariff in such a manner as to vastly swell the fortunes of the rich manufacturers and compel every purchaser of their products to pay a monopolistic price in a bloated market for the goods they manufacture.

"It is the same Republican party that passed the National Bank Act in such a manner as to greatly enrich the bankers to the injury of millions of others. It would be superfluous to give the details of this class legislation, for nearly every person is acquainted with the history of it. It is the same Republican party that passed the monopolistic laws by which the Standard Oil Trust is today amassing its fabulous fortune to the detriment of every citizen in the land. It is the same Republican party that legislated in favor of the Sugar Trust, so that this corporation gobbled about $25,000,000 of the people's money in a few days. It is the same Republican party that in 1878 authorized an express stipulation in a contract to be made, so that the debt must be paid in gold, instead of leaving it payable in any legal tender money of the United States, at the option of the debtor, and this express stipulation is one of the foulest, one of the most unscrupulous legislative acts that the class party has forced upon the masses for a number of centuries. It is the same Republican party that tries to make us believe today that the dear gold dollar, which is mostly in the possession of the classes, and which the masses cannot get, is such a boon for the unprosperous masses. Thus we see that the present Republican party is eminently the party of the classes. It is the child of the Whig party; the grandchild of the Federal party; the great-grandchild of the Tory party, which was on the side of King George III. when the American colonies struggled for independence more than a century ago."

I have not had time as yet to read the book entire, but from a hasty examination am convinced that it contains a mine of facts and figures that would be very useful to any one who wishes to be well informed upon this vastly important subject It may be ordered through this office. Price in paper 50cts.

—

"Cultivation of Personal Magnetism.

A book of one hundred and eight pages with the above title has been issued by LeRoy Berrier of Minneapolis, Minn. It will be remembered by many of our readers that Mr. Berrier was prosecuted in the federal court and imprisoned—sentenced to two years hard labor in the penitentiary at Stillwater, Minn., on the charge of sending "obscene literature" through the mail, the indicted matter being a little book called "Sexuality and its Functions." Mr. Berrier served one year of his sentence and was then released, pardoned by President McKinley. Since his release Mr. Berrier has published this little work on "Personal Magnetism." From a somewhat hasty examination of the contents I am impressed with the conviction that it is a work that will pay a careful perusal. The following paragraph will give the reader some idea of the author's style and methods:

"The great man or woman is the man or woman who has something to give all along some one line or more—the more, the greater. Greatness is influence. If a person can be positive to all, that person will attract all, for the negative is attracted and influenced by the positive. If one is a speaker and has not something to give to his auditors which they have not and can receive, he will not influence them pleasantly; he will be uninteresting to them. It will be said that he has no personal magnetism. The ability to influence, as stated in the chapter on "The Primal Law of Life," is eagerly sought by the large class who are possessed with a desire to rise above heredity and acquire originality. The great question of this class is, how can magnetism and the accompanying positiveness, which gives the ability to influence, be acquired? The answer is, "Through the development of the nerves and brain, which will be accompanied by muscular development." The first great essential in such development, and the acquirement of personal magnetism, is self-control. Alas, how few of us realize this fact! We think that we should be able to control others before we can control ourselves. The great singer magnetizes her audience through the self-control of her vocal organs. Self-control must be purchased with unceasing effort. We do not mean self-control in great matters alone, but in the small matters which, if combined, make up the greater part of life's doings. It is shown in other pages how pleasurable sensations assist in developing and unifying the nerve centers, thus making possible the power of concentration and self-control. Self-control is secured through conscious effort, and in securing it the nerves and their centers are developed. Through self-control the waste of personal magnetism is stopped. Thus with development of the nerves and their centers—the brain—and with no leakage and waste of personal magnetism, which occupies the nerves and brain, a person becomes magnetic. The majority of men create sufficient personal netism to make them superior beings did they not waste it. It is agreed by all who have given this matter careful attention that the greatest source of waste is through excessive sexual indulgence."

The price of the book, well bound in cloth, is $1.

The Negro Problem.

(Concluded from page 323.)

But there is certainly no need to carry things to such extremes as they have reached in Georgia. In Jamaica, Cape Colony, the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, we see a small minority of whites living among a great majority of blacks. Yet in none of these countries do we ever hear of a white woman being ravished by a negro, or of lynching, or of any person being burnt at the stake. I have met many mining men from South Africa, and they all agreed that such things were quite unnecessary. But none of the places I have named pretend to regard the negro as the equal of the white man. They do not let him vote, and they govern him pretty vigorously without his consent. They sometimes even beat him when he is lazy, but they draw the line at burning him.

The great trouble in the United States is the preposterous doctrine of the North that all men are equal. We know from Herbert Spencer's doctrine of the instability of the homogeneous that no two men could possibly be equal, and that differences of race and sex must go on increasing from age to age. Every test we can apply shows that the negro is inferior to the white man. He has been as long in the world as the white man, but he has left considerably fewer footprints on the sands of time. In many countries the negroes have a majority over the whites, but in all of them the white man rules, without regard to numbers.

One needs only to look at a negro to see that he is not built on the best modern plan. His stomach was all right for the hunting stage of evolution, when he might have to go for days between meals. His sexuality was all right for the tropics, where children needed little care and come early to maturity, and only needed to be produced in overwhelming numbers to be cut down by the scythe of war. But modern civilization demands just sufficient stomach to carry us in comfort to the next regular meal; just sufficient sexuality to produce as many children as we can carry through a long youth to a vigorous maturity; and all the will and intellect of which we are capable. The negro has a bullet head, and all anthropologists consider the long-headed type the higher one. One has only to compare the picture of any negro with one of Edison or Roosevelt to see how grievously the negro falls short of the modern standard of efficiency.

As for brotherhood, the negro is certainly the white man's brother in the same sense that the chimpanzee is his cousin. All three are descended from a common ancestor, but the chimpanzee diverged from our family stock sooner than the negro. Let us be as brotherly to the one as we can, and as cousinly to the other. But let us clear our minds of cant.

The people of the South might settle the race question by permitting indiscriminate cohabitation, and reducing the whole South to the level of Hayti. But no race will commit voluntary suicide. Straight is the gate, and narrow the way, that leadeth unto pure heredity. Weismann has taught us that even the purest races have an inherent tendency to degenerate, which can only be checked by the natural selection of war and starvation, or by secret artificial selection and rejection. The United States census of 1890 shows that there is not much interbreeding in the South. Virginia had more mulattoes, quadroons and octoroons than any other state, yet it had only 122,000 of these classes, as against 621,000 pure negroes.

As for the people of the North, I advise them to burn the Declaration of Independence and read the "Descent of Man." We are so near the twentieth century that it is time to get out of the eighteenth.

VARIOUS VOICES.

A. W. Frankenberg, Columbus, O.:—I see by the number on the wrapper that my subscription has expired. Enclosed find one dollar for which continue my subscription. Lucifer is always a welcome visitor to me, but when I get done reading it I give it away or send it to a friend in the hope that it may do some good.

—

J. M. Hadley, DeSoto, Kan.—I have received a sample copy of your paper. I am not well informed as to the line of thought and teachings of your paper but I judge by the sample copy, that it is mainly in the line of the book advertised on page 320 under the title "Women and Economics" by Charlotte Perkins Stetson. Find $2.00 enclosed for that book and "Health Hints" and "The Social Question."

—

Albina L. Washburn, Collins, Colo.:—I see by No. 777 you print a list of members of the Mutual Employment Association which I hailed at first as another "Co-operative Exchange" but was obliged to conclude it only a feature of the rebate system so often tried, cheapening goods and services instead of, on principle, making labor and products dear, thereby cheapening money or the medium of exchange as should be done. Let the M. E. A. try the other tack. Raise prices which are too low (some unnecessary labor is too high) issue its own cheap money and taboo legal tender.

—

Frank J. Stiles, Cambridgeport, Mass.:—I send you herewith $1, which please apply to my subscription account. Lucifer is helping me not a little, and I hope before long to have the privilege of meeting, at its home, some of those brave souls who through its columns are doing so much to enlighten the present generation. Some time ago I requested that notice of meetings of friends of the movement in Boston be sent me. The subsequent disruption of my firm disarranged my mail for a time, and I fancy that word may have been sent me and not received.

[Possibly information regarding meetings could be obtained by communicating with C. L. Swartz, Wellesley, Mass.]

A. J. Krueger, Chicago:—Having noticed the frequent requests in Lucifer for names and addresses for trial copies I hereby take the privilege of sending you a few. I agree with the statements in several issues past regarding Lucifer falling in the hands of those that have never seen or read a paper that dares to speak the truth as some people can not digest the truth, therefore it would do no good. No. 39 is a gem. I would be very much pleased if you would send a copy to each of the below addresses.

I was at Lake Geneva last spring and becoming acquainted I distributed copies of Lucifer and other radical papers.

—

E. T. Daniels, Kiowa, Kan.:—I believe my subscription expires with the next number. I do not have the money now to renew, yet we do not feel like quitting the Light Bearer just now, and if you will continue it to us we will send the pay later. I wish to say that I agree with you and Markland as to the colonization problem. I have watched for the sequel of your Thayer letter and have no doubt but that region has many advantages and think liberals who are in reach of that country might do well there. But there are scattered over this western country liberals who would like to join a group of those who believe in co-operation, who do not feel like going so far.

Moreover they would feel better satisfied in a country where there is at least some prairie. I am credibly informed that about one year from this fall there will be opened to settlers a reservation in southern Oklahoma, directly south of this place. I am also told it contains much very fine country, that it is about half and half prairie and timber, that it is well supplied with springs of good water and running streams. I believe it would make an admirable location for western liberals to colonize. I hope to go and see it for myself soon.

—

James Beeson, Hytop, Ala.:—In a few weeks my paid up time on subscription will expire, and I feel in honor bound to the cause of equal chances for all engaged in reform work to have my name erased from the book. I have been a subscriber for fourteen years or more and have found much in the Light Bearer to praise, but of late I find much to condemn; chief among which is the prejudice held by the management and contributors against the southern people, growing out of a war that has now been ended nearly thirty-five years. People who can hold prejudice against others that long will never accomplish much for the cause of humanity, more especially when they are guilty of the offenses they charge against the objects of their hatred. The appearance of articles headed "Southern Barbarism," "The Brutal Treatment of the Negro Race at the South," etc. etc., comes in bad taste at least from people who lynch negroes for the very same crimes as readily as the southern people do. No where in the south have negroes been shot to death like so many sheep killing dogs simply because they asked for a chance to work for a living like they were at Cartersville, Ind., and many other places in the northern states, and not one word has Lucifer's management or contributors to say about it. But when Mrs. M. E. W. of Montgomery, Ala., remonstrated in a very mild manner, even for a woman, it brought down all the odium of anti bellum abolitionism. Even such champions of equal rights as C. L. James lends the aid of his pen in farther degrading—or at least trying to degrade—the south. He calls the attention of the public to the fact that he discontinued his support of free-thought publications many years ago because they had fallen in line with conventionalism and respectability, and had therefore ceased to exert any influence for the reform movement, etc. Well, I quit them about the same time and for the same cause and will now quit Lucifer and its supporters on the same principles, although it will go harder with me than quiting infidel papers when they became popular and courted favors from the "powers that be." Twenty five years ago I gave up the love and esteem of an aged mother, brothers and sisters and entered the freethought ranks to battle for the right of every individual 784.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

to think and act as his or her conscience dictated what was right and proper for them to do. I have been losing friends and money ever since, but I have sacrificed, and will continue to sacrifice, all for what I think is right, well knowing that a few more short years at most will settle the whole matter so far as I am concerned.

With the love that I have long cherished for suffering humanity, and nothing but good will and friendship for all concerned, adieu.

WOMEN and ECONOMICS,

A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women. By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Here are a few of the page headings of this remarkable work: "Economic environment; The dependence of women; No inherent disability of sex; Marriage not a partnership; House service as a livehood; Motherhood and economic production; Modification to maternity; The usefulness of sex; Differentiation of sex; Sex and humanity; The peacock's tail; Sex distinctions; The eternal feminine; unreasoning devotion; Women as persons; Race-attributes and sex-attribute; The normal child; Personal profit and sex-relations; The influence of heredity; The young man and the young woman; The effect of custom; The sex relation personal; Innocence and ignorance; Marriage with independence; The increasing difficulty of marriage; Supporting one's family; Virtue and vice; The results of repression; The harm that women do; The development of love; The hope for the future; The martyr and the pioneer; The dropping of the bars; The meaning of the new woman; Motherhood in education; A criminal failure; Marriage and the family; Love's young dream; The heart and the stomach; Socializing the household industries; The stomach as a family tie; The servant wife; World-servants and house servants; A wider maternity; Between the old and the new; "The vices of the slave;" The outgrown stronghold. Printed on strong, heavy paper; 350 pages, bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale by M. Harman, 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY. Co-educational. Send for catalog. A. E. Gammage, President. 167 Dearborn St., Chicago.

RIGHTS OF WOMEN
IN THE SEXUAL RELATIONS,

By Karl Heinzen. A new edition together with the startling letters of Louise Mayen" on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German women at Frauenstadt. A book of 206 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Price paper bound, 50 cents; cloth, $1

THE BALLAD OF READING JAIL. BY C. 3.3.

This powerful poem of more than 600 lines, is the work of OSCAR WILDE C. 3. 3. having been the poets prison number during his confinement in Reading Jail. It is dedicated to the memory of a trooper of the Horse Guards who was hanged in the jail at that time, and it depicts the terrible sensations of the author and his fellow prisoners before and after the execution.

Just issued; price, in cloth, blue, vellum back, beautifully printed from large type on hand-made antique paper, deckle edges; reading matter on one side of the paper; a sumptuous book of 96 pages, 7 inches by 5, $1. In paper, 44 pages, 10 cents. Mailed postpaid on receipt of price, by M. Harman, 507 Carroll Avenue, Chicago.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present immoral and unsanitary management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.
This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Women in Marriage Slavery

Will find in HILDA'S HOME a story exposing the horrors of their condition as faithfully and as fearlessly as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" exposed the horrors of Negro slavery in the South. The story is more entertaining than many modern works of fiction and the plain truths it tells will find responsive echoes in the aching, bursting hearts of many women who know the galling effects of marriage thralldom.

The book contains 425 pages. Price handsomely bound in cloth, $1. In paper cover 50 cents. Send in your order NOW—especially if you want extra copies for distribution among your friends.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Persons Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 20 cents. Address Moses Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. R. H. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A book, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.

"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.

"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.

Sample pages free Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Missing Link Modern Spiritualism. By A. Leah Underhill. A book for all spiritualists and investigators. "Hear all sides, then decide." 23 chapters; 478 pages; 16 illustrations, including portraits of the Fox family. History of the Hydesville rappings, as given by eyewitnesses, the threats of mob violence; remarkable and well-attested manifestations; the "exposures" disposed of, etc. Handsomely bound in cloth. Publishers price, $1.50. On receipt of $1.27, and 13 cents for postage, we will send the book to any address.

A Gentleman of liberal views and a freedom lover wants lady correspondent living in and within a radius of 100 miles of Decatur, Ill. Address, H. C., care of Lucifer.

Wanted: A woman holding radical views to keep house for a family of three adults in a city in Massachusetts. A pleasant home for the right person. Write to M., 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

The Story of An African Farm. Olive Schreiner's masterpiece. A story of the struggle for light, the search for truth, the yearning for happiness of bright young English and German people, among the ignorant and coarse Boers and Kaffirs of South Africa. This is a work of art, and of truth. Well bound in cloth. 304 pages. Price, 40 cents, postage 10 cents. For sale at this office.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 42. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, OCT. 28, E. M. 299. [C. E. 1899.] WHOLE No. 785

For the Future.

Ah no! not as now forever shall the eyes of Hope be dimmed
For Freedom's fruitless endeavor, and Labor despised and unhymned,
For lo! even now a glimmer athwart the heavens above!
And hate and fear grow dimmer in the crescent light of love.

James M. Pryse.

Keep It From the Girls.

BY JAY CHAAPEL.

"What an immoral paper! I would not have my girls read it for anything. It's terrible!" said a sharp visaged, frigid Mrs. Grundy on reading a very moderate article on marriage in Lucifer, and then added with a significant scowl that would have done credit to Torquemada, "And worst of all it is true, but don't let the girls know it."

O, yes that is in accordance with Christian morals to let the joyous, beautiful girls go on in ignorant dreaming that marriage is nothing but a tender, decorous, formality. Help them off on a bridal tour with glowing anticipations without knowing a sing'e fundamental principle of Love.

Ignorance with such parents is morality and bliss, ultimately they often learn that they have sown the seeds of anguish and despair.

Mark the shade of anxiety and pain on the face of the bride on their return. As the toiling, struggling years roll on the pain grows into a dark, dismal shadow that never entirely leaves the sallow woe-begone face once so beautiful, and full of benignant smiles.

A few years ago I met a woman of rare talent and refinement in one of the numerous thriving cities of New York State. She had been married thirty years, and was the mother of several intelligent, beautiful children. She told me with calm, gentle dignity and firm convictions that could she have done so and retained the respect of the community she would "have severed the marriage bond curse in two days after that Christian marriage ceremony." Yet public opinion—blind, barbarous, cruel Custom, the effete old hag—had held her in chains all those thirty years.

In those days there was no "Canada" for married women to flee to as now. Our laws and customs, bad as they are, have greatly improved in the last forty years through the constant and persistent agitation of such papers as Lucifer and its editors and writers.

"Each human thing can something do
To help the world along:
Nature hears the chirp of the cricket
As it hears the angel's song."

Public disgrace has for centuries been held over women in place of a rod of iron. A world-weary and eminently respectable wife said in my presence as a friend remonstrated with her for permitting her health to be broken and her spirits crushed—"I must submit. He says if I do not he will seek some one that will, and I would rather die than have that disgrace." Many women live similar lives of "respectable," obedient torture, mentally and physically, and in consequence welcome their departure from this life with sweet relief from "woman's natural protector(?)" endowed by "Christian holy matrimony."

The joyous, happy innocent girls must not hear a word of criticism. "Keep it from the girls" is the shibboleth of church and state. Don't utter a word of the real facts lest these degrading and barbarous immoralities of the pet institution be exposed.

Those Christian moralists remind me of what Sam Wilkinson said to his sister-in law, the illustrious and noble Elizabeth Cady Stanton, in the autumn of 1872 regarding the Beecher-Tilton scandal. He told her he knew of Henry Ward Beecher's derelictions, but said he—"It must not get out, I am interested in 'The Christain Union,' in Mr. Beecher's books and particularly in his Life of Christ. If this scandal should get out it would knock the 'Life of Christ' higher than a kite."

The scandal did get out notwithstanding the immense religious efforts to suppress it, and did "knock the Life of Christ higher than a kite," as he had so truly prophesied. It was knocked so high that it never came down, and the publisher failed in consequence financially.

And if these suppressors of natural morality would allow the Light-Bearer to turn its full rays of intelligence and progress it would "knock" many more degrading, brutal practices of mental slavery now held sacred, higher than any kite that ever flew.

The time is coming (it is already here in some localities) when women will not glide ignorantly and blindly into marriage under priestly and state tyranny. Women in all lands are beginning to understand, and act on that understanding, that they have individual rights irrespective of husbands or imaginary gods or devils. Thanks, a thousands thanks to the Fanny Wrights, Mary Wollstonecrafts, Mrs. Stantons, Lucretia Motts, and a long list of men and women reformers among spiritualists and freethinkers who have bowed no knee to gold and tyrannical customs. Thanks also to Lucifer and other papers that have espoused the cause of human rights regardless of creeds, ecclesiastical formalities, color or sex, and have not been afraid to face prison walls and speak what seemed to them true and for the good of the race, even if it did seem "horrible" to some timid minds steeped in the iniquitous practices engendered by the rack and inquisition.

Lucifer, or the Light Bearer—Which?

BY H. B. MONROE.

As the end of the nineteenth century draws near the time seems ripe for a more aggressive, more concerted and broader campaign in the interest of the new humanity—the humanity which shall be in accord with the march of progress, which shall aim towards the production of a fitter race, toward the elimination of obstacles that stand in the way of race evolution, toward the solution of social problems, the abolition of war, the dethroning of superstition, the promotion of a universal sisterhood and brotherhood, and the establishment of freedom of thought, speech, and deed so far as is consistent with the idea of non-invasion.

The platform on which such a campaign must be conducted should be broad enough to be accepted by women and men of all races and of all shades of political and religious belief, so long as their desire is for the welfare of the human race. The central and basic problem of all the social problems is the sex problem. The twentieth century should see woman freed from the bondage of sex superstition and given her rightful place as the equal of man in all human rights and opportunities.

Whether woman is man's physical equal need not be discussed. It may even be admitted that she is not. In fact it would hardly be in accord with the known facts of evolution to expect her to be so after hundreds of centuries of sexual enslavement to man. But granting that her powers and capacity are so great as to make a claim for her equality a disputed point—which it certainly is—who can tell to what degree of physical and mental stature she might attain if the obstacles to her evolution, due to false education and tyrannical social customs, were removed?

All persons who have given the problem of humanity any careful study must agree, then, that the enfranchisement of woman from the domination of man is absolutely necessary for the natural and unhindered evolution of the human race. This then must be the basic principle of the fight that must be made for the normal development of humanity. All others are subsidiary and of minor importance.

In this connection I wish to make a suggestion which I earnestly believe will, if adopted, increase the power and usefulness of the paper. It is that the name Lucifer be dropped with the beginning of the year 1900 and that the paper be called The Light Bearer hereafter, and I ask all readers to give a kindly consideration to my reasons for favoring the proposed change.

1. The name Lucifer is Latin and its real significance is not understood by thousands of persons into whose hands the paper may come. It is true that thousands of Latin words are in daily use in our language, but it must be admitted that it would be hard to find another Latin word in common use among English-speaking people which is so generally, so commonly, misunderstood as the word Lucifer.

2. To the uneducated person—and it is the uneducated who are doing the most toward populating the earth—the word Lucifer signifies the devil. It suggests to them the principle of evil—all that is antagonistic to good.

3. It is futile to expect people to give support, or even fair consideration to a paper which they believe is antagonistic to what they believe is good.

4. By retaining a name so generally misunderstood the cause which it advocates is injured, because, in the eyes of those who think Lucifer is merely a name for the devil, the very name of the paper prejudices them against its doctrines. Many of them, after a hasty glance at it, throw it away or consign it to the flames with the remark that it "is appropriately named, for it teaches a devilish doctrine."

5. In recent issues of this paper the editor has run an article explaining the meaning of its name. This, apparently, is an admission that the name is frequently misunderstood. Else why the necessity for an explanation of the name when the space used for that purpose might be utilized in explaining the importance of the cause which the paper advocates?

6. To the objection that the misunderstanding of the name is due to ignorance, I would answer that it is the ignorant that the paper is seeking to enlighten—not in etymology and the translation of Latin, but in the desirability of removing obstacles to the evolution of the human race.

7. To the objection that the paper has made its struggle for existence and has accomplished much good under the name of Lucifer I would answer that the struggle might have not been so hard and better results might have been achieved if its name had not prejudiced the powers of ignorance against it.

8. To the objection that to abandon the name of Lucifer would be a surrender to the ignorant who have blindly opposed it because of its name, I would answer that the change of name to The Light Bearer is merely a translation of the name Lucifer into English and that it would deprive the great majority of the ignorant of their strongest ground of opposition to the paper.

9. To the objection that, because of the old association of the paper's present name with the cause of a new and better humanity, to drop it would be unwise and will cause many of the readers to feel that they have lost an old friend, I would give the answer that radicals commonly give to conservatives who cling to old customs and beliefs, namely: that "age makes nothing sacred." This is an age of progress. Friends of progress can not afford to be "ruled by the tomb," no not even the tomb of the Latin language from which the word Lucifer is an exhumed and galvanized corpse with the smell of the grave clothes of a long buried goddess upon it. The Light Bearer, on the other hand, is a living, breathing name; a name that he who runs may not only read, but understand also.

10. We want to teach the living truth to a living people; not to a dead race. Let us do it under a living name. We want to reach the people who are NOW on earth. Let us be up to date and not attempt to rally the hosts of progress under the banner of a forgotten goddess, a creature of the ignorant superstition of the benighted past.

I will not take space to enumerate further reasons why I favor abandoning the name of Lucifer, but I would suggest that the editor open his columns to those who wish to give any reason for retaining the name which I have not answered. But it is reasons that should be given—not merely expressions of preference.

Woman in Prof Peck's Crucible.

Anne Elizabeth Cheny in Springfield, Mass. Republican, Oct. 15.

From time immemorial men have fought about women with swords, cutlasses, pistols and tongues. They have spilled blood and venom to some purpose, no doubt, though the contest waxes hotter as the years march on. Today a queer battle presents itself in the shape of a pen-battle between a man and a woman in one of the great magazines of New York, he reiterating the hackneyed doctrines which he claims are eternal law, and she declaring for a new Bible, a new gospel and a heretofore unused principle, which shall present woman to the world in the guise of an individual, with a well defined purpose and a positive aim.

We propose mainly to deal in this article with some few propositions laid down by Prof. H. T. Peck in the Cosmopolitan of June in his manly contest with Charlotte Perkins Stetson, striving to look at his claim with unprejudiced eyes rather than from a woman's, for this question is many-sided, and there are laws and laws and laws, which may perhaps become to us as working hypotheses, whether we understand the almighty law of them or not.

Prof Peck in his "Woman of Today and of Tomorrow," drives home some self-evident truths, and after having reinstated them where they belong, proceeds to unveil them before the astonished eyes of those who know them so thoroughly that they might as well have not been known at all. In fact, they are like the air we breathe and the water we drink, so common that they are practically forgotten or ignored.

A would-be modern Jeffrey, Prof. Peck bares his mental muscles and enters the ring to fight for the rights of men, pummelling right and left at an invisible foe, punishing something which he alone sees, and completely worsting this dangerous phantom in the few first rounds.

Man, he claims, "is the finest and noblest and most godlike figure in the world wherein we live, the earth, indeed, has been given to him—it is his own." And then, in rhapsody of admiration of man's superiority and mastership, he spends himself in a profound eulogy upon the divine brotherhood, from which of course, are excluded those "spineless" gentlemen who sit on the platform of lady lecturers and listen to the "pow-wow" of female harangues.

Truly this was all self-evident before he wrote it. No one in his sane senses denies that man builds the railroads, spans the rivers, stretches the telegraph wires, binds together the continents or belts the globe. He maketh the desert to blossom as the rose and rocks of granite to gush with liquid sound. His engines of speed snort across the country in a proud, imperious way, and cut through the rebellious foam of ocean with haughty impetuosity, going straight to port as though a wave were but an incident, and a 5000 mile stretch of water the merest bagatelle—he is mighty, no doubt.

His brain fiber is sinuous and tough, and his brawn hard like granite. Moreover, he is projectile, not only with the bullet, but with thought. He can strike true at the target of a Filipino's heart with a well aimed ball, or hit the brain of the prince of Wales with the dynamic impulse of an idea, aided by the invisible wire of ether or faith; and yet this man with his X-ray eye, is obliged to look out for his rights, which are somewhat endangered because of his sixteenth century gallantry and inherent good will.

Furthermore, man has not only conquered that feminine thing called Earth, but the place for woman has been marked out by him also—as though God had nothing to do with the matter—and in this place "she is bound to stay," says Prof. Peck, "because best for him,"—man—"and it may be added for her as well." We should judge from this argument that her past outlines her future, that what she has been implies what she will be. But this line of reasoning, it would seem, is somewhat fallacious. For centuries, indeed for all previous time, things were not as they are now, at least as written history reveals. An inventor readjusts something and lo! the face of earth and humanity changes. Permanency is manifested only in the immutable laws themselves but even they modify each other, and man who was once paralyzed by electricity in the form of lightning, has become somehow equal to the task of making it his abject slave, in spite of a far-back ancestor who protested against the blasphemy of such impertinence toward Deity.

Woman as woman must always be true to the negative pole of being for which she stands, but woman as an individual is another question. Indeed she has an interrogation mark stamped upon her already, and the future alone can answer the challenge. So, then, if she were only woman, a sort of negative mushroom ordained to bring forth her kind, we should agree with Prof. Peck absolutely. In muscle, certainly, she is no match for man, nor can her endurance be in any way compared to his. She would present a sorry figure running up the rigging of a ship if a hurricane were blowing on the high seas of the Atlantic, her breath frozen on her cheek, and her clothes rattling with ice on her limbs. Nor would she look well at work on the canal of Nicaragua, in a panama hat, stripped to the waist, dripping with sweat, striving to wrench South America away from the North with the steel of her arm. Nor is she exactly pretty stoking coal in the room of the engine, covered with smut. Nor desirable perched on a ladder perilously close to the eaves of a three story house, cutting away at the gargoyles that grin maliciously at her in their combined endeavor to scare her to death. No, no! the law of adaptation establishes her very certainly where she best fits; in fact the question is self-settling,—she will do what she can do and what she can't she won't."

Nevertheless, she has recently discovered that she is an individual, all objections to the contrary notwithstanding, and even majestic man will find it hard to wipe out this new creature that has come to stay. Why? you ask—he is stronger than she, he is master in spite of her, and if the all-enduring, good-natured lion chooses to stretch himself and rise—what then? Nothing, simply nothing. To be sure, we admit that there is not much to hinder (if men should harmoniously combine) a wholesale incarceration of women, a beastly taking of her by force, and a perpetual maternity thereby entailed which would reduce her to the level of the savage, nay more, of the things that crawl. But let us see.

Prof. Peck implies in his article that it is love and companionship, and beauty and charm that man demands. If this be so we hereby declare, in spite of his assertion that when man will stand "no further nonsense" he forces her to his own sweet will, and that "the shock acts as a tonic to her nerves, the note of mastery, of domination, thrills her through and through and she becomes again serene and soothed and wholly charming"—in spite of this we say, in the name of all educated, refined, companionable, beautiful women—it cannot be. Love and beauty can no more be bribed, ordered or whipped into honest manifestation than can a law be annihilated. Woman through her cowardice may simulate these qualities when man coerces her, but the real thing he fails to get, and thus by his very brute power cheats himself of the coveted prize. He may force her to become the mother of a degenerate race, but it will be bred in hell and reared in hate. This position, it seems to us, should mankind elect to take it, would be somwhat like "cutting off the nose to spite the face."

We entirely agree with Prof. Peck that the law of sex is eternal, in fact, a basic principle which no new movement nor series of movements can destroy; but we also assert that there is another law, namely of individuality, which is also immutable and divine. We have come then to a battle of principles and as there is no such thing as destruction on such a field, the most we can expect is a modification and readjustment.

Sex and sentiment go hand in hand and will assert themselves forever and ever. All the glory and glamour, beauty and fascination of life are born from this incomparable pair. But the individual also is a majestic being, standing cold, and hard-thinking, erect, among the flowers of a sex paradise, as rises the aspiring mountain amid the charms of a Kashmiran vale, unique incontrovertible, unrivaled,—and this individual called woman has come on earth to stay.

So, then, all this controversy, in one sense, amounts to nothing except perhaps to tickle man with his own conceit, and woman with her own vanity. "Principles are eternal,"—this is an old saw, but it strikes home. The individual cannot be annihilated; neither can sex; the question will settle itself, and while He may imprison and abuse an entity, he can no more destroy it than can She turn spring into winter or fire into ice.

The Psychology of Sex.

Charles Bellamy in "An Experiment In Marriage."

Miss Barden: Let me tell you something about that man and woman. They are both considerably past middle life. Both have been married more than once before, and have been the parents of children. Now, for the first time, they are happy. They are all in all to each other.

Mr. Vinton: What was their attraction for each other?

Miss Barden: It would take an unerring psychologist to say why any man and woman should or should not fall in love with each other. Certain qualities are in themselves attractive—beauty and grace, sweetness of temper; and first marriages are contracted most commonly in consequence of these qualities. Awkwardness, inharmonious features, obstinate or sullen tempers are in themselves repelling. Still love stays or goes without reference to outward attractions. The plainest women often, most often, it seems to me, are the objects of the most passionate devotion. Men with unattractive features are among the most irresistible with our sex. Perhaps it is a matter of magnetic currents. Perhaps it is a matter of spiritual insight, the groping of the soul for that other nature which will enable it to complete itself. Perhaps the nature is dual, as in so many plants, male and female. Its halves are separated, and ever reaching out for the union which is their perfection, a union, spiritual, intellectual, and physical. This reaching out for completion is called desire. This perfect union, when attained, is perfect love. The more or less perfect, and more or less lasting give us taste of love. Love, in perfection, comes only with the perfect union.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

A Plan of Campaign.

Once more the shortening days and lengthening nights admonish us that winter will soon be here. In the order of nature winter is the season of repose, the season of recuperation, of reinvigoration; also of reflection, of investigation and of mental improvement. How to make the most of this season of reflection and of comparative leisure, is, or should be, a question for earnest thought for us all.

To the narrowly selfish,—to the egoist, or to one who makes personal advantage, personal gratification, self- aggrandizement, the chief aim in life, the question of how to spend the winter months will involve motives and considerations very different from those that appeal with greatest force to the altruistically selfish person. The motives and the acts of the first named class spring primarily from the instinct of self-preservation while the motives and the acts of the second class are traceable to the instinct of race-preservation.

That both these instincts, and the motives that spring from them, are necessary and right, when properly directed by reason, will probably be denied by very few, and these few are those who maintain that all human acts and motives are egoistic, and that altruism is a fraud, a misnomer, a delusion. To the writer of these lines, however, the highest and best selfishness is that which embraces the entire race of human kind, if not the whole of animated nature, and believing that the readers of Lucifer substantially agree with me in this view, I proceed to ask how can we spend the winter months to best advantage for the benefit of our fellow human beings.

Looking beyond the narrow confines of our own domiciles we find much to cause pain to the sympathetic heart and mind; much that we would gladly change had we the power to do so. We see evidence of want—of deprivation or lack of common necessaries and comforts of life, in the midst of enormous accumulations or surplus of these necessaries and comforts. We see evidence that a large proportion of our fellow human beings are over-worked and under-fed, while their neighbors do not work at all, and have more of life's material blessings than they can possibly use or enjoy in any natural or rational way, and who are therefore compelled to invent artificial or unnatural ways of consuming or destroying.

We see the strong, the so-called civilized and more enlightened nations invading, robbing and murdering their less powerful and less civilized brethren, in the name of patriotism, of humanity and religion. We find hatreds based upon differences in color, in race, in religious opinions, in economics, in politics, in social or moral habits and customs. We see the results of these hatreds in the shooting of hungry working men in some sections of the country, and in the hanging and burning of passion crazed victims of ignorance and oppression in other sections. Everywhere we see evidence of man's inhumanity to man. Even in the so-called charitable institutions,—of church, of state or of municipal origin, we see abundant evidence that narrow selfishness—greed or vanity—is the impelling motive either in the founding or in the management of these institutions.

"But what of your 'plan of campaign?'" some of our readers are perhaps asking: "All these things we knew before you spoke of them. What is your remedy? What have you to offer that has not already been tried?"

Ah, yes! What or where is the remedy, is the main question. The symptoms of disease are patent enough. He who runs may read the symptoms; who of us that reads the symptoms is wise enough to look for the causes—the underlying hidden causes of the evils that afflict us? Is there not too much reason to believe that our doctors, our reformers, are mere charlatans, mere empirics? Is it not true that we all are working too much in the realm of effects, instead of trying to find and remove the producing causes? trying to lop off the branches while the root remains intact?

Some of us have reached this conclusion, many years ago, and for our insistence in looking for basic causes we have been ostracised, prosecuted and persecuted—called all sorts of bad names, or names considered bad by the unthinking and passion-swayed multitude; imprisoned—robbed of liberty and property and almost robbed of life.

But amid all the discouragements we have had much to encourage us. A small but resolute band of workers have remained faithful and true. They have had the courage of their convictions. With Lowell they have felt, said, and acted:

> I honor the man who is willing to sink
> Half his present repute for the freedom to think,
> And when he has thought, be his cause strong or weak,
> Will sink t'other half for the freedom to speak;
> Not caring what vengeance the mob has in store—
> Be that mob the upper ten thousand or lower.

And now, at last, near the close of the cycle, the trend of popular opinion seems to be setting our way. Popular authors, poets, orators—those who sway the multitudes, have spoken in favor of looking for primary or bed rock causes. Among popular poets we name Gerald Massey, whose utterance, "We must begin in the creatory if we would benefit the race," etc.—is already well known to our readers. Among popular orators we are glad to be able to claim the name of the world-famous agnostic, Robert G. Ingersoll. As already stated in these columns this prince of modern orators, in the very last of his published lectures, planted himself squarely and unmistakably upon the platform for many years occupied by the writers for Lucifer.

This, then, in as few words as possible, is our plan of campaign, namely, to arouse, by every means in our power, the sluggish public conscience to a recognition of what we believe to be the most important of all ethical facts or principles, that "Science must make woman the owner, the mistress, of herself. Science, the only savior of mankind, must put it in the power of woman to say whether she will or will not become a mother." With Ingersoll, whose language we are quoting, we believe that "this is the solution of the whole question. This frees woman," and when woman is free the race will be free, and not till then."

That is to say, if science frees woman then woman will be no longer ignorant, and when no longer ignorant she will choose none but the wise to co-operate with her in creating a new race. Then will be incarnated the trinity, and these three will redeem the race from the hells of Slavery, Hate and Ignorance.

FREEDOM, LOVE, WISDOM,

Reader: are you willing to be a soldier in this campaign? If so we ask you to write us at once, and let us know how you can co-operate with us, and how we can co-operate with you.

Shall We Change Our Name?

The question of the name of the paper, which is discussed by H. B. Monroe in another column, is one which has often been considered both in and out of Lucifer's columns. Some of Lucifer's friends are very strongly attached to the name; while others are as strongly convinced that the name is an injury to the paper. I think that nearly all will agree that in itself, aside from the demoniacal significance with which it has been burdened, Lucifer is a euphonious, a beautiful name, and one which means exactly the idea which we wish to convey—that of a herald of the dawn of a better day.

But the question arises: Is it wise to expend much of our force in the mere effort to make our name understood? Is it true, even, that much force is expended in that way? This is the question that the friends of Lucifer can answer better than we here in the office can possibly do.

Lucifer has many warm friends who have taken it for many years, and who, seemingly, would make almost any sacrifice for its welfare. And yet many of these have told us they dare not let their friends, and sometimes not even members of their families, know that they receive such a paper. Now what we want to know is whether it is the name of the paper, or the ideas advocated therein, that makes them fear to let it be seen.

If the name should prove to be an obstacle to the usefulness of the paper, it could be changed; though for many reasons its relinquishment would cause regret. But as long as we think as we do at present, we could not change the central ideas of the paper even if by doing so we could quadruple the subscription list. Yet to increase the circulation and influence of the paper is an object which we would strive very earnestly to attain at any cost except the sacrifice of principle. For this purpose I shall ask a few questions, and I hope that all who feel interested in this work will answer them.

1. Do you find, in introducing Lucifer to your friends, that the name prejudices them against the paper?

2. If so, do you believe that, were the name Lucifer dropped, they would be equally shocked by the ideas advocated therein?

3. If the name should be dropped at the first of the year, and the Light-Bearer retained, or some other substituted, how many yearly subscriptions, at the rate of three for $2, or five for $3, can you guarantee for the year 1900, provided such change is made?

4. Do you believe that the name Lucifer is an aid in interesting people in the paper and in the work?

5. Would you feel less interest in it, if the name were dropped, and would you feel that such action was retrogression?

6. If you favor the retention of the name Lucifer, how many subscriptions at the rate given in query 3, can you guarantee for the year 1900, on condition that the name is retained?

Please answer queries by number. If you answer by simple "Yes" and "No," a postal card will do; though we shall be glad to have your reasons for thinking as you do, if you feel inclined to give them.

We hope that many of Lucifer's friends will see their way clear to extend its power by sending us subscribers at the very low rate here given. But we want your opinion, anyway, even though unaccompanied by promises of subscriptions.

WHAT OF THE FORM?

It may not be out of place to say here that we have under consideration the change of form of Lucifer to magazine size, the pages being just half the size of the present. We should like to publish sixteen pages, with cover, or twenty-four pages, if we do not add cover. The reduction of the size of pages three years ago, gave almost universal satisfaction; but we receive many complaints that the pages are not yet small enough to make a book of convenient size when bound. We should be glad to make the change if we could see our way clear to do so. It would, however, involve a considerable extra expense which we would scarcely be justified in assuming unless we could know that the friends of Lucifer would help to bear it, and the best way in which to give this aid is in extending the subscription list. Will those who favor the suggested change please let us hear from them, and also let us know how much aid they can give toward making it?

We hope that all interested in the welfare of Lucifer will let us hear from them at once. It is probable that this is the last time that the question of the change of name will come up for discussion. If the name is not changed with the first of the year, it is likely that Lucifer it will be to the end of the chapter—or at any rate, as long as the name Harman remains on its editorial pages. As to the change of form, it is absolutely necessary, for the purpose of binding that the change, if change there be, shall be made at the first of the year.

What shall the answer be?

LILLIAN HARMAN.

Plagiarism.

From Santa Ana, Calif., her present address, Mrs. Lois Waisbrooker writes us as follows:

"I am very much astonished to find in Lucifer, No. 783 under the heading of 'A Spiritualistic View,' an article taken bodily from my 'Folly of Worship, or the Curse of Godism' and ascribed to Mrs. Josie K. Folsom, Springfield, Mo. Will you please explain? I published 1100 while at Clinton, Iowa, and many of them were sold from your office. The article is word for word mine, and justice to me demands that you should say so."

Not having a copy of "The Folly of Worship, or Curse of Godism," to refer to, I take Mrs. Waisbrooker's word that the selection I made from Mrs. Folsom's pamphlet is a plagiarism. Yes, we sold quite a considerable number of the pamphlet of which Mrs. W. speaks, and regret that it is out of print. Having met Mrs. Folsom at the Clinton, Iowa, camp in August last and having heard her speak and "give tests" from the platform I am loth to think that she would knowingly appropriate and claim as her own the words as well as the ideas of another. If I recollect rightly Mrs. Folsom and her husband stated that the pamphlet "Godism" from which I quoted, was written automatically by the hand of Mrs. Folsom while her eyes were bandaged to exclude the light,—when under medical treatment for inflammation of the eyes. Can it be that her "spirit control" is responsible for the plagiarism? And who knows but that Mrs. Waisbrooker herself was under "control" when she wrote her pamphlet on the same subject, and that that control plagiarized from some previously written book or pamphlet?

In all seriousness, is it not a grave question whether there is any such thing as originality in literature? Even so original a poet as Edgar A. Poe is seriously charged with being a plagiarist; that his most famous poem "The Raven" is largely a reproduction of Albert Pike's "Isadore."

It is doubtless true, as stated by literary critics that there is, and can be, little if any originality in ideas, but to copy, not only the ideas, but the exact language of another without giving credit is usually considered a serious breach of decorum, not to say of moral honesty. We shall be glad to hear Mrs. Folsom's explanation of the matter, but must decline extended controversy over the question of priority of utterance of any particular thought or any particular grouping of ideas.

M. H.

The Emancipated Horses.

BY R. B. KERR.

The outlying parts of Russia are remarkable for all kinds of humane movements. It is not generally known, however, that there is a large community in Siberia in which horses have for many years had equal rights with men. This reform now works extremely well, but at first the emancipation of horses led to some extraordinary exhibitions of folly. Perhaps the worst was the formation of the Equine Union, to regulate the relations between men and horses.

The object of the Equine Union was to guarantee support for life to every horse. As the numbers of men and horses were about equal, the Union thought to accomplish its end by making the following rules:

1. That each horse should only be allowed to be ridden by one particular man, and vice versa.

2. That no man should be allowed to ride a horse, without first undertaking to maintain it for life.

Any horse which broke the above rules was to be an outcast from equinity, and no other horse was to have anything to do with it.

Unfortunately, the rules of the Equine Union led to a very different result from the one anticipated. In the first place, many men said that they would not have a horse on such terms and would rather walk. That led at once to a glut of horses, and severe competition for employment. Many horses, were reduced to extreme straits, and some of them broke away from the rules of the Union rather than be left out in the cold. They were promptly cast out from equinity, but that did not mend matters, for it only made them desperate. They hired themselves out to men very cheaply and the rule about life maintenance soon became more honored in the breach than the observance. Never, in fact, had horse flesh been so cheap.

This turn of events was very hard on the strict-minded horses, who would not disobey the rules of the Union. For a great many of them there was no demand whatever, and the equus intactus, or horse which had never been ridden, soon became a familiar figure in equinity To make matters worse, the equus intactus, although enormously admired when young, entirely lost respect in middle life and old age, and was actually derided for his intact condition.

As for the horses that got life maintenance, even they were not all satisfied. Some of them complained that they had cruel riders, who wounded them with whip and spur, and they began to envy their neighbors who were more fortunate, and to think that the life maintenance rule was a piece of humbug. Altogether there was a great unrest and loud murmuring throughout the ranks of equinity.

A great meeting of horses was held to consider the crisis. The first speaker was a black race-horse called the "Duke of Somerset," who declared that the life maintenance rule was the foundation of all equine welfare, but unfortunately it had not been enforced with sufficient rigor. What was needed was a more vigorous outcasting of scabs, and these ought not only to be cast out but also punished by law. This speech was responded to by enthusiastic neighing.

The opposite opinion, however, was advocated with great vigor by a chestnut mare, called the "Lily of Chicago." She maintained that the Union rules had only led to results diametrically opposed to those aimed at. Even in the old days of slavery, she said, when men rode horses without their consent, nearly every horse could live, and most were fairly happy. Even in those days most owners maintained their horses and fed them well both in youth and old age, without any union at all. The Union rules, instead of removing any evil had merely created evils previously unheard of. Consequently the best way was at once to abolish the rules and dissolve the Equine Union.

This speech created an extraordinary commotion, snorting and angry neighing being heard on every side. When the report of it got abroad, all equinity was scandalized, and the "Lily of Chicago" was shut up in a stable for several months. Nevertheless, her advice was eventually followed, and ever since then the horses of that part of Siberia have been supplied with all comforts, and have never lacked employment.

The Proper Discipline of Wives According to Kalevala.

The Finnish epic poem called the "Kalevala," the oldest portions of which were probably composed three thousand years ago, throws interesting light upon the primitive social and marriage customs of the Finns. The three chief characters of the "Kalevala" are the minstrel, Wainamoinen, Ilmarinen, the magic blacksmith, and Lemminkainen, the wizard. The blacksmith pays court to the Daughter of the Rainbow, who is called "the fairest daughter of the Northland." An account of their bridal, and of some of the amenities of married life in those days, is thus given by a writer in a late number of the New York "Times":

"The wedding feast prepared, the beer brewed, the guests feasted, Osmotar, daughter of Osmo, gives the Rainbow bride advice:

'Thou must acquire new habits,
Must forget thy former customs.
Like the mouse, have ears for hearing,
Like the hare, have feet for running.'

"But the quick ears and the nimble feet are for the service of her husband and his family. The 'Bride of Beauty' must rise early, light the morning fire, fill the bucket from the 'crystal river flowing,' feed the kine and flocks 'with pleasure'; gather fagots from the woodland, bake the barley-bread and honey-cakes, wash the birchen platters clean, amuse the sister's baby, entertain the stranger, 'tend well the sacred sorb-tree' and other vegetation; spin, weave, make clothes, beer, 'lend the needed service' when the 'father of my hero husband' bathes. The week ended, she 'must give the house a thorough cleaning.' And all the while she must wear the 'whitest linen' and 'tidy fur shoes' for her hero husband's glory. And she must not gossip in the village, tell of neglect or ill-treatment, to bring shame to her kindred and disgrace to her husband's household. Ostomar, daughter of Osmo, counsels the bridegroom also:

'Never cause the Bride of Beauty
To regret the day of marriage;
Never make her shed a teardrop,
Never fill her cup with sorrow.'"

But strict marital discipline must be maintained. Those were the days when there were no women's clubs, but clubs for women.

"To thy young wife give instruction,
Kindly teach thy bride in secret,
In the long and dreary evenings,
When thou sittest at the fireside:
Teach one year in words of kindness,
Teach with eyes of love a second;
In the third year teach her with firmness;
If she should not heed thy teaching,
Should not bear thy kindly counsel
After three long years of effort,
Cut a reed upon the lowlands,
Cut a nettle from the border,
Teach thy wife with harder measures.
In the fourth year, if she heed not,
Threaten her with sterner treatment,
With the stalks of rougher edges,
Use not yet the thongs of leather,
Do not touch her with the birch whip.
If she does not heed this warning,
Should she pay thee no attention,
Cut a rod upon the mountains,
Or a willow in the valleys;
Hide it underneath thy mantle,
That the stranger may not see it;
Show it to thy wife in secret,
Shame her thus to do her duty;
Strike not yet, the disobeying.
Should she disregard this warning,
Still refuse to heed thy wishes,
Then instruct her with the willow,
Use the birch rod from the mountain,
In the closet of thy dwelling,
In the attic of thy mansion."

Our Heritage of Shame.

In reviewing the "Sapphic Verses" Ann Reeve Aldrich for the "Sewanee Review," (New York,) G. B. Rose tells some truths which are certainly worthy of reproduction in Lucifer.

"Although in prose the rights and relations of the sexes have finally attained to a position where they can demand some attention from thinking minds, the reviewer still turns in scorn," says Mr. Rose, "from every poem that shows a sign of the 'erotic taint,' especially if it be from a woman." Yet he says:

"Of all the passions, love is the one to which woman is most susceptible, and the one about which, at least in modern times, she displays the greatest reticence. This is due in some measure to the modesty of her sex, still more to the restraint of public opinion. It has been the rule from time immemorial that woman should not court, but be courted; that her love should not be uttered, but confessed. Her heart must be a hidden garden into which one alone can gaze. Pale lilies of fancy, passionate blood red roses of desire may blossom there, but they must bud and bloom and wither all unseen, or seen by but a single eye. The woman who tears down the barrier that the ages have built around her, and exposes the garden of her soul to the public gaze, is despised of men and execrated by her sex. A few of the Bohemian race, like George Sand, may do so, but the vast majority shrink from the exposure of their hearts as they would from an exposure of their persons. Many of them write, but instead of uttering their own thoughts and sentiments, they write as the world expects they should feel and think. There is no more seething volcano than a woman's breast, but its fires must smolder concealed beneath the snow. Consequently female authors are generally tame and insipid to the last degree. Forbidden by public opinion to utter plainly and intensely what they feel, and restrained by innate modesty from revealing the secrets of their hearts, they generally devote their writings to photographic reproductions of the commonplace, to ethical disquisitions that are a weariness to the flesh, to works of sentimental unreality, or something of the kind.

"One reason of this insipidity observed in most feminine writing is," says Mr. Rose, that "her heart and senses have been so cramped by the training that she and her ancestors have received that she has little to express." Some of the most important and vitalizing elements of her nature have been atrophied and rendered as non-existent and useless as the foot of the high-caste Chinese woman which has been tightly bandaged since earliest childhood. As Mr. Rose poetically expresses it, "in the pale Gothic gardens the blood-red roses of Lesbos have turned to a pallid pink, and their intoxicating odor has become a delicate perfume." Yet Mr. Rose thinks that it is apparent to all observers that a change is coming in the ideals of women. In the wholesomer out-of-door life of the modern day, the mediæval conception of womanhood is passing away, and the naturalness, purity, and sane beauty of the Greek statute is returning. This amelioration and emancipation from the one-sided and moribund spiritual ideals of medievalism is shown in the great change in woman's reading in recent years.

Several years ago I read in a paper—I believe it was "The Christian Advocate"—a statement by Anthony Comstock to the effect that the nude statues and paintings in the Metropolitan Museum of Art tend to demoralize the people and that no decent man should visit the museum. As there is no statue at the museum representing the saintly figure of Anthony Comstock, I do not see how any one can lose his purity by visiting the museum, but if there is anything at the museum which can demoralize the people, it is not the nude figures, but the fig leaves.

Verily, modesty is a great word; it is indeed so great that it is difficult to define what it really is; but let us be grateful that we have in this country at least one great man (Anthony Comstock) who can tell us all about it.—Common Sense.

A little Chicago girl prayed as follows: "And please, O Lord, take care of yourself too; if anything should happen to you we wouldn't have anyone but McKinley to depend on and he isn't doing as well as pa expected.—Ex.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Adeline Champney, Northampton, Mass.—I inclose a dollar on subscription. I wish it were more. Your comments on the case of J. N. Lee, in 781, are good. I know nothing of this particular case, but if the defendants dared not try to defend their own language, naturally they bring disrepute on the cause. A man will write vulgarly if his mind is vulgar, whether he is a believer in freedom or a worshiper of Grundy. However, private letters should be private, and the right to such privacy is in no wise affected by the character of the particular letters. It is an outrage on individuality when a private letter is molested, and, as such, is a wrong done to every man and woman in the country. When Comstockism can lay its tyrannical finger, not only on the printed page, but on the private message, the word from one mind to another, then it is time every man who loves freedom should rouse himself to see what canker is eating out the very heart of our liberty.

E. J. H., Alliance, Neb.—Find enclosed $1.25 in settlement of enclosed bills against H. W. B. and myself. Please stop the paper. We each of us sent for trial subscription supposing that it would stop when subscription run out, and of course you understand it would have been too much trouble to write and tell you to stop it. We enjoy reading your paper very much and are in full sympathy with the movement for sex freedom, but we are state socialists and in our opinion it will be necessary to secure economic independence for women before sex freedom can be brought about. Under the circumstances we feel it to be our duty to use what money and time we have in helping that doctrine along. We trust that you will prosper and continue to spread the light in your particular line.

[It is not necessary for a subscriber who desires his paper discontinued to take the "trouble to write" and tell us he wants it stopped. All that is necessary is to hand it back to the postmaster or carrier with the statement that he will not receive it. The socialistic postal system will do the rest. We continue sending to subscribers until notified to stop, for the reason that a very large proportion of our subscribers let their subscriptions lapse, yet pay up arrearages and renew and thank us for continuing to send. We are thereby saved considerable time and labor which would otherwise be expended in taking names from list, re-entering them and sending back numbers. I would earnestly request all who do not wish to receive the paper to notify us of that fact, either by returning the paper to the post office or otherwise. L. H.]

Louis A. DuBois, Arsenal, Governor's Island, N. Y.—As theologians have apparently settled regarding a future life, at least to their own satisfaction, attention is now being turned to the possibility and probability of prior existences. A singular instance in my own life has led me to ask the opinion of readers of Lucifer in regard to this matter, and to invite the expression or relation of similar experiences.

The village in Michigan where I passed the greater part of my growing boyhood was so small as to contain, within my memory, but one professed prostitute, who was soon drummed out. I can still recall the solemnity with which, a little later, I was called aside upon the rumor that a young girl of about my own age had begun promiscuous association, and the warning of the dreadful consequences of such association or of any association outside of marriage.

With the example of treatment accorded to, and the popular opinion regarding the one illegitimate child in the village known to be such, knowing the scorn and contumely under which both his mother and himself labored; with years of teaching through childhood and the yet more powerful force of custom to back it—the one dear wish of my young life was that I might discover myself to have been a natural—a "love child." I can still see the look of consternation and dismay upon the face of my rigorously chaste mother when I finally questioned her regarding the facts concerning my own parentage; and the sinfulness of physical association with the other sex, a thing so wrong, so vulgar and sinful that even the sacred institution of marriage was scarce holy enough to make it permissible and then only on rare occasions. But despite advice and teaching my sympathies have always been with those poor unfortunates and outcasts of our present social system and many and heartfelt have been the wishes that I might do something to lighten the burden of their condition.

The question is this: How did such opinions—nay, convictions—reach me in a place where every influence was directly opposed? Was it the result, the throbbing half memory of another life in which my condition had been that of those with whom I sympathized? Who can account for it; and how?

Government Analyzed. By John E. Kelso. The chapter headings are: "Derivations and Definitions of Political Terms; Various Forms of Government; General Principles of Government; Functions of Government; Origin of Government; Declaration of Independence; Articles of Confederation; Defects of the Confederation; Formation of the Constitution of the United States; Constitution of the United States; Taxation; Tariff or Protection; War; Punishments; Marriage; Religion; Prohibition; Money; What a Government Should Be." 320 pages. Price reduced to $1.00.

With Lucifer one year to a new subscriber, $1.50.

785

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

A FEW GOOD BOOKS FOR YOU.

Love, Marriage and Divorce. A discussion between Horace Greeley, Stephen Pearl Andrews and Henry James. $0.25

The Rights of Women and the Sexual Relations. By Karl Heinzen. In cloth, $1; paper covers, .10

Love and the Law. By E. C. Walker. .05

The Sexual Enslavement of Women. By E. C. Walker. .05

The Woman Who Did. A Novel. By Grant Allen. 1.00

The British Barbarians. A Novel. By Grant Allen. 1.00

The Red Heart in a White World. An Outline of Principles and a Plan of Organization. By J. Wm. Lloyd. .10

Wind Harp Songs. By J. Wm. Lloyd. 1.00

The Revival of Puritanism. By E. C. Walker. .05

Bible Temperance. Showing that the Bible encourages the use of intoxicants. By E. C. Walker, .10

Woman, Church, and State. By Matilda Joslyn Gage. 2.00

Church Property. Should it be Taxed? .15

Prohibition and Self Government: Their Irreconcilable Antagonism. By E. C. Walker. .05

When Love Is Liberty and Nature Law. By John Badcock, Jr. A remarkably clear, convincing work. .10

Liberty. Political, Religious, Social and Moral. By A. F. Tindall. .10

Diana. A Psycho-Physiological Essay on the Sexual Relations. Sixth edition. Revised and improved. .25

Perfect Motherhood. By Lois Waisbrooker; cloth, 1.00

Helen Harlow's Vow. By Lois Waisbrooker; paper, .25

Wherefore Investigating Co. By Lois Waisbrooker; paper, .5

CULTIVATION OF PERSONAL MAGNETISM.

A TREATISE ON HUMAN CULTURE. BY LEROY BERRIER.

This treatise reverses the common belief that Personal Magnetism, Life Force and Mind Force can not be cultivated and acquired. It is a Complete Course of Instructions that will enable all who possess them, to become powerfully magnetic. Price, $1. Postage, 5 cents.

Address Leroy Berrier, President Institute of Human Culture, Minneapolis, Minn.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be free; must enjoy the full privilege of soliciting the love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrially."—Page 265. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CITYLESS AND COUNTRYLESS WORLD," by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 470 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office. FREE;

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races." Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapt er III., Co-operation; Chapter V., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, ten cts.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW. A primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. A valuable compendium on Sex Ethics. Startling and Scientific Price, 10 cents.

Free Society is an advocate of Anarchist Communism, and in its advocacy of liberty in all things does not overlook sexual liberty. It is an eight-page weekly published at 50 cents a year. A specimen copy will be cheerfully furnished upon request. We also publish a monthly Anarchist library. If you want two good treatises on our theories send 10 cents for Kropotkin's "Law and Authority" and Malatesta's "Talk About Anarchist Communism," Nos. 1 and 2 of our new monthly. Free Society, 10 Oak Grove Ave., San Francisco, Cal.

RIGHTS OF WOMEN
IN THE SEXUAL RELATIONS,

By Karl Heinzen. A new edition together with the startling letters of Louise Mayen" on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German women at Frauenstadt. A book of 286 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Price paper bound, 50 cents; cloth, $1

THE BALLAD OF READING JAIL. BY C. 3.3.

This powerful poem of more than 600 lines, is the work of OSCAR WILDE C. 3. 3. having been the poets prison number during his confinement in Reading Jail. It is dedicated to the memory of a trooper of the Horse Guards who was hanged in the jail at that time, and it depicts the terrible sensations of the author and his fellow prisoners before and after the execution.

Just issued; price, in cloth, blue, vellum back, beautifully printed from large type on hand-made antique paper, deckle edges; reading matter on one side of the paper; a sumptuous book of 96 pages, 7 inches by 5, $1. In paper, 44 pages, 25 cents. Mailed postpaid on receipt of price, by M. Harman, 507 Carroll Avenue, Chicago.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint: A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.

This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Women in Marriage Slavery

Will find in HILDA'S HOME a story exposing the horrors of their condition as faithfully and as fearlessly as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" exposed the horrors of Negro slavery in the South. The story is more entertaining than many modern works of fiction and the plain truths it tells will find responsive echoes in the aching, bursting hearts of many women who know the galling effects of marriage thralldom.

The book contains 425 pages. Price handsomely bound in cloth, $1. In paper cover 50 cents. Send in your order NOW—especially if you want extra copies for distribution among your friends.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Persons Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 20 cents. Address Moses Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. E. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.

"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.

"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.

Sample pages free Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Missing Link Modern Spiritualism. By A. Leah Underhill. A book for all spiritualists and investigators. "Hear all sides, then decide." 25 chapters; 478 pages; 16 illustrations, including portraits of the Fox family. History of the Hydesville rappings, as given by eye-witnesses, the threats or mob violence; remarkable and well-attested manifestations; the "exposures" disposed of, etc. Handsomely bound in cloth. Publishers price, $1.50. On receipt of $1.27, and 13 cents for postage, we will send the book to any address.

A Gentleman of liberal views and a freedom lover wants lady correspondent living in and within a radius of 100 miles of Decatur, Ill. Address, R. C., care of Lucifer.

Wanted: A woman holding radical views to keep house for a family of three adults in a city in Massachusetts. A pleasant home for the right person. Write to M., 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

The Story of An African Farm, Olive Schreiner's master piece. A story of the struggle for light, the search for truth, the yearning for happiness of bright young English and German people, among the ignorant and coarse Boers and Kaffirs of South Africa. This is a work of art, and of truth. Well bound in cloth. 300 pages. Price, 40 cents, postage 10 cents. For sale at this office.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 43. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, NOV. 4, E. M. 299. [C. E. 1899.] WHOLE No. 786.

The Lost Game.

Came the big children to the little ones,
And unto them full pleasantly did say,
"Lo! we have spread for you a merry game,
And ye shall be winners at the same,
Come now and play!"

Great is the game they enter in,— Rouge et Noir on a giant scale,—
Red with blood and black with sin,
Where many must lose and few may win,
And the players never fail!

Said the strong children to the weaker ones,
"See, ye are many, and we are but few!
The mass of all the counters ye divide,
But few remain to share upon our side.
Play—as we do!"

Strange is the game they enter in,—
Rouge et Noir on a field of pain!
And the silver white and the yellow gold
Pile and pile in the victor's hold,
While the many play in vain!

Said the weak children to the stronger ones,
"See now, howe'er it fall, we lose our share!
And play we well or ill we always lose;
While ye gain always more than ye can use,
Bethink ye—is it fair?"

Strange is the game they enter in,—
Rouge et Noir, and the bank is strong!
Play they well or play they wide
The gold is still on the banker's side,
And the game endureth long.

Said the strong children, each aside to each,
"The game is slow—our gains are all too small!"
Play we together now, 'gainst them apart;
So shall these dull ones lose it from the start,
And we shall gain it all!"

Strange is the game that now they win,—
Rouge et Noir with a new design!
What can the many players do
Whose wits are weak and counters few
When the power and the gold combine?

Said the weak children to the stronger ones,
"We care not for the game!
For play as we may our chance is small,
And play as ye may ye have it all,
The end's the same!"

Strange is the game the world doth play,—
Rouge et Noir, with the counters gold,
Red with blood and black with sin;
As the ages pass untold.

Said the strong children to the weaker ones,
"Ye lose in laziness! ye lose in sleep!
Play faster now and make the counters spin!
Play well, as we, and ye in time shall win!
Play fast! Play deep!"

Strange is the game of Rouge et Noir,—
Never a point save the little ones won,
The winners are strong and flushed with gain,
The losers are weak with want and pain,
And still the game goes on.

But those rich players grew so very few,
So many grew the poor ones, that one day
They rose up from that table, side by side,
Calm, countless, terrible—they rose and cried
In one great voice that shook the heavens wide,
"WE WILL NOT PLAY!"

Where is the game of Rouge et Noir?
Where is the wealth of yesterday?
What availeth the power ye tell,
And the skill in the game ye play so well?
If the players will not play?

—Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Notes and Queries.

BY EDGAR D. BRINKERHOFF.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox in the New York "Journal," speaks of girls of twenty-five marrying well-preserved men of sixty, and another writer mentions girls of thirty summers. These authors are making themselves popular with the elderly ladies. Next in order comes the young girl of forty years, and enterprising writers will introduce us to the sixty-year old girl. They would apply the same term to the eighty-year olds if it were not for fear of conveying the idea of second childhood instead of first.

* * *

When land is withheld from use or from a high form of use, the development of the neighbors is retarded and individuals are injured. Bequeathment is one of the ways in which a person comes into possession of more land than he wishes to use. From this standpoint such a community may be said to be ruled by the tomb. But when an old man who has occupied and used a little piece of ground, say an eighth of an acre in a city or an acre in a village or five acres in a suburban locality or fifty acres of mountainous grazing land, sees that the end is approaching and calls in a son or other relative or friends to be in possession at the last moment, surely we cannot say that the community is ruled by the tomb in any obnoxious sense. If the growth of the vicinity has been so great that the holding is larger than juries are disposed to allow, the court can divide the land between the devisee and the first new comer to set up the claim.

* * *

Free motherhood is a grand ideal, but when there is urged the freedom of the mother to select the father of her child a half truth only is expressed. Fathers would rather select than be selected, and they have it in their power to offer irresistible inducements. Men can win a greater total wage from the business world, as they can work about twice as many years. Mothers ought to be free to select, but will they select? Or, will they weigh the maintenance offered by one against the high physical and mental qualities offered by another and be determined in great part by the inducement of wealth? Possibly they would do their children a disfavor to spurn the wealth, for poverty is not always a good environment for the well born.

* * *

Race hatred in the south is not alone responsible for the lynching of negroes, for white men have been dealt with in the same way for the same offense. Religious superstition and a thirst for blood must share in the blame for these disgraceful interferences with the regular course of the law. Negatively, these lynchings are encouraged by the neglect to enforce those provisions of the federal constitution which guarantee a republican form of government in each state and the right of trial by jury. The church-members of the Southern States should be forced to be civilized to the extent of refraining from taking human life without due process of law, even if a United States army must be sent in to apprehend the lynchers and bring them to trial in their turn. Even if acquitted by a Southern jury the effect would be to put a stop to lynching. Outside interference is always justified in establishing freedom in place of home-rule. But there are true race and caste problems in that section. Miscegenation promises little in the way of solution as mixed races are unprogressive. Also, just as Spanish blood died out in Cuba, leaving the modern Cuban not a mixture of Spanish and Berber, as were the first settlers three hundred years ago but Berber alone, so will the white blood and character disappear in the descendants of the mulattoes.

* * *

"The woman who sells herself to one man is on a moral level with the woman who sells herself to a hundred." These words are from "Puck." That paper is to be congratlauted upon its courage in discussing this subject, but it happens that the above statement has not a particle of truth in it. Assuming that the woman who sells herself to one man is on a low moral level, will "Puck" seriously contend that the woman who sells herself to a hundred is not still lower? Or, assuming that the woman who sells herself to one man is on a high moral level, can the opinion be entertained for one moment that the woman who sells herself to a hundred maintains an equally high moral level? Whichever way you take it, the statement is false. What "Puck" meant to say but did not say, was that wives who sell themselves to their husbands violate the same principle of morality as the women who sell themselves to a hundred. Whether this is true or not the latter violate several principles in addition to the one violated by the wife. And it is an interesting question how much of the wife's degradation comes from the mere act of selling and how much of it comes from the fact that the purchaser assumes the role of slave-master. A bookkeeper may sell his services to a humane employer without degradation. And, again, he becomes more and more degraded the longer he keeps books for an employer who insists upon twenty hours of duty per diem.

* * *

A wife who knows how to cook will take ten cents' worth of food and make it worth twenty cents. One who does not know this art will take ten cents' worth of food and make it worth five cents. Wives would do better cooking if the law would permit their discharge for not using intelligence in the preparation of meals. Much of the outcry against the home arises from the disgust occasioned by the cooking done by wives whose job is just as secure whether they attend properly to household duties or not.

* * *

In case of the separation of parents, the mother should take the small children. Older children might be allowed to choose between the parents, provided that they are allowed to reverse their decision at any time after. However, it would generally be unfortunate for the children to decide in favor of the father, for how would he take care of them in business hours? Would a hireling care for them as well as a mother? And how about that step-mother? Let them go with the mother; a step-father will not be half so bad, for he is away most of the day and the time is not far off when neither fathers nor step-fathers will rule the house.

Kitchen drudgery is nearly a thing of the past. Turn a thumb-screw and the electrical stove will be ready for immediate use whether in city or country just as gas stoves are now available in cities. No ashes, no coal, no trouble. In a little while prepared foods will be just as cheap as home-cooked articles. The house-wife's part will only be to open the packages and place the viands upon the table. But while kitchen drudgery is bound to soon disappear, so much can not be said of the kitchen itself, which will always be a necessary adjunct o every well-regulated household. No possible degree of development in manufacturing can ever take the place of the home-kitchen. There will always be something that the housekeeper will desire to prepare from time to time if not daily and she must have a well-appointed room in which to do this work, and we call this room a kitchen.

* * *

Little, mean women tyrannize over broad-minded, generous men and the latter do not laugh but weep with vexation, for the former have the law on their side and the broad-minded man cannot make a move that would not harm the children. In fact each home contains two potential slave-masters and two possible slaves. Each is slave to the other if the other desires to be a slave master. Divorce is not free enough to be available.

* * *

Vast populations are everywhere unanimously deceived about facts of their daily experience. Swaddling clothes were so beneficial to French infants that Rousseau must flee for his life for venturing to question in regard to the matter. Spelling-books are so educative to American youth that American pedagogues dare not burn them up, which is all they are good for. Stone idols have answered so many prayers that the natives are astonished when the white man does not fall dead after smiting one on its face.

* * *

All men are not equal in every respect, but a man is a man for all that. So long as they are non-invasive themselves, it s expedient to consider all men equally deserving of freedom from aggression by others.

* * *

The negro has a long head in common with the Arab, the Mediterranean and the Teuton. Anthropologists have not been able to discover whether superiority of intellect lies with this dolichocephalic race or with the brachycephalic, or broad-headed peoples, as the true Celts of mountainous Europe and the Slavs.

Morrisville, Pa., Oct, 26, 1899.

Volitional Responsibility and Other Matters.

BY SUSAN PATTON.

I know Lucifer's space is limited but I would like to have an answer to some more questions. I know there are many books that can be bought by those who have the cash, but some folks have very little of the latter, so a paper like Lucifer is taxed with questions that the questioners do not feel able to answer themselves.

You speak of "volitional responsibility" not being equal. Can you mean that the woman has more volition than the man in this relation? If so why is it that knowing the torture that awaits her she becomes an illegitimate mother? I often wonder at this fact, and sometimes feel that nature is very cruel in enforcing this expression more imperatively on the female regardless of consequences to her individual self. You will answer this from the noblest thought life; that is why I ask it.

Though the child is more intimately related to the mother than to the father, for a certain period, that does not to my mind prove her the most responsible party to the race or to the child, for the child may resemble the father in disposition and appearance, being often an exact reproduction of him, taking very few faculties from the mother; and this is where a loose life on the part of the male members of the community produces that sad spectacle, the girl who would rather be a lazy "mistress" than take her part in the economic struggle. This is why I think, such men dread daughters. They are afraid of a chip o the old block. But a son—oh! it's only wild oats! And for a man to permit the woman to bear the responsibility of the child alone is to acknowledge himself a social pauper; for some one had to take care of him, and the only way to pay back what he owes to society is to help take care of the weak. This, aside from the great pleasure gained from the association with the child.

People make a great fuss over an artist who mixes colors and paints beautiful pictures, but I often wonder, does the artist gain the pleasure in his work that the care bestowed on children gives? If so, the artist is well repaid. I, too, have seen the jealousy of women that the child should love the father, but I believe if men moved among children's affections more their lives would become those of the superior race. Indeed, whether black or white they would not then find their mark of superiority in demanding sex prostitution of the black women as a mark of superiority of white males.

Is it any wonder that the blacks who never commit rape among themselves or on the whites in other countries are degraded to that crime under the above supremacy business? If I believed in lynching I would not take innocent blacks. I would find guilty whites and blacks; and I would not spare Roosevelt whose career of murder is only exceeded by his rant against men who never threw a bomb.

I know something of English people, and I know none who would associate with a white woman who married a negro, nor would they as servants occupy the same bed with a negro. The southern people and other white races have been very prone to beat their slaves, white and black, for being "lazy," but it's one of the prerogatives of the white race to be lazy. But I notice that unless the white and black producers slave fast enough to bear the burdens created by Roosevelt et al., they are beaten, jailed, shot and hung.

The "footprints on the sands of time" have not been made by the white race alone. They have been aided everywhere by the dusky races who have been looted and robbed in return—are Filipinos. It is only a repetition of the same old game. The human race in all its grades and conditions contributed its mite to development, but conquerors always assume superiority. But it is claimed "that the south by permitting indiscriminate cohabitation would sink to the level of Hayti." The poor white trash who can t get positions to support themselves are below the negro servants in capabilities, and it seems rather late to talk of in discriminate cohabitation when white men of their own volition prefer negro prostitutes, and very late to preach sexual ethics to black men when the superior race live in such debauchery. The whole argument is much like Van Eric makes in his book—Superiority of white and inferiority of black race. It is an old fossil, but shows what rabid accusations the abolitionists had to endure from those practicing what they imputed to others.

I often wonder if the southern people will ever grasp the idea that the producer owns his product, therefore the negro owns the product of the south, and has no right to be driven to support his lazy white master who brought him here to slave for him, as the lazy masters of the north bring whites from other countries. I am surprised that Mrs. M. E. W. is so concerned over the victorious white man who is so anxious to debauch the negro (being so superior you know) and it is so refreshing that those born since the war have enough back bone to give trouble to their oppressors. The economic freedom to the race demands co-operation of producers. This can only come by the co-operation of woman—black—white—for pure sexual life No demand for prostitutes. Those making the demand to be removed as parasites.

Sexual Laws and Discussions.

BY JOS. RODES BUCHANAN.

In all the discussions of sexual questions in Lucifer one important fact seems to have been overlooked.

There is no reason why the association of persons of different sex should be subjected to suppression or regulation by law or by public opinion, any more than between persons of the same sex, except the fact that women under the age of about forty-five or fifty are liable to become mothers, and society is interested to protect their offspring from neglect and enforce the obligations of both parents. It is reasonable that fathers should be required to recognize their relation publicly and perform their part in protecting and rearing offspring.

But when women are beyond the child-bearing age there is no longer any pretext whatever either for laws or for a meddlesome public opinion interfering in any way whatever to regulate the association of the sexes. Women fifty years of age should assert their absolute freedom in this matter and be sustained by public opinion.

The beneficial influence of free association between the sexes is shown by the superior virtue of the married over the unmarried, and our social conditions will be greatly improved whenever this free association of the mature is recognized as proper.

Our hereditary superstitions on this subject spring from the basest elements of human nature—from that low grade of sentiment which regards the sexual union to which we are all indebted for our existence as an act so base and disgusting as to make castration a virtuous act to prevent so foul a crime. That this base sentiment is due entirely to the influence of the church and is based upon its unhistorical bible, is clear to all who have studied the question. Biblical religion has substituted the barbarian ideas of twenty centuries ago for the results of scientific investigation, and has sanctified this barbarian ignorance as a matter that must not be discussed. Hence the free thought which reveals the fraudulent origin of the Biblical church is a necessary ally in all investigations of social questions.

It is difficult to approach these questions without feeling an intense disgust for the foul grossness of mind, the universal hypocrisy and the coarse intolerance of public opinion.

What more profound and shameless hypocrisy can we imagine than the attempt to expel Mr. Roberts from congress, because suspected of associating honestly with too many women, while the men who would expel him to please Madam Grundy are themselves more extensively engaged in unlawful but secret association than Mormons have been, among whom prostitution was unknown until introduced by their opponents whose purity consisted only in their nocturnal secrecy.

Persistent Deviltry.

"Advertisers Guide."

The Washington correspondent of the New York "Evening Post," Oct. 17, 1899, outlines a revision of postal laws and regulations now being prepared for submission to the next session of Congress. According to the Post's correspondent the revisers have used a free hand in dealing with the law, and instead of contenting themselves with presenting the law as it stands at present they have extended its scope and practically formulated entirely new law.

The especially dangerous feature of this presumptuous work is the persistently vicious effort manifested to accomplish a purpose which has been several times defeated, that of making the infamous Comstock law more stringent and oppressive. The changes proposed would exposed to prosecution any writer whose mail matter failed to conform to the most correct literary standard.

The expectation undoubtedly is that this revision will go through on its face, presenting such a fair and attractive exterior that the over-busy legislators will take it for granted and overlook both its interior evil principle and its ulterior pernicious consequences.

If this revision is approved in the point to which we refer we may expect to see a considerable increase in the already too long list of prosecutions instigated by personal malice, political revenge, religious fanaticism or sheer blackmail.

We call upon the press to scrutinize the work of the revisors and to be alert for the preservation of the liberty of unlicensed printing.

Can't you speak a good word for the Light Bearer to your neighbor who needs education along the lines of race culture?

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, B. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper in t has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

How about dropping the name of Lucifer? We want your opinion.

Get us a new subscriber to whom we will send the paper until Jan. 1, 1901 for one dollar.

If the Light Bearer has done you good, it may do your neighbor good. Say a good word for it.

You cannot make a better investment of 25 cents than to subscribe for the Light Bearer for three months for some friend who has never seen it, but who needs it.

The Light Bearer's friends are deserving of all the good we can say of them. But they should remember that many of their acquaintances need the light of truth. Show them the paper. Get them to subscribe for it.

Here is a cash proposition for you. If you are a paid up subscriber send us the names of two more subscribers for one year with two dollars for their subscriptions and we will return you one dollar for your trouble.

Help spread the light. You certainly see persons of your acquaintance who are suffering because of their superstitious reverence for the tyrannous beliefs of their ancestors. Talk to them. Reason with them. Show them the Light Bearer.

We want to double our subscription list within the next twelve months. In order to do so we will authorize any person who has paid for subscription in advance to Jan. 1, 1901, to take additional subscription at fifty cents a year. Those in arrears can take advantage of this offer by paying up their own subscription.

Personal and Impersonal.

Acting upon the advice of friends whose past helpfulness to Lucifer and its work entitle their opinions to careful consideration I have decided to spend the coming winter in a warmer climate, provided the necessary arrangements can be made. The improvement in my health while in the south last winter and spring encourages me to hope that a repetition of the remedy will go far towards removing entirely my chronic ailments.

* * *

Last week H. B. Monroe and Lillian Harman had something to say in regard to a proposed change of name and change of form for Lucifer. As editor and publisher I preferred to say nothing until others had had their say. Lucifer has never been the mouthpiece of one man or of one woman, but rather the vehicle of communication between many women and men, and to get the candid earnest thought of all I have encouraged the freest possible expression of thought from all who work for the success of the central propaganda to which the paper is devoted.

If any reader should ask the old conundrum, "What's in a name?" and should repeat the time-worn adage, "A rose with any other name would smell as sweet," I would reply that the discussion of the name Lucifer involves the discussion of the ages-old conflict between Science and Superstition, and is therefore never out of order in a paper devoted to the cause of Science—knowledge—in its conflicts with the mists and darkness of Ignorance and of its eldest born child—Superstition.

It is understood, then, that in this interchange of thought in regard to name and form each writer speaks for herself and himself alone, and not for the management of the paper. I would simply suggest, and remind all who care to say a word on the questions of change of name and form that they should confine themselves to as few words as possible.

* * *

Grant Allen is dead. The man who wrote "Woman Who Did," "British Barbarians," "The Great Taboo," and many other reformatory or rather revolutionary books, has passed into the realm of silence—at least so far as our mortal senses are concerned. Whether like John Brown's his "soul goes marching on" is a question upon which I prefer not to venture an opinion. But however this may be we know that "though dead he yet speaketh," through his world-famous books.

Though still a young man, only fifty-one when he passed away, we can truly say that Grant Allen's is one of the "few immortal names that were not born to die."

* * *

The following very suggestive bit of news I find going the rounds, and credited to the Chicago "Chronicle." If true, and I see no reason to doubt its substantial correctness, what a sermon, or what a lesson is herein contained for the consideration of the American people who are now spending about a million of dollars a day in the effort to force government upon a people whose only crime is that they want to manage their own affairs in their own way:

"The city of Greentown, Ind., is, perhaps, the least governed city of its size in America. Although it has 3,000 inhabitants the town has no mayor, marshal, policemen or other peace officer, not even a constable. The town is governed by a board of trustees who meet once a month to allow electric light bills, gas, water and other claims. A justice of the peace, residing in the suburbs, resigned a few weeks ago, having no official business. The city charter provides for no mayor or policeman, and the duties of a marshal are performed when required, which is very seldom, by the street commissioner. A regular marshal was elected a year ago, but resigned because there was nothing for him to do. The street commissioner was then engaged, without any additional compensation over his salary as street commissioner, to act as marshal whenever occasion should require. The jail was sold years ago for a stable, and there is absolutely no place in which an arrested person could be confined pending trial. There are three saloons in the place, and they do a good business in beer and ale, but sell very little spirituous liquor. The worst offense that has occurred in the town in years is the hilarity consequent upon too liberal beer drinking. The offender is never locked up nor even fined. He is escorted home and never fails to go in a quiet and peaceable manner. The oldest inhabitant does not remember of an arrest having occurred in the town. The present street commissioner, however, denies this soft impeachment. He says he did arrest a man once. It was for an attempted assault that took place in the country, and when the man was brought to trial he proved his innocence. After all, this is not a blot on Greentown's fair escutcheon."

The experience of the people of Greentown corroborates the statement of a leading banker of Lexington, Mo., who testified that the only community in which he ever knew wherein there were absolutely no crimes was one which there was absolutely no form of government.

* * *

As a good illustration of how government encourages honesty, or, more correctly speaking, how it discourages honesty and truthfulness, take the following, credited to a "Chicago dispatch:"

Professor Herman E. Von Hoist, a noted authority on the constitution and head of the department of history in the Chicago university, has written a letter to the board of review in which he holds it does not pay to be honest. He filed a schedule of his personal property and now asks that his schedule of $37,547 be withdrawn.

If his declaration stands, he writes, he will be taxed not only twice but ten and twenty times as high as many hundreds if not thousands who are notoriously and demonstrably in much more affluent circumstances. The assertion, he says, he could readily prove at any moment to everybody's satisfaction, though his circle of acquaintances is but small. He could point out scores of men who live in mansions, keep one or more carriages, have a butler, footman, costly objects of art, etc., and yet have declared much less personal property, many of them not as much as one-fourth.

He ventures to hope for a favorable consideration of his petition, because he is a man of sixty years, and his ability to earn anything is likely to be very soon terminated.

The board will hold the professor to his first schedule and declaration.

* * *

In this week's issue is given a quotation, under the head, the "Power of Integrity," from a late work that seems to be attracting considerable attention among those who take interest in "Occultism." This book is called "Force-Massing Methods," and consists of "Seven Essays, Showing how to Use Occult Forces, etc., in All Business and Art," by Ernest Loomis, Chicago. Ernest Loomis and Co., publishers. The book is dedicated "to that unchanging interior force creating law of thought, on which these methods are founded, and which unfailingly lends its omnipotence, to the extent that we co-operate with its principles."

* * *

Few writers of modern times have left a greater and more permanent impress upon the world of thought than did Johann Wolfgang Von Goethe. One of the least known but probably one of the very best of his many books is called "Elective Affinities," from which a selection is made in this issue, under the head "The Natural Vs. the Conventional." This book deserves a wider circulation and a more general reading than has hitherto been accorded it by social reformers.

M. HARMAN.

"A Conquest of Poverty."

This is the title of a small volume—171 small pages—issued by the "International Scientific Association," Sea Breeze, Florida. This book is written by Helen Wilmans, one of the chief apostles or expounders of "Mental Science," in the modern or technical sense of that phrase. Of the woman writers of today few if any have made her own personality felt and appreciated more widely than has the writer of this little book. That she has done much good by inducing people to substitute mental healing for drug treatment there can be little if any doubt. And the fact that she has received much money for her "Mental Science Lessons," and by her method of treating the sick, does not necessarily show that she is in the business simply for the money consideration, any more than the fact that Col. Ingersoll received much money for his lectures shows that he was of a mercenary bent of mind and cared nothing for the welfare of others.

Having conquered poverty for herself she proposes in this book to show others how to do the same. The following paragraphs will give a fair idea of the scope and animus of the book:

"He who heals a patient of disease must recognize that nothing in the shape of disease exists; that life and health are omnipresent, filling all space, to the utter exclusion of disease. He must recognize that disease is simply a state of ignorance concerning the great truth that life and health are omnipresent. As all conditions are mental, disease is a mental condition, in which the diseased person fails to perceive the truth; he is in error concerning the truth. . . . .

"This fact is no less true of that ignorant state of mind called "poverty," than of disease. There is no poverty. Men simply believe there is, and being mental creatures what they believe shows forth in their persons and surroundings. Oh, if I could only give the people the faintest idea of the opulence that abounds, what would I not give? But they will not listen. They pinch the dimes with straining fingers, fearing to let go lest no more will come. And indeed no more will come so long as they are ignorant of the fact that opulence is a part of the universal Law of Life."

Like all enthusiasts Mrs. Wilmans lacks a good deal of being consistent in her talk; in another place she says:

"Poverty shakes his skeleton wand at me without producing a tremor. I am his master; not because I have houses and money in banks, but because I have the self-confidence—fully tested—that enables me to evolve the positive thought and to speak the positive word which externalizes my demand."

Right here, as I see it, whether consciously or unconsciously, Mrs. Wilmans reveals the secret of her success. Hers is the master mind that lays all others under tribute. She annihilates poverty for herself by her psychologic power to compel others to give up their wealth to her. An instance of this is given in telling how she secured the money to take her to San Francisco, after she had left her former husband and struck out for herself. She tells us that she had in vain tried dozens of people who had professed friendship for her, asking for a loan of ten dollars. Then as a last resort she went to a shoemaker and told him and his wife what she wanted, saying to them: "I know you are going to lend it to me." Without a word the man shambled off to his room and came back with the money. Speaking of her success in this case she says, "I know he did not let me have it; I took it by mental force." This man "died two years later," she tells us naively enough, of "softening of the brain," and hopes her "night attack upon his coffers was not the means of bringing it on."

I hope no reader will think that I accuse Mrs. Wilmans of being simply an intellectual brigand—one who holds up and robs her victims by using her superior mental power in much the same way, and for similar ends, as is done by the ordinary highwayman to extort money from his victims. I think Mrs. Wilmans means to give an equivalent for all she takes from others. Whether she does this is a question I am not prepared to solve.

If the perusal of the book, "Conquest of Poverty," should have the effect of inspiring the reader with a little of the energy, the persistence and the will power shown by its author the fifty cents expended in its purchase would be a paying investment.

M. H.

New Books Received.

The Proletarian Revolt. A history of the Paris Commune of 1871, by C. B. Benham. An excellent work for those who desire a short, comprehensive account of the Commune. Bound in paper, nearly 350 pages; price 25 cents. Received from the Commonwealth Co., 28 Lafayette Pl., N. Y. at this office.

Moribund Society and Anarchy, translated from the French of Jean Grave, by Voltairine DeCleyre. Free Society Library, San Francisco, Cal. Bound in paper; 175 large pages printed in large, clear, type; price 25 cents. For sale at this office. The chapter on "Militarism" in this book so offended the virtuous French Army that the book was suppressed by the French government and its author was imprisoned for two years. In her preface to the American edition of the book, which has just been issued, the translator says:

"That we have entered upon the manifest destiny of civilized nations; now that our government has resorted to the same tactics of colonization, protection, subjugation, and conquest; now that our standing army has been increased four-fold, and military place-hunting is the ambition of the hour; now that our workingmen are seizing the opportunity to barter their 'free citizenship in the greatest country on earth' for the abject service of man-killing on foreign soils at the rate of $15.60 per month and keep, this proscribed Chapter XIII comes with its own note—a most discordant one indeed—into the war-chorus at present holding the public ear. And the translator devoutly prays that as in France the great sin was its distribution among the soldiery, the like offense may be repeated here, where the army is still in a nascent condition and the man not yet buried under the uniform. Look in the glass and see how you like the reflection, soldiers!"

The Natural vs. the Conventional.

Goethe in "Elective Affinities."

"It is a melancholy thing," Charlotte said, "when we fancy our absent friends are finally settled, when we believe persons very dear to us to be provided for for life, suddenly to hear that their fortunes are cast loose once more; that they hope to strike into a fresh path of life, and very likely a most insecure one."

"Indeed, my dear friend," the count answered, "it is our own fault if we allow ourselves to be surprised at such things. We please ourselves with imagining matters of this earth, and particularly matrimonial connections, as very enduring; and, as concerns this last point, the plays which we see over and over again help to mislead us; being as they are, so untrue to the course of the world. In a comedy we see a marriage as the last aim of a desire which is hindered and crossed through a number of acts; and at the instant when it is reached the curtain falls, and the momentary satisfaction continues to ring on in her ears. But in the world it is very different. The play goes on still behind the scenes; and, when the curtain rises again, we may see and hear, perhaps, little enough of the marriage."

"It cannot be so very bad, however," said Charlotte, smiling. "We see people who have gone off the boards of the theater, ready enough to undertake a part upon them again."

"There is nothing to be said against that," said the count. "In a new character a man may readily venture on a second trial; and, when we know the world, we see clearly that it is only this positive, eternal duration of marriage in a world where every thing is in motion, which has anything unbecoming about it. A friend of mine, whose good humor shone forth principally in suggestions of new laws, maintained that every marriage should be concluded only for five years. Five, he said, was a sacred number,—pretty and uneven. Such a period would be long enough for people to learn one another's character, bring a child or two into the world, quarrel, separate, and, what was best, get reconciled again. He would often exclaim, 'How happily the first part of the time would pass away!' Two or three years, at least, would be perfect bliss. On one or the other, there would not fail to be a wish to have the relation continue longer; and the amiability would increase, the nearer they got to the time of parting. The indifferent, even the dissatisfied, party, would be softened and gained over by such behavior; they would forget, as in pleasant company the hours pass always unobserved, how the time went by, and would be delightfully surprised when, after the term had run out, they had unknowingly prolonged it." . . . .

"The same friend," he went on, "has another law to propose. A marriage is to be held indissoluble, only either when both parties, or at least one, enter into it for the third time. Such persons must be supposed to acknowledge beyond a doubt that they find marriage indispensable for themselves; of knowing how they conducted themselves in their earlier unions; whether they have any peculiarities of temper, which are a more frequent cause of separation than bad dispositions. People would then observe one another more closely; they would pay as much attention to the married as to the unmarried, no one being able to tell how things may turn out."

"That would add no little to the interest of society," said Edward. "As things are now, when a man is married, nobody cares any more, either for his virtues or for his vices."

"Under this arrangement," the baroness rejoined, smiling, "our dear hosts have passed successfully two stages, and may make themselves ready for their third."

"Things have gone happily with them," said the count. "In their case, death has done with a good grace what in other cases the consistorial courts do with a very bad one." . . .

"Alas! that in such cases," said the baroness, with a suppressed sigh, "happiness is only bought with the sacrifice of our fairest years."

"Yes, indeed," answered the count; "and it might drive us to despair, if it were not the same with every thing in this world. Nothing goes as we hope. Children do not fulfill what they promise; young people very seldom; and, if they do, the world does not." . . . .

"We must try," Charlotte said, "to make up for what we then allowed to slip from us."

"Ay, and you must keep to that," said the count; "your first marriages," he continued, with some vehemence, "were exactly marriages of the true detestable sort. And, unhappily, marriages generally, even the best, have (forgive me for using a strong expression) something awkward about them. They destroy the delicacy of the relation: everything is made to rest on the broad certainty out of which one side or other, at least, is too apt to make their own advantage. It is all a matter of course; and they seem only to have got themselves tied together, that one or the other, or both, may go their own way the more easily."

Coercive Authority.

John H. Kelso, in "Government Analyzed."

"There was an utter want of all coercive authority in the Continental congress to carry into effect any of their constitutional measures. They may make and conclude treaties, but can only recommend the observance of them. They may appoint ambassadors, but cannot defray even the expenses of their tables. They may borrow money in their own name on the faith of the union, but cannot pay a dollar. They may coin money, but they can not purchase an ounce of bullion. They may make war, and determine what number of troops are necessary, but can not raise a single soldier. In short, they may declare every thing, and do nothing."—Townsend's Analysis of Civil Government.

"Coercive authority," is authority backed by physical force sufficient to compel the people, or any portion of them to do certain prescribed things which, it left to follow the dictates of their own judgment and their own conscience, they would not do; and to compel them to refrain from doing certain other prescribed things which, if left to follow the dictates of their own judgment and their own conscience, they would do. In other words, it is authority, backed by physical force, sufficient to practically nullify the judgment and the conscience of the people, and to reduce them to mere machines, having neither judgment nor conscience. If this form of authority were always fully exercised, it would always produce this deplorable result. The fact that the people are not thus fully degraded is entirely due to the fact that, in regard to many things, even under the most despotic forms of government, the people are permitted to exercise their own judgment and their own conscience. In regard to all those things in which they are fully controlled by coercive authority, they are thus fully degraded. Concerning these things, they either can not, or dare not reason.

But how much physical force is necessary to enable this coercive authority to produce among the people the required degree of docile degradation? Enough, in all cases, to inflict death. And this much is employed by every government which, by coercive authority, collects taxes of any kind from the people. But all governments do thus collect taxes. Otherwise they could not exist. All governments, therefore, of necessity, rest upon sufficient physical force to inflict death upon an indefinate number of individuals. The ultimate of every governmental action is, of necessity—murder. Every governmental law involves a threat of murder. The highwayman, called the tax collector, calls out to his proposed victims, "Your money or your life!" True, he does not usually say this in actual words He does not need to do this. The laws, the coercive authority, virtually does this for him. It gives us to understand that any resistance to him on our part will be promptly overcome, and if necessary, at the cost of our lives. So, when undertaking to make an arrest, the sheriff or other creature of the government virtually cries out, "Your liberty or your life!" We know that, in either of these cases, any persistent resistance on our part—any brave and determined defence of our inalienable right to our property or our liberty, will cost us our lives. And so of every other act of coercive authority. As I have already stated, its ultimate is, of necessity—murder.

The New Marriage on Trial.

Charles Bellamy, in "An Experiment in Marriage"

Married life in Grape Valley was very different from married life in civilization. The wife was not here expected to devote her whole life to serve and please her husband, any more than the husband was expected to limit all his friendly relations with women to his wife. It was not the theory in Grape Valley that when a woman married, she resigned all active interests except those of her husband, and henceforth it should be enough for her to make herself agreeable to him; that the opinion of other men was henceforth to be of no account to her. Nor was it the unwritten law here that the husband should confine his interest to his wife. They were both believed to be fitting themselves to be worthy companions, by making the most of the social intimacy with both sexes encouraged in Grape Valley. In civilization each wife watches her husband in his relation with those of the opposite sex with jealousy, and the husband reciprocates in kind. In civilization, too, there are weighty reasons for this distrust. Feeling sure that his wife is his, bound and fettered by law, the husband usually takes little pains to keep the admiration she cherished for him in the courtship which she never ceased to regret. He does little to entertain her. He no longer treats her with his earlier tenderness, or makes her happy with praises as of old. With other women he is quite a different creature, seeing which it is small wonder she distrusts him. But, she, too, is a very much changed woman from the sweetheart he used to think so dainty in her pretty clothes, so winning in her manner, so irresistibly gentle, so thrillingly responsive. If another man pays her some little attention, she is something like her old self again. But to her husband in his own home she is usually as indifferent in her manner as if his opinion had ceased to concern her. She keeps in the closet her bright dresses when he alone is to see her, and even arranges her hair in the most unattractive fashion when he only is with her, as if he had ceased to have eyes after marriage, as if the qualities and graces which made her seem beautiful and charming to him when they were lovers, were now of no account. The married man and woman in civilization are quite too sure of each other, legally, to give them motive enough to keep themselves attractive. Thus they leave each other exposed without armor to the charms of others, and may well be fearful of results, though they seldom think of causes.

In Grape Valley, however, as much is expected by society of the man and woman after marriage as before. It is not believed here that marriage is a ban, condemning the husband and wife to seclusion, and society to the deprivation of their activity. If a husband and wife are properly mated, they will love each other not the less, but rather the more if they continue to meet others in the unrestrained social intercourse by which development and education are continued after marriage. While aiding the whole community with whatever good judgment, inspired thought, poetical ideas, witty satire, keen criticism, they may be especially able to give, they are also rendered better companions to each other.

The Power of Integrity.

Ernest Loomis in "Force Massing Methods."

One of the compensations of strict honesty is that it carries with it its own methods of expression. As you persist in its habit your very countenance will beam more and more with its spirit and with your sincerity of purpose. It is thus that the most skeptical person will be led to finally believe in you and to help you in outward ways as the opportunities thus made are offered. The thought currents thus created will also bring forces, things and events which can be made of almost inestimable value to you. The only way to attract such thought currents is to earn them by living in their realities.

There is no chance for humbuggery or dishonesty in dealing with the spiritual realities which underlie things, and it is with these realities that all are forever dealing, whether they are conscious of the fact or not. All things in life go according to their self-created interior affinities, with the same fidelity that the elements of a chemical compound go according to their affinities.

If your surrounding affinities of the present do not suit you, you have only yourself to blame, because they are but the effects of your own interior causal soul acts during a past which covers countless ages. If you want other surroundings and conditions you can get them, but only by earning them through the application of those spiritual laws on which your very being is founded.

The highest condition of heavenly order and harmony which you have the mental ability to crave is within your reach, and as soon as you earn it by establishing throughout your individuality the harmony and order which always prevail at the center of your being.

All the powers of the universe are inherent within you, but "all things evolve from within outwards," and you should adhere strictly to that method of developing those powers, and of building for yourself the right external conditions. It is all right for you to try to "set the world aright," providing you go about it by first establishing the requisite order and harmony within. When you have thus set right your interior conditions, you will no longer see anything in the external world that cannot be set right through the action of the optimism of its own nature. You will then understand that the best and only method by which you can stimulate into action that optimism in external things is to first develop and then use its occult forces within yourself.

VARIOUS VOICES.

C. G. Baylor, Providence, R I.:—Lucifer of Oct. 7 is to hand your article entitled "Crime of Government," including Kelso's analysis of the crime of 1789 is fine and surely this is a fitting subject of discussion for such a paper as Lucifer.

P. C. Keineth, Lacon, Ill.:—I have tried to get trial subscribers for Lucifer but failed. One lady remarked that she liked the paper but she did not want her friends to know that she read such a radical paper. Wishing you and your daughter success in your noble work; I trust that I may be able to help in a moral way.

Mrs. B., Big Rapids, Mich.:—I find that the paid up time of the following five subscribers to Lucifer has expired. The writer subscribed for them all as she wanted some of the papers to send out when she took a notion. The notion took last week and she sent out forty or more. [This was an excellent "notion" to possess or be possessed by. Would that more of our subscribers would take a similar notion.]

Mary M. S., Moore, Okla:—Enclosed you will find stamps to help up arrears on the Light-Bearer. Have you a subscriber by the name of Charley N. Stroup? If you have, please send me his address. You will greatly oblige his mother if you will be so kind. I received "What the Young Need to Know," and like it very much.

[Perhaps some one of the readers of Lucifer will be able to give this mother the desired information.]

Free Love: A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of conjubial love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Powlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 1874, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence 160 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 107 Carroll Ave., Chicago

786

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

A FEW GOOD BOOKS FOR YOU.

Love, Marriage and Divorce. A discussion between Horace Greeley, Stephen Pearl Andrews and Henry James. $0.35

The Rights of Women and the Sexual Relations. By Karl Heinzen. In cloth, $1; paper covers, .10

Love and the Law. By E. C. Walker. .05

The Sexual Enslavement of Women. By E. C. Walker. .05

The Woman Who Did. A Novel. By Grant Allen. 1.00

The British Barbarians. A Novel. By Grant Allen. 1.00

The Red Heart in a White World. An Outline of Principles and a Plan of Organization. By J. Wm. Lloyd, .10

Wind Harp Songs. By J. Wm. Lloyd, 1.00

The Revival of Puritanism. By E. C. Walker, .05

Bible Temperance. Showing that the Bible encourages the use of intoxicants. By E. C. Walker, .10

Woman, Church, and State. By Matilda Joslyn Gage, 2.00

Church Property. Should it be Taxed? .15

Prohibition and Self Government: Their Irreconcilable Antagonism. By E. C. Walker. .05

When Love Is Liberty and Nature Law. By John Badcock, Jr. A remarkably clear, convincing work. .10

Liberty. Political, Religious, Social and Moral. By A. F. Tindall. .10

Diana. A Psycho-Physiological Essay on the Sexual Relations. Sixth edition. Revised and improved. .25

Perfect Motherhood. By Lois Waisbrooker; cloth, 1.00

Helen Harlow's Vow By Lois Waisbrooker; paper, .25

Wherefore Investigating Co. By Lois Waisbrooker; paper, .5

CULTIVATION OF PERSONAL MAGNETISM.

A TREATISE ON HUMAN CULTURE. BY LEROY BERRIER.

This treatise reverses the common belief that Personal Magnetism, Life Force and Mind Force can not be cultivated and acquired. It is a Complete Course of Instructions that will enable all who possess them, to become powerfully magnetic. Price, $1. Postage, 5 cents.

Address Leroy Berrier, President Institute of Human Culture, Minneapolis, Minn.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be FREE; love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrially."—Page 265. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CLEVELAND AND COUNTRYLESS WOMAN", by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 4 0 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at th's office.

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races." Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III., Co-operation; Chapter V., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, ten cts.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW. A primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. A valuable compendium on Sex Ethics Startling and Scientific Price, 10 cents.

Free Society is an advocate of Anarchist Communism, and in its advocacy of liberty in all things does not overlook sexual liberty. It is an eight-page weekly published at 50 cents a year. A specimen copy will be cheerfully furnished upon request. We also publish a monthly Anarchist library. If you want two good treatises on our theories send 10 cents for Kropotkin's "Law and Authority" and Maiatesta's "Talk About Anarchist Communism." Nos. 1 and 2 of our new monthly. Free Society, 10 Oak Grove Ave., San Francisco, Cal.

RIGHTS OF WOMEN

IN THE SEXUAL RELATIONS,

By Karl Heinzen. A new edition together with the startling letters of Louise Mayer" on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German women at Frauenstadt A book of 256 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Price paper bound, 50 cents; cloth, $ 1

THE BALLAD OF READING JAIL. BY C. 3.3.

This powerful poem of more than 600 lines, is the work of OSCAR WILDE C.3 3. having been the poets prison number during his confinement in Reading Jail. It is dedicated to the memory of a trooper of the Horse Guards who was hanged in the jail at that time, and it depicts the terrible sensations of the author and his fellow prisoners before and after the execution.

Just issued; price, in cloth, blue, vellum back, beautifully printed from large type on hand-made antique paper, deckle edges; reading matter on one side of the paper; a sumptuous book of 96 pages. 7 inches by 5, $1. In paper, 64 pages, 10 cents. Mailed postpaid on receipt of price. by M. Harman, 167 Carroll Avenue, Chicago.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint' A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" to missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.

This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 167 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Women in Marriage Slavery

Will find in HILDA'S HOME a story exposing the horrors of their condition as faithfully and as fearlessly as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" exposed the horrors of Negro slavery in the South. The story is more entertaining than many modern works of fiction and the plain truths it tells will find responsive echoes in the aching, bursting hearts of many women who know the galling effects of marriage thralldom.

The book contains 425 pages. Price handsomely bound in cloth, $1. In paper cover 50 cents. Send in your order NOW—especially if you want extra copies for distribution among your friends.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Personal Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 20 cents. Address Moses Harman, 167 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Health Hints and ready recipes, Dr. E. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health: or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.

"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.

"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.

Sample pages free Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Missing Link Modern Spiritualism. By A. Leah Underhill. A book for all spiritualists and investigators. "Hear all sides, then decide." 23 chapters; 478 pages; 16 illustrations, including portraits of the Fox family. History of the Hydesville rappings, as given by eye-witnesses, the threats or mob violence; remarkable and well-attested manifestations; the "exposures" disposed of, etc. Handsomely bound in cloth. Publishers price, $1.50. On receipt of $1.27, and 13 cents for postage, we will send the book to any address.

A Gentleman of liberal views and a freedom lover wants lady correspondent living in and within a radius of 100 miles of Decatur, Ill. Address, R. C., care of Lucifer.

Wanted: A woman holding radical views to keep house for a family of three adults in a city in Massachusetts. A pleasant home for the right person. Write to M., 167 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

The Story of An African Farm, Olive Schreiner's masterpiece. A story of the struggle for light, the search for truth, the yearning for happiness of bright young English and German people, among the ignorant and coarse Boers and Kaffirs of South Africa. This is a work of art, and of truth. Well bound in cloth. 296 pages. Price, 60 cents, postage 10 cents. For sale at this office.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 44. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, NOV. 11, E. M. 299. [C. E. 1899.] WHOLE No. 787

Life's Strife.

Side by side with the river of life
Flows that turbulent stream of strife—
Strife for life—a life of strife,
With never a token of ending;
Wedded together as husband and wife,
Are joyous life and remorseless strife;
Together forever blending.

Of the sexes two, are life and strife,
Wedded together as man and wife,
Breeding that entity,—human life;
Breeding with never an ending.
There cannot be life without the strife,
There cannot be strife without the life,
Wedded with links as man and wife;
Links past human rending.

Oh! why was life on this earth so rife,
As to make for the whole eternal strife?
Strife and life, as man and wife;
Marriage that knows no ending.
Strife for bread; strife for name;
Strife for riches, honor, fame;
With never a sign of mending.

From worm to man by this wonderful plan;
Think of it; scan it; defend it who can!
Came life and strife, since the world began,
With never a sign of ending
Strife for liberty's noble goal,
Strife to enslave our neighbor's soul,
Strife that embraces of life the whole,
Strife without end or mending.

Strife for brute, as well as for man;
Strife for all, by this terrible plan;
Strife for life, since the world began,
With never a token of ending.
Strife of brute for life and food,
Strife of man for man's greatest good,
Strife that is always misunderstood,
Strife of Nature's sending.

Life is the pleasure; strife is the pain;
Linked together—sunshine and rain.
Who shall divorce the two again?
Or who can force an ending?
Life is the sum of all human joy,
Strife is its pain without alloy;
Linked together as maid and boy;
Linked with no token of rending.

Life is eternal. Eternity springs
From the loins of the always present, and sings
The song of eternal succession: that brings
No token nor sign of an ending.
Strife is its equal; together they blend
In embraces no forces can ever rend;
Life and strife for time without end
Are facts of nature's sending.

Life without strife. How grand is the dream!
Its joyous pulses would almost seem
To tell of an angel poet's theme,—
Design with designer blending.
But Nature neither smiles nor weeps;
Its lore, stern vigil ever keeps,
And coldly views the stain in heaps,
Nor fitful fate suspending.

—J. A. Rollins.

If the Light Bearer has done you good, it may do your neighbor good. Say a good word for it.

The Deserving Horses

From "Even as You and I," by Bolton Hall.

A herd of Horses grazed on a great plain, and because grass was easy to get, they would work for no one but themselves.

The Riders began to put fences about the best pastures (in order to preserve the country). Then the Horses were willing to work for the Riders, but only if they could get corn to eat. Therefore the Riders passed laws to regulate the hire of Horses, and the Horses jumped the fences, and would work for little less than before.

The Riders made an outcry that wolves were coming, so that the Horses huddled together. Then the fences were extended around the whole herd. When the Horses wished to run against the fences to break them, the Riders cried: "Stand by us, and we will protect you." Nevertheless, when the wolves did come the Riders only drove out some of the Horses to trample upon them. And they made the fences strong and high.

The Horses starved in the pens, and the charitable among the Riders began to consider the Condition of Society. Said they: "The rate of mortality among Work Horses is frightful."

"That," said a noted Driver, "is because their habits are filthy. Look at that pen!"

"I think rather," said a Ring Master, "because they are ignorant. These Horses do not even know how to act, else I would mount them and care for them."

"No," said a Horse Doctor, "it is because it is their nature to crowd together."

Said a Teamster: "The Horses are lazy."

"It is drinking too much," said a Farrier, "that makes them hungry!"

"They are improvident," said a Horse Dealer.

"Right," said a Huntsman. "Now look at this horse of mine. He used to break the fence, so I took him and fed him well. Any Horse might improve his condition that way."

"The Horses are all right," said a Horse Breeder, "except for inherent badness. They should be content with the condition in which Providence, and we, for our own wise purposes, have placed them."

Many of the Horses died, and their bodies began to breed a plague. "This," said the Riders, "is intolerable. Something must be done." So they bought scent bottles for themselves.

They established a day nursery to care for young Colts while their Mothers were tilling the Riders' fields, and the Horses were looking for work.

They made a Hospital where sick Horses were experimented upon, and their corpses dissected gratis; and the diseased and ricketty Horses, instead of dying off, produced offspring still more miserable.

They established a Fresh Air Fund to take the Colts (for a week) from the fetid pen. This looked rather inadequate, yet what saving of life it made still further overcrowded the pen.

They built model stables. These seemed to take up stil more room. They established charitable employment bureaus, and taught the Colts to do Horses' work.

They gave them salt at cost, and Horse labor became cheaper yet. They gave free food. Then some of the Horses said, "If we can live without working, why should we work at all?" These they called tramps.

And, seeing that some Horses, being hungry, would steal, and being tormented, become vicious, they made prisons so fine that all the Horses wanted to escape into prison.

They made Sanatariums and Solariums. They helped the helpless, which then became more helpless still. Finally a cry was raised that the Horses were being Pauperized.

Said the Master of a Pen at Detroit: "We should let each deserving Horse use a vacant lot, so that Horses can get their own fresh air and food. They will live cleanly on the land. Do not bring the hay to them, but let them gather for themselves, and care for their own colts."

The riders said that would be an interesting Experiment—if on a small scale—and appointed from the Association for Improving the Condition of the Horses, a Committee on the Cultivation of Vacant Lots by the Unemployed.

"Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses."

This is the title of a new pamphlet by E. C. Walker—a work which is a valuable addition to the literature of Social Radicalism. The following is an extract from its pages:

SOCIAL RADICALS AND PARENTAGE.

"This world is no place for radical children. Never put 'new wine into old bottles.' There is no place here for children, born of radical parents, to live. I do not believe in being cruel to children, and I have learned that the world is not ready for radical children; there is no ease or comfort for them. It will be hundreds of years before women will really be free to have children in comfort. The way things are now, one must either be a lie to one's self or a lie to the world or be looked upon as an outcast. The conditions are too unsettled, anyway; the radical people themselves are unsettled; it is no time for women of new thought to have children—if they have children, they are sure to suffer, and they will say in the end, 'it was not worth the bother.'—From a Letter."

I should be the last to urge women to have children if they do not desire them or if they think the probable cost would be too great, but I believe the free woman will wish for children and will have a reasonable number, so many as she thinks she can bear without injury to herself or to them and can care for properly. She will find, in all probability, that this is needful for her health and full development. Certainly, this is not the best imaginable world for children born of radical parents, nor, for that matter, is it an ideal place for the children of conservative and reactionary parents, for radical adults, or for merely ordinary adults. But, despite all the anti-naturalists, it is improving decidedly, in some respects, and today the man or the woman who fails to Conform has a score of friendly neighbors, near or within occasional reach, where his or her predecessor of twenty-five or thirty-five years ago was fortunate if there were one. "Bastard" and its less rough congener, "illegitimate," have lost much of their venom in the more progressive parts of the country, and in some of the heavily populated sections our young folks are sufficiently numerous to provide their own society in so far as they care to be by themselves.

In the evolution of society in this age of general literary knowledge and easy and rapid communication and travel, the new wine must go into the old bottles, the new thought must enter into the old society, both in principle and practice, and gradually remold it into something "nearer to the heart's desire." The world is now too small to permit a new society to be slowly developed along new lines in some nook or corner, beyond the influence and interference of the old society. The bottles are here and the wine is here, and here the filling will be done. Women will bear children in comfort "some hundreds of ears hence," if and only as men and women of the present and the intervening ages continue to strive to live free lives, with all their non-invasive instincts, including that of parentage, gratified; and that is just what they are going to do, just what they are and will be self-compelled to do. This is the way in which the units, men and women, and the aggregate, society, are really changed—cataclysmic upheavings and overturnings of the effect, society, do not often carry salutary change permanently forward, for they rarely, very rarely, make deep and lasting good impressions on the mental and emotional faculties of the causes, men and women.

As to social ostracism, well, it is a trivial obstacle. It is a mere bagatelle when weighed in the scales against one's convictions. It is the breath of life to the nostril of the earnest and strong searcher for the better, for he knows that it is a hundred to one that if the masses condemn, thinking persons will commend. Better far the approval of one frank and reasoning man or woman than that of a thousand hypocrites or monkey-like imitators of one another. The man who ostracizes me because of our differences of opinion, does not have any opinion of me for which I care the snap of my finger. The radical who is as anxious for the smiles of "society" as for the respect of his fellow investigators, has no just cause for complaint if his is the usual fate of the sitter on two stools. Social ostracism is worthy of serious notice only when it ceases to be such simply and becomes mob or legal violence, or can prevent breadearning.

Both social and business ostracism are as nothing when set over against the perils that assailed the religious and race outcasts of the past. Catholics, Protestants, Jews, Moors, men of science, alike faced confiscation, attainder, imprisonment, torture in all shapes, stake, and scaffold. But the children still came, and we, their heirs, are in abject terror of ostracism!

The work comprises various essays, some of which have never before appeared in print; others are republished in revised and enlarged form. One of the most noteworthy of the latter is "Love and the Law." The table of contents is as follows:

Love and the Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life; and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varietists; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attractions and Expression; Is she an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage. Appendix: Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love and Life."

Price 15 cents, for sale at this office.

What is Religion?

We have received numerous inquiries regarding this last, and in some respects, greatest lecture by R. G. Ingersoll. It is the lecture delivered before the "Free Religious Association" in Boston, last June. In it he affirms, unhesitatingly and uncompromisingly, that the only salvation for the race lies in making woman "the owner, the mistress of herself." The lecture is issued in neat pamphlet form by the Investigator Company. A fine portrait of Ingersoll adorns the title page. We will, in future, keep this valuable address for sale. Price, 10 cents a copy.

Memorial Meeting in St. Louis.

The twelfth anniversary of the legal murder of the Chicago labor martyrs, Parsons, Spies, Fischer, Engel, Ling, will be held at Druid's Hall, Saturday, Nov. 18, 1899, Ninth and Market Sts., St. Louis, at 8 p. m. English oration by Miss Voltairine de Cleyre, of Philadelphia. German oration by Mr. John Most, of New York. Admission, ten cents.

Help spread the light. You certainly see persons of your acquaintance who are suffering because of their superstitious reverence for the tyrannous beliefs of their ancestors. Talk to them. Reason with them. Show them the Light Bearer.

As to the Change of Name.

BY HENRY E. ALLEN.

For about ten years I have been an interested reader of Lucifer, and expect to remain on its subscription list as long as I live and the paper continues under its present, able management. I tell my friends it is the nearest my ideal of a radical, free-thought paper that I have ever found. Lucifer's editors seem to fill my definition of a true liberal viz:—"one who is willing that every person shall enjoy the same rights he demands for himself under similar circumstances." If every human being were this kind of a liberal the sex or marriage problem would be solved. But Lucifer will have a mission perhaps for a long time to come.

What I started out to say is this: I have for years felt that the name Lucifer was at least unfortunate, and many times I have been convinced that the paper would have received a more respectful and unprejudiced reading under some other name with parties to whom I have given copies.

For these reasons I read Bro. Monroe's letter in last issue with much interest, and heartily concur in almost all that he said. However I do not like the name, "Light-Bearer." It seems to me it is not quite up-to-date—not sufficiently suggestive for a paper with the broad, humanitarian principles upon which Lucifer is conducted.

As Editor Harman has said, the world is turning our way in these closing days of the century—and there is no mistake about it. Now, what is needed is a name broad enough and comprehensive enough to stand for the reforms this paper has so long and so ably championed. What name can be given that will meet these requirements? Why would not this do?

BETTER CONDITIONS;

An exponent of Sex Ethics and Race Culture.

This paper has not only been a fearless advocate of the abolition of sex slavery but has also championed many other vital reforms. In fact it has for years demanded "Better Conditions," in all that goes to make up the sum total of human happiness and welfare.

This name would frighten or prejudice no one, while its application practically covers the entire field of reform. In regard to the sixteen page form I am inclined to believe it would be an advantage. It would be a more convenient form for preserving and carrying and the cost would not be materially increased. I am ready to aid to the full extent of my ability. While on this subject I want to say a word in regard to Lucifer's patronage.

The "Appeal to Reason," a socialistic, six column folio, published at Girard, Kan., has just completed a fund of $3,125 "to educate editors." This amount has been raised by dollar subscriptions mostly from its subscribers, within the past two months, to send the Appeal to every editor in the United States and Canada for one year. There are 17,800 of them. Now, contrast the enterprise shown by these socialists to that shown by the readers of Lucifer,—is it creditable to us? Here we are with a list that should number thousands instead of hundreds. If we honestly believe in these reforms why continue this half-hearted warfare? Why not strike out as these indefatigable socialists have done and are doing every day? Perhaps we might do better, with a better name—why not try it?

A Memorial Meeting

In honor of the twelfth anniversary of the judicial murder of Albert R. Parsons, Louis Lingg, George Engel, Adolph Fischer and August Spies, will be held under the auspices of the Labor Martyrs' Memorial Association, on Saturday, November 11, 1899, 8 p. m. sharp, West Twelfth St. Turner Hall, between Halsted and Union Sts.

Speakers—in English: Voltairine de Cleyre, of Philadelphia. In German: Carl Nold. Musical exercises. Admission free.

A Cry for Help.

BY A. MANN.

By all means drop the name Lucifer. I am tired of explaining its meaning and refuse to do so longer. After it is explained the meaning is found in the sub-title and we have in reality: Light Bearer, the Light Bearer.

A name will be needed for a new emancipator—for those big, lusty men who are ruled over by small women in a way that makes gods and angels laugh. What should these men do to head off the hilarity? Rule by force? Lucifer has been teaching too well, and now we need an antidote or else deal with man as bees do the drones. Mrs. Freeman in "The Land of Nod" tells of a race of women which hopes to do away with man entirely. American women are already growing taller than the men. A word to the wise is sufficient. As yet the cause of down trodden man is without an exponent. Help! Help!

Advance Notice.

Voltairine de Cleyre, of Philadelphia, will deliver the following four lectures:

Sunday, November 12th, 2 p. m., for the Social Science Club of Chicago, Hall 913, Masonic Temple, cor. State and Randolph Sts. Subject, "Expansion to Bursting."

Monday, November 13th, 8 p. m., for the Hull House, cor. Halsted and Polk Sts. Subject, "The Poetry of Reform."

Tuesday, November 14th, 8 p. m. for the Chicago Commons, 140 North Union St., two doors east of Milwaukee Ave. Subject, "The Evils of Impersonal Rule."

Friday, November 17th, 8 p. m., for the Single Tax Club, Handel Hall, 40 East Randolph St. Subject, "A Comparison of the English and American Radical Movements."

Discussion invited.

"In New York they have a society for the prevention of cruelty to children. Last year the officers of the society got $35,000 in salaries, and cared for an average of forty children. It took $2,250 to care for each child—this is a sample of long-faced charity. In Baltimore a similar society makes its report for 1898. In it we find salaries to officers $5.00, incidentals $2,000. After taking these from total receipts it is found that the poor children got only $46.30. Verily, the sheperds sheared the sheep. The 'heathen take' is another pious fraud to shear the innocent lambs. The tears that have been shed over the poor heathen would float a navy and the money begged to convert them would sink it. The fellow who gave a dollar to the 'heathen fund,' specifying that he gave one cent to the heathen and ninety-nine cents to take it to them was a close observer of the usual methods of sheep shearing. Charity is made the cloak for robbery very often, and rascals, too lazy to work, find a fat living preying on the gullible."

Natural phenomona can only be accounted for by a careful and repeated attention to them. Our knowledge of the properties of matter and mind depends entirely on the permanency and stability of the order of Nature, and on that constitution of the human mind by which our ideas are associated. The harmony of the order of Nature implies, that every preceding circumstance being the same, every following circumstance will be the same.—Common Sense.

We are receiving many expressions of opinion regarding the question of the elimination of the word Lucifer from our title. We should be glad to hear from every subscriber who has the welfare of the paper at heart. The question is, does the name Lucifer interfere with the spread of the light? Would the substitution of Light Bearer for Lucifer cause a diminution of interest in the paper?

You cannot make a better investment of 25 cents than to subscribe for the Light Bearer for three months for some friend who has never seen it, but who needs it.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper to which it has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

For the "Sunny South."

Before this edition of our Morning Star can shine upon its more distant patrons—scattered as these patrons are over both hemispheres of earth's surface—its editor will probably have taken up his winter quarters in a warmer and sunnier climate than that endured in winter by the denizens of the great city located on the shore of Lake Michigan. The cause or occasion of this winter outing is explained in a circular letter, or rather in two circular letters, printed in this issue.

For a week or two past we have been sending out copies of these circular letters, to old friends and to some new ones, but finding it troublesome as well as expensive to send them to each we now print them in Lucifer, and will respectfully ask that each reader will kindly consider herself and himself personally addressed, and that they will respond in the way that seems right and good to them.

To those who have already responded to these letters I wish in this public manner to return heartiest thanks—inasmuch as it seems hard to write my thanks to each personally—for the aid and encouragement they are giving to Lucifer, its invalid editor and its editor protem, Lillian Harman.

And now, once more, in view of another prolonged absence from the work of the office I respectfully but earnestly ask all who feel that Lucifer's work is their work, to do that which lies nearest to them in the way of keeping the educational ball rolling. Hopefully, M. HARMAN.

Do You Want the Autobiography of Moses Harman?

Last March I sent out a few circulars—less than a hundred—containing the following statement. The responses received were quite encouraging; but before we carried out the plans then formulated the editor decided to return to the office for the summer. As the details of office work occupies all the time he can devote to work while here, the question of the book had to be postponed to a more favorable season. He has spent some considerable time away from the office during the last summer, and his health was considerably benefited thereby. On his return to the office we hoped he would be able to remain here this winter; but his strength seemed not equal to the strain, and it seemed, on the whole, best that he should leave before the break down occurred instead of after, as last winter. But he is not incapacitated for labor; he is able to work moderately, and desires to do so. It would seem that now is the time, if ever, for him to write the proposed book.

Two hundred and forty-four copies of this book have been subscribed for up to the time of writing these lines. Here are the circulars to which reference has been made: L. H.

THE LIFE OF MOSES HARMAN.

To you whom I regard as an earnest friend of Lucifer and its founder, I desire to say a few words. Can you spare me a few minutes of your time for the perusal of this letter and consideration of its subject?

For several years friends have urged Moses Harman to write a book. They have insisted that the lesson of his life, of his experience in various lines of reform, of his memories of more than sixty years should not be lost to the world. Up to the present he has not had the time apart from his other work to undertake the task. Now, however, the time seems favorable. He is gaining in strength and might without injury to himself, put in a few hours a day in writing. In fact, this would be the best thing for him, for the reason that he cannot long continue idle, while if he soon returns to the office work he may again collapse under the worry of it. He is willing to undertake the work, but one possibility must not be overlooked—the possibility that but few people will want such a book.

He has given me permission to ask the advice of a few of his friends. Whether the matter ever goes further will depend on the opinion of the readers of these lines.

1. Do you think that such a book should be written and published?

2. If published should it appear (a) in whole or (b) in part in Lucifer, or (c) only in the book form?

3. How many copies of the book will you take? It will be about 400 pages, bound in cloth, with portrait of the author, and the price will be $1. Any suggestions as to size, style, price, or anything else you may think of will be gratefully considered.

The money pledged will be due when the book is ready for delivery. If, however, there are any subscribers who are able to advance a part of their subscription before the book is published it will help the author to live where he chooses—in the south or elsewhere—while writing the book.

I hope and believe that this book, if published, will be of great interest and value—Moses Harman's prison experience, alone, would constitute an important volume. And I feel that now, if ever, is the time for its production. We may, we must, hope for the best, but the day will come when the hand of Moses Harman can no longer guide the pen. Though he has written a great deal, but little is in lasting form.

Am I right in thinking that a record of his life and work should be preserved—that it is worth the necessary effort now? What think you? Earnestly yours, LILLIAN HARMAN.

The following from the author of "A Physician in the House" will explain, in part at least, why I send this personal letter to you:

50 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., Oct. 1899.

DEAR MR. HARMAN:—

In my opinion you need rest. An extended trip to the south during cold weather will do much to restore your health.

Insomnia, indigestion and nervous prostration require change of climate and mental quietude.

I would strongly advise that you spend the winter in the south.

Yours truly,
DR. J. H. GREER.

By the advice of this same physician and of others I spent most of last winter and spring in the south, with much benefit to my general health—as I fully believe. The local symptoms however,—the gastric and cardiac trouble, attended with insomnia and nervous irritability, are by no means cured, and are always aggravated by the worry and confinement of office work, in the city.

If our publication office were a paying institution this personal letter to you would not be written; but unfortunately such is not the case. With the time and labor of myself and daughter practically thrown in, the receipts of the office scarcely pay expenses from year to year. The chief object, then, of this letter is to ask if you feel able and willing to help to bear the increased expense that will have to be met, in some way, if I leave the office for the winter. More help will have to be hired and travelling expenses paid.

I do not ask for donations, as such. I much prefer that help should come—if it comes—in the shape of new subscribers to Lucifer or orders for books in our line,—including orders for a book to be written by myself, if life and health permit, while on my proposed winter vacation. This book is to be partly biographical but mainly a recital of the prolonged struggle made by Lucifer and its friends for freedom of speech, of press and of mails, and for the emancipation of womanhood and motherhood from the thralldom of sex-slavery through conventional and canonical marriage, and for the right of children to be born well.

With this letter I send you a copy of a circular issued during my absence from office, explaining more specifically the purpose of the proposed book. To this circular quite a number of encouraging responses were received. More than one hundred copies of the book were subscribed for and some money paid in advance. Materials have been collected for the book and it is believed that a few months of quiet and undivided attention to the work thereon will put it in shape for the printer.

My object, then in leaving Chicago for the winter is two-fold: First, health; second, leisure and opportunity to write the proposed book. If sufficient responses come in to enable me to do so I will leave Chicago before winter sets in—which in this climate often occurs early in November.

Yours Fraternally, MOSES HARMAN.

The following are a few of the letters which have been received in response:

Sara C. Campbell, Roodhouse, Ill.:—It has been a long time since anything has occurred that gave me so much pleasure as the assurance that Moses Harman is going to write a book. In answer to question (1) I will say most emphatically, I DO. (2) Let it appear only in the book form. (3) The enclosed one dollar is for one copy. After reading it, if it is what I anticipate, I will take as many as I can sell.

F. W. F., New York:—I have received your circular letter respecting a contemplated life of your revered father. I certainly think it would be of great benefit to the human race if such a life were written, and earnestly hope that it will be. I will take ten copies if the price is one dollar, and will send you the whole of my subscription in advance. Replying to your second inquiry, I should say it would be best if the life were to appear in part in Lucifer.

G. W., Sioux City, Ia.:—I am very much interested in the success of the book you contemplate publishing giving a history of your noble father. I am also very much interested in your philosophy of the rights, freedom and relation of women and the sex question. You are and have been doing great good for the human family; you have caused man to pause and think. I will take five copies of the life of Moses Harman, at one dollar each; one for my own library and four to distribute among friends.

Col. James Freeman, Bloomington, Ill.:—An autobiography of your father would be to me almost priceless, and I should suppose, to thousands of others. I hope the book will be written and published, and I think, a few specimen chapters should be published in Lucifer. Cannot say now how many copies I will take, but as many as consistent. If the book is as good as I have the best of reasons to believe it will be, I shall want a number of copies. Will now say five—but will not limit myself to that number if there be more copies published than are ordered in advance.

T. B. Wakeman, New York:—I have your favor asking whether your father should write "The Life of Moses Harman" before he leaves us? I answer decidedly, Yes! Let it be his "Life and Times" as fully and honestly set forth as is now possible in a one dollar volume. Some of it which may be of present interest could appear in Lucifer with good effect, and help to keep up interest in him and his work. Make a good substantial and interesting work, which will live as a part of the record of our time in our libraries, public and private, when he is gone. If in a state of pecunious vitality I will take a copy when it appears.

Henry Bool, Ithaca, N. Y.:—Although I take more of an interest in another branch of the libertarian movement I honor your father and his work too much not to readily respond to your invitation this day to hand. If you so desire you can enter my name for ten volumes.

As regards the name—I think on the whole "Light Bearer" would fill the bill. I don't object to Lucifer in the least but am sure it strikes some folks awry, therefore, to get the wedge entered, it may be better to change its form to that extent. $10 enclosed for the "Life of Moses Harman."

Mrs. M. J. Robson, Weir City, Kan.:—Received your letter. I am sorry to inform you that father (Wm. Humble) was killed in the mines Sept. 19 while following his employment. He was an earnest friend of Lucifer and its founder and often wondered why you did not write your life. We will take two copies of the life of Moses Harman when published. Will inclose two dollars for them. We hope you will see your way to take a vacation and that it will fully restore your health.

[William Humble was a subscriber to Lucifer for fourteen years or thereabouts, and many cheering words have been received from him. We regret exceedingly to learn of his departure from this sphere of action. But we are glad to know that his family are also interested in the work which was so important to him. L. H.]

[We do not feel quite at liberty to give the name of the writer of the following letter. He is a very earnest worker for what he believes is right:]

My being a "natural child" called my early attention to your philosophy and some natural aptitude armed me mentally to combat superstition. In attacking one superstition I soon found it had a twin and next a triplet head until it finally became a hydra, and had I means to furnish literature I would develop into a new Hercules. However there are many small investigators who are riveting attention to the mountain of social evil and out of the many laboratories will be developed a crystal of truth, the purity of which will yet dazzle the world.

[As my figures of speech seem to be getting mixed I think I had better get off here and change cars for another route.]

In regard to your proposition to "take stock" in the new work by your father I can only say that I am in so many things today that I fear to positively declare myself, or agree further to do something. I think you could count on me for ten dollars but I might not be able to give as soon as you may want it. Yet I may or may not be able to send it at any time. If this will be of service in this way you can count me pledged.

I am already a subscriber in a necessarily very meagre way to so many issues that my family feels somewhat justly that it interferes with their comfort.

When I state the Social Democrats thrust the honor of standard bearer (for governor of state) upon me, being a cause to which I am devoted—not so blindly but that I can help a little the cause of free society and see many beauties of it—while also an admirer of woman's suffrage, and a reader of the populists, (against whom I have no grudge). I love all tending towards truth and I know so much that my ignorance is more manifest! You can imagine I am poor.

Ed. Secrest, Randolph, Kan.:—I am sorry that your health is such that you are again obliged to seek a milder climate and more favorable environments. On the other hand I am glad that you have concluded to give us your autobiography; as it would be a pity, indeed, if a life like yours with its scores of rounded out years unselfishly devoted to the uplifting of your fellow men, should be lost to the world. Posterity will eventually acknowledge your heroic struggle for the elevation of our race, and your steady blows in behalf of the rights of the downtrodden everywhere, and especially those of our wives, and mothers and daughters. The reading public is flooded with ponderous volumes biographical and autobiographical of men and women not a tithe as deserving of the world's notice as yourself and daughter: bold, fearless champions of free speech, free press, free soil, free men and free women.

Your incarceration in a Kansas prison will remain a foul blot on the otherwise fair and inspiring escutcheon, whose motto: "To the stars through difficulties," you faithfully and conscientiously tried to follow in your writing and speaking.

But no prophetic gift is needed to predict that the day is dawning when a more enlightened sentiment both here in Kansas and elsewhere will appreciate your now thankless work and bless your memory.

If I were so lucky as to be a dweller in the balmy Southland the latchstring of my home should hang out perpetually for you and yours; and under my roof-tree hospitable hands and hearts should greet and meet you; and under my vine and fig tree you should write the stirring events of a long life, as an inspiration for other brave spirits to imitate, with none to molest you, or make you afraid. But as these things cannot be, I can do the next best thing along with others. I enclose five dollars; one dollar for a copy of your book; one dollar for Lucifer, and the remaining three toward starting you cheerily on your south bound trip.

—

C. C., New Glarus, Wis.:—In regard to the book I will say that I should be glad to see it written, for it cannot help being a valuable chapter in that large volume which records the great and heroic struggle for human freedom. My means are limited and my obligations many, but if nothing occurs to upset present prospects, I will take five copies at one dollar each and will advance one half of it any time you will say so. My circle of liberal friends is not large, and so I hardly know to whom to send many copies of Lucifer even if I could pay for them. I will inclose a dollar and you may send the paper to inclosed address for one year.

In regard to a change of name, as I have but lately come into your circle of readers I cannot expect my opinion or wish to have much weight, but I will say that I think the name Lucifer, because of its use in connection with his Satanic majesty, has an antagonizing effect upon many people when it is first brought to their notice, and therefore I think that Light Bearer or some other appropriate name would be better for it. I have no doubt, however, that many of your subscribers and readers who have been with you through the days of severe trial would prefer to retain the old name.

Should you decide to go south I trust your health will be good and that you will be able to prosecute your literary work to your fullest satisfaction.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville, Va.:—It may be well to drop the name Lucifer. "The Investigator" once had "an infidel paper" at its mast head and finally had to take it out. It is so misunderstood; before one reads the paper it biases against it.

—

John A. Lant, Tarrytown, N. Y.:—Your issue of Nov. 4th., is well edited and well printed. You should not have two names for a small paper. Your defense of Lucifer is conclusive, but let Light-Bearer suffice for a name. You can extol and explain the former in paragraphs, but for a head it will not be understood for one hundred years.

—

James S. Freeman, Bloomington, Ill.—In regard to the changes proposed in number 785 I have no choice; it is a matter of indifference to me. The matter contained is the all important point. The name or form is to me of less moment. Whether or not any change is made it will be just as dear to me, and I shall labor just as faithfully for its success and shall hope to do more for it during the coming winter than ever before.

—

Joseph O. Hatten, M. D. St. Louis, Mo.—That our many friends may know why they have not heard from us of late I wish to say that our dearly loved girl, Julia, passed away, in the bloom of life and young womanhood, Thursday night, Oct. 26. The body was cremated Saturday the 28th. It was very hard for for us to give her up. Her mother Dr. Ella Slater, is nearly heart broken; her health has suffered a severe strain.

—

E. A. Draper, Providence, R. I.—I think Mr. Monroe gives some very good reasons for changing the name of Lucifer to Light Bearer. The name of Lucifer, to a great many, does not mean what it did to people hundreds of years ago. It now suggests something bad instead of good, and I think it is apt to give people a prejudice against the paper and to interfere with its being appreciated. We want a name that all will understand and so save time and energy spent in defining and explaining. Hope to see the name changed by Jan. 1900.

—

J. H. Kallmyer, New Florence, Mo.:—When my attention was first called to Lucifer I said, "The name is just suited," for it needs a rather vigorous devil to rebel against orthodox conventionalities. But I am not wedded to the name so much that I should vote to continue it if I were convinced that it stood in the way of its usefulness. Am rather of the opinion that people who object to the name on account of its diabolical significance would also reject the contents of the paper on the same ground.

Am a friend of Lucifer and expect to continue to be, whatever the title under which it makes its weekly visits. Hope for it a long life of usefulness. Should like to see a change in form so that the pages would be about half the present size—advertisements so placed that they can be detached if the paper is bound.

—

J. P. Borthwick, Ontario, Cal.—My answers to your questions regarding change of name are as follow:

1. Yes.

2. The present name is a shock in itself to many.

3. I cannot guarantee anything, but will agree to mail my copy to those who are not likely to know of the paper's existence.

4. The present name is not an aid. It is a hindrance.

5. The change would increase my interest, and I would regard it as wise and progressive.

Mr. H. B. Monroe's reasons are so well expressed that I have nothing to add to them. I have thought as he does for many years. Will be pleased if the change is made. For the success of the paper and the furtherance of its ideals of right and justice "The Light Bearer" is appropriate and beautiful.

—

E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D., New York—I think there would be some advantage in not using Lucifer as a name, though it is just right in meaning—Light Bearer—but it is indelibly associated in all minds with something devilish and bad, and so makes it a little hard to make new friends for it. Perhaps Light Bearer alone would do better, unless there is some other one word meaning about the same.

As for size and shape, I like the paper as it is, and think the magazine form is being overdone. It is not in bad shape even for binding—for magazine form would make a year's lot too fat; while now twenty-six or fifty-two numbers bunch very well. Maybe I am getting old fogy ways and perhaps I am too prone to "let well enough alone," but I have seen many changes made that were not of advantage. However I doubt that Lucifer would lose any friends by dropping first name, and maybe it would have less tide to swim against.

Lois Waisbrooker, Santa Ana, Calif.—The pamphlet "The Folly of Worship or the Curse of Godism" was written in June 1886 under the following circumstances. I went one evening to listen to a labor lecture in which the speaker kept making appeals to God. A strong influence took hold of me and at the close I went up to her and said loudly enough for all to hear: "The workers will never get their rights till they let go of God and take hold of themselves."

This influence held me till the pamphlet was written, and I have in my paper, "Foundation Principles," the first part of it before me under date of June 20th, '86. I never claimed that it was anything else but inspirational, and did not even put my name to it. I have often sensed when writing, a presence that seemed to quicken my brain, but in this case it was so strong that I wrote as though it was another that was speaking and not myself, the only time I have ever done so. I did not know who it was but have reason to believe it was Victor Hugo.

About eighteen months ago I felt a strong desire to republish the pamphlet but could not raise the means. If the pamphlet "Godism" was written since then, it may be possible that the control, under that disappointment, took me in the astral to one who could publish, I acting as amanuensis. In that case the wording would be nearly or quite the same. This would be no more strange than that I should go out in my astral body and be seen by a medium 3,000 miles away lecturing to an audience of spirits, women who had been crushed out of life by prostitution, and two years afterward when we met for the first time, be recognized by that medium because of what she had before seen, which occurred more than twenty years ago.

I am much interested in the letter in last Lucifer from Governor's Island, N. Y., for if reincarnation is a truth I have certainly lived where conditions made me exceedingly interested in the emancipation of woman from sex bondage.

—

James Beeson, Hytop, Ala.—I have read my article in Lucifer No. 784 and your reply thereto. I have only a few lines to write in reply, and if you will kindly give space in Lucifer's columns you can make any reply to it that suits you without anything more from me. First, I used one Latin phrase and I am sure I wrote ante bellum, but the type makes me say anti bellum, which ruins the meaning of my article and renders it ridiculous in the eyes of the literary public. I do not want to accuse any one of doing it on purpose, but it is so easy for a typo to change one letter without being detected in it that I will just use negro language and only ask you to tote fair with me this time. You say very truly that you make a grave charge against the southern lynchers when you accuse them of burning negroes who had committed no crimes at all. Indeed I look at it that way and if you will prove one case of such lynching I will freely take back everything I said and make apologies to you and Lucifer's readers and in any reasonable way. That, I think, would be fair but I make one more fair proposition;—if you will prove that the negro miners at Cartersville, Ind., had committed any crime I will then take back all and apologize. You again very truly say that the shooting of laboring men has become so common that scarcely any notice is taken of it. But I suppose you forgot to tell your readers that the plutocrats, that cause all the shooting are not all southern barbarians—an omission you certainly ought not to have made. You also said "people hate those they injured," which is true, and I suppose is one reason the northern people so bitterly hate their southern subjects. You may, while you are about it, just tell one reason the negroes outrage southern white women, is because the Union soldiers told them it would be right to ravish "secesh" women, and set a few examples of that soldierly feat themselves.

Once more, for fear of being accused of defending lynch law, I will just say that I am opposed to any kind of law by force, and have spoken and written against lynchers and lynching ever since the practice commenced I would, if I had leisure time, and a paper whose business it was to publish such articles, give my views on the race problem, but I hate a quarrel of any kind and will now close this question.

FOR WAR AND EXPANSION.

Lucifer has been engaged in warfare against Superstition, Intolerance, Ignorance and Tyranny ever since it sprang into existence. It will continue the battle as long as it continues to exist. But it cries for re-enforcements.

A Larger Standing Army

Of warriors for liberty of thought, speech and action is demanded. The Ignorance trust is the most terrible of all the terrible family of trusts. Help us to destroy it.

Expansion is Necessary

If we carry on this righteous war successfully. Not expansion of territory, for Lucifer now has subscribers in all parts of the world. The expansion we ask for is in our subscription list. We want it doubled, quadrupled, centupled.

But the expansion must be gradual. We will first ask our friends to help us double our number of subscribers. It ought to be easy for each subscriber to get one more. Try it. It will not only do Lucifer good, but it will also do you good and it is a safe guess that it will do the new subscriber good.

THERE'S PROFIT IN IT FOR YOU. If your own subscription is paid for a year in advance you may retain 50 cents for each additional subscriber which you secure for us at the rate of $1 a year. If you are interested in the doctrines which Lucifer advocates this affords you an opportunity to help the cause and get some financial reward for your time and labor.

HELP CIRCULATE RADICAL LITERATURE. Write to us for special terms.

BACK NUMBERS OF LUCIFER are excellent for propaganda. Send seventy-five cents for a package of one hundred and distribute them at radical meetings or at other places where they will do good.

WOMEN and ECONOMICS,

A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women. By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Here are a few of the page headings of this remarkable work "Economic environment; The dependence of women; No inherent disability of sex; Marriage not a partnership; House service as a livehood; Motherhood and economic production-Modification to maternity; The usefulness of sex; Differentiation of sex; Sex and humanity; The peacock's tail; Sex distinctions; The eternal feminine; unreasoning devotion; Women as persons; Race-attributes and sex-attribute; The normal child; Personal profit and sex-relations; The influence of heredity; The young man and the young woman; The effect of custom: The sex relation personal; Innocence and ignorance; Marriage with independence; The increasing difficulty of marriage; Supporting one's family; Virtue and vice; The results of repression; The harm that women do; The development of love; The hope for the future; The martyr and the pioneer; The dropping of the bars; The meaning of the new woman; Motherhood in education; A criminal failure; Marriage and the family; Love's young dream; The heart and the stomach; Socializing the household industries; The stomach as a family tie; The servant wife; World-servants and house-servants; A wider maternity; Between the old and the new; "The vices of the slave;" The outgrown stronghold. Printed on strong, heavy paper; 350 pages, bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale by M. Harman, 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

Free Love; A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of conubial love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 1874, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence. 140 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 40 cents. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago

Personal. A man of liberal views desires to correspond with woman (not too young) holding similar opinions, in or near Boston. Address F. F. Denton, Boston, Mass.

787.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

A FEW GOOD BOOKS FOR YOU.

Love, Marriage and Divorce. A discussion between Horace Greeley, Stephen Pearl Andrews and Henry James. $0.35

The Rights of Women and the Sexual Relations. By Karl Heinzen. In cloth, $1; paper covers, .70

Love and the Law. By E. C. Walker, .05

The Sexual Enslavement of Women. By E. C. Walker, .05

The Woman Who Did. A Novel. By Grant Allen. 1.00

The British Barbarians. A Novel. By Grant Allen. 1.00

The Red Heart in a White World. An Outline of Principles and a Plan of Organization. By J. Wm. Lloyd, .10

Wind Harp Songs. By J. Wm. Lloyd, 1.00

The Revival of Puritanism. By E. C. Walker, .05

Bible Temperance. Showing that the Bible encourages the use of intoxicants. By E. C. Walker, .10

Woman, Church, and State. By Matilda Joslyn Gage, 2.00

Church Property. Should it be Taxed? .15

Prohibition and Self Government: Their Irreconcilable Antagonism. By E. C. Walker. .05

When Love Is Liberty and Nature Law. By John Badcock, Jr. A remarkably clear, convincing work. .10

Liberty. Political, Religious, Social and Moral. By A. F. Tindall. .10

Diana. A Psycho-Physiological Essay on the Sexual Relations. Sixth edition. Revised and improved. .25

Perfect Motherhood. By Lois Waisbrooker; cloth, 1.00

Helen Harlow's Vow. By Lois Waisbrooker; paper, .25

Wherefore Investigating Co. By Lois Waisbrooker; paper, .5

CULTIVATION OF PERSONAL MAGNETISM.

A TREATISE ON HUMAN CULTURE. BY LEROY BERRIER.

This treatise reverses the common belief that Personal Magnetism, Life Force and Mind Force can not be cultivated and acquired. It is a Complete Course of Instructions that will enable all who possess them, to become powerfully magnetic. Price, $1. Postage, 5 cents.

Address Leroy Berrier, President Institute of Human Culture, Minneapolis, Minn.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be free; must enjoy the full privilege of soliciting the love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent; socially, industrially."—Page 265. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CIVILIZED AND COURTESY-LESS WORLD," by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 4'0 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races." Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapt er III., Co-operation; Chapter V., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, ten cts.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW. A primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. A valuable compendium on Sex Ethics. Startling and Scientific Price, 10 cents.

Free Society is an advocate of Anarchist Communism, and in its advocacy of liberty in all things does not overlook sexual liberty. It is an eight-page weekly published at 50 cents a year. A specimen copy will be cheerfully furnished upon request. We also publish a monthly Anarchist library. If you want two good treatises on our theories send 10 cents for Kropotkin's "Law and Authority" and Malatesta's "Talk About Anarchist Communism," Nos. 1 and 2 of our new monthly. Free Society, 10 Oak Grove Ave., San Francisco, Cal.

RIGHTS OF WOMEN
IN THE SEXUAL RELATIONS,

By Karl Heinzen. A new edition together with the startling letters of Louise Mayen" on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German women at Frauenstadt. A book of 286 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Price paper bound, 50 cents; cloth, $1

THE BALLAD OF READING JAIL. BY C. 3.3.

This powerful poem of more than 600 lines, is the work of OSCAR WILDE C. 3. 3. having been the poets prison number during his confinement in Reading Jail. It is dedicated to the memory of a trooper of the Horse Guards who was hanged in the jail at that time, and it depicts the terrible sensations of the author and his fellow prisoners before and after the execution.

Just issued; price, in cloth, blue, vellum back, beautifully printed from large type on hand-made antique paper, deckle edges; reading matter on one side of the paper; a sumptuous book of 96 pages, 7 inches by 5. $1. In paper, 44 pages, 10 cents. Mailed postpaid on receipt of price, by M. Harman, 167 Carroll Avenue, Chicago.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint: A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hun reds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid di se than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.
This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 167 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Women in Marriage Slavery

Will find in HILDA'S HOME a story exposing the horrors of their condition as faithfully and as fearlessly as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" exposed the horrors of Negro slavery in the South. The story is more entertaining than many modern works of fiction and the plain truths it tells will find responsive echoes in the aching, bursting hearts of many women who know the galling effects of marriage thralldom.

The book contains 425 pages. Price handsomely bound in cloth, $1. In paper cover 50 cents. Send in your order NOW—especially if you want extra copies for distribution among your friends.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Persons Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 30 cents. Address Moses Harman, 167 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. E. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.

"Dawn Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.

"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.

Sample pages free Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Missing Link Modern Spiritualism. By A. Leah Underhill. A book for all spiritualists and investigators. "Hear all sides, then decide." 23 chapters; 478 pages; 16 illustrations, including portraits of the Fox family. History of the Hydesville rappings, as given by eyewitnesses, the threats of mob violence; remarkable and well-attested manifestations; the "exposures" disposed of, etc. Handsomely bound in cloth. Publishers price, $1.50. On receipt of $1.27, and 13 cents for postage, we will send the book to any address.

A Gentleman of liberal views and a freedom lover wants lady correspondent living in and within a radius of 100 miles of Decatur, Ill. Address, R. C., care of Lucifer.

Wanted: A woman holding radical views to keep house for a family of three adults on a city in Massachusetts. A pleasant home for the right person. Write to M., 167 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

The Story of An African Farm. Olive Schreiner's master piece. A story of the struggle for light, the search for truth, the yearning for happiness of bright young English and German people, among the ignorant and coarse Boers and Kaffirs of South Africa. This is a work of art, and of truth. Well bound in cloth. 388 pages. Price, 40 cents, postage 10 cents. For sale at this office.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 45. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, NOV. 18, E. M. 299. [C. E. 1899.] WHOLE No. 788.

A Man's a Man For A' That.

"A man's a man," says Robert Burns,
"For a' that and a' that."
But though the song be clear and strong,
It lacks a note for a' that,
The lout who'd shirk his daily work,
And claim his wage and a' that,
Or beg when he might earn his bread,
Is not a man for a' that.

If all who "dine on homely fare"
Were true and brave and a' that,
And none whose garb is "hodden gray"
Was a fool or a knave or a' that,
The vice and crime that shame our time
Would disappear and a' that,
And plowmen be as good as kings,
And churls as earls for a' that.

But 'tis not so; yon brawny fool
Who swaggers, swears and a' that
And thinks because his strong right arm
Might fell an ox and a' that
That he's as noble, man for man,
As duke and lord and a' that,
Is but an animal at best,
And not a man for a' that.

A man may own a large estate,
Have palace, park, and a' that,
And not for birth but honest worth,
Be thrice a man for a' that;
And Donald, herding on the moor,
Who beats his wife and a' that,
Is nothing but a brutal boor,
Nor ha'f a man for a' that.

It comes to this, dear Robert Burns,
The truth is old and a' that,
"The rank is but the guinea's stamp,
The man's the gowd for a' that;"
And though you'd put the self-same mark
On copper, brass, and a' that,
The lie is gross, the cheat is plain,
And will not pass for a' that.

For a' that and a' that,
'Tis soul and heart and a' that
That makes the king a gentleman,
And not his crown and a' that;
And whether he be rich or poor,
The best is he for a' that
Who stands erect in self respect
And acts the man for a' that.

Charles Mackay.

Aspasia.

BY C. L. JAMES.

The most famous woman of the classic Grecian period is commonly described as a courtesan (in Greek hetaira); but both the English title and the attempts which have been made to vindicate her against its justice, suggest no great knowledge of Greek customs. In Greece, no less than everywhere else, prostitution was the oldest of positive institutions—the state of the primitive woman before marriage originated, in capture; as attested by the myth of Proserpine, and her mother's designation, Demeter Thesmophorus. The Greek brothels (dicteria), of the earliest recorded period, were, however, occupied only by slaves. The hetairæ were quite a different class, never confounded by a Greek writer with the dicteriades. "Adventuress" would be a better modern term for a person of this kind than courtesan. One or two, among them the famous Lais, had been slaves: but the idea which "hetaira" conveyed to a Greek mind was that of a free woman who, having no dowry, or for some other reason not being eligible as a wife, remained single, and relied on her attractions. It is evident the definition might include all degrees of goodness and badness from highest to lowest; and that it actually did so appears to be the case.

The account of the hetaira Theodota, given by Xenophon, leaves no doubt that she was a prostitute in the strict sense of that unsavory word. Lais is said to have died a broken-down street-walker. An epigram by Martial attributes, in horrible detail, the same fate to Catullus' Lesbia, a hetaira of Rome, whose name indicates Greek origin. On the other hand, the Greek writers are loud in praise of the intelligence, benevolence, public spirit, fascinating manners, and even modesty of many celebrated hetairæ. Among them were Diotima, the teacher of Socrates; and Læna, the martyr of Athenian liberty. Increase in the number and importance of hetairæ measured the growth of wealth and culture in their respective states. Their number was augmented by laws against the marriage of citizens to any except native women; their importance by the seclusion of Grecian wives, which was almost Oriental, and allowed the hetaira, as the only truly free woman, an unlimited opportunity to outshine her respectable rivals by frequenting these public resorts—the forum, the lyceum, the studio and the theater—which, in that age of few books and no printing, were the chief instruments of culture.

At Corinth, the hetairæ, as early as the Persian war, were numerous enough to distinguish themselves by their patriotism. But at Athens, whose commercial importance is later, Aspasia was the first of any note except Læna. She makes her earliest recorded appearance in this city as the common law wife of the famous Pericles, who himself had introduced that bill which rendered their union illegal, since she was a native of Miletus. He, however, divorced his lawful wife, by whom he had two sons—this was an easy matter at Athens—he provided for his first family, and henceforth lived with Aspasia, who also bore him a son. It is only through her connection with Pericles that we come to have any information about Aspasia, and that information, when we have sifted out the fabulous matter, is so little that her fame would seem unwarranted but for the side light cast upon her position and character, and, above all, permanent influence. Her lover holds a place unique in history. Pericles is the first of those great republican statesmen who during the life of a generation have exercised as good as regal powers with no other means of doing so than ability to persuade the voters. That constitution which he thus swayed to his own purposes was his own creation. It was he whose political arts overthrew, without bloodshed, the power of that aristocracy in which he himself was a subordinate member, and made Athens a pure democracy. Of course, he had many enemies. Their mouthpiece was the comic drama, very largely a creature of his own, but which, like the stage in all ages, pleased the people by consulting their conservative instincts, as Pericles, on the rostrum, swayed them by radical appeals to their interest. To Aristophanes and his compeers we are indebted for most of our original data about the domestic life of Pericles and Aspasia and while these dramatists are unreliable enough in detail, they give us a certain general picture quite beyond their own invention. They cast unlimited aspersions on the measures, morals, and honesty, of Pericles; but they fully admit his versatile greatness. Orator, politician and general, he is compared to Olympian Jove hurling thunder and lightning; to an athlete who, even though down, can throw any adversary; to the conqueror of Troy, as one who surpassed his heroic model. The playwrights also fully intimate that the life-long companion of such a man was no ordinary woman. They say that Aspasia wrote or inspired the speeches of Pericles. Among these famous orations, only one has come down to us. But though our authority, Thucydides, cannot always be trusted for the genuineness of those speeches he gives his characters, this has a great appearance of being correctly reported: and though Aspasia's furnishing Pericles with words or ideas is not too well attested, the speech harmonizes with all we know of her sentiments. It is an elaborate comparison between Athens and Sparta (they were at war); in which, under color of exalting Athens at expense of Sparta, the orator praises the new Athens, the seat of wealth, luxury, art, pleasure and philosophy, at expense of the old, which was more like Sparta, and whose surviving representatives, his own conservative opponents, continually held up Sparta as a model for their countrymen to follow.

The comic libelers, while thus attributing Pericles' thoughts to Aspasia, in the same breath represent her as the clog upon his greatness. They call her Hera, Deianeira and Omphale, which is as if a modern writer should say Eve, Delilah and Miriam: but the comparisons are singularly unlucky. Deianeira destroyed her husband through her jealousy, of which, we shall see, there is no reason to accuse Aspasia: Hera tyrannized over Zeus, which no one says Aspasia did or could do to Pericles: Omphale made Hercules a woman; and, if we may believe the comedians themselves, Aspasia had done much to make Pericles a man. She, however, as a foreigner and hetaira, was fair game for all insinuations, however inconsistent;* and it is through her the enemies of Pericles especially aimed at him.

The superior intelligence of the hetairæ excited a spirit of rivalry in the respectable women; which was encouraged by men of the new Athens, like Pericles, Socrates and Phidias, who by no means thought it desirable that their wives and daughters should be fools. Aspasia, as the most talented and perhaps the least reproachable of hetairæ, so far overcame the prejudice against her foreign birth and irregular life that her salon was frequented by the most distinguished ladies of Athens, among them the notable Xantippe, whose virtue we may imagine was above suspicion. It is inferred from certain plays of Aristophanes—the "Lysistrata," the "Ecclesiasuzae" and the "Thesmophoriasuzae"—that there had sprung up something like a woman's rights agitation—a movement for education, independence in financial matters, and participation in politics, among other women than the hetairæ. It is also in evidence that some of them sat for models to artists like Phidias and sometimes received valuable considerations for doing so; a fact on which scandal could easily be founded.

Towards the end of Pericles' life, his fortunes were under a partial eclipse. His conservative attitude in the Peloponnesian war was unpopular; and the very democracy which he had created produced a new sort of opposition. Pericles, though not rich for a noble, was, like all the Athenian politicians before him, a man of independent estate. We now begin to hear of popular leaders like Cleon the tanner, who appealed to the people on the ground that they were plain business men. These demagogues, in the usual cowardly fashion, assailed Pericles through his friends, whom he could not always protect. Phidias was accused of embezzlement on the public works which he executed, and also of profanely representing Pericles and himself in the character of Olympian gods. He is said to have died in prison. The philosopher Anaxagoras, one of the same society, had to fly from Athens. Finally, Aspasia was indicted on the charge of teaching irreligion to the Athenian women, and also acting as intermediary between them and Pericles. What seems to have given this last a shade of plausibility is that he is said to have had other mistresses who were of better standing than herself.* Pericles undertook her defense. It was the most tragic moment of his life. Trial on indefinite charges, with a chance of the death penalty, was the opprobrium of Attic jurisprudence. The cases were heard by a body of about five hundred common citizens; a majority, of course, could convict; and their vote was final. They were used to being addressed by the defendants with vehement supplications and tears. They were mostly, we may be sure, very much prejudiced against the hetairæ. Pericles, who had never been so unpopular before, and who stood virtually on trial himself, was noted for cold and disdainful manners little likely to conciliate. But when the aged magistrate, whose long administration was so deeply identified with the glory and freedom of Athens, forgot his reserve, and addressed the jury in the impassioned manner to which they had been accustomed, weeping and trembling for Aspasia, as nothing could have made him do for himself, they were overcome. With the acquittal of Aspasia, the attack on Pericles terminated in ignominious failure. He was soon restored to his usual office, which he had lost just before; and a special act was passed to legalize his marriage with Aspasia, thus making him, like Cromwell, an exception to one of his own laws. Nothing more strongly marks the record of Aspasia's prosecution upon its originators. Pericles did not live much longer, and this is the last we really know about Aspasia. She is said to have married Lysicles, one of the new merchant-politicians, but this is very doubtful, for there is evidence that he died within a year after Pericles.

The feud between the old and new Athens went on to the judicial murder of Socrates; in the reaction following which the ideas represented by Pericles and Aspasia may be said to have triumphed. If now we inquire why Aspasia has been so celebrated and popular a character during all the ages which have elapsed since then, the answer appears to be threefold. She was the typical hetaira—the most famous in her own time. The hetairæ exercised an influence on the minds of men and on the standing of their sex which has been perpetuated to the present day, and has still an unpredictable future. In her charm, though we know it only by the effect in the tempest of slander and persecution which she encountered, and in her victory, she remains a perpetual type of a social, moral, and intellectual tendency seldom so presented as to excite equal sympathy. The immortal literary embodiment of this tendency is "Plato's Dialogues.' In "Plato's Republic," the "Utopia" of antiquity, authority belongs to the philosophers (men and women), who are to have their possessions in common, and be exempt from the obligations of marriage. But those who have studied Plato and Greek history know that in all this he was not imagining what we understand by an Utopia. His Republic is the "Idea," i. e. the typical type, of such a Greek city as he knew, with its Pythagorean brotherhoods and free cultivated women like Aspasia. Every school girl has heard of Platonic love, and knows vaguely that it means emancipation of affection intensified by sex from convention, from jealousy, and from those excesses of passion which like jealousy, are nurtured by arbitrary laws. This is what Plato would call the "idea" of love, the perfection to which it tends, and which it will attain when delivered from those accidents whose basis is an instituted code of false morality. Whence did Plato get this idea? From lives like those of Diotima, Socrates, Pericles, and Aspasia. But lives like these have in them as he reasoned, the assurance of immortality. The "idea" is eternal, the accident only earthly. The whole Christian and Spiritualistic conception of heaven as a state where reason and sentiment attain their perfection in a life of ideal beauty, is derived from Plato, not the Bible, for in the latter it cannot be found. Shall we not appreciate Aspasia's claim to immortal praise when we have realized what Platonism is, and also that she was understood to express in human form what Plato could only put on paper?

* Among the many calumnies attributed to Aristophanes, one deserves a word of notice because there is grave doubt whether he intended it. Among causes of the Peloponnesian war was the flight of Athenian slaves to Megara. A line of Aristophanes has been cited a hundred times to show that some of these slaves were girls whom Aspasia kept for hire. Such a charge against Aspasia, when she had many years been the wife of a man like Pericles, would be too absurd, even if it were in Aristophanes; but the single passage on which it rests is something more than ambiguous.

* One of them was Elpinice, sister of his early rival Cimon, whose reconciliation with Pericles she effected. Our constant but unreliable authorities, the playwrights, accuse her also of incest with Cimon, a practice quite as contrary to contemporary feeling as modern. Such slanders on persons so distinguished are worthy reproduction for exactly one reason—they show how boundless was that license of personal abuse indulged by writers whom we are so often invited to trust as we are Aristophanes.

Women and Work.

Charlotte Perkins Stetson in "Cosmopolitan" for October.

Accustomed for many years to see women working mainly for their own children, we have grown to consider the work of women as a part of motherhood.

We do not call it "work," and therein we are right, as work involves other interests than those of maternity; but when the woman does "work"—i. e., specialize her labor and exchange with others—this seems to us an alienation of mother-love from its object, and a neglect of the child. To care for one's own children directly is not "work;" it is but the fulfillment of the animal instinct of the parent, and involves no social relation whatever.

The father might personally do things for his children at home, and we should not call it working: indeed, we should consider it rather a waste of time. He best cares for his children by "working" for others, and giving to his children part of the greatly multiplied common product. It is not neglect, but the best paternal care. He enters the social relation of economic interservice and exchange, and his children profit by it. But the mother is held to neglect her family if she "works;" and this gives us a strong specific prejudice against the industrial advance of women. Following this and closely allied to it is the mental effect of the second stage of woman's labor, the service of the husband.

The wild-beast mother serves her young, but is of no economic advantage to her mate. Very early in savagery, however, the industry value of the woman was recognized, and wife and slave were practically synonymous terms. The wives served as slaves unless the common master could amass enough women to discriminate somewhat; and the slaves served as wives in an equally felicitous manner.

This habit is slow in passing, and has associated women's work with wifely fealty, so that the wife who works in an extra-domestic relation is vaguely held as disloyal.

She may work for her husband if driven by necessity, but to want to work, to wish to develop special talents and use them for the common good, this is deemed quite false to the ideal of womanhood. Her purposes and methods are all measured by the family relation; and any desire for social relation is thought to smack of some questionable feeling.

This adds the marital prejudice to the maternal prejudice—a heavy combination. But there is a third, more general still.

The economic processes by which humanity exists and civilization develops have been thus far carried on almost exclusively by men.

By the law of associate ideas we have grown to consider those processes as peculiar to men—as being masculine functions.

Therefore, it was most natural that we should consider the entrance of women upon this field of action as an assumption of masculine function; and so as revolting and wrong.

When analyzed by a clear thinker who is able to detach one idea from another and judge them separately, there is seen to be no logical basis for this feeling.

When men taught school and women did not, "teacher" was a masculine noun; now it stands nine to one feminine in America. "Doctor" Smith no longer conveys instant assurance of masculinity. We are learning by continued contact with established facts to recognize that racial functions are one thing, and sex functions quite another; and that the essential activities of organized society are Human—and neither male nor female.

But while the facts are working their slow way through the resisting mind, prejudice remains in full action long after its foundations are removed; and woman's work rests under no stronger deterrent force than this deep-seated conviction that "work" is masculine.

Thus, we see how natural it is that work is so radically misunderstood by the world in general and by women in particular; that such misunderstanding is not only excusable, but inevitable.

We require fearless and honest thought and careful study of this basic social relation; and the power to recognize and suppress ancestral prejudices. We require a new conception of the nature of the work, and of our right attitude toward it; a clear perception of the main lines of error in our thought is a safeguard on that side; and the proof of the new view lies ready to hand—the sure test of practical experiment.

We all see something of the value of work in its material products; but that value rises immeasurably as we study the effect of our material environment upon human character and progress. We all see something of the good effect of true work upon the worker, the ill effect of wrong work, or overwork, but we do not begin to see how closely our personal happiness, health and growth depend on our doing our own right work.

But the dominant fact, the organic social nature of work, we have scarcely more than dreamed of, that it is an essential function of social life and progress, and that not to work is not to be a member of society.

We have not seen the full force of the deep seated social impulse that calls the human being to his special place in society; and the world is full of thwarted, wasted lives where "the round peg is in the square hole," to the misery of the peg and a dead loss to society.

Most of all we have not seen that this applies to woman as to man; that she too is a member of the social organism, and must fill her place therein to know the full joy and power of life.

Held back by all these age-long errors, she in turn holds back the wheels of progress, and the economic confusion and unrest of this time marks a period which the later sociologist will see to be largely due to this one fact—that half the world is doing its half of the work under the most primitive ignorance.

Recognition of the true nature of work by all of us, and most especially by women, with a glad acceptance of its noble responsibilities, will lift us fast and far out of these discreditable difficulties.

The Non-Sectarian.

I have no creed—
Goodness is my only rule.
For what else live we?
Fame?
It turns to ashes in the grasp.
Riches?
They corrode the soul and bring only care.
Knowledge?
Alas too oft a babble of words.
But Love—Truth—Goodness—
These are the verities:
These are eternal;
These make life worth the living.

Emma Seabury.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper th t has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

On Sunday, Nov. 19, 8 p. m., Lillian Harman will read a paper before the Ohio Liberal Society, G. A. R. Hall, 35 West Sixth St., Cincinnati, O. Subject, "Marriage and Morality." She hopes to see many of Lucifer's friends.

"When the holidays are over I hope to be able to buy more books; but the extra expenses of the season will take all my spare money until then," is what one of Lucifer's best friends wrote, recently. Many similar expressions have been received. So as a large proportion of holiday presents are in the form of books, we decided to try the experiment of asking our friends to place some of their orders with us. In this issue we print a small list of standard works suitable for holiday presents. We will probably increase the list if there should be a demand for such books. If you do not see what you want in the list, perhaps we will be able to supply it on application.

The Right of Contract.

BY HENRY M. PARKHURST.

One of the prerogatives of an individual sovereign is the right to make such contracts as he pleases. It strikes me as surprising that Lucifer should quote with seeming approval the assertion, No. 784, page 326, that to acknowledge or to grant that right, is "one of the foulest, one of the most unscrupulous legislative acts that the class party has forced upon the masses for a number of centuries." This refers to the statement that in 1878 the Republican party authorized an express stipulation in a contract to be thereafter made, that one of the contracting parties should deliver to the other a certain amount of gold. A farmer cannot sell wheat without contracting to deliver wheat; a gold miner cannot sell gold without contracting to deliver gold. To deprive the gold miner, or any other person who possesses or expects to possess gold, of the right to sell it, or to enact that when he has sold it he shall not be required to deliver it, would be an invasion of the right of contract, and an attempt to outlaw one of the mineral productions of this country.

Yet from another point of view I consider the legislation referred to indefensible, in that it at least seems to imply the right upon the part of Congress to regulate private contracts and to interfere with commerce within the states. If the permission of Congress to make a certain private contract has any validity whatever, it would seem that Congress might forbid a private contract. The enactment as quoted merely recapitulates the right of the individual: if the enactment had been the reverse, forbidding express stipulations in a contract, it would have been an infringement upon individual rights, and an attempt to regulate Congress within the states, over which Congress has no delegated power.

REPLY.

The quotation that surprises Friend Parkhurst is taken from a book called the "Importance of Honest Money," and is not sufficiently stated by him to give the reader a clear conception of the author's meaning. As it is possible that some of our readers may not have No. 784 at hand I will give more fully the paragraph referred to:

"It is the same Republican party that in 1878 authorized an express stipulation in a contract that to be made, so that the debt must be paid in gold, instead of leaving it payable in any legal tender money of the United States, at the option of the debtor, and this stipulation is one of the foulest, one of the most unscrupulous legislative acts that the class party has forced upon the masses for a number of centuries. It is the same Republican party that tries to make us believe today that the dear gold dollar, which is mostly in possession of the classes, and which the masses cannot get, is such a boon to the unprosperous masses."

An elaborate article on "Freedom of Contract" might be written upon the text given by our friendly critic. Perhaps the author of the book under consideration could give, in few words, the answer. It should not be expected that a "Book Notice" should endorse everything that is quoted in giving the style and animus of an author. But I would simply ask our old-time friend who thus sits in judgment upon the writer of the book and upon Lucifer's editor,

(1) Is freedom of contract possible, in business transactions, when the "party of the first part" requires the party of the second part to deliver as payment a commodity controlled by said party of the first part?

(2) Why should it be necessary for the Republican party to enact any such law, if contract is meant to be free? Does it require a law of congress to make valid a contract to deliver wheat, or cotton, or salt, or lead, or apples, or pumpkins?

(3) Is it not clear as the sun in a cloudless sky that the enactment in question is unadulterated class legislation?—legislation in the interest of the class that owns or controls gold?

(4) If all commodities were put upon an equal basis before the law—if all commodities could be monetized as gold is now monetized, could or would such legislation as that of 1878 ever be thought of?

Paul said, "When Moses and the prophets are read a veil is before their eyes"—speaking of the Hebrews and their "law." Does not this saying apply to most of us when "the law" in regard to "legal tender" is being discussed? I once heard a popular Republican orator say, from the platform,

"God made gold and silver to be money, or the basis of money, and no legislative device of man can subvert God's law."

"Great is Diana of the Ephesians" was once the party slogan. "God is great," says the Arab sheik, "and Mohammed is the prophet of God." "Great is Gold," says the modern class legislator, and many are the prophets of gold, even among social reformers.

In regard to what Friend Parkhurst says in his second paragraph I reply yes, certainly; this law implies the "right of Congress to regulate private contracts," and is "indefensible," not only from this "point of view" but from all points of view.

M. HARMAN.

In the Southland.

Leaving Chicago Tuesday eve, Nov. 7, via the Illinois Central Railway, in company with Mrs. Elizabeth H. Russell of Cleveland, Ohio—one of Lucifer's most faithful and most generous helpers, who expects to winter in the south—I came direct to this place, distance by rail just eight hundred miles; time, about twenty three hours. At the station we were met by another earnest friend and helper, Mrs. S. A. Fogg, at whose home I now expect to spend some weeks if not longer, in the work outlined in last issue of the Light Bringer.

On leaving Chicago the weather was damp, cold and disagreeable—typical November weather for the region of the great lakes. When day dawned upon us next morning we found ourselves in Tennessee, some four hundred miles or more from the "Windy City," and under atmospheric conditions very different from those we had so lately left behind. The sky was clear, the air dry, balmy and pleasant—typical "Indian Summer" weather, or such as is common in the north middle states in September and October, and such it continued through the day, or until we reached Southern Mississippi. Here we were met by a change not quite so agreeable. Forest fires were raging in the piney woods around Thayer, burning up not only leaves, grass, fences, cordwood and dead timber generally but even in some instances green pine trees. As might readily be imagined the smoke and heat and smell of burning pine timber are by no means pleasant.

The destructiveness of these fires was or is due mainly to the fact that there has been no rain here, to speak of, for near two months—something almost unprecedented in this region, so we are told. I am glad to report, at this writing, that the worst seems over. Fortunately there has been little or no wind, else barns, crops, farm houses and even whole villages would have been swept by the flames, in a manner similar to what is sometimes known in the piney woods of Wisconsin and Michigan. Am glad to report also that our health seems not to have been injured by this unlooked for experience.

At Chicago we were told that Mississippi was under quarantine regulations on account of "yellow fever," and that if we expected to travel in that state we would have to get a "certificate" from the "health department" before starting. This precaution proved unnecessary, however. Our certificate was not called for. A sharp frost throughout the state seems to have banished all fear of the much dreaded but seldom seen invasion of "Yellow Jack." In this county, Lincoln, it is claimed there has never been a case of the disease. The worst annoyance to which we have hitherto been subjected, since starting, was the temporary loss of Mrs. Russell's trunk. Owing to some blunder not yet fully explained the trunk failed to put in an appearance at the right time and place. After two days of waiting and search, however, the trunk was recovered late last evening, and the owner made happy.

With best wishes for the health and prosperity of all who labor and wait for the good time coming, I remain yours,

M. HARMAN.

Thayer, Miss., Saturday, Nov. 10, '99.

Olga Nethersole's Radical Views.

While playing "Sapho" in Chicago last week, Olga Nethersole was interviewed regarding the morals of the women whose characters she delineates. The reporter was startled by the unconventional views of the actress. The following paragraphs are taken from the interview:

"Do you know what I call an immoral woman?" queried the actress, with the inscrutable look in her eyes; "it is the woman who passes her life with a man she doesn't love; it is the woman who is never true to herself, to her own instincts, and who consequently never can be true to others. What sanctity does a marriage license and a marriage service give to a union where the essential element of sanctity is lacking?

"As I said for eight years I have studied women of doubtful—no, not doubtful, say, rather, of unmistakable character. It is my opinion that any of these are better than the man or the woman who marries without love. Do you remember the saying of Robert Ingersoll's (what a grand man that was!) 'Now, let's be honest! For God's sake let's be honest!' Honesty is the greatest religion in the world, and honesty with one's self comes first!"

Miss Nethersole off the stage is very much like Miss Nethersole on the stage, impulsive, vehement, confidential.

"We won't talk of judgment days—and all that," she continued, leaning forward and emphasizing her talk with a slender, white forefinger, "we won't talk of judgment days a long way off, nobody knows where, nobody knows when—but of the time that comes to everybody in this world, when they ask themselves, 'Have I been true and honest with myself?' Self is the first thing to be thought of, because the first duty of all for a woman it not to her children, not to her kinsfolks and her friends, but just to herself. Now that sort of woman, has violated the custom of the country, I admit. Often, in spite of it all, and in the teeth of everything, she has at least loved and been true to herself!"

"But how can the public ever in the least, without a revolution, condone the offenses of your Fannie Le Grands and your Carmens and Camilles? You know, that in every state here we have a law, for example, which forbids persons driving over a country bridge at a trot."

"Yes, I understand," nodded the actress with amusement in her eyes.

"Now, driving over a bridge beyond a walk is not per se a crime; legally, it is. This is often the nature of the offense in 'that sort of a woman,' is it not?"

"Yes, quite right," assented Miss Nethersole. "As I say, she violates the custom of the country."

"But," queried the reporter, "will it ever do for the public to find that out; to believe it thoroughly?"

"That is the great question," said the creator of Sapho, "and it can't be disposed of in a short talk. Briefly, the solution of it is civilization and education. Life will not be guided then by passion, but by brain and heart, and brain and heart are the same thing, ethically speaking. There will come a time when men and women both will be honest, will be moral; not because they are afraid not to be, but because they will choose it as the best. There will come a time when the worst crime will be to sin against oneself, and to go out of the world leaving behind a child miserable and crippled and deformed. It is a terrible thing to feel that the misery of the world is more because one has lived in the world."

"But your scarlet women, Miss Nethersole, you make them fascinating, beautiful. Your audience does not condemn this; it sympathizes with them."

"But is an audience the worse," she retorted, "because it recognizes that these poor women are human, that they suffer? And, for the conventional people, and we must admit that there are a good many of them," she smiled, "what stronger, what more vividly lighted moral could they ask than the moral of Carmen, of Camille, of Paula Ray? Death! 'The wages of sin is death!'"

"But——"

"Yes, I know," she interrupted quickly, laughingly. "I don't think Carmen deserved it. I merely gave that for the people who believe that she did. But to me the great lesson in all of these is 'educate,' 'civilize.' What a nature was Carmen's! She had the courage of a Napoleon, the intuition of a Talleyrand. Rightly trained she would have been a wonderful woman, and the most powerful presentation of that fact is in the play."

Secular and Religious Relics.

J. B. Elliot, in "Truth Seeker."

The sale of the books and autographs of the late Col. Thomas Donaldson, author and expert agent of the Indian Bureau, a friend of Grant, Lincoln, Ingersoll, and Whitman, which took place in Philadelphia, Oct. 26, disposed of one of the largest collections that has been sold for some time. Among the relics were the chairs used by Jackson, Lincoln, Grant, and Garfield, and the inkstand used by Walt Whitman. It will be interesting to note the prices of secular relics over the religious. Here is a brief list:

Draft of Ingersoll's speech nominating Blaine, with letters from Ingersoll	$50.00
Letter from Archbishop Wood of Philadelphia	05
Letter of Cardinal Newman	10
Letter of George Francis Train	25
Letter of Cardinal Wiseman	1.25
Letter of Walt Whitman	4.50
Letter of Cardinal Manning	10
King James Bible	10
Mormon Bible	1.50
Whitfield's sermons	10
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary	1.80
Holy Bible, 1791	25
Age of Reason, 1791, first French edition	5.00
Letter of Benedict Arnold	10.00
Letter of Abraham Lincoln	25.00
Letter of Governor John Wise of Virginia, who hung John Brown	05
Letter of John Brown	18.50

A good letter from Thomas Paine will always bring from $8 to $15.

In the sale was a catalogue of the sale of George Washington's private library, Philadelphia, 1876, with the prices brought by the books marked in the margin by Colonel Donaldson. From this catalogue, which went for fifty cents, I make the following extracts:

Rights of Man. Thomas Paine, with Washington's autograph	$13.00
Volney's Ruins, with Washington's autograph	11 00
Volney's travels	6 00
Freneau's Poems	13.00
Oracle of Reason (by Ethan Allen), published at Bennington, Vt.	9 00
Paine's letter to Washington	7.00
Notes on Virginia, by Thomas Jefferson.	16 00

If a man is to be judged by the books he reads, Washington was not orthodox. This may be of interest to Christians as well as Freethinkers.

VARIOUS VOICES.

J. A. W., Amesbury, Mass.:—I hope you will change the name of your paper, or rather, drop a part of it so that it will be simply The Light Bearer. I think it sounds better and is more comprehensive than Lucifer. My interest will be the same as long as it sticks to its principles.

—

J. E., Tufts College, Mass.:—I will agree with pleasure to take two copies of the account of your life which you propose to write. Other responsibilities make it impossible for me to undertake to do more, but I hope an average of two copies may be taken by all your subscribers, and that the receipts may warrant you in carrying out the project as now entertained. I enclose one dollar in advance.

—

Cyrus W. Coolridge, 85 East 116th. Street, New York:—It is very seldom that I find in Lucifer anything of an amusing nature, but in No. 785 I came across something which, to me, was very amusing. The piece in question is found on page 335 and credited to "Common Sense." Well, to the best of my knowledge it is an extract from an article written by your humble servant and published in Lucifer two or three years ago. I have not sent it to any other paper. Do you see now where the amusement comes in?

—

Jay Chaapel, Palmetto, Fla.:—I would like name changed to Light-Bearer or some other characteristic of your noble work. I will guarantee three names for $2 for 1900 any way. Lucifer is a good name but most people are prejudiced against it. I would feel no less interest in the paper if the name was changed and I can't see that it would be retrogression to change the name. I will at all times use all efforts to extend its circulation just so long as it advocates its present high tone. No man or woman with the meager brain-power that I have could feel more sad than I if it should stop.

—

C. M. H., Chicago, Ill.:—As opinions in regard to changing the name of Lucifer are in order, I will say that to change the name now, seems to me, to be a sort of concession to conservatism. Lucifer has always stood for radical reforms, and if it has survived all these years of persecution, and reached a plane of, at least, partial recognition, I say stand by Lucifer, or as we hear from our patriots every day—"Don't haul down the flag." True the name is not fully understood by many, but it at least possesses the quality of arousing curiosity, and we know that when we become curious, investigation is likely to follow. The name Lucifer is unique and inasmuch as the Light-Bearer holds a prominent place on the page, it is manifestly unnecessary to explain its meaning. I am in favor of retaining the name Lucifer.

—

Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville, Va.:—I want to call your attention to "The Temperance Gazette," the organ of the Young People's Freethought Temperance Society. Temperance societies, temperance songs, temperance lectures and temperance law are all old stories. But a new era is dawning and we are slowly realizing that intemperance is a disease and all the old plans to eradicate it were failures because based on the idea that men were willful drunkards and could sign the pledge and stop if only sufficiently argued with. Now it is realized that the only safety is in not forming the habit, resolving when young to let all intoxicants alone. I hope you will send three cents to Roy Miller, Alma Center, Wis., for a sample copy of the "Gazette" or better still forty cents for a year's subscription. I am sure it will be money well invested and you will never regret it.

—

The Markland Family, Sherwood, Tenn.:—If no calamity occurs to us, will send you five dollars by the 20th, and repeat later if possible. The proposed autobiography is a happy idea, and we will want three copies,—one for each of our children. May you live to complete it.

This is a corner of Egypt and we can do nothing to help Lucifer. Would be glad to receive you if a dry mountain climate was suitable for you. Mamma and the girls would regard it as a pleasure to care for you. No doubt many hands will beckon you to a more balmy clime. As to dropping the title Lucifer, it seems to me that a person so ignorant and bigoted as to be affected by it would be beyond salvation. Again, perhaps, curiosity would induce as many to read as would reject. To me the word Lucifer is beautiful and I can wish for another son, to give him the name. However, if the consensus thinks it objectionable let it go. Let us have the book by all means. It is important, as history, and desirable, as a monument hewn by your own hands.

—

A. E. K. Parkhurst, 173 Gates Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.:—The form of the paper is immaterial, perhaps the name also. It's the nature, scope and effect of the work which counts. I know though I should feel grieved, and as though some dear friend had died, were Lucifer to change its name, though it is "none of my business." I will not close without telling you what I feel you will want to know, since it is. Since last Wednesday night Nov. 1st., Mr. Parkhurst has been lying in a very critical, semi-conscious condition from a fall he got in his observatory, and no one but the doctor and self have been in the room. He struck on his head, bruised and cut left side of his head and face; bled freely. Concussion of brain, severe shock, but I have the very best surgical and medical attendance obtainable, and am nursing him myself. So am trying to hope for his recovery. He is doing as well as possible, the wonder is he is alive. Has no recollection of accident, sleeps most of time, and has occasionaly gleams of consciousness yesterday and this morning. Do not know how long he had been lying helpless, when I found him at midnight; about four hours at least.

—

Wm. Fretz, Trenton, N. J.:—I was much interested in the article of H. B. Monroe advocating a change of name for Lucifer to Light Bearer or some other appropriate name. For years I have believed the name was a millstone around the neck of the paper and have so expressed myself to headquarters, but the consensus of opinion then seemed to be that the name was all right. But it is a fact that the great mass of the people whether liberal or orthodox to whom the paper is first shown take exception to the name. Several persons that I have shown the paper to, gazed at the heading and remarked "that must be a hell of a paper." Many people laugh when you explain that Lucifer is a symbol for a brighter era, for they have been taught for ages that the name represents devil and darkness. But Mr. Monroe has so well elucidated the matter that I will not enlarge. Had the name been changed ten years ago I believe the circulation would be double or treble today. The prejudice against the name keeps people from even reading it; but when people read they will also think, and from thinking will go to acting. The form is immaterial to me as I send nearly all Lucifers by mail to liberal friends that I think do not take it.

—

Dora F. Kerr, Greenwood, B. C.:—I was so glad to hear from you, and that you were thinking of wintering in the South which would be so good for you, and good for others too, especially if you can then write the autobiographical book. We think the book a most admirable project. It should not, we think, appear in Lucifer at all before being published as a whole. I send subscription for five copies.

I do not feel able to make any suggestion on the proposed change of name, the arguments being on both sides so good. Personally I like the old name; but the matter should be decided by those able to do propaganda work in suitable circles. I am inclined to believe that the experience of propagandists would prove that the name Lucifer is some hindrance to the work. In England, the extraordinary reticence and sensitiveness in regard to sex is such a very strong national characteristic, that though probably the great majority of educated and progressive people are prepared to accept advanced views intellectually, they shrink from any connection with the open expression of them. I do not see sufficient reason to reduce the size of the page.

—

Dr. Andrews, Chicago, Ill.:—I see so much in your valuable paper interesting and useful; but always on one side. A letter sometimes on the other side would be a relief to read—and perhaps it might be a set-off.

In a medical communication a friend says: "A gentleman says a hundred legal rapes are committed in our city every night, the husband claiming he has the legal right." We see such sentiments constantly in medical literature, but no one has ever yet had the courage to say a word for the numerous men who have wives that make sexual demands beyond reason, and leading on to ill health and debility if he is so foolish and obliging as to attempt to comply. These cases are much greater in number than generally supposed. But it is usually taken for granted that the women are all angels and the men quite otherwise.

In regard to change of name, I am in favor of it. Lucifer has gone as far as it can, and accomplished all it could under that title. It is too suggestive of Satan and very many have a wholesome dread of him. There is no telling what the paper might achieve with the name "Light," or "Light-Bearer," or "Light Bringer." It would be a change at least, and in my opinion, for the better.

—

B. B. B., N. Y.:—I consider Lucifer objectionable, chiefly, because to half the people who see it, it has no specific meaning. in fact no meaning at all; or if it suggests an idea it is one associated with the "Prince of Darkness," and its teachings therefore they think must be akin to the Black Art and something to be shunned. If induced to read, it is with this prejudice and they read evil into what is good, and which they might recognize as good if the ideas introduced were heralded by the unmistakable title of "Light-Bearer," in large type with "Lucifer" omitted. Of course the name Lucifer is distinctive and dear to its long time readers; but I think the aim of the friends of woman's liberation should be to make converts to the cause by every lawful and attractive means; and not to hinder, by their own special preferences, and express individualities, those who have a desire to enter these pastures new. If the change is made I will be responsible for five dollars to be taken out as I may hereafter decide. With regard to the editor, what he needs is perfect rest, preferably in a sanitarium. At his age people do not get well; but life may be prolonged by case, and a little work be done occasionally. His memoirs should be written, and I will take a copy; but its preparation will interfere with the perfect rest he needs, and traveling will do him no good but keep up irritation. Three and one-half years of invalidism emboldens me to pass judgment.

A NEW BOOK by Albert Chavannes. "Magnetation, its Relation to Health and Character," contains invaluable information upon the relation of the sexes. Price, 25 cents. Address, Albert Chavannes, 308 Fourth Ave., Knoxville, Tenn.

Books for the Holidays.

The publishers' price of the books in the following list is forty cents each. We bought them at a little less than half of that. The postage averages about four cents on each book. Half the publishers' price with postage added is twenty-four cents. We will send any book in the list, postage prepaid, for twenty-five cents, the extra cent going to pay for the work of wrapping and mailing. Send in your order at once if you want them before the holidays and the books will be sent promptly.

Every book in the list is handsomely bound in cloth and is printed in clear type on good paper. The number following the name of the book indicates the number of its pages:

Bracebridge Hall, by Washington Irving. 288. With 120 illustrations designed by Randolph Caldecott.
Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, by Lord Byron, complete and unabridged. 270.
Crown of Wild Olives, by John Ruskin. 282. Consists of four lectures on work, traffic, war, and the future of England, with an interesting appendix.
Dolly Dialogues, by Anthony Hope. 202.
Dreams, by Olive Schreiner. 178.
Lalla Rookh, by Thomas Moore, 327. With copious notes.
Master and Man, by Tolstoi 117.
Sartor Resartus, by Thomas Carlyle, (with notes and index.) 344.
Sketch Book, by Washington Irving. 464. This book contains the famous story of Rip Van Winkle.
Samantha at Saratoga, or Racin' After Fashion, by Josiah Allen's wife. (Marietta Holly), profusely illustrated, 372.
Tanglewood Tales, by Nathaniel Hawthorne, 284.

Readers of Lucifer

are interested in all reform movements and will find the literature treating on Science and the Occult of vast interest and great advantage.

Occult Forces,	.30
Vital Magnetic Power, by Randall	1.00
How to Mesmerize, by Coates	1 00
Natural Way in Diet,	1 00
Health Foods and How to Prepare Them,	1 00
The Silent Friend—A Key to Rapid Wealth,	2.00
How to Hypnotize—a complete manual of instruction	2.00
How to Win or Sure Secrets of Success, by Prof. L. H. Anderson. 332 pages	2 00
Ancient Magic, Magnetism and Psychic Forces,	2 00
Marvels of Magnetism and Methods Old and New,	5 00
How to Heal, by J. K Anderson,	10 00

Catalogue free Address, National Inst of Science, L. K. 179, Masonic Temple, Chicago, Ill., U. S. A.

WOMEN and ECONOMICS,

A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women, By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Here are a few of the page headings of this remarkable work "Economic environment; The dependence of women; No inherent disability of sex; Marriage not a partnership; House service as a livehood; Motherhood and economic production; Modification to maternity; The usefulness of sex; Differentiation of sex; Sex and humanity; The peacock's tail; Sex distinctions; The eternal feminine; unreasoning devotion; Women as persons; Race-attributes and sex-attribute; The normal child; Personal profit and sex-relations; The influence of heredity; The young man and the young woman; The effect of custom; The sex relation personal; Innocence and ignorance; Marriage with independence; The increasing difficulty of marriage; Supporting one's family; Virtue and vice; The results of repression; The harm that women do; The development of love; The hope for the future; The martyr and the pioneer; The dropping of the bars; The meaning of the new woman; Motherhood in education; A criminal failure; Marriage and the family; Love's young dream; The heart and the stomach; Socializing the household industries; The stomach as a family tie; The servant wife; World-servants and house-servants; A wider maternity; Between the old and the new; "The vices of the slave;" The outgrown stronghold. Printed on strong, heavy paper; 350 pages, bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale by M. Harman, 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

788.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

A FEW GOOD BOOKS FOR YOU.

Love, Marriage and Divorce. A discussion between Horace Greeley, Stephen Pearl Andrews and Henry James. $0.35

The Rights of Women and the Sexual Relations. By Karl Heinzen. In cloth, $1; paper covers, .70

Love and the Law. By E. C. Walker. .05

The Sexual Enslavement of Women. By E. C. Walker. .05

The Woman Who Did. A Novel. By Grant Allen. 1 00

The British Barbarians. A Novel. By Grant Allen. 1 00

The Red Heart in a White World. An Outline of Principles and a Plan of Organization. By J. Wm. Lloyd, .10

Wind Harp Songs. By J. Wm. Lloyd, 1 00

The Revival of Puritanism. By E. C. Walker, .05

Bible Temperance. Showing that the Bible encourages the use of intoxicants. By E. C. Walker, .10

Woman, Church, and State. By Matilda Joslyn Gage, 2 00

hurch Property. Should it be Taxed? .15

Prohibition and Self Government: Their Irreconcilable Antagonism. By E. C. Walker. .05

When Love Is Liberty and Nature Law. By John Badcock, Jr. A remarkably clear, convincing work. .10

Liberty. Political, Religious, Social and Moral. By A. F. Tindall. .10

Diana. A Psycho-Physiological Essay on the Sexual Relations. Sixth edition. Revised and improved. .25

Perfect Motherhood. By Lois Walsbrooker; cloth, 1.00

Helen Harlow's Vow. By Lois Walsbrooker; paper, .25

Wherefore Investgating Co. By Lois Walsbrooker; paper, .5

CULTIVATION OF PERSONAL MAGNETISM.

A TREATISE ON HUMAN CULTURE. BY LEROY BERRIER.

This treatise reverses the common belief that Personal Magnetism, Life Force and Mind Force can not be cultivated and acquired. It is a Complete Course of Instructions that will enable all who possess them, to become powerfully magnetic. Price, $1. Postage, 5 cents.

Address Leroy Berrier, President Institute of Human Culture, Minneapolis, Minn.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be FREE; must enjoy the full privilege of soliciting the love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrially."—Page 265. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A Sinless and Countryless World", by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 4 0 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races." Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III., Co-operation; Chapter V., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, ten cts.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW. A primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. A valuable compendium on Sex Ethics. Startling and Scientific Price, 10 cents.

Free Society is an advocate of Anarchist Communism, and in its advocacy of liberty in all things does not overlook sexual liberty. It is an eight-page weekly published at 50 cents a year. A specimen copy will be cheerfully furnished upon request. We also publish a monthly Anarchist library. If you want two good treatises on our theories send 10 cents for Kropotkin's "Law and Authority" and Malatesta's "Talk About Anarchist Communism." Nos. 1 and 2 of our new monthly. Free Society, 10 Oak Grove Ave., San Francisco, Cal.

RIGHTS OF WOMEN

IN THE SEXUAL RELATIONS,

By Karl Heinzen. A new edition together with the startling letters of Louise Mayen" on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German women at Frauenstadt. A book of 256 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Price paper bound, 50 cents; cloth, $1

THE BALLAD OF READING JAIL. BY C. 3.3.

This powerful poem of more than 600 lines, is the work of OSCAR WILDE C. 3. 3. having been the poets prison number during his confinement in Reading Jail. It is dedicated to the memory of a trooper of the Horse Guards who was hanged in the jail at that time, and it depicts the terrible sensations of the author and his fellow prisoners before and after the execution.

Just issued; price, in cloth, blue, vellum back, beautifully printed from large type on hand-made antique paper, deckle edges; reading matter on one side of the paper; a sumptuous book of 96 pages, 7 inches by 5, $1. In paper, 44 pages, 50 cents. Mailed postpaid on receipt of price, by M. Harman, 507 Carroll Avenue, Chicago.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.
This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Women in Marriage Slavery

Will find in HILDA'S HOME a story exposing the horrors of their condition as faithfully and as fearlessly as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" exposed the horrors of Negro slavery in the South. The story is more entertaining than many modern works of fiction and the plain truths it tells will find responsive echoes in the aching, bursting hearts of many women who know the galling effects of marriage thralldom.

The book contains 425 pages. Price handsomely bound in cloth, $1. In paper cover 50 cents. Send in your order NOW—especially if you want extra copies for distribution among your friends.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Personal Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Walsbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 25 cents. Address Moses Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. E. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases and recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents,

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.

"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.

"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.

Sample pages free Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo, 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Missing Link Modern Spiritualism. By A. Leah Underhill. A book for all spiritualists and investigators. "Hear all sides, then decide." 28 chapters; 478 pages; 16 illustrations, including portraits of the Fox family. History of the Hydesville rappings, as given by eyewitnesses, the threats or mob violence; remarkable and well-attested manifestations; the "exposures" disposed of, etc. Handsomely bound in cloth. Publishers price, $1.50. On receipt of $1,27, and 13 cents for postage, we will send the book to any address.

A Gentleman of liberal views and a freedom lover wants lady correspondent living in and within a radius of 100 miles of Decatur, Ill. Address, E. C., care of Lucifer.

Wanted: A woman holding radical views to keep house for a family of three adults in a city in Massachusetts. A pleasant home for the right person. Write to M., 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

The Story of An African Farm, Olive Schreiner's master piece. A story of the struggle for light, the search for truth, the yearning for happiness of bright young English and German people, among the ignorant and coarse Boers and Kaffirs of South Africa. This is a work of art, and of truth. Well bound in cloth. 300 pages. Price, 40 cents, postage 10 cents. For sale at this office.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 46. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, NOV. 25, E. M. 299. [C. E, 1899.] WHOLE No. 789.

Let Us Alone.

Many—and yet our fate is one,
And little after all we crave—
Enjoyment of the common sun,
Fair passage to the common grave;
Our bread and fire, our plain attire,
The free possession of our own,
Rulers, be wise! and kings and czars,
Let us alone—let us alone.

The world is the abode of men,
And not of demons stark and blind;
And Eden's self might bloom again,
If men did justice to mankind,
We want no more of Nature's store
Than Nature meant to be our own,
Masters, and regents of the earth,
Let us alone—let us alone.

Your meddling brought us grief and care,
And added misery day by day;
We're not so foolish as we were,
Nor fashion'd of such ductile clay;
Your petty jars, your wicked wars,
Have lost their charm, the gilding's gone;
Victorious marshals, vaulting kings,
Let us alone—let us alone.

Tho' dwellers in a little isle,
We bear no hate to other lands,
And think that Peace or earth might smile
If we and others join'd our hands,
In Reason's spite why should we fight?
We'll war no more—we're wiser grown,
Quibblers and stirrers up of hate,
Let us alone—let us alone.

White man or black, to us alike;
Foemen of no men we will live,
We will not lift our hands to strike,
Or evil for advantage give,
Our hands are free to earn their fee,
Our tongues to let the truth be known,
So despots, knaves, and foes of right,
Let us alone—let us alone.

Great are our destinies; our task,
Long since begun, shall never end
While suffering has a boon to ask,
Or truth needs spokesmen to defend;
While vice or crime pollute the time,
While nations bleed, or patriots groan,
Rulers, be wise! and meddling fools,
Let us alone—let us alone.

Charles Mackay.

Notes and Queries.

BY EDGAR D. BRINKERHOFF.

If there were no other way to ensure the protection of offspring from neglect, there would be more reason in the proposition to bring collective pressure to bear to require fathers to recognize their relation publicly and perform their part in supporting the children. But there is a better way. Allow freedom to womankind; they will see that fathers perform their part in the maintenance of the young. The individual is more powerful for good than the collectivity. If the state will refrain from inducing the habit of helplessness, individuals will learn to look out for themselves. The human female is actually master of the situation. She has it in her power to force the man to provide support for his children before they are born. The state can not possibly be made so strong as this.

* * *

President Harrison was reported in the newspapers as having a very pretty way with the little misses ten or twelve years of age at social functions in the White House. Everybody was pleased with this exhibition of high art except the elderly ladies. The query arises. Whence comes the antipathy for young girls that the close observer can always detect in older women?

* * *

Lucifer should retain its present name, but the title page should contain under the inscription a brief quotation from some standard writer affording at once explanation of and authority for the sense in which the word is used. If thought necessary change the type so that "Lucifer" shall appear in small letters and "Light-Bearer" in large type.

* * *

It is not in the quality of selfishness that the altruist and the narrowly selfish differ, but their common egoism leads to two different forms of action because one is perhaps enlightened and the other narrow. All motive is necessarily selfish. Educate a man and his selfishness seeks new channels, but he is none the less selfish. Altruism as a philosophy is a failure because it takes no cognizance of the most fundamental trait of human nature. The altruist is not so bad as his philosophy, for he is bound to be egoistic and cannot possibly follow altruistic principles. Where altruism hurts him is in blinding him to some truths that he might otherwise perceive.

* * *

Reformers must make up their minds to work out their reforms under the eyes of the existing governments, not apart from general society. The Mormons did not locate far enough away, nor did the Boers succeed in getting out of reach. In a little while not a square foot of earth will remain undivided among the great states. If reform colonies will operate within the limits of such civilization as we have, they will save themselves much inconvenience and while sharing in the advantages of our semi-civilization they will be learning how to have their own way in spite of the disapproval of the general public.

* * *

Women cannot be said always to be incapable of self-support during pregnancy, although if their occupation were school-teaching the income would be likely to be cut off. In many cases the total earnings of this period may be assumed to be sufficient to cover the expenses of the whole period. But this is not the greatest difficulty that women have to contend with in the attempt to be self-maintaining. The two years of lactation are harder to get over and for many years a single child should receive much of the mother's time and attention, to say nothing of more children and other seasons of lactation. After childbearing once begins, it seems harsh to expect a woman to earn a living for herself and children through ordinary business channels. That it can be done admits of no doubt, but who will claim that it can be well done except in rare cases? If this is the price that must be paid for the honor of being a new woman, let us go back to the old woman until some way is found to induce men to support the children voluntarily and yet without charity.

* * *

Among radicals, including Robert G. Ingersoll, there is substantial unanimity as to the supreme importance of freedom for the mothers of the race of human kind. The collectivists have gone so far as to mature a plan for securing to women both sexual freedom and physical comfort. Libertarians approve these aims but have no faith in the means proposed by which to attain the desired ends. And yet what individualist can give a good account of himself when asked what he proposes in place of state control of sexuo-economic relations? The best answer so far given by this wing of radicalism is that liberty is to be trusted and a way will be found under free conditions to provide support for the children. But as libertarians have taken the trouble to work out the solution of land and money problems through freedom in banking and land tenure, why should they not also endeavor to trace out a definite explanation of the process by which the economic wants of children will be supplied under a system which subjects no non-invasive individual to the will of any other person?

* * *

What to eat is a puzzling question. A special objection is urged against each kind of meat. Exception is taken to all flesh and blood; if cooked the albumen is rendered indigestible, if raw the germs are injurious and dangerous. Milk is a disease producer. Butter is filthy under the microscope. Cheese is constipating. Eggs cause cystiruria. Vegetables are innutritious and indigestible. Grain foods are too starchy for the ordinary stomach; if predigested they are still objectionable as they make the digestive organs more and more unable to deal with natural food. Nuts raw are too firm in texture, and cooked are innutritive on account of the interpenetration of the oil. Fruits are the one food that no one used to say aught against, but they too are a menace to health. Apples contain too much potash pears and prunes prevent healthy intestinal digestion by their laxative effect; berries are woody; and so on down the list. All northern fruits are ruled out as unfit to form a considerable portion of one's diet. Tropical fruits are picked green and do not ripen naturally enough. Truly diet presents an unsolved problem. Not a single food article can be mentioned that has not been condemned by licensed physicians. Doctors disagree with one another quite as much as foods disagree with those who venture to eat.

Morrisville, Pa., Nov. 15, 1899.

About the Name.

BY J. P. ROBINSON.

It seems from the general experience and observation of nearly all our friends who have expressed themselves, that it would be advisable to drop the name Lucifer, for the reasons given.

It seems that the prophet Isaiah, in his poetical way, addressed the Babylonian King as the "Morning Star," and jollied him on his fall. And the early christian writers, taking it very seriously, imagined that the poet had reference to the fall of Satan, hence the error. Now for us to stop and waste our efforts in trying to correct this mistake, reminds me of another Persian King, who started out with an immense army, bent on "expansion," but while encamped in a river bottom, the stream suddenly rose out of its banks and drowned several thousand of his horse and foot soldiers. Instead of moving to higher ground, as Otis would have done, or swimming the flood and going on about his business, as Funston did, he stopped right there and made war on the river, and in an effort to drain it, as a punishment for interfering with his plans, so frittered away his army and his resources, that he was compelled to abandon the whole expedition.

If the people want to think that the Devil and Lucifer are identical, why let them think so. It wont materially harm the people, nor us, nor Lucifer, nor the Devil. The purpose of our paper is of vastly more importance than all this.

So far as I have observed, all the letters have been of an iconoclastic tendency, and so to vary the monotony, I want to make a suggestion. Call the paper, or magazine, for I like that form best, "Aurora." What could be more beautiful, or appropriate? We are everlastingly tired of he deities. The father and son are probably both male, though judging from the mathematics of the Trinity, this is not absolutely certain, and the Holy Ghost is at best only a hermaphrodite. So let us, who believe in the emancipation and sacredness of woman, enshrine the beautiful goddess of the morning our tutelar deity. According to Roman mythology, Aurora was represented as drawn in a rosy-colored chariot by two horses, and appeared scattering flowers, as the forerunner of the sun.

> "Soon as Aurora, daughter of the dawn, > Sprinkled with roseate light the dewy lawn."
>
> Pope: Homer's Odyssey.
>
> "The morning planet told the approach of light,
> And fast behind Aurora's warmer ray
> O'er the broad ocean pour'd the golden day."
>
> Pope: Homer's Iliad.
>
> "His bosom of the hue
> With which Aurora decks the skies,
> When piping winds shall soon arise
> To sweep away the dew."
>
> Cooper.
>
> "Leaves and running rills, Aurora's fan."
>
> Milton.

The word, according to its Greek derivation, means; to give light, to shine, and so may be regarded as the feminine of Lucifer with all the beautiful, poetic imagery of the morning star, without the least smell of sulphur.

Our present head, which we have all learned to love, would be appropriate. All that would be necessary would be to change the word Lucifer to Aurora. What say you, and our readers?

Shall Name be Changed?

BY MAX.

If I have a correct idea of the matter the name of Lucifer, and the line of work it represents are the product of the mind of Moses Harman. Whatever of success, or of failure has attended his labors is pre-eminently his own. If, after so many years of effort, conditions now point to failure, are the anxious friends quite sure their choice of name will insure success?

Would it not be more just, as well as more complimentary, to allow the editor to judge for himself as to what name best represents his purpose and ideas? What assurance do these friends offer that a change in name will not be followed by an effort on their part for a change all along the present lines of work? and that Moses Harman will be editor in name only? a mere cipher, as it were, at the head of his paper?

In a late issue of Lucifer the editor states that he is sixty-nine years of age. If his friends detect evidence of mental decay it were kind—even commendable, perhaps, to initiate a plan by which the editor should gradually be relieved from all care-burdening responsibilities, both mental and physical.

In his "upward climb towards heights sublime," the editor planted his standard on the crest of the Mountain of Progress; and proclaimed the "Freedom of Motherhood!" He stood alone. The world, startled and awed, forgot to chide. Slowly and painfully a few brave souls struggled to the crest and took their stand beside the editor of Lucifer. In the bleak, chilly air, these interpid champions of human liberty held aloft the luminous banner—"The Star of the Dawn."

And now the world is electrified anew by the proclamation, "Freedom of Motherhood." All eyes are turned toward the mountain crest, and lo! beside the editor of Lucifer stands the form of the beloved, the idolized Ingersoll.

The intellectual giants of the age are fast turning their faces towards the glorious banner of "The Light-Bearer." But alas! the way is long, and the steep perilous, and the hearts of many grow faint; and in sympathy for those who may not be able to surmount all difficulties of the "upward climb," the cry is sent to those above—"These weaklings need your presence and guidance more than all others. All you need to do to them is to come down a little nearer to them."

Mistaken—though perhaps, well meant advice! Below this stratum of human life is another still lower, still weaker,—and of far greater magnitude. Should Lucifer turn on a downward course it will not require a savant to see where it must ultimately land.

The power of example—the example of the popular and the wealthy; the force of fashion—these sway the judgment, the opinions, in morals as in religion and in politics. Scientists know, only too well, that the great suffering masses cannot be reached by logic. Hence, those whose hearts are so tender towards the great strata of dense ignorance represented by the masses of suffering humanity, can reach these more directly by turning their own energies towards interesting the more intellectual, the already well informed; the refined, the popular and the wealthy. These not only pay up, subscribe the second year, but sometimes in their farewell remembrances, help to speed along the car of progress.

The Philosophy of Happiness

From "The Rights of Women and the Sexual Relations," by Karl Heinzen.

Let me call attention to two notable personages of most modern times. The philosopher Schopenhauer was a woman-hater. An apostle of his, von Hartmann, a blase Berlinian, and son of a general, is a despiser of woman, who would grant man the privilege of ending his so-called love with the satisfaction of his sensual desire, to which the loving woman must of course submit. And what is the meaning, the moral, the logical outcome of the "pessimistic" philosophy of these two woman haters? In a word, the hopeless doctrine that it were better if the world did not exist at all; that really life is not worth living. Of course, life is not worth preservation, if we cannot appreciate its most beautiful part, or trample it under foot, as the brutality or satiety of men has hitherto done, in spite of all the poems and romances of love. Every philosophy of the world and of life which results in despair must be unsound, unnatural and false, since a contradiction, justifying such despair and its consequence, the self-destruction of that part of the world-life that we represent, is inconceivable. Everything that we, as thinking products of the world, require, must be attainable by us on the spot upon which we have been placed by its development. All phantasies about a heaven and another life are done away with for us. Outside of humanity there are for us no motives, no hopes, no future, no ideals. Here upon this planet our being must run its course, and our contentment be found. But where and with whom shall we find it but in living with our fellow-beings? and what nobler and more complete contentment could this life and all nature offer to man but the true love of man and woman? In this relationship must the aspirations and the outcomes of the reforms of the future find their sublime culmination, and their most beautiful success. To educate humanity not only for knowing and thinking, for working and creating, but also for loving, which our present groveling life seems designed to destroy, that will be the most beautiful and most profitable task of future society. But by education for love I do not mean instruction in the "art of loving," as was given by the frivolous Ovid, but an education which, beginning in youth, strives to secure all the conditions for true marriage, which will free love from all narrow-minded prejudices and hypocrisies, but will lead the free virgin into the arms of the uncorrupted man, and teach both to find their most beautiful destiny and their only true happiness in an intimate and lasting union. What we are now reforming and striving for will some time lead us to such an end, however distant its future may be, and however meager the hope that we ourselves may live to see it. That will neither discourage us nor weaken our interest. In the realm of ideas is it not always the better future that we anticipate in thought which inspires and sustains our reformatory efforts? Do not the highest aims toward which the mind strives always lie beyond the grave? And has the striving, on that account, less of charm and of value? Where we ourselves live to see the accomplishment of that for which we have struggled, the reality always falls short of our expectations, and the residue that remains must then serve as an incentive to further aspiration; not only that which we experience in thought, either by retrospection or prevision, do we experience wholly, undefiled and unobscured.

Is She An Honest Girl?

E. C. Walker in "Our Worship of Primitive Guesses."

When you hear the question, "Is he an honest boy?" you understand that the inquirer wishes to know if the boy indicated is honest as regards the property of other persons. The honest boy does not steal, and, giving a little broader meaning to the word honest, he does not lie. The honest boy keeps his hands off the effects of his neighbors and he keeps his word. But when you hear the question, "Is she an honest girl?" your experience tells you that the inquirer wishes to know if the girl asked about is still taboo. "Honest" has been transformed. It no longer refers to what may be called commercial integrity; applied to the girl, it means that she has never failed to conform. The honest girl does not love until she has received a license from an official. She may and does get a license to love, but she is still honest. In this she again differs from the boy. He is an honest boy, even if he does love without a license. But he cannot get a license to steal or to lie, and even if he could he would be a thief and a liar if he stole and lied. Odd, is it not, that a strong and rugged word like "honest" can be bent and twisted out of all resemblance to itself in the skinny and gnarled fingers of the imbecile Madam Grundy! What manikins we are!

The woman, having no property but her sex, had no use for commercial integrity, and so it came about that we say, "She is honest," when we mean that she will not sell her sex (except legally) and will not use it without a license from man, who, having property, has use for common honesty but never thinks of calling himself *dis*honest when he loves without a license. The freethinker who asks, "Is she honest?" meaning, is she still taboo? fails to see that he is doing what he can to perpetuate the Christian sociology, which deprived women of her property rights and left her nothing but her sex with which to play at honesty. This is a vicious distinction which makes "honest" mean one thing in the case of a man and something entirely different in the case of a woman.

The Way Out.

From "Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses," by E. C. Walker.

In a case decided not long ago in Pennsylvania it was held that a woman who claimed property rights was not the legal widow of the decedent, her alleged marriage to him being unlawful because of the fact that he was a co-respondent with her in a divorce suit brought by her (first) husband, although several children and a grandchild survive her union with the decedent. As will be perceived, the state here claims that its own act in joining this man and woman was unlawful because it had charged the woman with committing an illegal act prior to its uniting the two persons. That is, while recognizing the right of children to inherit from their parents, it nullifies this principle by its own unwarranted interference with the ante-nuptial affairs of the parents. In other words, it makes its first crime the excuse for the commission of a second.

What is the way out? Accept the principle that sex-association gives no property rights to either partner, put business contracts between men and women on the same basis (ignoring all thoughts of actual or possible sex-relations) as are business contracts between men and men and women and women, and let inheritance, in the absence of a will, be determined by the fact of parentage, without reference to the form or duration of the mating of the father and mother.

We can trust the natural love and solicitude of free women and men for their offspring to do substantial justice in a vastly greater proportion of cases than such justice is done under the existing servile system. I would that all men had more trust in themselves.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper to which it has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

The decision of the editor in regard to the name of our paper, has been received; but too late for this issue—It will appear next week.

We hope soon to be able to publish a prospectus of Moses Harman's autobiography. There is no longer a doubt that there is a demand for it by his friends. Three hundred and eighty copies have been subscribed for; and I do not think it unreasonable to expect that at least a thousand copies will be ordered by the time it is ready for delivery.

Current Comment.

BY EVA HARRIMAN.

"I have a curiosity here," a friend said to me to-day, and he showed me a copy of a St. Louis, Mo., newspaper of the year 1860 which contained several advertisements of runaway slaves.

"How strange it would seem to see such notices in newspapers now!" he added.

"Not so strange." I replied. "Here is one in the Chicago 'Inter-Ocean' of last Sunday," and I showed him the following telegram which was printed under the headline: "Flees with a Preacher:"

Columbus, S. C., Nov. 18.—The Rev. William Cramer and Mrs. Essie Campbell, wife of W. L. Campbell of Greenville, have fled from Greenville to parts unknown, taking two children of Cramer, who is a widower, and two infants of Mrs. Campbell, one three months old. Cramer is a Baptist preacher, who had made his home with the Campbells for eighteen months. The husband says he has had the utmost confidence in both his wife and Cramer. Mrs. Campbell in her fifteen years of married life, has borne nine children.

If Mrs. Campbell had borne nine children she certainly was old enough to decide for herself whether she wished to remain with Campbell. If she was not a slave she was free to leave him and go with a man she liked better. If she bore nine children in fifteen years because she wanted them, it is hardly likely that she would have desired to leave their father who had "the utmost confidence" in her. If she bore them unwillingly, I do not blame her for leaving the man who compelled her to do so.

* * *

A midwife is under arrest in St. Louis, Mo., on a charge of murdering many children and their mothers by malpractice. The details which have been published in the daily papers are horrible. But it should be remembered that such a creature as this midwife is said to be is a product of the hideously immoral social doctrine which makes maternity a shameful thing unless it has the sanction of church or state. The atrocious law which forbids the publication of any information as to how conception can be prevented and the unjust stigma put upon unmarried mothers by society are the two whips which drive unfortunate women to the shambles of the abortionist. The lives sacrificed in this manner are the fearful price which ignorance pays to the stupidity of the immoral fanatics who by legislation seek to make a shameful thing of a natural function which is inherently no more shameful than building a barn or painting a fence.

* * *

A divorce was granted without a trial last week to the pastor of a Methodist Church in Colorado. Another minister presented a signed statement that he had had illicit correspondence with the complainant's wife, and the wife formally renounced all claim to alimony. On this showing the court granted the divorce without the formality of a trial. This is a gratifying step in the direction of freedom. But, as the pastor and his wife desired to dissolve their marital partnership, why was any legal proceeding necessary, unless it might be that pertaining to alimony, which is strictly a commercial matter? Why should the second preacher be brought into the case, if it was not because of the theory that he had damaged the other man's property? Can a woman be the property of a man under the amendment to the federal constitution which prohibits involuntary slavery in the United States?

* * *

The Chicago "Tribune" announces that a scientist has succeeded in hatching unfertilized eggs of sea urchins by chemical means, without contact with the milt of the male urchin. The scientist infers from the success of his experiments that a way may eventually be discovered to fertilize the eggs of mammals by means of chemicals. If the assertion of this scientist regarding his discovery is true it seems to confirm the theory advanced by the editor of Lucifer, namely: the life principle is in the ovum. If the ovum can be fertilized by chemical means it is not a far flight of fancy to imagine a time when males will be unnecessary factors in reproduction.

* * *

"What makes more noise than a pig under a gate?" is an old conundrum. The answer is. "Two pigs under a gate."

On the same principle it might be argued in defence of Congressman-Elect Roberts of Utah that if it is a good thing for a man to have one wife, it is three times as good for him to have three wives. Ergo, Brigham H. Roberts is three times as good a husband as any other member of congress and instead of being excluded from that body, he should be given the seat of honor. Q. E. D.

But, on the same principle again, those who oppose the marriage institution might say. "If it is bad for a man to own one wife it is three times as bad for him to own three wives." Strangely enough, however, this latter argument, or part of it, is used by the defenders of the marriage institution. Illogically they say "It is good for a man to own one woman, but it is terribly bad for him to own three."

Laying aside superstitious reverence for custom, it would seem to be far more reasonable and far more just to say that if three or more women voluntarily choose to live with one man it is right for them to do so, but if they are compelled to live with him it is unjust and immoral. When a public statement is made by one or more of Brigham H. Roberts' alleged wives that her or their relationship to him is compulsory it will be time to denounce the alleged polygamist as an immoral man.

* * *

Two men have been hanged in Chicago within the last two weeks for wife murder. In each instance the murder was committed because the man wished to marry another woman. Marriage gave the wives a claim of ownership which cost them their lives. In the case of Becker there had never been any marriage ceremony, but a common law marriage was established which he regarded as binding. When he tired of the tie he killed his wife. A few years ago George Painter was hanged in Chicago for killing a woman with whom he lived, but who was not his wife. The woman was Painter's degraded slave and supported him with money which she gained by selling her favors to others. Painter's victim chose to retain her degraded position and forfeited her life as the penalty, but the cases of Rollinger and Becker clearly show that marriage affords women no protection from such brutal men.

HOLIDAY BOOKS FREE—To any person sending the name of one new subscriber with $1 for the subscription for one year, we will send any TWO of the Holiday Books which are advertised on another page. For two new subscribers, with $2, we will send any FIVE of the books, free of all cost.

"The Savage Wars of Peace."

BY R. B. KERR.

No part of human evolution is more important than the unification of mankind by the passing of the family into the tribe, the tribe into the nation, and the nation into the vast modern commonwealth.

When we go back to about 500 B. C., we find Greece, a little country about the size of West Virginia, divided into twenty or thirty petty states. All Europe was then subdivided in the same way, although Southern Asia was getting into a more advanced stage of evolution. After the loosely connected Roman Empire fell to pieces, we again find all Europe split up into little states and tribes. A thousand years ago England was divided into seven kingdoms, while Scotland, Ireland, and Wales were peopled by numberless tribes without any common bond. But during recent centuries the process of integration has gone on very fast. Europe is divided into something less than twenty states, of which one owns more than one half of the continent. North America, with the trifling exception of Mexico, is practically one nation, while in Australia we have a whole continent which has attained complete political unity.

This process of national unification has been accompanied by the continuous decline of militarism. In ancient Greece, every man was a soldier, and fought with some enemy almost every year of his life. It was the same in the middle ages. Gibbon tells us that "in the eleventh century every peasant was a soldier, and every village a fortification; each wood and valley was the scene of murder and rapine." Today every Frenchman and German has a short military training, but few of them ever see war. The English and Americans have paid armies, while the ordinary citizen has no connection with military matters during his whole life. Australia has no army at all, and Australians know nothing of warfare except when patriotism and animal spirits send some of them off to fight on another continent.

The decline of warfare, brought about by the gradual unification of mankind, has had the most momentous consequences. In the first place, it has made individual liberty possible. The ancient Greek had no idea of the individual as an entity which could be set up in opposition to the state. Discipline and individual subordination are essential to effective warfare, and effective warfare was always necessary in Greece to save both the state and the individual from extermination. It was much the same in the middle ages. The idea of an individual who might possibly be considered as having rights against the state is an extremely modern one. So modern that it would hardly be possible to find it in all the writings of Shakespeare and Bacon.

Morever, the decline of warfare has brought about the great humanitarian movements of recent times, by introducing consideration for the weak. As Bagehot says, "the non-combatant population is sure to fare ill during the ages of combat." When men were killing each other every day, it was not likely that they would care much about the freedom of women, or the feelings of children and animals. Thus, as Herbert Spencer has told us, the greatest of the causes of the humanitarian movement has been the transition from the military to the industrial stage, and this transition has been mainly due to the substitution of large nations for small ones.

But how have these amalgamations been brought about? In all cases by war. So deep seated are the antipathies of different races towards each other, that there is no case on record of considerable peoples of different race and language being amalgamated together except by war. The fusion of mankind has been brought about by the fiery crucible of war. Thus Rudyard Kipling's phrase "the savage wars of peace" is not a mere poetic phrase, but a statement of one of the most important historical truths.

We have now advanced so far that the end of militarism is almost in sight. In Australia, war is defunct, and almost so in North America. Present events in South Africa can hardly fail to lead to the ultimate unification of that continent, while there is little doubt that the fate of South America will be decided, as Cecil Rhodes predicts, within another century by the extension of the United States to Cape Horn. Asia can hardly fail to fall entirely into the hands of Russia, because Russia is the only important country which can get at her by land. Probably Europe will never be unified entirely, because the nations of Europe, having no more new worlds to conquer, and finding the game of conquering each other not worth the candle will some day enter into bonds of universal peace. Europe will then be the least endowed but the most picturesque of continents, the place to which the weary business man will retreat for a little novelty from a Pan-Russian Asia, and a Pan-English America, Africa and Australia. Thus will the world enjoy the blessings of universal peace.

The Right of a Child to be Well Born.

Mabel MacCoy Irwin, in "The Arena."

We have indeed fallen upon great days when we are asked to consider, not the right of a people to be free, not the right of an individual to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, not the right in fact of anything that already is and by its existence is entitled to our consideration, but the right of something that as yet is not, save as it subsists potentially in the womb of the Infinite. . . . .

There is always a veil of mystery or shame thrown between the growing child's mind and his own organs of reproduction. He is early taught that to know anything concerning them savors of immodesty and sin. I used to wonder at this—wonder why mothers and fathers should teach their sons and daughters all things save this most important one, leaving the child to learn on street-corner and in public playground those things that can only be properly taught by the hearth-stone and in the sanctity of the home. But it is plainer to me now. First of all, life itself is secret—a mystery hidden beyond the ken of man. . . . .

The instinctive shrinking felt by the mother when talking to her child on matters of sex is natural. It is only because of false ideas that have crept in as the fruit of sin that it is a necessity. If children were well born—born of love—their innate sense of purity would be their infallible guide.

Another reason why parents are so silent on this matter is that few have any proper understanding of the sex function themselves. They have vague notions, but no clearly defined ideas. They have, alas! found too often in the marriage relation a way of pain and sorrow, and they cannot bear to speak to their innocent boy and girl of that which has proved so unsatisfactory to them. So they try to assure themselves that the longer the child remains in ignorance the longer it will likely stay in innocence; for it is bound to learn all too soon of the things they would gladly keep from it forever. . . . .

It is only of recent years that the rights of children have to any great degree been considered at all. One needs only to look into literature of fifty years ago: Scarcely a book can be discovered to feed the hungry mind of the child; and when found, it relates almost wholly to religious teachings, and often of such a nature as well-nigh to take the joy of living out of its little heart by dire threats and catechismal questions asked and answered. Despite this, however, the child would revel in it because it was "almost a story," keeping it among her treasures to be read and re-read till she had it and the crude pictures it contained stamped indelibly on her memory.

But how changed it is now! Children's books fill our libraries, both public and private, till it seems as if every chord in the child's nature has been struck, bringing forth music that has enriched both it and the world of grown folks in which it lives. In fact, this may be called the child's age as well as woman's age; for mother and child are so closely connected that to advance the one is to find the other by its side.

This rapid advancement of women in the last decade has given rise to much solicitude on the part of the conservative minded. It seems to them as if the world is being turned topsey-turvey; that man, who for so long a time has had things his own way, is being pushed largely to the wall in trade and business, if not in politics, and that homes will no longer be a necessity to our growing civilization. But there is little danger here. Swaddling-clothes make even children of a larger growth appear awkward. In striking at random to be free they sometimes hurt both themselves and others. When they have grown a little larger, however, our women will better understand their rights and privileges. . . . .

It is well for the preachers of God to impress upon woman's mind the awfulness of child-murder in the womb. It is well for learned physicians to write treatises upon the duties and privileges of the mother as she carries her babe beneath her heart. It is well to tell her to be healthy, happy, and spiritually minded, in order that posterity may rise up and call her blessed. It is well to tell her that every fit of passion, every unkind thought or feeling, leaves an indelible impression, not only upon the disposition but upon the very face and form of her unborn child. It is well to tell her of the dignity of motherhood, and that in her hand rests the destiny of the race. It is well to tell her that "the hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world." For all these things are true. But if she has had no choice in becoming a mother; if the child was begotten by mistake while ministering to the selfish demands of him that promised to love and cherish; if in fact the child has been "conceived in sin and born in iniquity," as all such children are —whence shall spring her joy? How shall she be glad when she feels, not that she has "gotten a man from the Lord," but that the unborn babe is another proof of her sexual slavery?

Until we have considered conditions of conception, we have not reached the basis of the matter; we have not laid the axe at the root of the tree; we have not considered all the rights of the child that is to be born.

The crime against a child begins when it is conceived in anything less than mutual, holy love. And it is a breaking of the seventh commandment for a woman to enter into the sex relation unless it be to express her wifely love for the man she has chosen to be the husband of her heart and the father of her children. . . . .

The general belief of our women—which amounts to almost a religion—that the relation between husband and wife is a necessity on his part and a duty on hers, is the most false, the most pernicious, and the most far-reaching in its power to destroy health and happiness that has ever been conceived by the mind of man. It is an outrage upon her and a libel upon him. As if a man's necessity could be a woman's humiliation! This mistaken sense of duty on her part and necessity on his is the miserable serpent that enters into the Eden of marriage and poisons all things sweet and pure, driving the man and woman from out their garden, in which grew all things pleasant, to wander in the dry deserts of dissatisfaction, disappointment, and disgust. With their minds filled with these false notions, the newly married begin the making of a miniature world handicapped to failure from the start. . . . .

I do not mean to say, or even imply, that man alone is to blame for all these false conditions. I would not have the reader regard husbands as all at fault, while wives are blameless. No; they have been ignorant together. They have sinned together. And together they must walk the path of knowledge, and together lead holier lives. Man on his part has been quite as falsely taught as has woman on hers. And I am sure that he will follow where she leads, when she knows her rightful position, and, with sweet womanliness, takes it. The husband is quite as miserable over this state of affairs in married life as is the wife. And together they rise or fall.

To conclude, I know of no words so fitting as those of that queen of women, Frances Willard:

"A great new world looms into sight, like some splendid ship long waited for: the world of heredity and prenatal influence. Poor old humanity, so tugged by failure and weary with disaster, turns to the cradle at last and perceives that it has been the Pandora's box of every ill and the Fortunatus, casket of every joy that life has known. When the mother learns the divine secret of her power; when she selects in the partner of her life the father of her child, and for its sweet sake rejects him of unclean lips; . . . when man seeks life's highest sanctities in the relationship of husband and father; . . . then shall the blessed prophecy of the world's peace come true. The conquered lion of lust shall lie down at the feet of the white lamb of purity, and a little child shall lead them. . . . The greatest right of which we can conceive is being slowly, surely recognized—the right of a child to be well born.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Edgar D. Brinkerhoff, Morrisville, Pa.:—I find that in Lucifer of Nov. 4, second page, at the end of "Notes and Queries," I mentioned Slavs as brachycephalic people, which is a mistake as the slavonic race are descendants of the union of broad-head and long-headed races.

—

Edw. Hayes, New York:—I will take a copy of your book when you get it out. I would change the name but the principal thing is to stick to the main issue—the sex question. Men and women may say they are not, but everyone is interested, in the very nature of things.

—

N. H. Nye, Pender, Neb.:—I wish to endorse all that H. B. Monroe says in No. 785 in regard to changing the name of Lucifer. I never destroy a reform paper and I know that nine times out of ten the name makes a bad impression when received for the first time by the uninformed and I quit distributing Lucifer on that account.

—

A married woman writes—You may remember me, as I Lav written to you before, I want to again express my gratitude to your good father and yourself for your unselfish service to the greatest cause of the centuries. Inclosed you will find a list of names for Lucifer. These are given in strictest confidence, they are people who should read Lucifer. For $1.00 inclosed please send me one copy of "Bar Sinister" and use the remaining 75cts for postage for sample copies.

—

Henry R. Thayer, Savannah, Ga.:—I am not holding up my end in supporting Lucifer, and am sorry to have to acknowledge it. Can only make the good resolution to try and do better in the future. Lucifer's work is my work. Many of its readers feel as I do, a kind of partnership in it, but I have been too willing to let others do the work, and furnish the funds, too. I hereby pledge myself to do my portion towards helping you take another trip south. You need it. We all need that you should do it.

—

J. W. Van Deventer, Sterling, Colo.:—Enclosed find a dollar to apply on subscription to Lucifer. Keep it coming. I could not do business without it. Regarding the proposed change of name I know not what to say. I should personally prefer The Light Bearer. As to its present form, I think it would improve it to change it to a magazine form. Regarding the publication of your father's life I think two or three editions of say 2,000 each ought to be sold in a year after its publication. I regard your paper as a true light bearer to American womanhood. We do not differ regarding the evils you are trying to crush, but only in the remedy.

—

B. F. Hyland, Corvallis, Ore.:—I want one of your books and here is the money. Now let two or three thousand more hand in a dollar apiece and if we never get the book we should never think of the dollar for sorrow for the man that was willing but not able to write. No man can live on faith until he produces a publication; therefore friends send on the dollars. I inclose $2.60 for books. It astonishes me when I think of the changes of a part of one lifetime. For instance, sixty-five years ago last spring, I played with little Indians on Lake Street (Chicago); no white boys in sight. Thirteen years later, the Indians were all gone, and I was herding cattle on the very spot where you live and for as far as you can possibly see from the highest eminence attainable. Let the good work go on.

—

Harry W. Boland, Philadelphia, Pa.:—The life of the editor of Lucifer should by all means be printed and published. The life of every man is unique. His life is especially unique and could not fail to be interesting and instructive. I believe that there has never been the real life of any real man. The man who can and will tell the entire truth regarding himself will have performed the greatest literary feat of the age. How interesting it is to read a biography and how much more interesting it is to read an autobiography. What a fascination there is in the blending of the individual and the universal. I have before me the autobiography of Whitman. Here is the first sentence: "If I do it at all I must delay no longer." When we have seen one laid in his grave who has occupied a prominent position in a circle, large or small, it is like contemplating a finished work of art. We see the soul like a beautiful painting. We get the impression which the artist has intended to convey; we note that shadows as well as lights have been needed to give the effect. Would we not listen with rapt attention if the artist were to review his work, telling us how a heart-throb has been in each touch of the brush? By all means let it be written, as near a real life as can be. It should be printed in such way as experience has taught would yield the best result. I think I could use at least five copies.

—

Harriet C. Garner, Chicago, Ill.:—The name Lucifer has always pleased me for I felt people need a shock sometimes before their attention can be obtained. However, it may be better to change the name. More Light to me would be better than Light Bearer, although a true light bearer is willing to bear all the light he can get. However much we know, there is always room for more light. Now we only have a little glimmer.

I was amused at what Henry E. Allen gave as a definition of a "true liberal," viz.: "One who is willing that every person shall enjoy the same rights he demands for himself under similar circumstances." I do not see the use of the clause "under similar circumstances. It seemed like setting limits to real liberty. A man must have "similar circumstances" before he could enjoy the "willing" of some one who thinks he knows it all.

In No. 784 "Woman and the Cook Stove," and the cry "who will free the slave of the cook stove?" is perhaps the cry of millions who are just beginning to realize something is wrong. I would say, "Woman free thyself." It is unnecessary that either man or woman be a slave to the cook stove. It is ignorance of the true laws of life pertaining to food substances, and how to "eat to live," instead of living to eat. When I see a woman standing over the red hot stove for hours preparing food, basting a dead carcass, spoiling delicious fruits by putting it between greasy crusts, with dyspepsia the inevitable result of such slavery to the appetite, I feel like turning away and saying: "Ephraim is joined to his idols;" let him alone. But the cry has gone forth and I hope woman will awake to the truth of this important subject. We have a great many kinds of slavery in this world, and it will take a long time to find out the whole brood, so reformers have a work before them. We want more Light on all subjects.

RIGHTS OF WOMEN

IN THE SEXUAL RELATIONS,

By Karl Heinzen. A new edition together with the startling letters of Louise Mayen" on Men and Women, and a report of the Convent on of German women at Frauenstadt. A book of 200 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Price paper bound, 50 cents; cloth, $1

A NEW BOOK by Albert Chavannes, "Magnetation, its Relation to Health and Character," contains invaluable information upon the relation of the sexes. Price, 25 cents. Address, Albert Chavannes, 308 Fourth Ave., Knoxville, Tenn.

Books for the Holidays.

The publishers' price of the books in the following list is forty cents each. We bought them at a little less than half of that. The postage averages about four cents on each book. Half the publishers' price with postage added is twenty-four cents. We will send any book in the list, postage prepaid, for twenty-five cents, the extra cent going to pay for the work of wrapping and mailing. Send in your order at once if you want them before the holidays and the books will be sent promptly.

Every book in the list is handsomely bound in cloth and is printed in clear type on good paper. The number following the name of the book indicates the number of its pages:

Bracebridge Hall, by Washington Irving. 268. With 120 illustrations designed by Randolph Caldecott.

Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, by Lord Byron, complete and unabridged. 270.

Crown of Wild Olives, by John Ruskin. 282. Consists of four lectures on work, traffic, war, and the future of England, with an interesting appendix.

Dolly Dialogues, by Anthony Hope. 262.

Dreams, by Olive Schreiner. 128.

Lalla Rookh, by Thomas Moore, 327. With copious notes.

Master and Man, by Tolstoi. 117.

Sartor Resartus, by Thomas Carlyle, (with notes and index.) 344.

Sketch Book, by Washington Irving. 404. This book contains the famous story of Rip Van Winkle.

Samantha at Saratoga, or Racin' After Fashion, by Josiah Allen's wife, (Marietta Holly), profusely illustrated, 373.

Tanglewood Tales, by Nathaniel Hawthorne, 284.

Readers of Lucifer

are interested in all reform movements and will find the literature treating on science and the Occult of vast interest and great advantage.

Occult Forces,	.50
Vital Magnetic Power, by Randall	1.00
How to Mesmerize, by Coates	1 00
Natural Way in Diet,	1.00
Health Foods and How to Prepare Them,	1.00
The Silent Friend—A Key to Rapid Wealth,	2.00
How to Hypnotize—a complete manual of instruction	2.00
How to Win or Sure Secrets of Success, by Prof. L. H. Anderson. 352 pages	2 00
Ancient Magic, Magnetism and Psychic Forces,	2.00
Marvels of Magnetism and Methods Old and New,	5.00
How to Heal, by J. K. Anderson,	10 00

Catalogue free. Address, National Inst. of Science, L. K. 119, Masonic Temple, Chicago, Ill., U. S. A.

WOMEN and ECONOMICS,

A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women. By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Here are a few of the page headings of this remarkable work "Economic environment; The dependence of women; No inherent disability of sex; Marriage not a partnership; House service as a livelihood; Motherhood and economic production-Modification to maternity; The usefulness of sex; Differentiation of sex; Sex and humanity; The peacock's tail; Sex distinctions; The eternal feminine; unreasoning devotion; Women as persons; Race-attributes and sex-attribute; The normal child; Personal profit and sex-relations; The influence of heredity; The young man and the young woman; The effect of custom: The sex relation personal; Innocence and ignorance; Marriage with independence; The increasing difficulty of marriage; Supporting one's family; Virtue and vice; The results of repression; The harm that women do; The development of love; The hope for the future; The martyr and the pioneer; The dropping of the bars; The meaning of the new woman; Motherhood in education; A criminal failure; Marriage and the family; Love's young dream; The heart and the stomach; Socializing the household industries; The stomach as a family tie; The servant wife; World-servants and house-servants; A wider maternity; Between the old and the new; "The vices of the slave;" The outgrown stronghold. Printed on strong, heavy paper; 350 pages, bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale by M. Harman, 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

789.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

FOR WAR AND EXPANSION.

Lucifer has been engaged in warfare against Superstition, Intolerance, Ignorance and Tyranny ever since it sprang into existence. It will continue the battle as long as it continues to exist. But it cries for re-enforcements.

A Larger Standing Army

Of warriors for liberty of thought, speech and action is demanded. The Ignorance trust is the most terrible of all the terrible family of trusts. Help us to destroy it.

Expansion is Necessary

If we carry on this righteous war successfully. Not expansion of territory, for Lucifer now has subscribers in all parts of the world. The expansion we ask for is in our subscription list. We want it doubled, quadrupled, centupled.

But the expansion must be gradual. We will first ask our friends to help us double our number of subscribers. It ought to be easy for each subscriber to get one more. Try it. It will not only do Lucifer good, but it will also do you good and it is a safe guess that it will do the new subscriber good.

THERE'S PROFIT IN IT FOR YOU. If your own subscription is paid for a year in advance you may retain 50 cents for each additional subscriber which you secure for us at the rate of $1 a year. If you are interested in the doctrines which Lucifer advocates this affords you an opportunity to help the cause and get some financial reward for your time and labor.

HELP CIRCULATE RADICAL LITERATURE. Write to us for special terms.

BACK NUMBERS OF LUCIFER are excellent for propaganda. Send seventy-five cents for a package of one hundred and distribute them at radical meetings or at other places where they will do good.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES.

BY E. C. WALKER.

No man is wise enough to foresee the secondary results of any proposed restriction, and no history is copious enough to record the evils that have ensued upon denials of liberty.—George E. Macdonald.

CONTENTS:

Love and the Law,	3
The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal,	12
The Continuity of Race-Life; and Tyranny,	16
Food and Sex Fallacies, a criticism,	17
When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties,	26
The New Woman: what is she? what will she be?	31
The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes,	44
Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce,	45
Love: Its Attraction and Expression,	51
Is She an Honest Girl?	53
Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts,	54
Social Radicals and Parentage,	57
Anthropology and Monogamy,	59
Love and Trust Versus Fear,	62
Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life."	61

Price 15 cents. For sale at this office.

CULTIVATION OF PERSONAL MAGNETISM.

A TREATISE ON HUMAN CULTURE. BY LEROY BERRIER.

This treatise reverses the common belief that Personal Magnetism, Life Force and Mind Force can not be cultivated and acquired. It is a Complete Course of Instructions that will enable all who possess them, to become powerfully magnetic. Price, $1. Postage, 5 cents.

Address Leroy Berrier, President Institute of Human Culture, Minneapolis, Minn.

The Story of An African Farm. Olive Schreiner's master piece. A story of the struggle for light, the search for truth, the yearning for happiness of bright young English and German people, among the ignorant and coarse Boers and Kaffirs of South Africa. This is a work of art, and of truth. Well bound in cloth 300 pages. Price, 60 cents, postage 10 cents. For sale at this office

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.
This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 167 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Women in Marriage Slavery

Will find in HILDA'S HOME a story exposing the horrors of their condition as faithfully and as fearlessly as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" exposed the horrors of Negro slavery in the South. The story is more entertaining than many modern works of fiction and the plain truths it tells will find responsive echoes in the aching, bursting hearts of many women who know the galling effects of marriage thralldom.

The book contains 425 pages. Price handsomely bound in cloth, $1. In paper cover 50 cents. Send in your order NOW—especially if you want extra copies for distribution among your friends.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Persons Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 20 cents. Address Moses Harman, 167 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. E. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.
"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.
"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.
Sample pages free Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Missing Link Modern Spiritualism. By A. Leah Underhill. A book for all spiritualists and investigators. "Hear all sides, then decide." 25 chapters; 478 pages; 16 illustrations, including portraits of the Fox family. History of the Hydesville rappings, as given by eye-witnesses, the threats of mob violence; remarkable and well-attested manifestations; the "exposures" disposed of, etc. Handsomely bound in cloth. Publishers price, $1.50. On receipt of $1.27, and 13 cents for postage, we will send the book to any address.

Wanted. A woman to keep house for small family. Write J. C. Box 99, Oakland, Illinois.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be FREE; love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent socially, industrially."—Page 265. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CITYLESS AND COUNTRYLESS WORLD," by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 400 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of patriotism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races." Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III., Co-operation; Chapter IV., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, ten cts.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 47. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, DEC. 2, E. M. 299. [C. E. 1899.] WHOLE No. 790.

My Brother's Keeper.

I called him faint of heart, in spirit poor,
I said: "O brother for all such as thee
The world is full of snares and subtlety!
How little art thou fitted to endure
The ills thy weakness brings! Let my strength be Thy constant shield My vision swift and sure
Shall pierce the darkest depths of every lure
About our paths. I'd lead thee; lean on me!"
But when with subtlest art temptation wove
Round our unwary souls her fairest spell;
When lust of power and wealth, and love as well,
Their keenest shaft against dear Honor drove—
When in her cause I and my brother strove—
Behold! he conquered grandly—but I fell!

—Susan M. Spalding.

Notes and Queries.

BY EDGAR D. BRINKERHOFF.

If the southern whites desire to segregate themselves into a caste, free political institutions must allow them the right in respect to everything except political matters. When it comes to the administration of justice, the jury must be selected out of all the residents within the limits of the territorial unit; and this disposes of whatever dangerous element there may be in segregation. The white people of the south are to be commended for their desire to erect natural barriers between themselves and the inferior race; but when they go so far as to commit aggression upon the non-invasive, they lose the sympathy of all who object to governmental barriers between classes.

* * *

The freedom of woman without knowledge would promise little for the advancement of the race; but who says that woman has no knowledge? With freedom she will born better babies at once; she will add to her knowledge and each generation will see still better babies. It is folly to say that freedom alone would not produce better offspring, for "freedom alone" means that all other things will be added unto you in time. People that are always asking some gift in addition to freedom have a wrong understanding of it and are full of fear that liberty would lead to cut-throat competition.

* * *

All are ready to say a good word for high ideals, but many are prone to overlook the harm that may come from entertaining lower purposes. The woman who supports herself and children from her earnings in some general business occupation is guilty of lending sanction to a false ideal unless she does so under protest; for it is expedient that society accord to women and children the right to a part of the product of the labor of the men. When women allow it to appear that they are willing to forego this contribution from the men, they commit the same offense as does one who gives in charity.

* * *

Work in its best aspect is the greatest means of education. Work of this high nature is valuable for use, but seldom possesses economic value. The term labor may be distinctively applied to those human activities that command economic reward. An excess of labor may be called drudgery. In ideal society women in common with men will be relieved of drudgery at one extreme and at the other will have opportunity to enter into the world's intellectual and moral work. But woman's relation to labor as defined above is ideally different from that of man's; for what is home without a woman? Women are in great demand as home-makers; their children demand them, their aged parents demand them, the men demand them. Women cannot afford to specialize their labor and exchange with others in the industrial world for the reason that home-keeping must ever offer far greater rewards. And, really, home duties in developed society will allow woman better opportunity to engage in the world's high moral and intellectual endeavor than would be afforded her while occupying a mere business position.

* * *

Does love between the sexes admit of degrees? Let freethinkers examine themselves. Does each person regard a certain one of the opposite sex as his or her first preference, another as second choice, another as third, and so on down until he comes to those he hates? The question deserves careful consideration as much depends upon the answer.

Morrisville, Pa., Nov. 21, 1899.

The Tropics and Freedom.

BY ARTHUR WASTALL.

I have been debarred for a considerable time the pleasure the perusal of Lucifer invariably affords me, and am only lately in receipt of the current year's back numbers. I am glad to note that while the editor was recently health-seeking in the south, he had in mind the desirability of establishing some sort of home or colony in which the readers of this journal, and sympathizers with its aims, might in divers degree co-operate; and that he consequently looked at the Gulf States through this pair of spectacles. Furthermore, lower Mississippi was mentioned as affording probably the likeliest site for such a project.

Now, since the importance of starting well has been so clearly and wisely recognized, it occurs to me that the brilliant originator of a somewhat analogous ideal might with profit be heard from as to that portion of the globe which would seem to offer the most advantages in regard to location. I refer to Dr. Theodor Hertzka, who made no little stir in Europe some eight or ten years back by the writing of "Freeland, a Social Anticipation." The book has not, I believe, been much read in America; and the fact that the attempt made to carry out its doctrines proved abortive, should not be allowed to detract from the soundness of all the views, at any rate, upon which they are based. The preliminary expedition, it will be remembered, owing entirely to incompetent leadership, never reached its destination.*

* The proposed site of "Freeland" was the Kikuyu plateau, a rich tableland 300 miles from the East African coast, freshened by the winds from the snow-be the condition of mankind under such a regime? the following passage occurs:

"The original home of our race was evidently the hottest part of the earth; under the tropics, in our struggles with the world of animals, we gained our first victories, and developed ourselves into warlike cannibals; but against the forces of nature, which reign supreme in that hot zone, we in our childhood could do nothing. Production, and afterwards slavery could be carried on only outside of the tropics. On the other hand, it is quite as certain that man could not remove himself very far from the tropics so long as the productivity of his labor was comparatively small, and he could not compel nature to furnish him with much more than she offered voluntarily. It is no mere accident that civilization began and first flourished exclusively in that zone which is equally removed from the equator and the polar circle. In that temperate zone were found united all the conditions which protected the still infantile art of production from being crushed on the one hand or stunted on the other by the overwhelming power or parsimony of nature. But this mean temperature, still favorable to the second phase of evolution, proved itself altogether unfavorable to the last step towards perfect control over nature. As human labor met with a generous reward, there was nothing to stimulate man's inventiveness to compel nature to serve man by her own, instead of by human, forces. This could happen only when the civilization, which had acquired strength in the temperate zone, was transplanted into less friendly and colder regions, where human labor alone could no longer win from reluctant nature wealth enough to satisfy the claims of the ruling classes. Then first did necessity teach men how to employ the elemental forces in increasing the productiveness of human labor; the moderately cold zone is the birthplace of man's dominion over nature.

"But when the third phase of evolution has found its close economic justice, there will be, apparently, yet another change of scene. It might be said, if we cared to look for analogies, that this change of scene will be of a double character, corresponding to the double character of the change in institutions. The perfected control over nature will be seen in the fact that the whole earth subjugated to man, has become man's own property; on the other hand, peace and freedom which in themselves represent nothing new to mankind, but are, as it were, merely the return to the primitive relation of man to man—will find their analogies in the return to the primitive home of our race, the tropical world. That vigorous nature, which had formerly to be left lest civilization should be killed in the very germ, can no longer be a hindrance, can only be a help to civilization now that man, awaked to freedom, has attained full control over those forces which can be made serviceable to him. It will probably be several centuries before the civilized nations, whose northern wanderings and experiences have made them strangers in their birthplace, have afresh thoroughly acclimatized themselves here. In the meantime the charming highlands which nature has placed—one might almost believe, in anticipation of our attempt—directly under the equator, offer the wanderers the desired dwelling places, and, at any rate, the agriculture of the now commencing epoch of civilization will have its headquarters here. Slowly but surely will man, who may henceforth freely choose his dwelling place wherever productiveness and the charms of nature attract him, press towards the south, where merely to breathe and to behold is a delight beyond anything of the kind which the north has to offer. The notion that the torrid zone engenders stagnation of mind and body is a foolish fancy. There have been and there are strong and weak, vigorous and vigorless people in the north as well as in the south; and that civilization has celebrated its highest triumphs under ice and snow is not due to anything in chilly temperatures essentially and permanently conducive to progress, but simply to the temporary requirements of the transition from the second to the third epoch of civilization. In the future the centers of civilization will have to be sought in proximity to the equator; while those countries which, during the last centuries—a short span of time—have held up the banner of human progress will gradually lose their relative importance."

If the United States could boast an entirely frost-free region, I am aware of considerations which might make the balance of advantages dip in its favor, but such is not the case, and therefore it is scarcely the part of wisdom to locate where such enormous risks to horticulturists and planters generally are imminent. Then, the most barbarous lynching customs obtained in the southern states, and since the Mormons fall victims, how shall the advocates of freelove escape? This, with the Comstock laws, would constitute a constant source of annoyance, and perhaps prove a serious obstacle to success. Climatic consideration apart, it would thus seem evident that freedom-seekers must now turn away rather than towards the United States as heretofore; and I submit that Mexico or British Guiana, to say naught of the fascinating African continent—which is perhaps too far off for you—offer far superior opportunities, as well from the viewpoint of non-interference as climatically.

Let it not be mistakenly argued that the ease with which one's material needs are met in the tropics will tend to paralyze effort and interfere with the stimulus to progress, for man has also intellectual needs and the less imperative the former the more powerfully should the latter make themselves felt. At any rate, I have yet to learn that the hunger of the intellect, which is unappeasable, is a less effective stimulus to effort than material hunger, which, as before said, in man's natural home is so readily provided for. Depend upon it, the "great orphan" (humanity) will ever stand in need of its Light Bearers to pierce the clouds of its mental darkness and herald the dawn of a brighter day.

capped Kenia range, the highest peak of which covers an area of many hundred square miles and rises to a height of nearly 20,000 feet. I am about to visit this magnificent glacier-world, which the Uganda Railway now tops, and shall be pleased to give information about the district to those who care to write for it. A. W.

A Philosophical Parting.

BY THOMAS LEES.

I recently cut an item out of "Plain Dealer," thinking it would illustrate one phase of the marriage question. It was in reference to the separation of Mr. and Mrs. Rumsey. He was a boxer—policeman, and manager Turkish bath establishment. On the day of their separation he took a reporter to his home, introduced him to Mrs. Ramsey, and said:

"I just brought you round here to witness our parting, we've lived together as man and wife for fifteen years and got along much better than the average married folks. We find now we can't agree on many points—so we have agreed to part—there is no divorce business about this, we are just sawing off and parting good friends, ain't we my dear?"

"That's it," said Mrs. Ramsey, "he is going his way and I am going mine."

Just here the carriage arrived for her trunks. They wished each other good-bye, and off she went, saying:

"Come and see me sometimes, dear."

"I will," said he, and gone she was with a "loving smile."

Turning to the reporter Mr. Ramsey said. "There goes the finest woman in Ohio, and one of the very best women I ever met, if I'm any judge and I think I am."

"There," said he to the reporter. "Ain't that better than finishing up in a divorce court? You see, pard, we couldn't just agree sometimes, so we just sawed off, and that's all there is to it. Tell your readers, that Mr. and Mrs. Ramsey have separated and parted good friends" here a tear glistened in his eye, "that's all—just sawed off you know. Good bye."

It seems to me Mr. and Mrs. Ramsey showed themselves good philosophers. This common sense separation may prove a good object lesson, to inharmonious wives and husbands of this city, and others who hear of it.

"Lucifer or Light-Bearer—Which?"

For some weeks past our pages have been the forum, the arena, upon which, or in which the question of name has been pretty freely discussed. The first, the longest and most elaborate article on the subject was written by H. B. Monroe, and was printed in number 785. Believing that this discussion would do no harm and might be productive of much good, I have encouraged it, partly by my own silence, and partly by a few words of approval.

And now, having, freely granted to others—especially to those who favor a change of cognomen—the right and privilege of saying their say in their own way, I presume there will be no protest if I should take my turn and occupy at least an equal share of space in giving my views upon this mooted question.

It has perhaps been noticed that most of those who have given voice to their thought have favored a change. Whether those opposing a change have refrained from speaking because they inferred by my silence or from the few editorial remarks, that the editor would himself prefer a change, I know not, but I think it probable that such is the case. More than one of those who have written against change have asked that their letters be not published.

Desiring above all things to be judicially fair and just to all I have tried, for the time, to put myself in the place of the various writers, and to consider that each is governed by no other motive than a sincere desire to help onward the work to which our paper has been mainly devoted ever since its first appearance in the journalistic field.

* * *

First, then, let me say: The name Lucifer is a scientific term, while the name Light-Bearer is not. The latter is simply a translation of a scientific term into the common vernacular.

2. By common consent of those who devote their lives to scientific pursuits, all, or nearly all scientific terms are drawn from the Latin language—or from the Greek, which is the mother of Latin. It is scarcely correct, then, to call the Latin a "dead" language, since without it the live sciences of to day would be without a nomenclature in which to clothe themselves.

3. To be consistent, those who object to Lucifer because it is a Latin term, should discard also nearly all the scientific terms in common use. The word science itself—scientia, with a very little change in spelling—is a purely Latin word. The same of the words philosophy, astronomy, religion, morality, socialism, rationalism, reason, nature, nation and thousands more that we would find it very hard to get along without. To my thinking it would be simple truth to say that Latin is the body of the English language, while Saxon, Celtic etc. are its limbs. Why then object to Latin, or call it a foreign or a dead language?

4. The objection that "Lucifer the Light-Bearer" is tautological, is a valid objection; and it has often occurred to me that it was about time to drop the vernacular definition, retaining only the scientific cognomen. The definition was tacked on at first only as a concession to popular ignorance. But after so many years of definition and explanation, is it not time to let the scientific cognomen stand alone? stand erect in conscious strength, without support from the vernacular, the unscientific synonym?

5. Science is "star-eyed." The light emanating from its radiant orbs pierces the mists and fogs of superstition and ignorance, in the moral, the psychic, as well as in the physical universe. Science pays no attention to passion or prejudice except to annihilate them by its cold and colorless rays.

6. Modern science is heir to all the treasures of the past, whether of terminology or of anything else, and science would simply stultify itself; it would deny its high and honorable pedigree; it would renounce its character and mission if it should now refuse or neglect to use any word, any name, simply because our ignorant and bratish ancestors had made an unwise, an unworthy use of such word or name.

7. Modern science takes all the facts, all the fancies, all the legends and fables, all the forms and images of the past—analyzes them, resolves them into their component elements, and like a wise agriculturist, makes use of them all. When the friction match was invented science gave it the name "Lucifer match," because it brings light where darkness reigned, just as Lucifer—"Star of the Morning," brings, or heralds, the light of day.

8. Science shows that the names devil, demon, etc., convey bad thoughts only to ignorant minds, and it should be noted that these words themselves furnish the theme, the occasion for dispelling such ignorance. Thus: The "Demon" that Socrates tells us of was his best friend, warning him of danger ahead. Historical science shows that the word "devil" has in all the past been associated, (even in the minds of the ignorant and superstitious) with the idea of superior knowledge. Hence, when any man or woman became wiser than their fellows they were at once accused of being "in league with the devil,"—witness Roger Bacon, Faust, and many other benefactors of their race.

9. Historical science shows that even Eusebius, the Popes of Rome, John Milton and other ignorant bigoted, fear-dominated or fancy-crazed theologues, have not really tarnished or sullied the grand old name Lucifer. It shows that in adopting from astronomy the name Lucifer, as the cognomen of their chief hero,—the leader of revolt in heaven,—they gave him the honor of being the first reformer, the first revolutionist or rebel against the slavery of despotic authority, and that without the example and teaching of their "prince of devils" mankind might never have known "good and evil," might never have had the blessings of liberty, of progress, of civilization and enlightenment.

10. Lucifer, then, whether associated with a "demoniacal" history, or whether representing a purely astronomical idea—"Herald of the Dawn"—has always been the synonym of light against darkness; the symbol of the natural and reasonable as against the unnatural and unreasonable; of liberty against slavery; of science against tradition and superstition; of progress as against stagnation or retrogression, and therefore, as it seems to me, no better name than Lucifer can be found for a paper that champions liberty for all the inhabitants of earth, and especially liberty in that most important of all human relations, the reproductive, the love relation; a paper that champions the right of all to equal opportunity to use the blessings, the resources of mother earth, and that champions the right of all to equal opportunity to be born with the best endowment possible for bearing the burdens and fighting well the battles incident to this our mortal life.

* * *

It seems to me that just here the argument for the defense might rest the case, but there are other considerations that demand our attention.

I do not need to tell my readers that the power of association in ideas is very great. For the space of nearly two decades Lucifer has stood as the synonym, the embodiment, of freedom of speech, freedom of press, and for untrammeled intercommunication by means of the public mails, and especially for the freedom of woman to own herself—for the right to choose and to refuse in the domain or realm of creative energy. With these ideas Lucifer has become so closely identified, so nearly allied, that divorce seems now impossible. No other name, not even the weak dilution,—the second or third infusion.—The "Light-Bearer," can ever adequately represent to the mind of the reader what Lucifer now represents—what Lucifer stands sponsor for in the world's great arena of conflicting ideas. The battle for free womanhood and free motherhood without the name Lucifer would to my thinking be much like the "play of Hamlet with Hamlet left out!"

Again: I do not need to tell my readers that in every reform movement, every radical or revolutionary movement there are at least three distinct stages.

First, we have the iconoclastic stage; the fearless stage; the logical stage; the uncompromising stage; the stage of unselfis

(Continued on page 372.)

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper which has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

We have received a great many more replies to the question of the change of name than we could possibly print. Such evidences of interest in the welfare of the paper are more gratifying to us than we can express. The opinion of the editor will be found in this issue. The first part was written for last week's paper; but it reached us too late. Those who write in regard to his suggestion of a magazine Lucifer will favor us if they will write their opinions on sheets separate from other business. This request is made in order that regular business letters may be filed away and matter in regard to magazine may be forwarded to the editor. I hope that responses will be prompt as possible. The end of the year is swiftly approaching.

James P. Morton, Jr., will deliver an address on "What Liberty Means" at Workingmen's Hall, 368-370, West Twelfth st., on Friday evening, Dec. 1. On Sunday, Dec., 3., at 3 p. m., he will speak on "The Warfare for Religious Liberty" for the Social Science Club, 913 Masonic Temple. Mr. Morton will deliver other lectures during his stay in Chicago. Dates and subjects will be announced later. Mr. Morton is well qualified in every way for the promulgation of radical ideas. His communications for Lucifer, though few in number, have been thoughtful and valuable, and those who have heard him say his public speaking is up to the standard of his writing.

PROSPECTUS

Of the Life History of Moses Harman.

I. Ancestry. Early Life and Struggles to get an Education.

II. "Travels in Faith." From Methodism to Universalism and thence to Rationalism.

III. Experiences as a Heretic and Abolitionist in a Slave State—Religion, War and Politics.

IV. Experiences as Teacher, Preacher and Magistrate—or "Justice of the Peace."

V. Experiences in Journalism—A Ten Years' Fight in the Courts. Reflections on our Judiciary, State and Federal.

VI. Prison Experiences. A "Third Term." Letters from and to the Prisoner.

VII. Reflections on Prison Discipline. "Crimes Against Criminals."

VIII. The Movement for Freedom of Womanhood and Motherhood, and for the Right of Children to Be Born Well.

IX. Relation of this Movement to All Other Reform Movements.

X. Present Outlook for this Movement. "Duty of the Hour."

This book will comprise about four hundred pages; printed on good paper, new and clear type and good binding, with portrait of the author and of his daughter and helper, Lillian Harman. Price one dollar. Life and health permitting, the book will be ready for delivery to subscribers on or before June first, next. Subscriptions solicited, so that we may know how large an edition to issue.

"The Non-Sectarian," printed in No. 788, should have been credited to J. C. Buchanan instead of to Miss Seabury. We have had to make several such corrections, recently, owing to the matter having been sent to us with names other than the author's attached. We hope our friends will be more careful in the future.

"Lucifer or The Light Bearer—Which?"

(Continued from page 371.)

sacrifice of expediency or of merely personal considerations to the good of the race at large; the stage or era of poverty, of obloquy, of persecution and of ostracism.

Then comes the stage or era of partial success, of compromise; the era when the reformers grow tired of conflict and long for peace—peace at almost any price. The era when success being reasonably certain, the temptation to hasten success by a little concession, a little yielding or bending of principle, become well nigh irresistible; in short, the era of pandering or catering to the conservative elements—the "respectable," the wealthy, the cultured elements of human society.

Then speedily comes the third stage, the era or stage of organization into a creed or sect; the era of respectability, the era of ossification; of atrophy; of conservatism; of reaction; of, decay and death as a factor in the world's progressive thought.

Is it possible that the movement for freedom of womanhood and of motherhood has already reached the second of the stages just described? and is the demand for dropping the name Lucifer the first positive indication of that fact? Will not the change from an unpopular but scientific name to one more popular, more respectable, but less scientific, be so regarded? And if not so intended by the promoters of the change, will not such change insensibly have just that effect on the movement?

If a desire to enter the ranks of respectability lies at the bottom of this demand for change of name, and if the demand be yielded to, then we may as well let "Ichabod" be written upon our gates—"The glory of Israel has departed." Speaking for myself alone, I would much rather have the "smell of brimstone" on my garments than the slightest taint of "respectability"—in the common and popular sense of that word. For to me to be respectable is to be "law-abiding." To be law-abiding is to surrender independent manhood and womanhood and be governed by the opinions of others. To be respectable is to suppress one's convictions, one's innermost thoughts, for fear of what "they will say." It is now and always has been respectable for men and women—especially the latter—to prostitute their bodies in loveless marriage, rather than live a free, unconventional life, with no tie but that of love to bind. It is now and always has been respectable to prostitute one's mind or soul,—in business, in politics, in religion, as well as in social or sexual life. It is now and always has been respectable to rob and murder, by wholesale,—as in wars,—and by retail, as in our treatment of the weak or misguided, called criminals, or of those in advance of the time,—providing that the robbery and murder is done according to laws made by the robbers and murderers themselves, or by their equally guilty ancestors.

It is respectable to worship gold; it is respectable to be a millionaire and to live in pomp and splendor upon the earnings of others. It is respectable to be "patriotic" and to be patriotic means to sanction and support government of man by his fellow man, and to deny the right to do as we will so long as we invade not the equal right of others. I therefore repeat and would continue to repeat the question, Has the movement for freedom of womanhood and motherhood reached the stage when it desires alliance with the respectable classes of human society?

Again: The demand for dropping the name Lucifer appears to be largely inspired by fear—fear either because of its probable effect upon the business or social standing of the person making the demand, or fear lest the name will repel others from subscribing or from accepting the teachings of the paper, and thereby injure the work to which it is devoted.

To this I would briefly reply by asking: Is fear a commendable motive or rule for human action, or non-action? The motto of the old world champions of "chivalry" was sans peur et sans reproche—"without fear and without reproach." Could a better motto than that be selected for the champions of the newer and better chivalry,—the real chivalry of which the old was only a prophecy, only a caricature?

"Hew to the line, let the chips fly where they will," is another good motto. The true reformer "is willing to sink," not only half but all of his reputation,—his respectable standing—for the "freedom to think, and to speak" his innermost thoughts; "not caring what vengeance the mob has in store," whether that mob comes armed with clubs, with tar, feathers or fagots, or whether it comes armed with a sheriff's warrant or with court decisions and learned legal precedents.

Again: While a larger audience, or a wider hearing, is very desirable, a large paid-up subscription list for our paper is not the most important of considerations. A large army is often an element of weakness rather than of strength. The story of Gideon with his handful of men putting to flight the hosts of Midian, and the story of Leonidas, with his immortal three hundred, holding at bay for a whole day one of the largest armies ever seen on this planet—whether real history or simply "sun-god" myths, does not matter—these stories convey a lesson of deep significance to all who would change the currents of the world's thought.

Once more; I have avoided making my remarks personal, and prefer not to do so now, but inasmuch as Brother Monroe seems to lead the movement for dropping the name Lucifer, I will briefly allude to a few only of his points. In his first paragraph he says, "the time seems ripe for a more aggressive, more concerted and broader campaign in the interest of the new humanity." I fully agree with our good brother in this and because of this agreement I oppose dropping the name Lucifer. The change suggested by him, would to my thinking indicate that our campaign in the future is to be less aggressive than in the past, whereas dropping the definition Light-Bearer would indicate that we are to be more aggressive and less compromising. As to "broader," I would ask, what can possibly be broader or more comprehensive in significance than "Star of the Morning"—the Herald that ushers in the new day—the era of enlightenment—of real civilization, with all its imagined and unimagined possibilities? Compared with this emblem, the term Light-Bearer is narrow, is indefinite, is tame and uninspiring.

As to being "ruled by the tomb," and calling Lucifer a "galvanized corpse with the grave clothes of a long buried goddess upon it," the image thus conjured up is fantastical and wholly untrue—as I read history and mythology. Lucifer never was a fabled goddess," but was and is a live and real truth, as live and real now as in the days of the earliest astronomers who applied this name to the Morning Star. To associate Lucifer with Venus, a fanciful creation of a much later date in the world's history, is decidedly unscientific, as I view the matter.

As to the name Lucifer being "misunderstood by the uneducated"—the class we wish to reach—I reply first, there is no better text than Lucifer itself, no better way to educate the uneducated, than to show them how they have been deceived in regard to this word, by their theologic teachers. Show them that they have been the simple dupes of designing leaders, or that they have been blind and led by the blind.

As to the best way of reaching the uneducated masses, there is much honest difference of opinion. As some one has said, the masses do not think for themselves. They simply cannot think, logically and clearly. They must depend mainly on others to do their thinking for them. They can feel, but cannot reason. The best way then, is try to reach them by the force of example. To do this we must appeal to those who are already out of the clutches of superstition sufficiently to think for themselves on the questions that Lucifer treats of. That is, we must make our main efforts with the educated, and partly emancipated, rather than with the uneducated masses.

In conclusion for this week, I wish to say that I thank all who have taken interest enough in Lucifer and its work to write to us in regard to the change of name, and hope they will not be discouraged by the great length of this article, but give it a careful and candid reading. Next week I hope to have something more to say on the same subject—in the way of a proposition, which, while not a compromise, as that word is commonly understood,—will, I hope, be satisfactory to all who have thought or spoken on this question of change of name.

MOSES HARMAN.

An Evolution—a Differentiation, an Adaptation Proposed

By way of recapitulation and for the information of those who have not seen what has been said on the name question in recent issues, I would say,

1. To me it seems much better to retain the scientific name, Lucifer, as the cognomen for our paper, and drop the vernacular term, Light Bearer, if either must be dropped.

2. To my mind, Lucifer stands—as no other word ever stood—for the "colorless light of truth," as against the murky light of creeds, of myths and of superstitions—our heritage from the ignorant and barbarous past. To me Lucifer stands, as no other word ever stood, as the personification of Freedom or Liberty; as the synonym, the embodiment, of Dauntless Courage; of high and noble daring; of unflinching or unsullied candor, the personification of love of truth for truth's sake, the synonym of naturalness and of progressive development or of evolutionary progress.

3. To my thinking, those who object to Lucifer do so because of ignorance, fear or prejudice, or because of all three of these. Not claiming to be free from these impediments to progress myself, I would respectfully ask all objectors to examine with me a book to be found in most public libraries, and even in some private collections, a book called "Webster's Dictionary of the English language," Revision of 1864, Unabridged. This work is regarded as standard authority by many good and learned people, both radical and conservative, especially by the latter. Whatever objection can be raised against it, no one has ever accused Webster's Dictionary of favoring freethought, anarchism, socialism, sex-reform or any other modern heresy.

On page 792 of the aforesaid revision of Webster's Unabridged, speaking of a certain passage in Isaiah—xiv. 12,—the only verse in the Jewish and Christian scriptures in which the word Lucifer occurs, Commentator Henderson is thus quoted:

"The application of this passage to Satan and the fall of the apostate angels, is one of those gross perversions of sacred writ which so extensively obtain, and which are to be traced to a proneness to seek for more in a given passage than it really contains—a disposition to be influenced by sound rather than sense, and an implicit faith in received interpretations."

This stinging rebuke of ignorance and bigotry, as already intimated, was administered not by a radical or heretic of any sort, but by a well known Christian author, else it would never have found a place in the dictionary compiled by such eminent Christian scholars as Noah Webster, Rev. Chauncey Goodrich, Rev. Fiske Brewer, Rev. Charles Wheeler, Prof. Noah Porter and many other learned Christian professors including one priest of the order of Jesus—a Jesuit.

Again, on page 1573 of this eminently respectable and conservative authority, is found the following quotation from Commentator Yonge:

"Lucifer is, in fact, no profane or satanic title. It is the Latin Lucifera, the light-bringer, the morning star, equivalent to the Greek phosphorus, and was a Christian name in early times, borne even by one of the popes. It only acquired its present association from the apostrophe to the ruined king of Babylon, in Isaiah as a fallen star: 'How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning.' Thence as this destruction was assuredly [or thought to be] a type of the fall of Satan, Milton took Lucifer as the title of his demon of pride, and this name of the pure, pale herald of daylight has become hateful to Christian ears."

It has often been remarked by scholars that the chief hero of "Paradise Lost" is one of the grandest of all the characters or conceptions in literature, ancient or modern; that there is nothing mean; nothing low, base or narrow; nothing malicious; nothing unworthy the highest and purest ambition, in this wonderful creation of poetic fancy. It is simply and purely a personification of noble and lofty ambition; of self-respecting independence. A personification of love of liberty, love of knowledge and love of justice. Webster says: "Wierus makes him [Lucifer] the highest officer of justice in the infernal court or empire."

When we remember what kind of justice is dispensed by the so-called celestial "court or empire;" when we recall that this court punishes the innocent for the alleged sins of others, and that countless millions of people are doomed by that court to eternal torment simply for an honest difference of opinion, or for failure to believe an absurd, an impossible dogma, we naturally infer that the court of justice in an empire the exact opposite of "celestial," would dispense justice upon a rational or common sense basis. And such seems to have been the poetic conception of that court, and of its highest officer, Lucifer.

When Christian authorities so thoroughly show up the absurdity of the prejudice against the name and character of Lucifer, is it not time for Freethinkers, Rationalists, Libertarians, Spiritualists, etc., to cease their opposition to the name given by ancient astronomers to the star apostrophized by them as the "Brightest and Best of the Sons of the Morning"?

Can any mental concept, any image drawn from nature, from history, or from fable, be more beautiful, more inspiring, more full of hope and of promise than this?

And can there be a more fitting emblem, synonym or cognomen for a reform journal than this?

* * *

These are some of the causes, the reasons, that sixteen years ago, induced Mr. Edwin C. Walker—then my very efficient partner in business, now a reform writer and publisher of New York City—and myself to change the name of our paper from the inexpressive and very commonplace "Kansas Liberal" to "Lucifer the Light Bearer." And now, with the record of these sixteen years of storm and sunshine behind us—years of mortal conflict with the forces of reaction behind us, and with the possibilities of the slowly dawning Fourth Century of the Brunonian Era before us—with the "Era of Man," the "Era of Science," upon us,—shall we now so far deny our record as to sink the unique, the characteristic, the only really scientific name our paper has ever borne? sink the name that has been so thoroughly identified with our work in all these years of conflict? sink the name that has meant so much to thousands who have bravely and unselfishly helped us, all these years to hold aloft this noble, this eminently characteristic, this grandly beautiful, this purely scientific, this poetically inspiring battle flag? And shall we retain in its place only the unscientific, the commonplace, the unhistoric, the unpoetic, the vernacular Light Bearer?

Would not such change be accepted—even by ourselves, to say nothing of the unsympathetic or hostile on-lookers—as a sign of conscious weakening? a sign of a desire for compromise if not a token of incipient surrender? With some of the readers of Lucifer—friends as well as foes, would not such change be accepted as a sign of imbecility, of senility, or of near approaching dotage, on the part of the senior editor and publisher? Would it not be hailed by the opposition as a sure omen of coming defeat, of coming decay and disintegration of the movement for Freedom of Womanhood and Motherhood?

* * *

And now, good friends all!—having at considerable length, and at the expense of some repetitions, made clear, as I hope, my reasons for wishing to retain the name Lucifer, I ask the careful attention of my readers while I briefly unfold a plan by which it is sincerely hoped all can be suited, in the matter of name.

First, let me say that the proposed plan is not a compromise, as that word is commonly understood. Compromises are usually born of weakness or of cowardice. My plan is an evolution—an adaptation, a differentiation, taking the hint from Mother Nature herself. Thus:

Modern science—physiologic science, shows us that man, the homo, was once a bisexual animal; that is, having two genders in one body. This is justly regarded as an inferior condition, a provisional grade or step, in biologic development or evolution. In course of time the upward struggle toward perfection of faculty and function made it necessary that each gender should have a separate body of its own. One of these is called the feminine, the other the masculine,—each with its distinguishing traits or characteristics; the masculine being naturally the more aggressive, the physically stronger, the more courageous, more destructive, more positive, more imperious, more severely logical and uncompromising, more materialistic and earthy.

The other, the feminine, is the more passive, more receptive, more conciliatory, more conservative or conventional, more submissive and yielding, more constructive, more intuitional, more emotional and inspirational, more spiritual and heavenly or angelic.

Hitherto in its development Lucifer The Light-Bearer has been bisexual, trying to combine all the foregoing traits or characteristics in one body. Is it not time to differentiate? to adapt itself to the demands of evolutionary progress and take to itself two bodies instead of one?

Here, then, as I think, is the solution of the difficulty in regard to name. While the human animal tried to be both masculine and feminine in one body it labored under many disadvantages, and was not a pronounced success, either as woman or man. Now with two bodies instead of one, incarnating different characters, each supplementing the other, division of labor makes success much more easy, and now human progress proceeds more rapidly, proceeds by leaps and bounds,—or at least it would do so if we would only make wise use of the lessons of experience.

So likewise, with Lucifer The Light Bearer. While trying to be both iconoclastic and constructive; both logical and intuitional or metaphysical; both aggressive and conciliatory, it has labored under many difficulties that would be largely removed if we had followed nature's teaching and adopted the unisexual form. I therefore respectfully recommend that from and after January next Lucifer and the Light Bearer take each a body to itself—each supplementing what the other lacks, each working harmoniously with the other, and both forming a perfect vehicle or agency for propaganda work along the lines of the greatest reform the world of progressive thought and action has ever known.

To this end I suggest that The Light Bearer appear weekly, as now—same size, form and price. It is large enough for a paper of short articles—easily understood by all, even the uncultured and unscientific. It is not too large to be enclosed with a short letter in a common envelope for a two cent stamp; hence very suitable for propaganda work with the uninitiated.

For longer and more elaborated articles, for learnedly scientific, and for fearlessly logical discussions, and for continued stories illustrating our principles, we need a monthly magazine; a magazine suitable for binding and for preservation in the library; suitable also for sale on the news stands and by the news boys on the railways.

In its evoluted form, as a monthly magazine, let Lucifer—whole number seven hundred and ninety-four, say, or about the middle of January next, appear with a well assorted list of short and long articles—an illustrated title page and with attractive "table of contents." Let the number of pages at first be sixty-four, or perhaps forty-eight only, of reading matter, with sixteen pages of advertisements. Then let the number of reading pages be gradually increased to one hundred or more, as paying advertisements may justify—the price being kept at one dollar per year, or ten cents per number.

For the first issue we have a number of good articles waiting—articles too long and too elaborate to be suitable for the small weekly Light-Bearer.

What say our readers to this plan? Is it possible? Is it practicable? Is it desirable?

I am quite aware that objections may be raised. I will not anticipate these by offering answers in advance, but invite a abiding interest in our work. As the time is short—if the plan is to be practicalized so early as next January I hope to have answers—short and to the point, soon. Hopefully always,

MOSES HARMAN.

Thayer, Miss., Nov. 25, '99.

What is Your Reply?

If your subscription is not paid in advance you will confer a great favor on us by letting us know whether you want us to continue sending Lucifer to you during the ensuing year. We are willing to await the convenience of those who cannot renew promptly. Furthermore, we send free to those who want the paper and are actually too poor to pay for it. In which class do you belong—

1. Those who want Lucifer and will pay at some future time?
2. Those who want Lucifer but cannot pay at all? or
3. Those who do not want Lucifer and who have no intention of ever paying?

If you belong in either of the first two named classes, is it too much to ask you to send us a card stating the fact? If in the third will you not inform, us either by card or through your postmaster, that you no longer want the paper?

It is more than ever important that we know how to classify our subscribers, as we are transferring our lists to new books and the task is a heavy one. We do not wish to waste time and space in transferring the names of those who do not want Lucifer. Neither do we desire to drop the name of even one person to whom the weekly visits of Lucifer are welcome—Shall we hear from you?

VARIOUS VOICES.

Annie E. K. Parkhurst, 173 Gates Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.:—I am receiving so many letters of kindly inquiry about Mr. Parkhurst since my letter appeared in last Lucifer, that I feel warranted in asking you to state in next issue that he is improving, and the indications are that he will regain his usual health in due time.

C. C. Fairchild, Stockton, Cal.:—I am heartily in accord with your desire to write your autobiography. I will subscribe for the same; paying fifty cents in advance. Find enclosed an additional dollar for which send me "A Cityless and Countryless World," by Henry Olerich. I hope the friends of Lucifer will subscribe freely to your proposed new book.

Mattie Day, Phila., Pa.:—Please send two copies of "Our New Humanity" in which is contained "Motherhood in Freedom." Will do all we can for Lucifer, and shall send subscription for autobiography shortly. As I grow older and more mature the importance of our work dawns on me more clearly, and it seems to me that the education of womanhood will settle most other vexed questions.

J. O'R., New York,—Please do not send any more sample copies or literature to Herbert O'R., New York. He is my son As he is only two years old the contents of Lucifer are rather too strong for him just at present. Later on he may be able to decide for himself.

[We receive large lists of addresses to which we send sample copies. It is manifestly impracticable for us to write to each person whose name appears on the lists, asking permission to forward a copy of Lucifer. The writer of the foregoing letter is a subscriber; but occasionally we receive letters from people who are not only not subscribers but who strongly object to receiving even a sample copy. But such people may easily throw the paper away, or burn it, or return it to the postman.]

Martin Nortvedt, Laurium, Mich.:—Inclosed find twenty-five cents for which send me "Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses," by E. C. Walker, and "What is Religion?" by R. G. Ingersoll. I am very glad to learn that the editor has gone south again and hope that he will find the health and rest he so well deserves. I am also glad to learn that he intends to write his autobiography and I will take one copy for myself. I will pay for the book in advance but am unable to do so until the "holidays are over." I cannot promise to get any new subscriber for next year, but will do this. If there is any one person who likes to read Lucifer and has not the means to pay for it, I will pay that person's subscription for a year.

Sada Bailey Fowler, Torresdale, Pa.—I am delighted with the responses in regard to The Life of Moses Harman, he is the Wm. Lloyd Garrison of universal anti-slavery. And now, kind friends, allow me to give a word of cheer in regard to another forthcoming book so long delayed. The manuscript of a work which answers the questions promised in "Freedom Found" is now near completion. It becomes my duty to say that for private reasons, which may sometime be explained, reasons beyond my control, make it impossible to publish the sequel to Irene although it was written long ago and I hope one day will see the light. My indulgent friends who so long have inquired and waited, now welcome for a time at least, "One" in its stead. Yes, that simple word of three letters is the appropriate name of my new book and in its solution of the love and sex problem as well as all the social and industrial problems you will find the answers promised in the sequel to Irene. Those of you who receive the descriptive circular, will I am sure respond as soon as possible, as I must obtain five hundred subscribers to insure its publication. Our good Light Bearer shall receive commission for all obtained through its shining beams. Many of you in this way can send your Christman and New Years gifts thus aiding Lucifer and Truth's cause, and cheering the heart of one who through severe toil and stern difficulties has, at last, the blest assurance of spiritual and financial success.

WOMEN and ECONOMICS,

A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women. By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Here are a few of the page headings of this remarkable work "Economic environment; The dependence of women; No inherent disability of sex; Marriage not a partnership; House service as a livehood; Motherhood and economic production-Modification to maternity; The usefulness of sex; Differentiation of sex; Sex and humanity; The peacock's tail; Sex distinctions; The eternal feminine; unreasoning devotion; Women as persons; Race-attributes and sex-attribute; The normal child; Personal profit and sex-relations; The influence of heredity; The young man and the young woman; The effect of custom: The sex relation personal; Innocence and ignorance; Marriage with independence; The increasing difficulty of marriage; Supporting one's family; Virtue and vice; The results of repression; The harm that women do; The development of love; The hope for the future; The martyr and the pioneer; The dropping of the bars; The meaning of the new woman; Motherhood in education; A criminal failure; Marriage and the family; Love's young dream; The heart and the stomach; Socializing the household industries; The stomach as a family tie; The servant wife; World-servants and house-servants; A wider maternity; Between the old and the new; "The vices of the slave;" The outgrown stronghold. Printed on strong, heavy paper; 350 pages, bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale by M. Harman, 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

A NEW BOOK by Albert Chavannes. "Magnetation, its Relation to Health and Character," contains invaluable information upon the relation of the sexes. Price, 25 cents. Address, Albert Chavannes, 308 Fourth Ave., Knoxville, Tenn.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

790.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

Books for the Holidays.

The publishers' price of the books in the following list is forty cents each. We bought them at a little less than half of that. The postage averages about four cents on each book. Half the publishers' price with postage added is twenty-four cents. We will send any book in the list, postage prepaid, for twenty-five cents, the extra cent going to pay for the work of wrapping and mailing. Send in your order at once if you want them before the holidays and the books will be sent promptly.

Every book in the list is handsomely bound in cloth and is printed in clear type on good paper. The number following the name of the book indicates the number of its pages:

Bracebridge Hall, by Washington Irving. 288. With 110 illustrations designed by Randolph Caldecott.

Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, by Lord Byron, complete and unabridged. 270.

Crown of Wild Olives, by John Ruskin. 212. Consists of four lectures on work, traffic, war, and the future of England, with an interesting appendix.

Dolly Dialogues, by Anthony Hope. 202.

Dreams, by Olive Schreiner. 128.

Lalla Rookh, by Thomas Moore, 327. With copious notes.

Master and Man, by Tolstoi. 117.

Sartor Resartus, by Thomas Carlyle, (with notes and Index.) 344.

Sketch Book, by Washington Irving. 404. This book contains the famous story of Rip Van Winkle.

Samantha at Saratoga, or Encin' After Fashion, by Josiah Allen's wife, (Marietta Holly), profusely illustrated, 372.

Tanglewood Tales, by Nathaniel Hawthorne, 284.

Readers of Lucifer

are interested in all reform movements and will find the literature treating on Science and the Occult of vast interest and great advantage.

Occult Forces,	.20
Vital Magnetic Power, by Randall	1.00
How to Mesmerize, by Coates	1.00
Natural Way to Diet,	1.00
Health Foods and How to Prepare Them,	1.00
True Silent Friend—A Key to Rapid Wealth,	2.00
How to Hypnotize—a complete manual of instruction	2.00
How to Win or Sure Secrets of Success, by Prof. L. H. Anderson. 32 pages	2.00
Ancient Magic, Magnetism and Psychic Forces,	2.00
Marvels of Magnetism and Methods Old and New,	5.00
How to Heal, by J. K. Anderson,	10.00

Catalogue free. Address, National Inst. of Science, L. K. 102, Masonic Temple, Chicago, Ill., U. S. A.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES.

By E. C. WALKER.

No man is wise enough to foresee the secondary results of any proposed restriction, and no history is copious enough to record the evils that have ensued upon denials of liberty.—George E. Macdonald.

CONTENTS:

Love and the Law,	3
The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal,	12
The Continuity of Race-Life; and Tyranny,	16
Food and Sex Fallacies, a criticism,	17
When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Variefists,	26
The New Woman: what is she? what will she be?	31
The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes,	44
Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce,	45
Love: Its Attraction and Expression,	51
Is She an Honest Girl?	53
Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts,	54
Social Radicals and Parentage,	57
Anthropology and Monogamy,	59
Love and Trust Versus Fear,	62
Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life."	61

Price 15 cents. For sale at this office.

CULTIVATION OF PERSONAL MAGNETISM.

A TREATISE ON HUMAN CULTURE. BY LEROY BERRIER.

This treatise reverses the common belief that Personal Magnetism, Life Force and Mind Force can not be cultivated and acquired. It is a Complete Course of Instructions that will enable all who possess them, to become powerfully magnetic. Price, $1. Postage, 5 cents.

Address Leroy Berrier, President Institute of Human Culture, Minneapolis, Minn.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.
This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Women in Marriage Slavery

Will find in HILDA'S HOME a story exposing the horrors of their condition as faithfully and as fearlessly as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" exposed the horrors of Negro slavery in the South. The story is more entertaining than many modern works of fiction and the plain truths it tells will find responsive chords in the aching, bursting hearts of many women who know the galling effects of marriage thralldom.

The book contains 425 pages. Price handsomely bound in cloth, $1. In paper cover 50 cents. Send in your order NOW—especially if you want extra copies for distribution among your friends.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Persons Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 20 cents. Address Moses Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. R. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 10 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage.
A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a destroyed and controlled maternity.
"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.
"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.
Sample pages free. Prepaid $1.60. Address this office.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 500 pages. Price 25 cents.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Missing Link Modern Spiritualism. By A. Leah Underhill. A book for all spiritualists and investigators. "Hear all sides, then decide." 25 chapters; 428 pages; 16 illustrations, including portraits of the Fox family. History of the Hydesville rappings, as given by eye-witnesses, the threats of mob violence; remarkable and well-attested manifestations; the "exposures" disposed of, etc. Handsomely bound in cloth. Publishers price, $1.50. On receipt of $1.27, and 13 cents for postage, we will send the book to any address.

Wanted. A woman to keep house for small family. Write J. C. Fox 86, Oakland, Illinois.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be free; must enjoy the full privilege of soliciting the love of any man, or of men, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrially."—Page 205. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CITYLESS AND COUNTRYLESS WORLD", by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 400 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races." Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III., Co-operation; Chapter IV., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, ten cts.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 48. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, DEC. 9, E. M. 299. [C. E 1899.] WHOLE No. 791

Always Someone Below.

On the lowest round of the ladder
I firmly planted my feet,
And looked up at the dim, vast distance
That made my future so sweet.

I climbed till my vision grew weary,
I climbed till my brain was on fire;
I planted each footstep with wisdom,
Yet I never seemed to get higher.

For this round was glazed with indifference
And that one was glazed with scorn,
And when I grasped firmly another
I found under velvet a thorn.

Till my brain grew weary of planning,
And my heart strength began to fail,
And the flush of the morning's excitement
Ere evening commenced to pale.

But just as my hands were unclasping
Their hold on the last gained round,
When my hopes, coming back from the future,
Were sinking again to the ground,

One who had climbed near the summit
Reached backward a helping hand,
And refreshed, encouraged and strengthened,
I took once more my stand.

And I wish—oh, I wish—that the climbers
Would never forget as they go
That though weary may seem their climbing,
There is always some one below.

—Ella Higgins, in Journal of Education.

An Incident in Marriage.

From "Jude the Obscure," by Thomas Hardy.

"We are rather a sad family, don't you think, Jude?"

"She said we made bad husbands and wives. Certainly we make unhappy ones. At all events, I do, for one!"

She was silent. "Is it wrong, Jude," she said with a tentative tremor, "for a husband or wife to tell a third person that they are unhappy in their marriage? If a marriage ceremony is a religious thing, it is possibly wrong; but if it is only a sordid contract, based on material convenience in householding, rating and taxing, and the inheritance of land and money by children, making it necessary that the male parent should be known—which it seems to be—why surely a person may say, even proclaim upon the housetops, that it hurts and grieves him or her?"

"I have said so, anyhow, to you."

Presently she went on: "Are there many couples, do you think, where one dislikes the other for no definite fault?"

"Yes, I suppose. If either cares for another person, for instance."

"But even apart from that? Wouldn't the woman, for example, be very bad-natured if she didn't like to live with her husband; merely"—her voice undulated, and he guessed things—"merely because she had a personal feeling against it—a physical objection—a fastidiousness, or whatever it may be called—although she might respect him and be grateful to him? I am merely putting a case. Ought she to try to overcome her pruderies?"

Jude threw a troubled look at her. He said, looking away: "It would be just one of those cases in which my experience goes contrary to my dogmas. Speaking as an order-loving man which I hope I am, though I fear I am not—I should say yes. Speaking from experience and unbiased nature, I should say, no. . . . Sue, I believe you are not happy!"

. . . . . .

"If I were unhappy it would be my fault, my wickedness; not that I should have a right to dislike him! He is considerate of me in everything, and he is very interesting, from the amount of general knowledge he has acquired by reading everything that comes in his way. . . .Do you think, Jude, that a man ought to marry a woman his own age, or one younger than himself—eighteen years—as I am than he?"

"It depends upon what they feel for each other."

He gave her no opportunity of self-satisfaction, and she had to go on unaided, which she did in a vanquished tone, verging on tears:

"I—I think I must be equally honest with you as you have been with me. Perhaps you have seen what it is I want to say?—that I like Mr. Phillotson as a friend, I don't like him—it is a torture to me to—live with him as a husband!—There, now I have let it out—I couldn't help it, although I have been—pretending I am happy. Now you'll have a contempt for me for ever, I suppose!" She bent down her face upon her hands as they lay upon the cloth, and silently sobbed in little jerks that made the fragile three-legged table quiver.

"I have only been married a month or two!" she went on, still remaining bent upon the table, and talking into her hands. "And it is said that what a woman shrinks from in the early days of her marriage—she shakes down to with comfortable indifference in half a dozen years. But that is much like saying that the amputation of a limb is no affliction, since a person gets comfortably accustomed to the use of a wooden leg or arm in the course of time!"

Jude could hardly speak, but he said, "I thought there was something wrong, Sue! O, I thought there was!"

"But it is not as you think!—there is nothing wrong except my own wickedness, I suppose you'd call it—a repugnance on my part, for a reason I cannot disclose, and what would not be admitted as one by the world in general! . . .

What tortures me so much is the necessity of being responsive to this man whenever he wishes, good as he is morally!—the dreadful contract to feel in a particular way, in a matter whose essence is its voluntariness! . . . I wish he would beat me, or be faithless to me, or do some open thing that I could talk about as a justification for feeling as I do! But he has grown a little cold since he has found out how I feel. That's why he didn't come to the funeral. . . Don't come near me Jude, because you mustn't."

But he had jumped up and put his face against hers—or rather against her ear, her face being inaccessible.

"I told you not to, Jude!"

"I know you did—I only wish to—console you! It all arose through my being married before we met, didn't it? You should have been my wife, Sue, wouldn't you, if it hadn't been for that?"

Instead of replying she rose quickly, and saying she was going to walk to her aunt's grave in the churchyard to recover herself, went out of the house. Jude did not follow her. Twenty minutes later he saw her cross the village green towards Mrs. Eldin's, and soon she sent a little girl to fetch her bag, and tell him she was too tired to see him again that night.

. . . . . .

He was turning away when he saw a woman looking out of the open casement at a window on the ground floor of the adjacent cottage. "Jude!" said a voice timidly—Sue's voice. "It is you—is it not?"

"Yes, dear!"

"I haven't been able to sleep at all, and then I heard the rabbit, and couldn't help thinking of what it suffered, till I felt I must come down and kill it! But I am so glad you got there first. . . . . They ought not to be allowed to set these steel traps, ought they?"

Jude had reached the window, which was quite a low one, so that she was visible down to her waist. She let go the casement-stay and put her hand upon his, her moonlit face regarding him wistfully.

"Did it keep you awake?" he said.

"No—I was awake."

"How was that?"

"O, you know—now! I know you, with your religious doctrines, think that a married woman in trouble of a kind like mine commits a mortal sin in making a man the confidant of it, as I did you. I wish I hadn't, now!"

"Don't wish it, dear," he said. "That may have been my view; but my doctrines and I begin to part company."

"I knew it—I knew it! And that's why I vowed I wouldn't disturb your beliefs. But—I am so glad to see you!—and, O, I didn't mean to see you again, now the last tie between us, Aunt Drusilla, is dead!"

Jude seized her hand and kissed it. "There is a stronger one left!" he said. "I'll never care about my doctrines or my religion any more! Let them go! Let me help you, even if I do love you, and even if you—"

"Don't say it—I know what you mean; but I can't admit so much as that. There! Guess what you like, but don't press me to answer questions!"

"I wish you were happy, whatever I may be!"

"I can't be! So few could enter into my feeling—they would say 'twas my fanciful fastidiousness, or something of that sort, and condemn me. . . . . It is none of the natural tragedies of love that's love's usual tragedy in civilized life, but a tragedy artificially manufactured for people who in a natural state would find relief in parting! . . . . It would have been wrong, perhaps, for me to tell my distress to you, if I had been able to tell it to anybody else. But I have nobody. And I must tell somebody! Jude, before I married him I had never thought out what marriage meant, even though I knew. It was idiotic of me—there is no excuse. I was old enough, and I thought I was very experienced. So I rushed on, when I got into that Training School scrape, with all the cocksureness of the fool that I was! . . . . I am certain one ought to be allowed to undo what one has done so ignorantly! I daresay it happens to lots of women; only they submit, and I kick. . . . When people of a later age look back upon the barbarous customs and superstitions of the times that we have the unhappiness to live in, what will they say!"

"You are very bitter, darling Sue! How I wish—I wish—"

"You must go in, now!"

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW. A primer of Sexual Rationalism, by E. C. Walker. A valuable compendium on Sex Ethics. Startling and scientific. Price, 10 cents.

What is "Scientific" Breeding?

In "Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses" E. C. Walker quotes from an article by Sophie Lepper, and comments as follows:

Miss Lepper continues: "Yet an ordinary farmer, unpossessed by any scientific knowledge, knows exactly how to produce the finest races of horses, cattle, pigs, etc. . . . Why should it not be possible to rear men and women on the same principles as prize animals?" Passing over, to economize time and space, the fallacious assumption that no scientific knowledge is required to produce domestic animals best adapted to conserve the interests of the stock-raiser, let us come directly to the core of the sophistry in this often-made comparison. The animals kept and "improved" by man are his property, his slaves: his desires, pleasures, and financial interests are uppermost in his thoughts; the desires and happiness of these slaves are considered by him only in so far as they affect his own. He is not concerned to produce types of animals which could survive in the struggle for existence in the uncultivated state—which would be fleet of foot to escape enemies, brave in temper and strong in body to resist aggressions, and which would give sirehood to the males best able by courage, beauty, and address to win it for themselves. In one word, for the sexual selection of the wild animals he substitutes the sexual selections of himself. The first produced organisms that survived and enjoyed for themselves; the second produces organisms that survive only to minister to his enjoyment. The difference is fundamental. To secure the results he wishes, neither females nor males are permitted to select their mates—the female may not choose the co-parent of her offspring; the male may not choose the co-parent of his off-spring. Nearly all the males are emasculated; often many of the females are treated likewise, especially when it is desired to fatten them for market. Every department of every barnyard is a harem; polygamy is the only ethical and social system recognized by the stock-raiser. The lambs are deprived of their tails and the sheep of their wool; goats, cows, and, in some countries, mares are forced to yield their milk to their owners instead of to their off-spring; cattle are dehorned and branded; calves are at once taken from their mothers and fed on skimmed milk artificially warmed, being either made into veal in a few weeks or continued on the milk until they are able to subsist on other foods which it suits man's convenience to substitute for the food they would secure for themselves in the wild state; the emasculated male calves are as quickly as possible converted into beeves fit for the slaughter-house, the success of the process being measured by the rapidity and consequent cheapness with which they take on encumbering flesh and fat; the emasculated male pigs and many of the females undergo a like transformation into porkers, consisting chiefly of thick layers of fat they never would have been burdened with had they or their ancestors been left in the untamed state, shifting for themselves instead of being made to minister solely to man; chickens are caponized and turkeys and other fowls are stuffed by hand; oxen, horses, and other chattels are forced to work for the common-slave master, and asses are crossed with mares to produce mules, infertile hybrids, more money-making slaves for man. And so on almost interminably. Yet Sophie Lepper asks, "Why should it not be possible to rear men and women on the same principles as prize animals?" Why, indeed! Nothing but some trifling sentiments stands in the way of the attainment of this highly desirable result. All Miss Lepper has to do is to find a few national stock-raisers sufficiently powerful to kill in the human race every aspiration for liberty, every desire for self-direction and fullest free growth, every atom of self-respect, and every impulse of sympathic fellowship. Wanted! a score or so of autocrats equipped with all needful Draconian statutes, numberless rules and regulations, with managers and overseers and stable bosses, abundance of ropes and halters, nose-rings and harnesses for work and mutilation, the caustic and knives of scientific stirpicultural slavery. The herd is about to be "improved" by the application of the "same principles" by means of which other "prize animals" are produced! And what evenly-poised, self-centered, and free beings these human hogs and mules, cattle and capons will be!

Miss Lepper says she found her health greatly improved by attention to food and the selection of that suited to her individual requirement. The averment is perfectly credible. She adds that she came to the conclusion, after some experiments on herself and others, "that the desire for sex-union was caused by unsuitable food, and had absolutely nothing to do with love." Ergo, if the first human animals had eaten only suitable food there would have been no more human animals, the race would have stopped right there. The continuance and present existence of the race is due to the fact that it has always eaten "unsuitable food." This is the real logic of Sophie Lepper's assertion. Her first mistake consists in generalizing for everybody else from her personal experience, curiously forgetting that, as she states, she attained good health by adapting her regimen to her "indivi dual requirements." That is essential in the case of each person. The inductive method is sound, but the conclusions reached thereby are valueless if our inductions are drawn from insufficient data. It is fatuous to make the experience of one or of a few the logic of life for all.

"Marriage and Morality" in Cincinnati.

"Cincinnati Enquirer."

Lillian Harman who has been commonly referred to as "the free love lecturer," spoke at the meeting of the Ohio Liberal Society last night to a large audience. It is probable that many expected to hear something salacious, but they were disappointed. The speaker confined herself solely to a discussion of the marriage relation, and a demonstration from her view point of the belief that the marriage of a man and woman without going through a civil or ecclesiastical ceremony was legal and moral. She declared when a woman promised in the marriage to love, honor and obey, and the man to love and cherish the one they took as their companion, each made a promise they might be unable, sometime, because of some circumstances, to carry out. When the time came that they could not do so it was immoral for them to continue the relations they had assumed.

Her ideal of home was a place where liberty and peace and love abides, especially liberty and peace. Under the present prevailing belief, created and fostered by the laws relating to marriage, home was too often a place of suppression.

She declared that morality never came into being through marriage. She did not believe, she said, in a double standard of morality, either in or out of marriage. It was not necessary to give a license to do what was right, and certainly not to do what was wrong, as was often the case when a marriage license was issued. This was true when a man was forced by some means to marry a woman he had wronged, and whom he would wrong again by deserting immediately after the marriage.

She told of her union with E. C. Walker, for which they were arrested. She said it was not a free love union, but a union by agreements made by each other as to the other's rights, among which were the retaining of the woman's maiden name, her property, her individuality and her absolute control over her person. She declared in regard to this union that the Court decided it was a marriage, but they must be punished for not getting married. Her declaration was really in line with what is known as a common law marriage, which Courts hold to be valid and binding, there being no ceremony.

The "Commercial Tribune" reporter said, among other things:

There were doubtless many present who expected that she would say something shocking, for she gave notice in advance that such would be disappointed, and certainly, however absurd or contrary her opinions might be, there was not a word said by her that could call for police interference, and no officer was present. Mrs. Harman also wanted it understood that the Liberal Society was in no way responsible for her opinions, which announcement seemed to please some of the members immensely.

The part of her address that she apologized for introducing was, curiously enough, the very portion that apparently interested the audience most. It referred to her "agreement" with Mr. Walker and their arrest the following day and subsequent imprisonment by a Kansas Judge. She scored the wicked newspapers for their accounts of the affair, and declared the learned Judge that sentenced her as a fool, as he almost in the same breath decided that they were married and then imposed a fine upon them because they were not married.

They had thought that they were abundantly able to make their own agreement without the aid of a priest or squire. Marriage, she said, was a personal matter, in which neither the church nor state had any business to interfere. She said her idea of home was liberty and peace rather than love. Love, she thought, had no fetters but its own, and as it freely came so freely did it go. Marriage was a mockery of morality, and at its altar she laid the burden of most of the sins of the age. There was no invariable standard of right, but acts were to be judged by their effects. Morality was a matter of circumstances, that conduct being wrong that tended to injure others or is detrimental to humanity.

At the conclusion of her remarks she was bombarded with questions, and then followed the usual open discussion. This latter was a capital mirth-provoking affair, in which gentlemen with decided accents largely participated. During the remarks of a Mr. Legowsky some one objected to his line of argument as foreign to the subject, when the speaker said that it was, and added the amiable observation that if the objector had not brains enough to see it he could leave.

A Few Opinions of E. C. Walker's New Work.

"Social Guesses" is great.—C. L. Swartz.

It is strong, keen, logical.—J. William Lloyd.

I like "Guesses" very much.—James B. Elliott.

It is so cheap for the matter it contains that almost any one would buy it if he saw it.—Mattie Day.

Your pamphlet, "Social Guesses," set me thinking. The article on page 12 is a true pen picture of nature in man.—C. Hartshorne.

I thank you for sending me your excellent book. . . . Its cheapness and its dainty character should command a large sale for it.—F. W. Burry.

I have read with pleasure "Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses," and trust you may live long to benefit humanity by publishing the truth as you see it.—R. M. Robinson.

The book is sensible and full of interest and ought to sell well. Of course it is not Dianistic, but there is more than one side to all such questions, and one must read, judge and discriminate. Thee gave Sophie [Lepper] some hard rubs.—Elmina D. Slenker.

The essays in Mr. Walker's recently published pamphlet, "Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses," are, in my opinion, of great value, and Radicals should place the pamphlet in the hands of conservative persons. I am satisfied that no man would find fault with the presentation of the matter treated in Mr. Walker's essays, even if he would not agree with the author's view.—Cyrus W. Coolridge.

Query.

To the Editor of Lucifer, DEAR SIR:—Can any of your readers tell me where "Walton Abbey" is? Is it in America? R. de Villiers in the "University Magazine," alleges of "Walton Abbey," that there has existed there for twenty years an institution for the study of child psychology, of which he is a trustee, jointly with "G. Astor Singer M. A." and another Singer, sons of the "late George Washington Singer." Is anything known in the flesh—in America—of "G. Astor Singer M. A."? Enquiries addressed to the editor of "Reynold's Newspaper" elicit no information, from correspondents or otherwise, respecting either "Walton Abbey" or "G. Astor Singer M. A." Your obedient servant,

ASTOR WALTON.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper in it has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

Up to the time of going to press we have received no manuscript for publication from the editor. In private letters he says he is feeling fairly well, and is at work on his new book. We have received orders for 426 copies of this book, up to date, and hope those contemplating ordering will do so as soon as possible. It is not necessary for subscribers to pay before the book is ready for delivery, but we want to know how many to print.

In a private letter just received, M. Florence Johnson writes that she has several calls to come west, but is not sure she will have enough to justify her in undertaking a tour. Those desiring lectures on free thought or radical social subjects, or popular entertainments, should communicate with Mrs. Johnson. I am sure she will give satisfaction. Address M. Florence Johnson, 17 W. 99 St., N. Y. City.

James F. Morton, Jr., our talented young comrade from Boston, will address a meeting of Lucifer Circle at 507 Carroll Ave., on Wednesday evening, Dec. 13. Subject, "Why Marriage is a Failure." Admission free. Friends, and others who are interested in our work, cordially invited. Take Lake Street Elevated to Sheldon, walk north two blocks to Carroll, and a block and a half west to 507. The Paulina St. cars, (which run north and south on Ashland, a block and a half west of us), transfer to the east and west running surface cars.

"If your own subscription is paid for a year in advance you may retain fifty cents for each additional subscriber which you secure for us at the rate of $1 a year." This offer has appeared in several issues of Lucifer. It was made in order to induce our friends to make an effort to send us new subscribers, we feeling confident that a large proportion of such new subscribers would continue taking the paper at the regular rate. But several people have thought the fifty cent rate applied to their own subscriptions, and have sent fifty cents as their renewal for the ensuing year. Some have sent in fifty cents as renewal for others. We are not prepared to lower the subscription price of Lucifer to fifty cents a year; but we will gladly pay liberally, either in premiums or in commissions, for new subscribers.

PROSPECTUS

Of the Life History of Moses Harman.

I. Ancestry. Early Life and Struggles to get an Education.

II. "Travels in Faith." From Methodism to Universalism and thence to Rationalism.

III. Experiences as a Heretic and Abolitionist in a Slave State—Religion, War and Politics.

IV. Experiences as Teacher, Preacher and Magistrate—or "Justice of the Peace."

V. Experiences in Journalism—A Ten Years' Fight in the Courts. Reflections on our Judiciary, State and Federal.

VI. Prison Experiences. A "Third Term." Letters from and to the Prisoner.

VII. Reflections on Prison Discipline. "Crimes Against Criminals."

VIII. The Movement for Freedom of Womanhood and Motherhood, and for the Right of Children to Be Born Well.

IX. Relation of this Movement to All Other Reform Movements.

X. Present Outlook for this Movement. "Duty of the Hour."

This book will comprise about four hundred pages; printed on good paper, new and clear type and good binding, with portrait of the author and of his daughter and helper, Lillian Harman. Price one dollar. Life and health permitting, the book will be ready for delivery to subscribers on or before June first, next. Subscriptions solicited, so that we may know how large an edition to issue.

"Once upon a time," long ago, a correspondent of Lucifer made a statement in which the clause "in spite of," was used. In a following number, another correspondent quoted him as saying because of. I inserted a foot note, pointing out the error in quotation, and expressing my opinion that "because of," and "in spite of," were directly opposing statements. I signed the foot note "Comp." as I was the compositor who set it, and I was not the editor. But the correspondent whose quotation was called in question, was very indignant, denying that there was any essential difference, and saying that the editor had taken a cowardly advantage in hiding behind the "Comp."

I am reminded of this incident of the past by the impression made on the Cincinnati reporters—and perhaps on others—by the personal portion of my paper on "Marriage and Morality," which I read before the Ohio Liberal Society, Nov. 19. Previous to my visit the "Post" had printed a "faked" interview with the Chief of Police in which he was reported to have said that he had "stopped that young woman once before" and would do so again; also, much was said in the same paper, and had been said in other Cincinnati papers, about my "free love union" with Mr. Walker. I object to personalities in the discussion of principles. But if my personal life is to be dragged into the public prints, I prefer that the people be told the truth rather than sensational stories. For that reason, I read to my Cincinnati audience the agreement entered into by E. C. Walker and myself, thirteen years ago. I gave it as history, not as propaganda. I explicitly said that the publicly announced relation is not my ideal, yet in spite of this, it is asserted that I uphold common law marriage.

In a like manner, I gave the decision of the judge as a matter of history. I made no comment whatever on his decision, but the reporter assumed I must think him a fool.

Time and space may perhaps be more profitably occupied than in calling attention to and correcting such misapprehensions. "Marriage and Morality" will soon be issued in pamphlet form; then those interested will have an opportunity to form their own conclusions. L. H.

December Lectures.

By James F. Morton, Jr., of Boston, Mass.

Friday evenings for the Workingmen's Educational Circle. Workingmen's Hall, 368-370 W. 12th St., Cor. Waller St.

Dec. 8. Subject, "Church and State in the Past and Present."

Dec. 15.—Subject, "The Right of Private Judgment."

Dec. 22—Subject, "Socialism; Authoritarian or Libertarian, Which?"

Sunday afternoons for the Social Science Club, Hall 913, Masonic Temple, Cor. State and Randolph Sts.

Dec. 10—Subject, "The Battle for Free Speech."

Dec. 17—Subject, "Political Ideals."

Dec. 24—Subject, "The Unity of Being."

Monday, Dec. 11th, 8 p. m., for the Hull House, in the Auditorium, Cor. Halsted and Polk Sts.

Subject, "Decentralization, a Primary Factor in the Development of Modern Industry."

Tuesday, Dec. 19, 8 p. m., for the Chicago Commons, 140 North Union St., two doors off Milwaukee Ave.

Subject, "Ideal Anarchy."

Saturday, Dec. 16th. 8 p. m., for the Economic Club, at Nathan's Hall, 1565 Milwaukee Ave., near Western.

Subject, "The Hopelessness of Reform Through Legislation."

Admission Free. Discussion Invited.

For Hammond, Ind. On Saturday, Dec. 9th., 8 p. m., Mr. Morton will deliver a lecture on "The Church and State in the Past and Present." For particulars, as well as other meetings, watch the dailies.

From the Filipino Viewpoint.

BY J. H. STEPPE.

Mr. Barrett, like every other intelligent man who has come into contact with Aguinaldo, pays the highest personal tribute to him as the popular leader. Most interesting of these many tributes is that by the young Filipino, Rodriguez, now living in New Orleans, a former schoolmate of Aguinaldo. His picture of the serious student who "used to literally turn day into night" in his studies of philosophy and law at the San Juan Seminary at Manila, but good-hearted, charitable to the poor, and liked by everybody, is the picture of the boy who was the natural father of the man described by Mr. Barrett. "It was at the college that he acquired his pronounced ideas on republicanism. When he was only ten years old he started a little paper, a boy's paper called "La Republica." There was the seed of the present struggle for independence. The most touching word of this Rodriguez is this: "It cannot last a great while. The resources of the Filipinos are limited, and they will soon become exhausted. They are making a terrible mistake; but it is not due to wickedness. They are simply ignorant of this country, its resources and its policy. They imagine that the Americans want to drive them away and take their country. They are not used to dealing with honest people. You must remember they have never come in contact with anybody except the Spaniards."

Oh, the terrible irony of it! What have we done that they should not think we wanted to dominate them? What have we done to make them feel that we were "honest people?" In what single point have we shown to them our superiority to the Spaniards whom we supplanted—going to them with the appeal to fear and not to love; refusing even to confer with them as political men and brothers; proposing to them simply "sovereignty" or ruin; slaughtering more of them in four months, when they refused dumb submission to our tyranny, than Spain has done in four decades?

But is it necessary to quote messages and letters and interviews? The language of the fact is all the language necessary. Aguinaldo went to Manila and organized an army to co-operate with us on the strength of some explicit arrangement with Commodore Dewey and Consul Pratt—at a time when such a policy as the present one toward the Filipinos had never been mentioned by our government, and the only policy apparent to us was that declared by congress toward Cuba. Is it reasonable to suppose that the promised arrangement was that which, when declared in January, Aguinaldo and his people instantly denounce and take arms against? It is not reasonable.

Elective Affinities.

From "Marriage and Heredity."

How can we distinguish in a person of the opposite sex the moral qualities best fitted to make an advantageous blend with our own? The answer to this question, we imagine, is to be found in those manifestations of sympathy to which Goethe has given the name of Wahlverwandtshaften. It is customary to throw a little ridicule upon the term elective affinities, and to treat the sentiments so described as fanciful or unworthy of serious attention. The study of the subject has been left almost entirely to the poets and the novelists, who have acknowledged its importance without trying to explain it. Yet we have good reason to believe that the instinctive aversion or attraction felt by certain individuals for others is a fact of some importance in Nature's scheme. Let us see, first, what place the elective affinities have taken in literature. The most striking exposition of them is given by Goethe in his Wahlverwandtshaften,* which known to have been founded upon his own experience. Eduard and Charlotte had loved each other as boy and girl, but circumstances had parted them, and each made a mariage de convenance. Released from this by the death of their respective partners, the widower and the widow marry, in order to fulfill the dream of their youth. At the opening of the story they are happy enough, although a disparity in their natures prevents them from being entirely sympathetic. Theirs is such a union as occurs every day. Eduard has a friend called the Captain whom he invites to live with him. This arrangement is at first opposed by Charlotte, who has a presentiment of evil, but she afterwards falls in with her husband's views, more especially as she desires that her adopted daughter Ottilie shall become a member of the household. Thus four individuals are brought together under one roof—Eduard and Charlotte, who are husband and wife, and the Captain and Ottilie, who are unmarried. Conventional propriety would suggest an engagement between the Captain and Ottilie, but the elective affinities of the two couples rul otherwise. Eduard and Ottilie are violently drawn to each other and so are the Captain and Charlotte, duty in each case being brought into conflict with passion. Goethe handles the subje t with great moderation and delicacy. All the parties are restrained by social considerations, Eduard and Ottilie fretting under the tyranny of custom, and Charlotte and the Captain calmly sacrificing themselves to their sense of duty. Eduard wants a divorce, and Charlotte would gladly agree to such a step but for one unfortunate circumstance— She is pregnant for the first time. After the birth of the child matters go on as before, time exercising no healing effect upon these passion-racked natures until their bonds are broken by death.

* "Elective Affinities." This work is for sale at Lucifer Office. Price bound in cloth, fifty cents.

The Rights of the Unborn.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton in "Freethought Magazine."

Alas for the children brought up at the hearthstone where the fires of love have all gone out.

A state of half orphanage outside the home is far better than the cold atmosphere of distrust and dissension. Locke, the English philosopher, said that "every child is born into the world like a piece of blank paper, and you may write thereon whatever you will." "Nay, nay," said Descartes, the French philosopher, "the child comes into the world with all its possibilities. You cannot add one power; you can simply develop what you find there." In parental education we decide the basis of future character. Every thought and feeling of the mother's soul, her companionship, her environments, are all indelibly impressed, for weal or woe, on the new being.

Man can only contribute to the perfection of this new life by making the surroundings of the great artist as perfect as possible. The intellectual, moral and spiritual altitude of the mother at that time decides the future status of the man. She is the great factor in race building, and in the full development of all her powers we lay the corner-stone of the new civilization. Whoever seeks to degrade the mother of the race, to destroy her self-respect and self-assertion, to limit her opportunities for higher education, more liberal thought and a broader sphere of action, limits man's development and blocks the wheels of progress for the entire race.

Lucifer's Clubbing List.

	Retail Price	With Lucifer
Truth Seeker, N. Y.	3.00	3.25
" " England,	50	1.30
	50	1.55
Free Society,	50	1.25
Appeal to Reason,	50	1.25
Coming Nation,	50	1.25
Suggester and Thinker,	1.00	1.00
Discontent,	50	1.25
Cosmopolitan,	1.00	1.75
Youth's Companion,	1.75	2.40
Our Little Ones,	1.00	1.50
Century Magazine,	4.00	4.50
Freedom, Emeland,	50	1.10
Freedom, Washington,	50	1.25
Arena	2.50	3.25
Open Court	1.00	1.75

These prices apply only to PAID UP or new subscribers who send in the amount for both papers at the same time. If other papers, not in this list, are desired, please drop us a card and we will give clubbing rates with them.

The Old and the New.

Olive Schreiner in "Cosmopolitan."

There is indeed something pathetic in the attitude of the good old mother of the race, who having survived on here and there into the heart of our modern civilization, is sorely puzzled by the change in woman's duties and obligations. She may be found looking wistfully into the eyes of some ancient crone, who like herself has survived from a previous state of civilization, as if seeking there a confirmation of a view of life of which a troublous doubt has crept even into her own soul.

"I," she cries, "always cure my own hams, and knit the socks, and have my daughters make up all the linen by hand—we always did it when we were girls—but they object." And her old crone answers her:

"Yes, we did it, it's no doubt the right thing to do—but it's so expensive now! It's so much cheaper to buy things ready made! But, of course, it's the right thing." And they shake their heads, and go their ways, feeling that the world is strangely out of joint, when duty is no more duty.

Such women are, in truth, like to some good mother-duck who, having for years led her ducklings to the same pond, when that pond has been drained and nothing is left in it but baked mud will still persist in bringing her younglings down to it, and walks about with flapping wings and anxious quack, trying to induce them to enter it. But the ducklings with fresh young instincts, hear far off the delicious drippings from the new iron tank which has been built to catch the water higher up, and they smell the chickweed and the long grass that is growing up beside it, and absolutely refuse to disport themselves on the baked mud and to pretend to seek for worms where no worms are; and they leave the ancient mother quacking beside her pond and set out to seek for new pastures—perhaps to lose themselves upon the way, perhaps to find them. To the old mother one is inclined to say:

"Ah, good old mother-hen, canst thou not see the world has changed? Thou canst not bring the water back into thy dried-up pond! Mayhap it was better and pleasanter when it was there, but it has gone forever; and wouldst thou and thine swim again it must be in other waters." New machinery: new duties.

What is Your Reply?

If your subscription is not paid in advance you will confer a great favor on us by letting us know whether you want us to continue sending Lucifer to you during the ensuing year. We are willing to await the convenience of those who cannot renew promptly. Furthermore, we send free to those who want the paper and are actually too poor to pay for it. In which class do you belong—

1. Those who want Lucifer and will pay at some future time?
2. Those who want Lucifer but cannot pay at all? or
3. Those who do not want Lucifer and who have no intention of ever paying?

If you belong in either of the first two named classes, is it too much to ask you to send us a card stating the fact? If in the third will you not inform, us either by card or through your postmaster, that you no longer want the paper?

It is more than ever important that we know how to classify our subscribers, as we are transferring our lists to new books and the task is a heavy one. We do not wish to waste time and space in transferring the names of those who do not want Lucifer. Neither do we desire to drop the name of even one person to whom the weekly visits of Lucifer are welcome—Shall we hear from you?

VARIOUS VOICES.

T. B. Wakeman, Silverton, Ore.:—Mr. J. P. Robinson has hit the nail on the head—by all means change the name of your paper to "Aurora," not only a Light-Bearer, but the Light herself.

A. Wardall, Kansas City, Mo.:—Of course put us down for Moses Harman's book; and may he be spared to make it a No. 1 work, a monument to his life and life work. Am glad to learn of his trip south and shall be glad to hear of his health and strength improving.

Thyrza Rathbun, San Andreas, Cal.:—The "Cityless and Countryless World" is one of the most interesting books I ever read on a new industrial and social system, in fact it is one of my Bibles, and my own copy that I bought of you is out somewhere, about all the time. I thought it would be a good one to help wake up some of my folks, who, (especially my father) think I am on the downward road, with my religious views, etc.

Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville, Va.:—I want to put in my vote for the name "Aurora." I like Robinson's plea for the name. I hope it will win. He don't quote the lines quite correctly (from Pope's Homer) they should be

> "Aurora now, fair daughter of the dawn
> Sprinkled with rosy light the dewey lawn."

I hope the name "Aurora" will be accepted. I like Lucifer but am sure it injures the paper with those who are not in touch with it.

M. C., Wathena, Kan.—Inclosed find fifty-five cents for two trial subscribers to our brave, fearless little Lucifer. I must write that dear old name once more, any way. I for one regret to see it changed, though I hope it may prove for the best, and that our beloved little weekly visitor will continue on its upward flight sublime, and that its editor may be blessed with health and crowned with success as he well deserves to be. I am glad he is going to have his life experiences in book form. I will take four copies of the book at one dollar each.

Susan Swaysgood, Healdsburg, Cal.—In regard to changing the name would say, Yes, change is progress; old readers of the paper are supposed to be progressive, so they will not mind the title, but new ones, I know, wonder what sort of a paper it can be with "the devil" for a name. My financial condition does not allow of giving much help, but I take my copies of Lucifer and "Free Society" to our Public Library, in hope they may spread the light. If you write your biography I will take one copy at least, and it is a duty you owe to humanity to do so while you are able. Enclosed find $2.50, $1 to put my subscription ahead, the other $1.50 for one copy of Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Stetson's "Women and Economics."

F. C. Cotton, Olathe, Kan.:—Perhaps it will be of some interest to the readers of Lucifer to learn that a Labor Exchange Colony is being established in southeastern Kansas about seventeen miles northwest of Ft. Scott. We have an abundance of good coal, and good water, some natural gas and prospect of more—good land, building material close at hand, and market facilities convenient. The colony asks no questions in regard to any applicant's religion, politics or views on social and sexual subjects, it being understood that the association is purely an economic one. Our experience and observation in co-operation during several years of active work enable us to avoid mistakes that have occurred in the past; and to take precautions to insure the freedom of the individual. A terrible money famine threatens the nation in the near future and we are preparing a safe retreat for ourselves and friends where we can live within our own home resources until the storm is over. Don't some of you want to enter the ark before the deluge comes?

Edward C. Ranft, New Rochelle, N. Y.:—Enclosed please find $1 for Lucifer, I will send some more in a short while. There seem to be good reasons for changing the name of the paper and I think the Light-Bearer would answer as well. The reduction of the size of the sheet to one-half of the present size would also be an improvement. I think the paper has improved the last year or so. No doubt the autobiography should be written and would make a very interesting book. Are you doing anything toward starting a co-operative colony as suggested in Lucifer? I think a colony founded on freedom would be the means of doing much good. I agree entirely with Prince Kropotkin in everything he has written and consider his latest book, "Fields, Factories and Workshops," a valuable contribution to the study of sociology treating of that branch of political economy; "the economy of energy required for the satisfaction of human needs," with chapters on the possibilities of Agriculture, Education, &c. If a colony should be started in accordance with his ideas, I think it would be a great success in every way. I find few people, however, that agree with me.

C. P. H.—I imagine myself reading a paper while riding on a car. The title of this paper is "The Devil." If my object is to rule myself out of "respectable" society I will flaunt the title so all will see it and know I am thought worse than average people. But suppose I deem the paper good enough for anybody to read, and think the title is misunderstood; then I must either keep the title folded under, or make a speech in the car, explaining that Devil really means a water nymph or something harmless. This is a waste of energy. Why not give the paper a name which conveys its nature to the public in the prevailing language? For one, I hereafter refuse to circulate any paper with a misleading title. Usage gives meaning to words. Shall we accept the meanings, or twaddle about derivations? The term "free lover" is disgusting because it has come to mean unrestrained lust. Its advocates are constantly telling one another what it means, and ruling one another out of their ranks if they do not believe so and so. For instance "I" says. "So every genuine free lover must be a varietist in theory." This is nonsense. The word "free" in this connection should have only a political meaning. If the law takes its hands off love affairs, entire freedom is attained. Individuals must make their own bargains. It is sufficient that we advocate freedom; and in doing so we do not sanction or condemn any course of action. An advocate of free trade may not think he ought to trade at every store in town, or with every country. He may believe it best to "patronize home industry" but not to force others to do so. A believer in monogamy may wish to see laws regulating love abolished for the sake of freedom, yet he is not a "varietist in theory" on that account.

Flora W. Fox, Rochester, Minn.:—When meeting with good book-friends, I like to mention them to my Lucifer friends, so will first speak of Dr. J. H. Greer's new book, "Marriage, Motherhood Health and Hygiene." It is fragrant with a spicy, common sense wholesomeness not often found in such books, being concise, logical and progressive. It teaches the art of right living that goes to produce the capacity for right acting. Get it and be instructed.

The other one is a small pamphlet, author not named, but evidently written by a woman who has had a large experience and has had the audacity to express her thoughts on "The True Laws of Marriage."

I make a few excerpts: "Love is the embodiment of happiness, lasting as eternity, progressive as the soul of man (and woman), and unchangeable except to grow purer and brighter. The first marriage originated between two perfect representations of love, drawn together by the all-pervading law of attraction,—the positive and negative force,—the result being this universe revolving in space, subject to the great and governing loves who urge their offspring up the hill of progression, to ultimate perfection. Humankind as yet are in an unprogressed stage of development. The disturbances of natural action of positive and negative principles in male and female, are very often the cause of uncongeniality in marriage, inharmonious offspring and has a demoralizing effect upon humanity. Atoms of matter affected with opposite electric polarities, being brought together by mutual attraction, coalesce and enter into relations by which the affinities of the opposite become thoroughly gratified and indissolubly held together. The positive evokes and holds the negative, and the negative the positive, and this principle underlies all unions in any department of nature. Where force measures are not resorted to these will be a loving spiritual interior friendship.

"Make it as respectable to rectify marriage mistakes as others of the most trivial kind, thereby robbing Madam Grundy of the power to sting sensitive souls to death. Prostitution is the legitimate fruit of the present false relations existing between men and women. There is no escape from its ravages save in unconditional freedom to obey the divine behests in the relation of the sexes. The right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness covers the whole ground. Regard all traditions of the past as stepping stones, to help us over the rough, rugged paths of investigation of knowledge."

Lucifer has both these books for sale. As to the name being changed, I have not learned what is proposed as a substitute, so could not say. To reverse the present title, as a correspondent suggests, might be advisable, but I think if I were to edit a paper I'd stick to my own title. Not so much in a taking title, as there is in the subject matter. Every one has to sift the grains of truth through his own sieve, and let there be the utmost liberality for honest convictions of ideals or ideas as expressed by each writer. None of us have all the truth. I trust that our Moses will regain his health, and be enabled to carry on the work he has chosen.

WOMEN and ECONOMICS,

A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women. By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Here are a few of the page headings of this remarkable work "Economic environment; The dependence of women; No inherent disability of sex; Marriage not a partnership; House service as a livehood; Motherhood and economic production-Modification to maternity; The usefulness of sex; Differentiation of sex; Sex and humanity; The peacock's tail; Sex distinctions; The eternal feminine; unreasoning devotion; Women as persons; Race-attributes and sex-attribute; The normal child; Personal profit and sex-relations; The influence of heredity; The young man and the young woman; The effect of custom: The sex relation personal; Innocence and ignorance; Marriage with independence; The increasing difficulty of marriage; Supporting one's family; Virtue and vice; The results of repression; The harm that women do; The development of love; The hope for the future; The martyr and the pioneer; The dropping of the bars; The meaning of the new woman; Motherhood in education; A criminal failure; Marriage and the family; Love's young dream; The heart and the stomach; Socializing the household industries; The stomach as a family tie; The servant wife; World-servants and house servants; A wider maternity; Between the old and the new; "The vices of the slave;" The outgrown stronghold. Printed on strong, heavy paper; 350 pages, bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale by M. Harman, 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

A NEW BOOK by Albert Chavannes. "Magnetation, its Relation to Health and Character," contains invaluable information upon the relation of the sexes. Price, 25 cents. Address, Albert Chavannes, 308 Fourth Ave., Knoxville, Tenn.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint: A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25 cents to 15 cents, for sale at this office.

THE BALLAD OF READING JAIL.BYC. 3.3.

This powerful poem of more than 600 lines, is the work of OSCAR WILDE C. 3. 3 having been the poets prison number during his confinement in Reading Jail. It is dedicated to the memory of a trooper of the Horse Guards who was hanged in the jail at that time, and it depicts the terrible sensations of the author and his fellow prisoners before and after the execution.

Just issued; price, in cloth, blue, vellum back, beautifully printed from large type on hand-made antique paper, deckle edges; reading matter on one side of the paper; a sumptuous book of 96 pages, 7 inches by 5, $1. In paper, 44 pages, 10 cents. Mailed postpaid on receipt of price, by M. Harman, 507 Carroll Avenue, Chicago.

791.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

Books for the Holidays.

The publishers' price of the books in the following list is forty cents each. We bought them at a little less than half of that. The postage averages about four cents on each book. Half the publishers' price with postage added is twenty-four cents. We will send any book in the list, postage prepaid, for twenty-five cents, the extra cent going to pay for the work of wrapping and mailing. Send in your order at once if you want them before the holidays and the books will be sent promptly.

Every book in the list is handsomely bound in cloth and is printed in clear type on good paper. The number following the name of the book indicates the number of its pages:

Bracebridge Hall, by Washington Irving. 288. With 120 illustrations designed by Randolph Caldecott.

Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, by Lord Byron, complete and unabridged. 270.

Crown of Wild Olives, by John Ruskin. 282. Consists of four lectures on work, traffic, war, and the future of England, with an interesting appendix.

Dolly Dialogues, by Anthony Hope. 202.

Dreams, by Olive Schreiner. 128.

Lalla Rookh, by Thomas Moore, 327. With copious notes.

Master and Man, by Tolstoi 117.

Sartor Resartus, by Thomas Carlyle, (with notes and index.) 244.

Sketch Book, by Washington Irving. 464. This book contains the famous story of Rip Van Winkle.

Samantha at Saratoga, or Hasun' After Fashion, by Josiah Allen's wife, (Marietta Holly), profusely illustrated, 372.

Tanglewood Tales, by Nathaniel Hawthorne, 284.

Readers of Lucifer

are interested in all reform movements and will find the literature treating on Science and the Occult of vast interest and great advantage.

Occult Forces,	.30
Vital Magnetic Power, by Randall	1.00
How to Mesmerize, by Coates	1.00
Natural Way in Diet,	1.00
Health Foods and How to Prepare Them,	1.00
The Silent Friend—A Key to Rapid Wealth,	2.00
How to Hypnotize—a complete manual of instruction	2.00
How to Win or Sure Secrets of Success, by Prof. L. H. Anderson, 352 pages	2.00
Ancient Magic, Magnetism and Psychic Forces,	2.00
Marvels of Magnetism and Methods Old and New,	5.00
How to Heal, by J. K. Anderson,	10.00

Catalogue free Address, National Inst. of Science, L. K. 119, Masonic Temple, Chicago, Ill., U. S. A.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES.

By E. C. WALKER.

No man is wise enough to foresee the secondary results of any proposed restriction, and no history is copious enough to record the evils that have ensued upon denials of liberty.—George E. Macdonald.

CONTENTS:

Love and the Law,	3
The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal,	12
The Continuity of Race-Life; and Tyranny,	16
Food and Sex Fallacies, a criticism,	17
When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varietists,	26
The New Woman: what is she? what will she be?	31
The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes,	44
Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce,	45
Love: Its Attraction and Expression,	51
Is She an Honest Girl?	53
Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts,	54
Social Radicals and Parentage,	57
Anthropology and Monogamy,	59
Love and Trust Versus Fear,	60
Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life."	61

Price 15 cents. For sale at this office.

CULTIVATION OF PERSONAL MAGNETISM.

A TREATISE ON HUMAN CULTURE. BY LEROY BERRIER.

This treatise reverses the common belief that Personal Magnetism, Life Force and Mind Force can not be cultivated and acquired. It is a Complete Course of Instructions that will enable all who possess them, to become powerfully magnetic. Price, $1. Postage, 5 cents.

Address Leroy Berrier, President Institute of Human Culture, Minneapolis, Minn.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.
This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 167 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Women in Marriage Slavery

Will find in HILDA'S HOME a story exposing the horrors of their condition as faithfully and as fearlessly as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" exposed the horrors of Negro slavery in the South. The story is more entertaining than many modern works of fiction and the plain truths it tells will find responsive echoes in the aching, bursting hearts of many women who know the galling effects of marriage thralldom.

The book contains 425 pages. Price handsomely bound in cloth, $1. In paper cover 50 cents. Send in your order NOW—especially if you want extra copies for distribution among your friends.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Persons Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 20 cents. Address Moses Harman, 167 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. E. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controuled maternity.

"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.

"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.

Sample pages free Prepaid $1.60. Address this office

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Missing Link Modern Spiritualism. By A. Leah Underhill. A book for all spiritualists and investigators. "Hear all sides, then decide." 23 chapters; 478 pages; 16 illustrations, including portraits of the Fox family. History of the Hydesville rappings, as given by eye-witnesses, the threats of mob violence; remarkable and well-attested manifestations; the "exposures" disposed of, etc. Handsomely bound in cloth. Publishers price, $1.50. On receipt of $1.27, and 13 cents for postage, we will send the book to any address.

Wanted. A woman to keep house for small family. Write J. C. Box 59, Oakland, Illinois.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be free; must enjoy the full privilege of soliciting the love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrially."—Page 265. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A Cityless and Country-less World," by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 400 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office. FREE!

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races." Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III., Co-operation; Chapter IV., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, ten cts.

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 49. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, DEC. 16, E. M. 299. [C. E 1899.] WHOLE No. 792.

The Birth of a Child.

It came with the throat of a waning moon,
And the wail of an ebbing tide;
But many a woman has lived for less,
And many a man has died.
For life upon life took hold and passed,
Strong in a fate set free,
Out of the deep, into the dark,
On for the years to be.

Between the gloom of a waning moon,
And the song of an ebbing tide;
Chance upon chance of love and death
Took wing for the world so wide.
Leaf out of reaf is the way of the land,
Wave out of wave of the sea;
And who shall reckon what lives may live
In the life that we bade to be?

—William E. Henley.

Sick and in Prison.

"Oh for some lightening of these days of gloom!
Is there no strife
Where he who hates his life
May cast it from him and make good his doom?"

Stifled, lethargic, in her prison of ease,
The drooping soul
Dreams of splendid goal
Toward which the races pant, the wreath to seize.

Bound in strong fetters that herself hath wrought,
She may not rise;
Yet, restless, yearns and sighs
For larger air, for stress of toil and thought.

Up through her window comes at times the sound
Of marching men,
Or joyous shout as when
They laid the leader whom their hearts have found.

Then moans the soul, with feebly falling tears
Of helpless woe,
Longing to rise and go,
But with no strength to burst the bonds of years.

Joy to the warrior struck down in the fight!
Alas! for those
Who strive not nor repose,
Not their's the Day, nor their's the cool of Night!

—E. Ritchie, in Conservator.

Notes and Queries.

BY EDGAR D. BRINKERHOFF.

England, Russia, Germany, France, Austria, Italy and the United States have been called anarchists, but this is a mistake. They have always controlled one another informally, which is conduct as unbecoming an anarchist as formal government would be. Nor have the Great Powers altogether avoided formal government among themselves. The European Concert has not always confined itself to the restraint of the aggressor. Now that the Hague conference establishes a world's formal government that has come to stay, we shall hear no more of the analogy between independent governments and anarchists' When the powerful states shall have gobbled up the four quarters of the unappropriated earth, the chief cause of international wars will be removed. The central congress will have no trouble in keeping peace among the states. National feeling will subside. National governments will not feel the necessity of naturalizing everything within reach as the Czar has begun to Russianize Finnland Industrialism will succeed militarism. Then what? A contest between labor and the capitalist class everywhere. One government will feel disposed to help another put down its labor class. Query. On which side will be found the federal governing power at The Hague?

* * *

It is an error to assume that each woman must necessarily be her own housekeeper, nurse-maid and wage-earner, at the same time. To get rid of wage-earning, she must allow a man to earn wages for her. To get rid of the duties of housekeeper or nurse-maid she may resort to co-operation. Several ways are open. A mother may club with others in taking a house together, some acting as housekeepers others as nurse-maids. Or she may hire. Or she may exchange services with members of her own family, assisters, cousins or aunts. Some of these methods smack of collectivism, others of individualism; but co-operation constitutes just as prominent a feature in each one as in any of the others.

* * *

The increase of insanity in some of the newer states has been laid at the door of woman suffrage. This ridiculous conclusion is only one more example of the habit of assuming to be a cause something which has none of the qualities of causality except priority in time. The corrective for this species of error is the scientific habit of mind. A systematic knowledge of nature at first hand leads to the power of reasoning from effects back to real causes. Our political and other social problems must be attacked from the standpoint of the scientist. Teach science in primary schools. As nothing can be expected from the public schools, water rising no higher than its source, repeal the laws against private schools and see what they can do.

* * *

The American people did an inappropriate thing in presenting Admiral Dewey with a home: for in the nature of things a home of one's own is a burden to a man. He cannot take care of it himself, and his wife becomes a mere servant if she assumes the management of what does not belong to her. The Admiral sensed this and gracefully transferred the property to the one he loved. If Mrs. Dewey had simply accepted the gift, the whole would have presented a beautiful transaction. The nation feels that there is something wrong, but it has not yet realized that the only inconsistent step taken was the last, when the home was put into the hands of Dewey's son. What has this young man to do with the victory of Manilla? He is not even an infant needing the Admiral's support. He must either convey the house to his wife or give it back to his step mother. Let him return it, and let givers of homes discern the impropriety of presenting a home to a man as they already perceive the incongruity of donating a factory or bank to a woman.

That the law regards a wife as worth her keep and that of the children seems to be indicated by the fact that it lays the burden of support upon the shoulders of the man. That men regard a wife as worth this price is evident when they voluntarily accept the burden. It is not difficult to account for this market price of wives. Services might command no price if there were no loss or injury to the performer, but cost or loss or injury does exist in the case of women who serve as wives. And note that, as market value is not determined by the cost or damage in each instance but by the loss or cost generally attending the performance of a service, so the price of a wife arises not from the losses or injuries in each particular case but at least in part from the general cost or injury to which women are liable when they perform the duties of wives. Carrying the application a little further, the query arises whether a woman who is intimate with a man is not improvident and irrational in hesitating to ask him for financial assistance, for though she may receive no injury yet women do generally receive injury. A physician cures his patients at very little immediate cost but he is entitled to a large fee because of the cost of preparing himself to be in readiness to serve patients. The price that wives bring in the market may also be accounted for in part by the excess of demand arising from the circumstances that men are more amorous than women. If maternity were no injury, women would still be sought for as wives, but the law would not fix so high a price.

* * *

Without ideals we do not know what to do next, and, if we leap, we leap in the dark. Whenever one has any reason to doubt the correctness of his ideal, let him stop and find out whether to amend it rather than risk a move in the wrong direction.

Morrisville, Pa.

Stick to Lucifer.

BY E. C. WALKER.

It seems to me that Mr. Harman's reasons for favoring the retention of the name, "Lucifer," are unanswerable. To change the name is to surrender, and it is to seriously lessen the value of the property. But to change the name of the weekly and keep Lucifer for only a monthly, which is not born, is no less surrender and would no less decrease the value of the good will of the publication. The weekly would still be the best-known representative of the firm, while the monthly Lucifer would be read chiefly if not wholly by the "seasoned" radicals who could afford to take two papers.

Besides, it is more than doubtful if there is money enough in the "movement" to keep two papers in one city afloat. You already have twice tried the experiment and failed. "Our New Humanity" went to the wall in less than two years (counting by issues) and the "Library" in much less time. Failures of that sort in due time begin to have accumulative bad effect and this bad effect would extend to the milk-and-water-designated weekly.

By all means retain "Lucifer" as the name of one strong paper. If you must find a place for certain long articles, issue a quarterly "Lucifer Library," which you will not be under any contract to keep to a certain size. Expand or contract its volume as your time and money or lack of time and money dictate. Or, better still, print supplements now and then, uniform in size with Lucifer and which can be bound in with it at the close of each year. You can print as large editions as you wish of each supplement.

One paper, "Lucifer," with uniform-size supplements as you can get them out; that is not surrender, it is not crippling business by changing trade-marks in mid-career, and it provides for the printing and preservation of good long articles.

Stick to "Lucifer." "In this sign conquer."

Instead of that insane cry of sham patriotism, "Our country right or wrong," Carl Schurz gives forth this wise watch-word of true patriotism: "Our country—when right to be kept right; when wrong to be put right."

Observations.

George Macdonald in "Truthseeker."

With a candor uncommon to authors, Monsieur Zola has told the father of a young person that he does not write books for girls. This is indeed unusual. Most literary men would defend their product as not only adapted to the uses of the female seminary but essential to the perfect happiness of all its inmates. I trust that Zola's bold stand may do something toward mitigating the tyranny of the June filly, as girls are called in this country. She has too long been the censor of our reading matter. A great many people think that nothing should be printed or exposed for sale unless it fits the immature female person, as they fear she may read it to her detriment. No books are to be made in men's sizes. And yet tailors manufacture men's trousers and hang them in their windows, where they are permitted to remain, with no thought, save perchance in the mind of Mrs. Grannis, of the risk that some young thing susceptible to such influences may buy and wear them to the peril of her pudicity.

The editor of the "Torch of Reason" has made a discovery. He finds that people who do not wish him well are accustomed to employ against him the terms of detraction most effective with to those whose ears they are addressed. To the pious he is represented by his opponents as an Infidel (and of this he cannot complain); while before the social conservatives he is held up as a free lover and before the friends of government as an anarchist. I can well believe this to be so. During all of the twenty-four years that have elapsed since I began taking observations of Liberal affairs the epithets "anarchist" and "free lover" have been kept in the air, projected thither by the enemies of progress, and having conspicuous Freethinkers for their target. Mr. Hosmer as the editor of an anti-religious paper and president of a Liberal University is bound to be a mark. At even so inconsequential a person as myself anarchist and free-lover were once directed, and I believe it was the "Torch of Reason" which aimed the fatal stab. That being the case, Mr. Hosmer should be able to analyze the motive of those by whom he is similarly soaked.

I am pleased to see, from Heston's picture this week, that he is awake to the dangers which threaten our institutions if Roberts is admitted to the House of Representatives. The issue, brethren, is between the wife singular and the wife plural. The voice of the American woman has said that one wife is enough, and the American man has often thought that it was too much.

Polygamy may fasten itself on our fair land for a time, but there are two reasons why it must ultimately perish. In the first place it is not customary (i. e., it is immoral), and in the second place it cannot stand competition with monogamy. As a business proposition, polygamy offers no advantages, and it imposes responsibilities that do not attend monogamic marriages. The men who are to unseat Roberts will do so believing that the man lacks ordinary horse sense. They will say to themselves: "When an honorable gentleman has a woman to keep his house and can find one in every port if he is away from home, what more does he want?" Think of the points Roberts could get from just a common scrub of a Methodist parson. And they will exclude that member from the house because they cannot understand him. And, for a fact, he is not easily comprehensible; since a system which gives several women a hold on a man has no chance against that which is satisfied when he acknowledges one of them. It was a polygamist in principle who said: "Do not put all of your eggs in a single basket," but Pudd'nhead Wilson came on earth to instruct us to assemble our whole stock inside one piece of wicker-work, and to watch that basket.

Under monogamy a member of Congress may have several women, but only one woman has him. Under polygamy they all have him. Can a member who is so reckless of his own liberty be fit to legislate for a free people? Roberts must go.

Love in Freedom.

E. C. Walker, in "Our Primitive Social Guesses."

Whatever may be called love, if it does not depend upon personal liberty, unbought choice, and mutual desire, is not love at all. Love perishes in the dense and poisonous atmosphere of force. Chains murder it. Inalienable individual initiative, i. e., perpetual freedom of choice, the opportunity to rectify mistakes, the absolute and undisputed right of woman to control her person—these are the chief affirmations of the Free Love declaration of principles. Motherhood is as honorable without as it is within marriage, but mothers and fathers alike are censurable if they bring into the world more children than they can support and educate properly; and no man or woman should become a parent when his or her physical condition is such as to render it probable that the child will not be dowered with health and mental vigor. But this by no means implies that it would be wise to put the selection of parents or the determination of the number of the children into the hands of specialists of any profession or municipal or state boards of any kind. On the contrary, such an attempt to solve social problems would plunge us still deeper into immediate practical difficulties, being simply the extension and intensification of existing methods of guesswork and invasion. It would lead to the grossest abuse of itself, itself an abuse of power, for no man nor no class of men can safely be trusted with such control of the happiness and lives of others. The custodians of authority never fail to magnify their office. It would disastrously ignore some of the most delicate and subtle yet most pervasive and powerful forces that make for human happiness and growth. What is needed is frank and fearless treatment of sexual matters, with economic comfort. With these, and liberty, the way is open for the coming of better and better children.

Liberty and responsibility are inseparable. Be honorable, be just, be kind. Depend upon yourself, not upon the law. It is your right to love all that to you is lovable, and your duty to bear the cost of your chosen actions. The cost principle is the rule of equity in love as in labor and trade.

These are "Love's commands to thee."

A Fable.

"Land of Sunshine."

A self-respecting person (and properly so, as he was a billionaire and of enormous muscular development,) seeing two newsboys fighting on the street, felt a humane impulse to pull them apart. Having inherited the love of fair play, he took the bigger boy by the scruff of the neck and kicked him four blocks. But though a champion of the downtrodden, he was no fool. Having had a business training himself, and knowing that some other big boy might come along any minute and bully the poor little fellow again, he put the little fellow's pennies in his own pocket where they would be safe, and tied the little fellow up in the dog house, where he promised to educate him.

"Lemme go! I don't want to," cried the ungrateful brat. But the good man picked up a club and said soothingly, "Sh! sonny! You don't know what's good for you. Under my enlightened rule you will enjoy a far larger measure of freedom than you could possibly have running around the streets by yourself. I will let you sell papers, and I will take care of your money for you; and if you are a very good little boy, maybe I'll adopt you some day."

Meantime the first bad boy was pulling the hair of another small fellow. The which being observed by the self-respecting person, he flew to the rescue. "Kick him, sonny!" he cried. "When I get there I'll teach him to Weylerize the helpless!" And he laid the bad boy out with a punch in the belt.

The small boy danced with glee crying: "Didn't we do him!" But his deliverer answered: "We nothing. I did it! It's my mission to relieve the oppressed. Here, let me take care of your papers for you."

The small one put his thumb up to see if his nose was still on, and threw a pebble at the good man, who thereupon sprang at him and smote him, and kept smiting. About half who saw the scrap said: "Oh, let the kid go and play." But the self-respecting person had his temper with him.

"I don't like the job," he confessed, "for this brat is only 70 pounds and I'm at 240. But I owe a duty to humanity. There has not been a moment when I could have retired with honor. If I let him up, he'll think I'm afraid of him. Besides, he isn't fit to run around alone, and if I don't take care of him some unprincipled person will certainly hurt him and take away his hard earned pennies. I've got to pound him till he squeals, for I feel responsible to civilization for his safety.

This fable teaches how unwise it is to be smaller than your benefactor.

From Their Point of View.

When ignorance reigns in society, and disorder in the minds of men, laws are multiplied; each fresh law being a miscalculation, men are continually led to demand from it what can proceed only from themselves, from their own education and morality.—Dalloy.

Rockefeller has donated about $2,000,000 to the University of Chicago, and $150,000 to a Baptist Theological Seminary in Rochester and at the same time fined the public two cents on every gallon of oil they use. Long will be Rockefeller's white robes when exalted to angelhood in heaven.—Liberator.

A mob in Kentucky last Tuesday blinded a negro murderer by filling his eyes with vitriol and red pepper, then they gouged his eyes out and then these refined creatures roasted him to death. And we are waging a war with the Filipinos for the purpose of introducing to them some of the beauties of our civilization.—Liberator.

Two Chicago labor notes remind us forcibly that "all that glitters is not gold." One states a recent issue of the Sunday "Tribune" contained nine solid columns of "situations wanted." The other tells of the police dispersing a mob which was engaged in tearing up wooden pavements in order to get fuel. A number of arrests were made. The fact is, the man out of work does not find employment easy to obtain.—Cincinnati Chronicle.

Etiopathy, or Way of Life.

Is a volume of 640 pages, octavo, beautiful printed, bound in cloth and gold, and sold for $5.00. It contains a fine portrait of the author, and a beautiful diagram of the human heart. The motto on the outside of the cover, "KNOW FOR THYSELF," warns the reader not to neglect the study of his own matchless form, nor the mind and soul that governs it. The book contains the New Physiology, Ontology, Special Therapeutics, and "Technics of Medicine." The latter was first published as "Key to Medicine," and contains 2,000 of the most common medical terms and plain definitions, hints and suggestions. (All drugs recommended, which are very few, are classed as Domestic Remedies; so that this system of medicine can be predicted in all quarters of the globe without legal interference.) It is practically a HEALTH EDUCATION, and well adapted to the new era that is dawning upon the world. The horoscope of medicine, as it is to be, may be plainly read in this volume. Descriptive circulars sent on application. Sent by us, postpaid, on receipt of $5.

In a private letter from England a correspondent says: "Here the outlook at the moment is far from bright. This most damnable war is taking the people's attention from everything else. It is the old dodge of the rulers; an amusing diversion; bull-fight, man-fight, circus anything to keep the thought of the masses from their own concerns, their own happiness, and the consideration of the destiny of the race."

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Rook. With an introduction by E. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races." Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III., Co-operation; Chapter V., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, ten cts.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper that it has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

What's in a Name?

Much, very much, every way.

We think in words. Names are words.

All the treasures of knowledge—of science, art, literature, are bound up, encased in, embodied or incarnated, in words; and names are words.

For truth or falsehood, for good or ill, for progression or reaction and decay, all these treasures are irretrievably and irrevocably identified with words; and names are words.

Then let it no more be said, "there's nothing in a name."

To discuss names, intelligently, thoroughly, is to discuss the treasures of science, literature, art—the whole realm of human knowledge; the whole domain of human life.

Some one has said the history of words is the history of nations, the history of humanity. The history of words—including names as a chief part thereof, is the history of all things.

For these and other reasons I have welcomed the discussion of the name or names by which our little "white-winged messenger" has been known since August 1883, Gregorian calendar. From my retreat in the "Sunny Southland" I have watched the discussion, have read everything that has been published on the question of change and can thoroughly appreciate and sympathize with all the apparently conflicting views. As yet, however, I find little to unsettle the conviction expressed in No. 790, issue of Dec. 2., except it be that the substitution of the classic, the poetic, "Aurora,—Daughter of the Dawn," for the vernacular Light Bearer, might be an improvement. We would lose something in the way of recent association of ideas, but the fact that Aurora is the feminine counterpart of the masculine Luciferus, would make it a very suitable, a very appropriate name for the "running mate" of the Monthly Lucifer, if this twofold plan should meet the approbation of our readers.

Aurora—another Latin word, meaning "The Golden Hour;" Greek derivation, "The Morning Hour," has a most beautiful mythical history; see Webster's Dictionary.

"The goddess of the morning; or day break deified. The poets represented her as rising out of the ocean, in a chariot with rosy fingers dropping gentle dew."

Yes, next to Lucifer the peerless; next to the noble, the dauntless, the truth-and-justice-loving, the all-glorious Luciferus, of astronomy and fable, Aurora has, perhaps, the most beautiful and note-worthy of legends, or of mythologic histories.

If, then, the friends of the movement for Freedom of Womanhood and of Motherhood desire to see the beautifully poetic and inspiring name Aurora take the place of the vernacular, but yet not inexpressive Light-Bearer, and if they want to see a monthly Lucifer—or more correct, perhaps, a monthly Luciferus, to take the masculine role, the bravely iconoclastic role, in the work of demolishing old superstitions, and in clearing away the rubbish to enable the feminine evangel to get in her work, then these important changes can very speedily be made.

All that is needed is the "sinews of war"—the means of paying for raw material and press work. The rest can be done in the Light-Bearer office, and with but little addition to our present force—with the added help of volunteer writers who will furnish suitable "copy," for the pages of the proposed monthly. As already stated we have on hand a good supply of matter suitable for the first year of a monthly magazine.

Having taken so much space in a recent issue I prefer not to prolong this article but would like to briefly answer a few of the more popular objections to the name Lucifer.

First, that it "shocks" people. Physicians tell us that a shock to the physical system is often necessary to restoration to health. So of restoration to mental health. Emerson (I think it is) advises the timid to shock themselves out of bondage to fear. When people are being slowly but surely asphyxiated by poisonous gases it is sometimes necessary to shake them up very roughly in order to give them a sense of danger. And so of people who are perishing by the poison of superstitious beliefs. If Lucifer proves a galvanic battery to such, then give them Lucifer, in strong but intermittent doses.

2. While it may be true that some readers will be repelled and prevented from reading the paper because of the name, this same name has often attracted others because of its originality and its defiance of conventionality, and those who are thus attracted are far more apt to become earnest and generous helpers than are those who prefer a more conventional name. An instance of this is the case of an old German carpet weaver who discontinued "The Kansas Liberal" because the name smacked too much of conventionality and "respectability," but who immediately re subscribed when the "Liberal" became Lucifer, and who has since remained one of its most faithful and generous patrons. Many more like instances might be given.

3. "C. F. H.," in Lucifer 791 says "Usage gives meaning to words Shall we accept the meaning or twaddle about derivations?" etc. Certainly; usage gives meanings but whose usage and whose meanings shall we follow? I for one prefer to follow the usage of scholars, of men of science rather than the usage, the meanings given by the ignorant, the bigoted, the superstitious. C. F. H., seems to prefer to follow in the wake of the ignorant, the bigoted and superstitious for none but such give a sinister meaning to the grand old name Lucifer.

In closing for this time I would once more request all who want a monthly Lucifer to let us know without delay, as the time is very short, if the change is to be made next month.

Thayer, Miss. M. HARMAN.

The Dude and the Toiler.

Why do women smile upon and seek the companionship of the gay gallant, the dude, the man who apes the rich in their slothful habits, and in their demand to be served or waited upon by others? Why do women admire the man with soft, white hands and untanned faces, and who has but little except these and his fine clothes to recommend him?

And why, on the contrary, do women neglect, mistreat, misuse,—or use only when they want service such as the dude will not perform,—the men who do all the most useful work; who perform the hard manual labor of the world; the men who do not shrink from doing a manly share of the world's most disagreeable and yet most necessary tasks?

The answer seems plain enough. Women are not to blame for this. It is the unconscious impulse of nature, reaching outward and upward toward the refined, the esthetic, the aerial, the ethereal and the spiritual, and a turning away from what we sense as the crude, the rough, the uncouth and the grossly material or earthy; also the fixed and non progressive.

No; women are not to blame—that is, their unconscious creative instincts are not to blame for preferring the city dude or the fashionable fop instead of the uncouth, the slow-moving, the awkward, the unpolished and yet honest and sturdy farmer, hod-carrier or ditcher. Whether consciously or unconsciously our prospective mothers want other ideals than these upon which or from which to build the human structures of the future.

But there is room for discrimination on the part of the women, and for improvement on the part of the men. Let women learn to discriminate a little more, between the false and the true; let them learn to distinguish the true gentleman, strong and brave and honest as well as cultured, from him who has nothing but polish to recommend him; and let men remember to improve upon the saying of Wendell Holmes:

"We cannot expect real elegance short of three removes from the soil, from which of course, all our best blood comes."

This may have been true in Holmes' time, but it need not be true today, with all the advantages that science and art have given us over the untamed forces and crude materials of nature's workshop. M. HARMAN.

Thayer, Miss.

For the Holidays.

We have received a set of Kipling's works, to be sold for the benefit of the editor's trip south. It is printed in large, clear type on fine paper, bound in green cloth; illustrated; 1422 pages in all. This set will make a handsome holiday present. The publisher's price is, we are informed, $4.50. We will send it, postpaid, on receipt of $3.50. Who wants it?

* * *

If you want a dainty and artistic, yet inexpensive gift book, you should bear in mind that "Songs of the Unblind Cupid" comprises all these qualities. It is an edition de luxe, in red and black, of a few hitherto unpublished poems by the liberal poet, J. Wm. Lloyd. The verses are printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle-edge, hand made paper of cerulean tint. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering.

Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red, with an initial letter and sketch upon the opening page hand painted in water colors.

Mr. Lloyd, as author of "Wind Harp Songs" and the "Red Heart in a White World," needs no introduction to the liberal public. These few new poems of love, liberty and nature are here preserved in the highest style of the printers' art, and should find a place in the collection of every friend of freedom, every lover of poetry, and every admirer of choice and dainty publication. Edition limited to 650 copies. There will be no second edition. Price per copy, 30 cents.

* * *

We sell, also, the sumptuous and artistic presentation edition of "Paine's Age of Reason," published by the Truth Seeker Company.

Part I. of this edition of the "Age of Resson" is a reprint of what Dr. Moncure D. Conway calls a "strange and probably unique" copy of that book, the discovery of which enables the world to have, for the first time, Part I. of the "Age of Reason" exactly as Paine composed it.

Part II. of this edition is corrected by Dr. Conway's revision. All the matter of the original edition will be found in this, and, so far as completeness and accuracy go, this is as unique as the newly discovered one, for it contains matter previously unknown to any of Paine's friends, editors, or biographers, and the largest collection of portraits ever brought together.

This presentation edition of the "Age of Reason" is for the lovers of Paine for their own libraries and parlors, or to give to friends who will appreciate an artistic token of friendship. Religious friends, too, will preserve it for its own beauty.

The edition is from new plates made from new type, with large face. The book is 9x9½ inches in size, printed on antique wove paper, with special rough finish for this volume. The pictures are printed on the finest plate paper, inset and tissued. The cover design, also peculiar to this edition, is made by Bodfish, and is rich in colors and gold. To protect the exquisite cover the book is sent in a box, and wrapped besides in transparent wax paper, which keeps the dust away while enabling the title to be read.

This is the only edition with a full index, which has been so much missed by those who know that Paine has said something they would like to quote, but cannot find. It is the only volume, too, in which Paine's own account of his arrest in Paris appears. The Chronological Notes show in a brief form the important work Paine did, and will be highly valued by the reader.

The portraits include all authentic pictures of Paine. No other volume has the Jarvis picture, and the Pennsylvania pictures are to be had nowhere else. The New Rochelle views were taken especially for this volume.

Price, postpaid, $2. Descriptive circulars sent on application.

* * *

"A Persian Pearl," and other essays by Clarence S. Darrow. Any lover of the literature of freedom would be proud of such a present as this. The book comprises:

1—A Persian Pearl.
2—The Skeleton in the Closet.
3—Walt Whitman.
4—Realism in Art and Literature.
5—Robert Burns.

The publishers have given this work a dress in keeping with the high quality of the text. The book is printed on rough-surface English "Boxmoor" paper, rubricated side leaves and initials. Edition limited to 980 copies, each book numbered. Price, in boards, $2. In limp green chamois, silk lined, $2.40.

"Egoism" is sleeping; but it is to be hoped there will be a glorious resurrection one of these days. Georgia and Henry Replogle are living in Denver. Georgia's health has greatly improved since she left California. They will soon issue a new work by "Tak Kak," due notice of which will be given in Lucifer, when it appears.

PROSPECTUS

Of the Life History of Moses Harman.

I. Ancestry. Early Life and Struggles to get an Education

II. "Travels in Faith." From Methodism to Universalism and thence to Rationalism.

III. Experiences as a Heretic and Abolitionist in a Slave State—Religion, War and Politics.

IV. Experiences as Teacher, Preacher and Magistrate—or "Justice of the Peace."

V. Experiences in Journalism—A Ten Years' Fight in the Courts. Reflections on our Judiciary, State and Federal.

VI. Prison Experiences. A "Third Term." Letters from and to the Prisoner.

VII. Reflections on Prison Discipline. "Crimes Against Criminals."

VIII. The Movement for Freedom of Womanhood and Motherhood, and for the Right of Children to Be Born Well.

IX. Relation of this Movement to All Other Reform Movements.

X. Present outlook for this Movement. "Duty of the Hour."

This book will comprise about four hundred pages; printed on good paper, new and clear type and good binding, with portrait of the author and of his daughter and helper, Lillian Harman. Price one dollar. Life and health permitting, the book will be ready for delivery to subscribers on or before June first, next. Subscriptions solicited, so that we may know how large an edition to issue.

A NEW BOOK by Albert Chavannes. "Magnetation, its Relation to Health and Character," contains invaluable information upon the relation of the sexes. Price, 25 cents. Address, Albert Chavannes, 308 Fourth Ave., Knoxville, Tenn.

Lucifer's Clubbing List.

	Retail Price		With Lucifer
Truth Seeker, N. Y.	$	3.00	$	2.25
" " England,	"	50	"	1.30
Free Society,	"	50	"	1.25
Appeal to Reason,	"	50	"	1.2
Coming Nation,	"	50	"	1.25
Suggester and Thinker,	"	1.00	"	1.60
Discontent,	"	50	"	1.25
Cosmopolitan,	"	1.00	"	1.75
Youth's Companion,	"	1.75	"	2.40
Our Little Ones,	"	1.00	"	1.50
Century Magazine,	"	4.00	"	4.50
Freedom, England,	"	50	"	1.30
Freedom, Washington,	"	50	"	1.25
Arena	"	2.50	"	2.25
Open Court	"	1.00	"	1.75

These prices apply only to PAID UP or new subscribers who send in the amount for both papers at the same time. If other papers, not in this list, are desired, please drop us a card and we will give clubbing rates with them.

VARIOUS VOICES.

E. J. P., City:—I would say to C. F. H., that I do read Lucifer riding in the street cars and that I am very sorry for anyone who is shocked at the name. The mistakes of the masses never killed the truth. Love is free and always will be. So when I am called a free lover I accept the term and make no concessions to Madam Grundy. The fight for freedom is not to be won by being afraid of the dead cats which "respectability" always throws at progress.

—

W. R. Stokes, St. Paul, Minn.:—I suppose such organizations as the Ohio Liberal Society have some written or printed scheme of organization such as a constitution and by-laws, or rules and regulations of some sort or other. If anything of this kind is in your possession, and available for such use, kindly favor me with a copy of same. If not, please give me the address of some one who can supply me. Also, if you know of any such organization in this city or Minneapolis, kindly give me name and address of same.

—

W. G. Scott, Cincinnati, O.:—James F. Morton, Jr., was here and lectured Sunday night, his effort was splendid and was well received by about half, (or a little more,) as many as listened to you the week before. I was very much surprised at his ability and cleverness, both in his address and answers to questions and criticisms. I had expected from what I had heard, that he would mix Communism up with Anarchism but was agreeably disappointed. His reasoning is good and his mind is clear. I hope we shall have him again sometime.

—

William Platt, St. Martin's Lane, London, W. C.:—I shall be very glad to see Moses Harman's memoirs in print. I think it should be a fine book, and I shall be the first to take a copy when it is out. I think it ought to be absolutely in book form, permanent and not periodical. $1 is a good handy price for the general public. As to the title of the journal Lucifer, I like the present title, it is crisp and bold and heretical, the suggested title "Light-Bearer" is far inferior I think; savors of the "Torch" and of the "goody-goody" style. Best wishes, and hopes for your father's good health.

—

E. D. W., Toledo, O.:—As to the matter of changing the name of Lucifer I heartily agree with all the reasons given by the first mover of the subject. I think it would be a great help. As to what it should be, others I think can tell better than myself. I cannot promise any difference in the subscription list in consequence of a change. I do not know anyone who is advanced enough to be at all interested in it who is not already a subscriber, but I will of my own motion pay for two or three copies to be sent about here and there as trials as may seem best at the time. I cannot personally see any need of a change of form but then I do not keep mine, I scatter them out wherever I think there is a chance of catching a stray interest.

—

W. G. Markland, Sherwood, Tenn.:—Two divinity students from the University of the South, of Sewanee, have just left me after a two hours chat on sexology, and with Lucifers and Merrie Englands in their pockets. Mr.—— and Mr.—— who is Asst. Sergt. at Arms of the U. S. Senate. Mr.—— requests correspondence as he goes to Washington soon. Mr.—— wants Winwood Reade's "Martyrdom of Man," from which I quoted. Can you tell me where it can be got, and price? I feel gleeful at starting a wedge in a theological school. I suggested that the students give us a lecture in turn on Sundays and it was well received and may induce action. Sewanee is twelve miles distant. They have Darwin among them and the professors know of it, and if they talk to me they'll get Harman also.

—

Emma Johnson, Duluth, Minn.:—In regard to the Life of Moses Harman, I think it would be something grand to read the history of your father's life and of all the hardships he has gone through; for I have a hard task to even get some people to read any reform papers and they seem to think it is wrong to study the sex question. I hope they will not always think so. I will take one book and if I like it will try to take more. In regard to changing the name of the paper, it would be a good plan if there would be more subscribers, but for my part, what attracted my attention to your paper was I one day found just the top of it—the rest was torn off and I thought by the name it bore it must be something I had been looking for, so I wrote and got the paper and I have had it ever since.

—

J. B., Kansas,:—Enclosed find one dollar, for which, in case the autobiography is published you will kindly send a copy to accompanying address. If never published let the dollar go into the good will fund. I never can repay Lucifer what it has done for me and I wish I had a million to put at its disposal. I seem to be everything that is unorthodox and unfashionable. There is something paradoxical about my family relationship, for I am the only unorthodox one in my own large and now grown up family, and strange as it may seem, not one of them even suspects my outlandishness. Let that go; I am now over the limit in years and must soon cross the divide and the best of it is I am ready at the drop to travel. Lucifer has been a light to my feet and a lamp to my path. It has brought me in contact with glorious souls.

—

M. E. W., Montgomery.:—I feel incompetent to express myself in regard to the name of Lucifer. The liberal ideas that are expressed in the Light-Bearer of woman's freedom, I endorse, and am very much interested in the various letters that are published. It is less than one year since I first saw the paper and met the editor at Cassadaga Camp. I will take one book. I have tried to solicit subscribers for the paper but have not been successful. There are not many liberal people in our city, they are fifty years in the rear of the people in the north, in orthodoxy. You have a right to express yourself on the race question. I also. If you lived among the negro race, I think that you would change your views. I am a Wisconsin woman and once thought the negro an abused race. People that travel through the Northern states to solicit aid for the education of the negro, are working for their own support and will exaggerate their representations.

—

J. B. Elliott, 3515 Wallace St., Phila., Pa.:—It was Lucifer that first showed me the light. The first copy of the paper was placed in my hands by Voltairine de Cleyre, nearly twelve years ago and the light has grown brighter year by year. I shall take a copy of your life and work to keep company with the other reformers who have made sacrifices that the pathway of the coming generation might be made easier. The Roberts case in Congress is a fight on religious lines and the friends of religious freedom should stand by the constitution and sign all the petitions that are presented to them, in his favor. He is just as much a Christian as Isaac with his three wives, or David—but not so good as Solomon, in the matter of wives. If his wisdom was so valuable on some things why not on the wife question? Let Christians answer.

I have a copy (paper) of the "Woman who Dares," by Ursula Gesterfeld. Fifty cents by mail to any Lucifer reader, for the benefit of Lucifer. Send money to Lucifer, and postal with name to me. I will do the rest.

—

Allie Lindsay Lynch, Chicago:—Please enroll me for two copies of your father's "Life." Let me suggest that you run off a thousand or more copies of the Prospectus, in circular form, and mail several with next issue of Lucifer, while to those you know to do much writing you might send half a hundred copies or twice that number. I'll undertake to enclose in letters between now and June, a hundred of these notices of the book, and will often comment thereon; in this way many who never see Lucifer may gain knowledge of the worthy forth coming book.

I truly hope our Lucifer will not be eradicated, but continue to bear light until every mind unfolds through an unfettered reason—aided greatly by perusal of its pages—and the word becomes a synonym for an enlightenment that makes myths pass into obscurity, having been banished by the great destroyer of superstition—science.

The item sent to Lucifer by Thomas Lees, which shows up as "an object lesson,"—the good sense of the Ramsey's, who separated after fifteen years of married life, parting as friends, wishing each other well, and speaking in high praise, has so much similarity to my experience that I venture to make a few remarks of a personal nature.

Harry and I became more harmonious in lines of thought as I lost my religion. I walked away from "God" very gradually, for I had been reared in great fear of the "Devil." These two myths I have erased after much reflection. And I found there was more required, in my life, as producer of health and happiness, than just a good man's kindness and a line of pleasant conversation. I had needs this dear friend could not effect by his less demonstrative affectional nature. He ever was, and will remain, a splendid brother. I met another whose love has filled my life with more happiness than has come to any woman of my wide acquaintance, I think.

There was much talking, yes and grief; but our good sense led up to a parting, and a pledged Damon and Pythias friendship. Then came the years of joy-in-love—free love,—and now and then this grand brother's visit to the home of the writer and her noble E. E. H., who has been educated into all the radical lines of thought by the woman he loves.

I offer this to Lucifer, as a second realistic object lesson. And some day I will offer the book of my life's experiences, to the great reading public. This, and much of reform labor I am in the field to accomplish, much in line with the two Harmans who ably instruct, and not alone through Lucifer's columns, but widely from free thought platforms.

Here's to you and your family, loyal Lucifer! And may the close of the XX Century find you many times enlarged and more active, with Moses yet the head guardian angel!

—

E. S.,—Having but recently made the acquaintance of Lucifer I would like to send you a little token of my appreciation of its worth in the form of a year's subscription, and a few truthful remarks in behalf of the liberation of women from the bondage of legal marriage. When only an unformed girl of seventeen years, I was married to a man six years my senior whose only recommendation to my favor was a rather handsome face, and a chance to get my support. My father having died, leaving my mother to face the world with five children, and no money, I thought the best thing for me to do was to get married. Oh, how I shudder at the thought of what followed, and I well remember and never can forget, though it was more than thirty years ago, how rudely my dreams of love were dispelled. I do not think the man meant to be cruel, but he was ignorant, and no entreaties had any effect to deter him from asserting his "marital rights." I soon learned to despise him. For ten long weary years I endured a life of cruel outrages—thinking I was married I must submit and keep silent. You are my wife! was the answer I got when I ventured to remonstrate. Notwithstanding tears, cries, and agony, pleadings to God for death, and almost in my heart a murderer, I bore three children. One a girl, passed away in a few short months and the next girl lives, and is a comfort. The last one, my baby boy went away at the age of fourteen and to this day—now nearly twelve years—I have never heard from him. I have borne in my body and in my soul also the effects of man's injustice for these many years. I have succeeded with the aid of the law in separating from him, and to this day I can never think of that man without loathing and horror. At this writing I have no husband, and no one owns me, or ever shall again.

I would that the voice of every woman were raised in defence of her right to her own body, whether legally married or otherwise. I feel that a monument should be raised whose gleaming shaft should ascend to the sky, to the memory of Moses Harman, and Lillian, those noble defenders of truth and equality, and hosts of others who have suffered martyrdom for the sake of the right. This subject of all others which should demand the hearing of the masses, is discussed the least upon our rostrums today. Millions of women are dying in sheer despair and millions more are writhing in agony longing to escape the cruel thraldom of man's lusts. Oh for a purer atmosphere; an atmosphere of love and freedom. Yes, thank God for a love that is free, for love without lust, for love that can neither be bought nor sold.

My soul is moved with pity for the bond slaves of the carnal passion of men. How long must such bondage be endured? Let one brave woman take the stand before the world that she will live a life in accordance with the highest promptings of her nature, and lo! how quickly is she ostracised by society or even thrust into dungeon cells with the veriest criminals.

What we need is more courage, and less fear of what Mother Grundy and her satellites may say. Let us boldly proclaim the glad tidings of justice and equality wherever we go and show to those around us that we live according to the light within us by our adherence to true, natural impulses, and not according to the shallow rules and regulations of church and state.

—

S. R. Shepherd, Leavenworth, Kan.:—If "Lucifer" must go, give us "Light" or "Morning-Light," rather than "Aurora." "Grasshopper-Falls" (the birth place of Lucifer) being offensive to some, our representative in the legislature, a very "recherche" young man, sprung a surprise on us by having it changed to Sauterelle Falls, the French for grasshopper. A storm of protest and ridicule arose and the next legislature changed it to Valley Falls. An oil vender of this city had "Fiat Lux" painted on each side of his wagon but four-fifths of the people hailed him as Mr. Fiatlux and he painted it out. "Light of Truth" or "Light and Truth" or "Dawn" or "Dawning Light" or "Light and Liberty" would do. Aurora is so associated with "borealis" that many would instinctively utter the two. A word that necessitates a dictionary and requires constant explaining would be no improvement. The unclean birds of grundyism would swear that Aurora meant fornicuboogery.

WOMEN and ECONOMICS,

A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women. By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Here are a few of the page headings of this remarkable work "Economic environment; The dependence of women; No inherent disability of sex; Marriage not a partnership; House service as a livehood; Motherhood and economic production-Modification to maternity; The usefulness of sex; Differentiation of sex; Sex and humanity; The peacock's tail; Sex distinctions; The eternal feminine; unreasoning devotion; Women as persons; Race-attributes and sex-attribute; The normal child; Personal profit and sex-relations; The influence of heredity; The young man and the young woman; The effect of custom: The sex relation personal; Innocence and ignorance; Marriage with independence; The increasing difficulty of marriage; Supporting one's family; Virtue and vice; The results of repression; The harm that women do; The development of love; The hope for the future; The martyr and the pioneer; The dropping of the bars; The meaning of the new woman; Motherhood in education; A criminal failure; Marriage and the family; Love's young dream; The heart and the stomach; Socializing the household industries; The stomach as a family tie; The servant wife; World-servants and house-servants; A wider maternity; Between the old and the new; "The vices of the slave;" The outgrown stronghold. Printed on strong, heavy paper; 350 pages, bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale by M. Harman, 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

792.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

Books for the Holidays.

The publishers' price of the books in the following list is forty cents each. We bought them at a little less than half of that. The postage averages about four cents on each book. Half the publishers' price with postage added is twenty-four cents. We will send any book in the list, postage prepaid, for twenty-five cents, the extra cent going to pay for the work of wrapping and mailing. Send in your order at once if you want them before the holidays and the books will be sent promptly.

Every book in the list is handsomely bound in cloth and is printed in clear type on good paper. The number following the name of the book indicates the number of its pages:

Bracebridge Hall, by Washington Irving. 289. With 110 illustrations designed by Randolph Caldecott.

Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, by Lord Byron, complete and unabridged. 270.

Crown of Wild Olives, by John Ruskin. 252. Consists of four lectures on work, traffic, war, and the future of England, with an interesting appendix.

Dolly Dialogues, by Anthony Hope. 202.

Dreams, by Olive Schreiner. 128.

Lalla Rookh, by Thomas Moore, 327. With copious notes.

Master and Man, by Tolstoi. 117.

Sartor Resartus, by Thomas Carlyle, (with notes and index.) 344.

Sketch Book, by Washington Irving. 404. This book contains the famous story of Rip Van Winkle.

Samantha at Saratoga, or "Widout" After Fashion, by Josiah Allen's wife, (Marietta Holly), profusely illustrated, 372.

Tanglewood Tales, by Nathaniel Hawthorne, 284.

Readers of Lucifer

are interested in all reform movements and will find the literature treating on Science and the Occult of vast interest and great advantage.

Occult Forces,	.20
Vital Magnetic Power, by Randall	1.00
How to Mesmerize, by Coates	1.00
Natural Way in Diet,	1.00
Health Foods and How to Prepare Them,	1.00
The Silent Friend—A Key to Rapid Wealth,	2.00
How to Hypnotize—a complete manual of instruction	2.00
How to Win or Sure Secrets of Success, by Prof. L. H. Anderson. 352 pages	2.00
Ancient Magic, Magnetism and Psychic Forces,	2.00
Marvels of Magnetism and Methods Old and New,	5.00
How to Heal, by J. K. Anderson,	10.00

Catalogue free Address, National Inst of Science, L. K. 119, Masonic Temple, Chicago, Ill., U. S. A.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES.

By E. C. WALKER.

No man is wise enough to foresee the secondary results of any proposed restriction, and no history is copious enough to record the evils that have ensued upon denials of liberty.—George E. Macdonald.

CONTENTS:

Love and the Law,	3
The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal,	12
The Continuity of Race-Life; and Tyranny,	16
Food and Sex Fallacies, a criticism,	17
When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties,	26
The New Woman: what is she? what will she be?	31
The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes,	44
Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce,	45
Love: Its Attraction and Expression,	51
Is She an Honest Girl?	53
Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts,	54
Social Radicals and Parentage,	57
Anthropology and Monogamy,	59
Love and Trust Versus Fear,	60
Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life."	61

Price 15 cents. For sale at this office.

CULTIVATION OF PERSONAL MAGNETISM.

A TREATISE ON HUMAN CULTURE. BY LEROY BERRIER.

This treatise reverses the common belief that Personal Magnetism, Life Force and Mind Force can not be cultivated and acquired. It is a Complete Course of Instructions that will enable all who possess them, to become powerfully magnetic. Price, $1. Postage, 5 cents.

Sent on receipt of price. Address Moses Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.

This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Women in Marriage Slavery

Will find in HILDA'S HOME a story exposing the horrors of their condition as faithfully and as fearlessly as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" exposed the horrors of Negro slavery in the South. The story is more entertaining than many modern works of fiction and the plain truths it tells will find responsive echoes in the aching, bursting hearts of many women who know the galling effects of marriage thralldom.

The book contains 425 pages. Price handsomely bound in cloth, $1. In paper cover 50 cents. Send in your order NOW—especially if you want extra copies for distribution among your friends.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Personal Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 30 cents. Address Moses Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. E. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A book, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.

"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.

"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.

Sample pages free Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 173 pages. Price 25 cents.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Missing Link Modern Spiritualism. By A. Leah Underhill. A book for all spiritualists and investigators. "Hear all sides, then decide." 22 chapters; 473 pages; 16 illustrations, including portraits of the Fox family. History of the Hydesville rappings, as given by eye-witnesses, the threats or mob violence; remarkable and well-attested manifestations; the "exposures" disposed of, etc. Handsomely bound in cloth. Publishers price, $1.50. On receipt of $1.27, and 13 cents for postage, we will send the book to any address.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be FREE; must enjoy the full privilege of soliciting the love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrially."—Page 265. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CITYLESS AND COUNTRYLESS WORLD", by Henry Gerrish. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 6 0 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Free Love; A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of conjugal love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 1874, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence 240 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago

Price 5 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 50. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, DEC. 23, E. M. 299. [C. E 1899.] WHOLE No. 793.

Present Needs.

BY JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

Say ye that the day of Freedom, long desired, hath come at last.
That the bigot's blunted weapons, useless now, away are cast?
Say ye that the rack, the gibbet, and the stake, no more await Him who beards the hoary falsehood, tempting this the martyr's fate?

Deem ye that the truth has triumphed, and that baffled error lies
Writhing in its impuissance, cowering 'neath the sunlit skies?
Think ye 'tis for idle pleasure that a small and hated band
'Gainst the creeds that others favor, firmly battling dare to stand?

Nay, but every road of progress that the world has ever known
First was trod with bleeding footsteps by a man who stood alone!
We now reap the splendid harvests where the sowers fell and died;
While the world for which they labored mocked them in its haughty pride.

Still the battle is not ended; there is need of men today,
Who dare follow stern conviction, spite of all that bars the way.
Long the strife twixt truth and error; but who fails a martyr now
Yet shall wear the stainless chaplet of the victor on his brow.

In the Case of Brigham H. Roberts.

At the Manhattan Liberal Club, New York, on the evening of December 15, 1899, Rev. D. J. McMillan, who is very active in the crusade against Mormonism and the seating of Congressman Roberts of Utah, gave an address to show "Why Roberts Should be Kept out of Congress." In the discussion which followed, E. C. Walker said:

The speaker of the evening has declared that polygamy had its origin here in the state of New York, "in the heart of our [monogamic] civilization." Is it not a case of the tree being known by its fruits?

The issue now before the country is one of the gravest importance and it should be dealt with seriously, but we cannot help smiling at the seeming sarcasm when Professor Russell of the New York University Law School, arguing for the exclusion of Mr. Roberts, says: "The power to expel is necessary for the dignity of Congress, whose deliberations must at all times have the sanctity which unlimited confidence in their wisdom and purity can inspire." Some Congressmen must have blushed when they received that bouquet.

It is not an answer to say to the anti-Roberts Congressman, "You are another," but if he is "another" the fact weakens our confidence in his ability or his sincerity. A reporter's club may legally expel a novelist, who is an "open" and "defiant" fictionist, but that does not prove that the reporters are not novelists "on the quiet," nor does it lead us to applaud their pretense to the possession of the virtue of veracity.

Mr. Roberts is on trial before a packed committee, sitting as a high court of morals. In appointing the committee, Speaker Henderson suspended all the rules of the game which it was feared might, if left in operation, give the accused representative a fair show, thus officially committing Congress to the basic immorality of injustice.

To this hour, the conduct of Mr. Roberts has been so dignified, so dispassionate, so reasonable, that he has won the sympathy of many who reprehend his alleged mode of private life. His attitude is in striking and agreeable contrast to that of those who are active in the crusade against him. But this question goes far deeper than the personality of any man, be he Mr. Roberts or Mr. Taylor.

I believe that Mr. Roberts is clearly entitled to his seat, under the law, but I shall not now enter into the consideration of the legal technicalities involved: others may do that, and others also may bring the Christians' Bible into court and ask Mr. Roberts' enemies why they persecute their fellow-Christians of Utah because the latter believe and act upon the belief that the unchangeable god whom both divisions worship knew what he was about when he sanctioned polygamy and when he said that Solomon, the man with a thousand sexual associates, seven hundred of whom were wives, was the wisest of men. Why, according to this opinion given by the all-knowing god of the Christian, Mr. Roberts, the Utah Christian said to have but three wives, is almost at the bottom of the scale of intelligence, while the Christian with only one wife touches zero. But it is not a pleasant task to deal with manifest disingenuousness, and so I shall pass this part of the subject. Suffice it to say, that Freethinkers, independent men and women, would be most foolish to assist in trampling down every remaining constitutional and customary guarantee of civil and religious freedom by joining hands with the aggressive and stronger party in an acrimonious sectarian quarrel. It is no part of our business to save the fingers of persecutors by pulling their chestnuts out of the fire.

In the popular and professional outcry against the Mormons, which continually assails our ears, we frequently distinguish the word "illegitimate," referring, in the unscientific terminology of compulsory moralism, to a child or children born outside of legal wedlock. It is a delicate matter for non-Mormon Christians to touch, remembering that, if their definition is accurate and if the "inspired" word is a faithful record, the epithet adheres unremovably to the man whom they revere as a god. "Illegitimate," as commonly applied to a child, is a fetish word having correspondence to no fact in nature. Every child is physically legitimate, because it could not be anything else and be at all. In a different sense, every child is legitimate which is born of mutual love and desire and of parents in bodily health and who are emotionally adapted to each other, while every child is illegitimate whose origin does not conform to these conditions. Measured by this, the only scientific standard of legitimacy, the ratio of illegitimate children born in marriage, monogamic or plural, is very much greater than is the ratio of illegitimate children born outside of marriage. It needs only a little careful observation to convince any impartial inquirer that this is a fair and moderate statement of fact.

Whether Mr. Roberts is or is not, whether other Mormons are or are not, evading the anti-polygamy statutes and disregarding the "compact" between Utah and the Union, does not matter, so far as the promoters of the crusade are concerned, for whether the charges made against him and them are true or false, the odium engendered by the charge is being used as a bar to shut out of Congress the representative chosen by the majority of the voters of Utah. Those who are the loudest in their professions of loyalty to the principle of majorityism are thus the first and the most eager to trample it in the mud of sectarianism when its results run counter to their religious and moral prejudices. As to that vaunted "compact," it is notorious that it was obtained by force, the overshadowing and overwhelming force of the federal government, and it is a well-known legal maxim that contracts secured by force or fraud are null and void. The "compact" is no more binding, in morals or real law, upon the people of Utah than is a leaf from last year's patent medicine almanac.

There are Secularists who favor the exclusion of Mr. Roberts because they fear the growing power of the Mormon hierarchy. But what of the hierarchies of Romanism and Protestantism? Is it a wise policy to help the two stronger ecclesiastical powers to crush the weaker ecclesiastical power? Why assist them in killing off their other foes so that they can the sooner devote all their kindly attentions to us? Why help them make the ropes to hang us? Even if there were no vital principle forbidding us to join in this outrageous hunt, the plainest injunctions of self-interest admonish us that the division of Christendom between Rome, Geneva, and Salt Lake City is better by far than the consolidation of Christendom under either Rome or Geneva. We are unfit to survive if we thus play into the hands of the strong against the weak. The Anti-Roberts cartoons of Watson Heston in the "Truth Seeker" are a disgrace to Liberalism, reflecting alike upon its justice and its common sense.

I am not here to defend polygamy. Neither am I here to defend monogamy. "A plague upon both your houses," I say. Polygamy as a system of legal marriage and monogamy as a system of legal marriage are mates in iniquity. Each has certain advantages over the other but liberty has immeasurable advantages over both. So far as the material condition and the sexual condition of wives are concerned, polygamy seems to give monogamy large odds and yet win. If the speaker of the evening had passed along the streets of Salt Lake City—as he doubtless did—in the palmy days of Mormon rule, I doubt if, in the whole course of the walk, he would have had half so many mercenary endearments addressed to him as he would receive in walking from Fourth Avenue to Third Avenue, on his way to this hall, here in New York under the reign of monogamy. Certainly, the condition of the children under the rule of polygamy in Utah could not begin to compare in deplorableness with the condition of tens of thousands of children in this monogamic city and in other monogamic cities. Again: Is it not manifestly better for wives, in each case where a husband is inclined to force his attentions, regardless of times and conditions, that there be more than one wife? But, while such considerations should have great weight with believers in marriage, they are of less consequence to us, who would strike at the root of these evils by making all men and women sexually free and economically self-sustaining, thus eliminating prostitution within and without marriage, securing the care of all children, and ending marital and "free-union" rape.

The whole "Roberts case" is a struggle for and against investigation, experiment, and comparison in social science. It is first and on the surface a battle between two systems of marriage, but secondly and deep down it is a conflict between compulsory marriage itself and sexual freedom. The friends of liberty are confident that in the free atmosphere the best will survive, and all they ask is opportunity to observe the processes of growth. The cause of evil in any system of legal marriage is invasion, enforced union, bringing its train of physical, mental, and moral ills. Let the various systems compete with one another, let them all compete with individual liberty. Throw away the loaded dice of persecution. For a long time they may all exist side by side, for human tastes and needs are as various as human beings are different in external appearance.

Let Roberts into Congress. He is not so dangerous as the men who would deny to him or to any other man the equal rights of the citizen, because of a difference of opinion. Finally, to quote the words of Eva Harriman in Lucifer.

"Laying aside superstitious reverence for custom, it would seem to be far more reasonable and far more just to say that if three or more women voluntarily choose to live with one man it is right for them to do so, but if they are compelled to live with him it is unjust and immoral. When a public statement is made by one or more of Brigham H. Roberts' alleged wives that her or their relationship to him is compulsory it will be time to denounce the alleged polygamist as an immoral man." And I would add that the same rule applies exactly in the case of the one wife of any other Congressman, or of a common citizen.

How Man "Makes Believe."

Olive Schreiner, in "Cosmopolitan."

There is indeed an interesting analogous tendency on the part of the parasitic male, wherever found, to shield his true condition from his own eyes and those of the world by playing at the ancient ancestral forms of male labor. He is almost always found talking loudly of the protection he affords to helpless females and to society, though he is in truth himself protected through the exertion of soldiers, policemen, magistrates, and society generally; and he is almost invariably fond of dangling a sword or other weapon, and wearing a uniform, for the assumption of militarism without severe toil delights him. But it is in a degenerate travesty of the ancient labor of hunting (whereby at terrible risk to himself, and with endless fatigue, his ancestors supplied the race with meat and defended it from destruction by wild beasts) that he finds his greatest satisfaction; it serves to render the degradation and uselessness of his existence less obvious to himself and to others than if he passed his life reclining in an arm chair.

On Yorkshire moors, today, may be seen walls of sod behind which hide certain human males, while hard-laboring men are employed from early dawn in driving birds toward them. As the birds are driven up to him, the hero behind his wall raises his deadly weapon, and the bird, which it had taken so much human labor to rear and provide, falls dead at his feet; thereby greatly to the increase of the hunter's glory, when, the toils of the chase over, he returns to his city haunts to record his bag. One might almost fancy one saw arise from the heathery turf the shade of some ancient Teutonic ancestor, whose dust has long reposed there, pointing a finger of scorn at his degenerate descendant, as he leers out from behind the sod wall. During the later Roman empire, Commodus, in the degenerate days of Rome, at great expense had wild beasts brought from distant lands that he might have the glory of slaying them in the Roman circus; and medals representing himself as Hercules slaying the Nemean lion were struck at his order. We are not aware that any representation has yet been made in the region of plastic art of the hero of the sod wall; but history repeats itself—that also may come in time. It is to be noted that these hunters are not youths, but often ripely adult men, before whom all the lofty enjoyments and employments possible to the male in modern life, lie open.

The Passing of Old Ideals.

From "When Love is Liberty and Nature Law."

Having given up the absolute indissolubility and sacredness of marriage, as being too cruel, some dissolutions and re-arrangements have to be allowed. But once allow the tie to be put aside in cases of gross cruelty, and you have the difficulty of defining what amount of cruelty is gross enough. Soon sympathy will be expressed for marital miseries where the injury of husband to wife (or the other way) is of kinds not allowed for in Acts; and, ultimately, the law has to be strained, literally, to let some captives go free. Then it becomes repugnant to our finer feelings to sanction any law that compels a man and woman to live together when the lives of one or both are made wretched in consequence. Contemplate a case. Put yourself in the place of a wife who either dreads her husband, or looks upon him with disgust; and you see that the possibility of such a relationship being made permanent by law condemns the law.

The Clitheroe case is a sign in the right direction. Here the mere refusal of a woman to live with the man she had married, but found a dislike to, was considered by the courts sufficient ground for granting a separation. You see that, if you allow the happiness of the parties concerned to be the consideration of first importance, you relegate the legal marriage contract to a place of secondary importance. The growth of sympathy with suffering humanity abolishes the cast-iron rigidity of the law, and the list of "adequate causes" for divorce is extended. But where are you to draw the line? Once allow exceptions to the absoluteness and sacredness of the marriage tie, and there is no stopping place until every individual idosyncrasy is satisfied, and the marriage law is as dead as a door nail. Or, what is the same thing, marriage becomes a ceremony which any couple may go through or not, as it pleases their sentimentalities; and those who elect to go through can have what ceremonials they like, from jumping over a broom-stick to the most gorgeous pageant and priestliness.

Readers of George Eliot's "Middlemarch" will recollect how young Mrs. Casaubon sticks faithfully to her husband, an elderly, peevish, ailing creature, whom she has married because of his erudition; and how she submits to martyrdom of the emotions from a sense of duty, born of the fact that she was lawfully the wife of her husband. Her side-affection for Will Ladislaw is an emotion to be smothered. At last she is released from her marriage vows by the timely death of the old man. But even then she hesitates to accept the penniless Will Ladislaw, although he cannot live happily without her, nor she without him. Her late husband had so willed his property that it would only go to his widow so long as she did not marry Will Ladislaw. A sense of duty to the dead man still holds Mrs. Casaubon, and it requires an immense deal of pressing on the part of Ladislaw to induce her to marry him. Ultimately she agrees to it, saying she will want no new clothes, will go in for domestic economy, and live on love and the beggarly £700 a year she happens to have in her own right.

Count Tolstoi is bolder. His heroine, Anna Karenina, in somewhat an analagous predicament to that of Mrs. Casaubon, does not wait for the death of her husband, but gives herself up to Vronsky as only a passionate lover can. And on Vronsky's part, although, ere he saw Anna, he had got nearly up to the proposal point, with a young lady named Kitty, his meeting with Anna Karenina turned his love into a new channel, which he was powerless to resist. For Anna he gave up everything. Now, I apprehend that all this will shock those who believe in the sacredness of the marriage institution. But those who believe in the sacredness of the individual will judge Anna and Vronsky by natural, not legal, standards. If Anna was guilty of a crime, it must be for an aggression of some sort. But, in accepting the happiness that came to her by way of Vronsky, she aggressed upon nobody. Her body is her own, and, in bestowing her affections upon whom she pleases, she acts within her own rights—i. e., within the limits of equal freedom. One explanation, indeed, makes her conduct quite natural and inevitable. She had been married, when young, to Karenina, a cold-natured legislator, more as a matter of convenience than of love. But her emotional nature was starved under Karenina. Consequently, when she met Vronsky, in whom she found her needs satisfied, and for whom she was equally his requirement, their mutual attraction overcame all barriers. But it is not even necessary to know Anna's antecedents for a justification of her conduct, for she is accountable only to herself in the bestowal of her affections. If she has first to get the consent of parents, husband, the police, or God, then she is a slave. To proceed with the story. Karenin magnanimously forgives his wife for her infidelity towards himself while Anna, now living with Vronsky, undergoes such mental torturings, as the cumulative effect of many influences, that she ends her unhappiness with suicide.

The novel of Anna Karenina is good. No timely death of her husband is introduced like that which spoils George Eliot's "Middlemarch." Such a death can only be regarded as a sop and a sacrifice to popular superstition. It saves the respect for law and custom, and, at the same time, allows devoted lovers their satisfaction. But the novelist who is true to nature will depict the antagonism between man and the artificial trappings which bind him, without any reconciling artifice. If true love takes no cognizance of human laws and limitations, our sympathies will not be long in maintaining the latter at the expense of the former.

It must not be overlooked, however, that when a sense of right and wrong is implanted in the individual, on the basis of arbitrary priestly or legal authority, the conscience so formed will have great, if not insuperable, difficulty in reconciling the claims of nature to any kinds of happiness which have been condemned by theological or political creeds. Any giving way to natural impulse in contravention of such creeds is likely to be followed by a sense of shame and attempts at penance, unless the creeds themselves are thrown overboard from an enlightened conviction of their worthlessness.

With Anna Karenina her educational bias was so nearly balanced against her attraction to Vronsky that, whether love or duty was followed, she was doomed to unhappiness in the end. She had not been brought up under free conditions. Few, indeed, have. Also, it is possible that Tolstoi may have put into Anna's disposition some of his own ascetic yearnings. For Tolstoi, as you know, now decries all cohabitiveness and all other earthly desires, thinking that the extinction of sense, and, consequently, of mankind altogether, is the goal to make for.

I like the logicalness of Tolstoi's attitude. It is at least manlier than that of the moralising portion of the community, who tell you that sexual love is vicious without the sanction of Church or State, and holy with such sanction. Tolstoi at least recognizes that it is the thing itself that has to be considered on its merits, without the legal distinctions between tweedledum and tweedledee. Either sexual love is good in itself, or it is bad. If it is bad, then Tolstoi's attitude is the logical one to take; the most extremely ascetic conduct is to be inculcated, although it runs to annihilation.

But if the tender passion is good, the only points for discussion upon it are whether any given course of action leads to happiness. And, as the parties concerned must always be the final judges as to their own happiness requirements, the only field for outside interference is to stop aggression—such as when a woman is carried off against her will, or is compelled to live with a man against her will, or vice versa.

A farewell social in honor of James F. Morton, Jr., will take place on Sunday, Dec. 24, 7:30 p. m., at 105 Wells St. The friends of our work and the radical propaganda in general who desire to meet our guest socially will avail themselves of this opportunity. Supper will be served to those desiring it. Admission free. Supper 25 cents. Comrade Morton will deliver an address at 913 Masonic Temple, Sunday, Dec. 24, 3 p. m. It will be convenient for those attending the afternoon meeting to go thence to the Wells Street hall. All friends are cordially invited.

Lucifer's Clubbing List.

	Retail Price	With Lucifer
Truth Seeker, N. Y.	3.00	2.75
" " England,	50	1.30
Free Society,	50	1.25
Appeal to Reason,	50	1.3
Coming Nation,	50	1.25
Suggester and Thinker,	1.00	1.60
Discontent,	50	1.25
Cosmopolitan,	1.00	1.75
Youth's Companion,	1.75	2.40
Our Little Ones,	1.00	1.50
Century Magazine,	4.00	4.50
Freedom, England,	50	1.30
Freedom, Washington,	50	1.25
Arena	2.50	2.25
Open Court	1.00	1.75

These prices apply only to PAID UP or new subscribers who send in the amount for both papers at the same time. If other papers, not in this list, are desired, please drop us a card and we will give clubbing rates with them.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper in t has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

Our Allied Superstitions.

The article of H. B. Monroe, entitled "Lucifer or the Light-Bearer, Which?"—No. 785, I think, has been the means of setting in motion thought-waves, thought-vibrations, such as he himself scarcely anticipated, perhaps. Only a small portion of what has been written on the subject of change of name, and of enlarging the work of our publishing house, has hitherto been printed by us. Many of the answers called out by the invitations, general and particular, came to us marked, "personal" "private," or "not for publication." The greater portion of those thus marked, have opposed change of name, so far as I now recall.

Among those marked "not for public but for you," is a long and carefully written letter from one to whose credit it may truthfully be said that comparatively few of our many helpers have earned better than he the right to speak their minds—fearlessly and openly on this or any other subject that concerns the work to which our publications have been devoted. Though not written for publication I opine the writer of this letter will not consider it a breach of editorial privilege, or of social comity, if I reproduce here a few paragraphs as illustrative of the way in which my long defense of our use of the name Lucifer has struck many, perhaps, of those who patiently read said defense. Among other points our friend, whom I shall call "D." has this to say:

"We have an Unabridged Webster's dictionary in the house, evidently not the edition you refer to. I open it to Lucifer and read.

"'1. The planet Venus, so-called from its brightness.'

"'2. Satan—"And when he falls he falls like Lucifer never to hope again."—Shak.'"

Proceeding, our friend D. comments thus:

"It seems to me it was work enough for one man—or even two men, to undertake for a life job—to crush out sex slavery in the world, without also undertaking to change the world's use of an ancient word; especially when this use of the word was sanctioned by such authority as Shakespeare has been able to attain. The fact that your use of the word Lucifer is the original meaning, and that the common use is a perverted meaning, does not change the matter. You undertook at one time the accomplishment of two very heavy jobs, either one of them more than any two men should expect to accomplish in a life time. I believe that you would have accomplished a great deal more than you have towards the sexual freedom of woman had your work not been hampered by the Lucifer millstone."

Yes, Bro. D., I was aware that later editions of Webster's Unabridged had been "expurgated." This was to be expected. It is a prime necessity for the continued life of theologic superstition that the masses of people be kept in ignorance of what even theologians, of the more liberal and honorable sort, have said about popular errors. Noah Webster, though a Christian theologian during a large part of life, was not always such. His biographer, Rev. Chauncey A. Goodrich, D. D., says:

"There was a period from the time of his leaving college, to the age of forty, when he had doubts as to some of those doctrines [the doctrines of his Puritan ancestors,] and rested in a different system."

Very probably it was when he rested in a different system, the system that Andrew White and other modern investigators have shown to have always been in "conflict" with religion the system that rests on the demonstrated facts of science—it was doubtless when he was more of a scientist than theologian that Webster decided to quote the authorities that show that ignorance and bigotry alone make Lucifer a name of the orthodox devil.

But now that neither Noah Webster nor his son William G., are alive to protest against the alteration,—the outrage—the later revisers of the greatest of American dictionaries have left out some of the more important testimony in favor of science and against theologic superstition.

I repeat, such eliminations, such expurgations, such outrages, are to be expected. So desperate have become the fortunes of the ambitious and power-loving hierarchies, in those days of "higher criticism," of skepticism within as well as without the churches, that those whose living depends upon the integrity of these hierarchies will probably not hesitate to rob the dead of his hard earned honors in the way of giving to the world a truthful and impartial lexicon, or book of authoritative definitions of all the words now in use.

I thoroughly agree with, or freely assent to also, the statement that the attempt to accomplish the destruction of sex slavery and theologic superstition in one life time is a heavy job, or rather "two very heavy jobs," as friend D. puts the case. But what does our good friend mean by "a life time?" Does he mean the ordinary life time of an individual person? or the life time of a people, a nation or of the human race? If all those who have worked for the good of their kind had looked no further than the life time of the generation in which they then lived, and had confined their efforts to the probable effects upon themselves and their contemporaries, the progress of the world, meager and unsatisfactory as it is, would doubtless have been more unsatisfactory still.

But speaking of the attempt to change "the world's use of the word Lucifer."—Is it really necessary that we attempt to do any such thing? What does Webster say?—mutilated as we now find the later editions? According to the definitions quoted by our friend, the first and principal definition given of the word Lucifer by Webster is not "devil" at all, but "the planet Venus, so-called from the brightness." And why so called from its brightness? Simply because the word itself means "light-bringing," as Webster's etymologic derivation shows.

If Webster, then, gives the first and principal meaning of Lucifer to be "Venus,"—the morning star, when it rises in the morning, what becomes of the statement that the world's use of Lucifer is something devilish or demoniacal? If this latter had been the world's use of the word, should not Webster have given the first and principal definition in accord with this fact?

But it is true, doubtless, that the ignorant and the superstitious world does take the secondary and acquired meaning, the corrupted meaning, to be the true meaning of the word, and that the comparative few, the cultured and the enlightened few, use the word in its original, its rightful sense. What then? Shall we yield the point to the ignorant and superstitious masses, or shall we stand in with the cultured, the enlightened few? Has our friend ever read the lines,

"They are slaves who will not be
In the right with two or three."

As to the futility of trying to change the world's use of an ancient word I would like to ask what the "higher criticism" people, the Unitarians, the Christian Scientists, Universalists, etc., are doing in regard to the ancient word "God?" Are they not moving heaven and earth, so to speak, in an effort to change the popular, the ignorant and superstitious understanding of that ancient word? If I had any use for the word God I would be trying to help these people to change its meaning, but, as Laplace,—when asked by Napoleon why he had left the word God out of his cosmogony of the Universe—answered, "Sire I had no need of that hypothesis," so also I find no need of the god-idea, and therefore no need for that ancient word except to show the slaver that inheres in the worship of such ideas, or ideals.

As to Shakespeare's authority—just a few words, for I find my article running away with me—like the man who foolishly yoked himself up with a calf.

It is very true that our poets have done much to enslave mankind, as well as to free them from bondage. Whether Shakespeare, the supposedly ignorant comedian, or Francis Bacon the profound scholar and thinker, wrote Shakespeare's plays, it is evident to all careful readers that the author of those plays simply voiced the popular concepts, opinions, dogmas or superstitions of the time. Belief in miracles; belief in ghosts and witchcraft; belief in "spells," "charms," incantations, etc.; belief in the divine right of kings, and the divine right of man to own and rule woman—as when Petruchio says of his newly wedded wife:

"She is my house, my field, my horse, my ass, my anything. There she stands; touch her whoever dares!"

As a good Christian and believer in all the commands of the God of the "Bible," the author of Shakespeare could do no less, when he remembered that the wife is scheduled with a man's chattels that must not be coveted by his neighbors. So much for the "authority" of Shakespeare as a guide for men of reason and science, as I know Brother D. to be.

How, then, is it possible to change the world's thought in regard to the sex slavery of woman and not also change this thought in regard to all its interrelated, its co-related, its allied superstitions? I confess I know of no way in which it can be done. The God-and-Devil idea must go. There is no room for them in the world's regenerated thought, and should be no use for them in its reformed vocabulary. In naming our paper the best scientific term was chosen without reference to the fact that some of our ignorant and brutish ancestors had prostituted it to bad uses. (As before said, however, a critical examination of mythology shows that even the fabled Lucifer had a very honorable and noble pedigree.) We are dealing with scientific pedigrees, however and not with those of fancy and fable, and to stand for scientific truth is to incur the opposition, the hatred, the enmity of the ignorant masses who are ruled by the ignorant or the mercenary and power-loving hierarchies of the world.

Our friend D., however he may criticize us in the use of the name Lucifer, is not in favor of changing the name of the paper. He says near the close of his long and very interesting communication:

"This is what seems to me best. Lucifer has been published more than sixteen years with Moses Harman as its editor and leading spirit. It has had a steady growing list of readers and an increasing influence. Mr. Harman still likes the name Lucifer, and sees no reason for change, but many reasons against the change, and I doubt very much if he would be able to write such stirring editorials under any other name. Therefore I vote to retain the name, but I think it would be best to drop the subtitle Light Bearer. The title Lucifer without explanation would no doubt have its influence in dispelling a belief in the devil."

I should like to copy much more from this and from other letters marked "personal," but time is up for putting these lines into the mail. So often has Uncle Sam failed to deliver my letters promptly that I wish to run no risk of being late for the printer.

Only a few more days of 299—E. M.—for deliberation in regard to proposed changes. What shall your answers be, good friends, all?

M. HARMAN.

Thayer, Miss. Dec. 17 '99.

Why Marriage is a Failure?

Synopsis of Address by James F. Morton, Jr., before Lucifer Circle, Dec. 13.

Every social institution must be tested by its actual results in promoting human welfare and human happiness. Neither its antiquity nor the universality of its acceptance is a safe criterion.

No idea is too sacred to be subjected to the most searching criticism. If true, it can stand the test, and justify itself in the eyes of all. If false, it deserves to perish; and no man should mourn its downfall. That the marriage system of to-day is a conspicuous failure, few careful investigators are prepared to deny. It has not proved to be a successful solution of the sex question. It is merely one of many experiments in sex relationship which have been made in the course of the centuries by both savage and civilized peoples. Anthropological research among the more primitive races reveals the widest divergence of marriage customs and ideas. Monogamy in its strictest aspect is found in various tribes. Practical promiscuity is occasionally noted. Some tribes are rigidly endogamous, others are rigidly exogamous. In some cases, a great degree of sexual freedom is allowed before marriage, after which absolute constancy is rigorously enforced. Elsewhere, strict chastity is demanded up to the point of marriage, and the widest license tolerated afterwards. In some countries, incest is regarded as a highly normal form of sex relationship; in others, it is ranked among the grosser forms of sexual perversion. These instances, which might be almost indefinitely multiplied, simply prove that in sex, as in every other department of life, no single and unvarying standard has been able to maintain a lasting supremacy over all others. Here, as elsewhere, the evolutionary principle is constantly at work modifying social customs in obedience to economic necessity and to increasing comprehension of the laws of nature.

Many of our errors in social philosophy arises from a failure to comprehend the principle of relativity. Each individual must think and learn for himself; and many of his lessons must be gained through personal experience. In like manner, each generation has its own lessons to learn, not by a blind adhesion to the forms of the past, but by using the knowledge already attained as a stepping-stone to further attainments. An institution, evolving of necessity from antecedent conditions, meets a real necessity, and represents the best possible expression of a given stage of human development. War, slavery, church, state, feudalism, capitalistic industry, and marriage, are all examples of the same principle. The error, from which countless miseries have arisen, lies in holding up these imperfect experiments as permanent factors in human life. When an institution has come to rest on authority rather than on an appeal to reason, it is already outgrown; and its doom, though delayed, is certain. The form may remain, even for centuries; but the life has gone.

The marriage system of to-day is condemned already in the forum of reason. The joint product of temporary economic conditions and of blind experimenting in days of darkness and mental ignorance, it has been invested with an artificial sanctity by the self-seeking devices of priestcraft, and crystalized into an authoritarian institution by the invasive decrees of government. Around it an absurd code of morals has gradually clustered. Jealousy, the manifestation of the spirit of ownership and possession, is considered almost a virtue, instead of what it really is—an unconscious recognition of one's own inferiority, and a vice of the most contemptible nature. Prostitution so closely allied to marriage as to have been called its twin sister, and all other forms of sexual vice are among the commonest features of latter-day civilization. The prevalent unhappiness in the marriage relation is ascribed to every source except the true one—the inherent defect in the institution itself. The failure is admitted; but its cause is recognized only by the few who dare investigate with an unbiased mind.

Marriage is a failure, because it tends to substitute contract for love, as a basis of sex relationship; because it rests on authority, rather than on reason; because it ignores all natural laws of development, and attempts to force all individuals into the same mould; because it establishes arbitrary and artificial standards of morality; because it is the stronghold of an unhealthy asceticism, born of superstition and priestly domination; because it is the fruitful source of discord and misery; because it tends to narrow the range of interests and sympathies; because it constitutes a denial of individuality, ignoring the fact that man or woman is first of all a human being, and only secondary a related being; and because it is merely a crude survival of the past, and out of harmony with advancing human needs.

The remedy? While that is not to-night our special theme I am bound to express my conviction that the only sure cure lies in the establishment of full liberty. As the evil has come through authority, it must be met by the establishment of the opposite principle. Free men and women will find their truest happiness in creating such ideals of love, parentage, and the home, as will lead to happiness undreamed of in our half-baked civilization of to-day. Whether variety or monogamy shall be the prevailing practice under free conditions, will be determined by the free choice of individuals, based on the common experience. No true idea has anything to lose by submitting to comparison with opposing views. The forcible invasion of the right of free speech, so often witnessed to-day is evidence that the advocates of marriage dare not leave their institution to the test of its intrinsic merit. They confess defeat in open discussion, and attempt to stay the march of progress by invasive violence. These common tactics of bigots and despots never avail in the long run. The race is outgrowing marriage, as it has outgrown chattel slavery, and will one day outgrow the economic slavery of to-day. All around us, there are free and brave men and women, who dare assert their right to themselves, even under the somewhat discouraging conditions of our present life. Their number is continually increasing; and the day is at hand when the marriage fetich will be relegated to the lumber yard of dead institutions.

Miscellaneous Observations.

BY R. B. KERR.

The editor sees indications that Lucifer is about to become a respectable paper, and he thinks it will be a terrible misfortune. But what is respectability? Is not a respectable man one whose words and deeds seem to ordinary people conducive to the welfare of society? And is not a disreputable man one who is supposed by ordinary people to wish to do something injurious to himself or others?

* * *

On the great majority of questions respectability is in the right, and it has done an infinite amount of good. Our ancestors of a thousand years ago were drunkards and gamblers to a degree that we cannot now imagine, but the steady pressure of respectability from century to century, and age to age, has brought these evils within very narrow limits. Wife-beating used to be considered a very mild offense, but respectability has all but exterminated it. What the world needs is a higher standard of respectability. We must teach people that it is not respectable to force sexual association on a woman against her will, even if she is one's wife; or to bring children into the world in such circumstances that they are sure to be miserable; or to get into a frenzy of jealousy, and shoot one's neighbors. Some day these will be common-places to Mrs. Grundy, and then Lucifer will not only be a respectable paper, but may even be accepted as "the glass of fashion, and the mould of form."

* * *

Lucifer is a great champion of the welfare of women, but I think it hardly realizes how many people there are in the world who resemble it in that respect. All women desire the good of women, and I think most men do. All men have had mothers, and most of the influential ones have daughters; and there are probably few days on which the ordinary man does not give some consideration to the welfare of women. But the subject is a complex one, and so much nonsense is talked in the world that people are justly suspicious of anything new. If we talked a little less about "fighting" and more about "teaching," we might get along more quickly. To come upon well meaning people with the war-whoop of the savage is about the worst way to inspire confidence in one's intentions, or in the soundness of one's judgment.

* * *

A good deal of cant is talked about the freedom of the press The doctrine of the divine right of kings is replaced by a belief in the divine right of printers. The theory is that a printer should not be responsible for the ordinary consequences of mental suggestion. If he says it is a good thing to blow up people with bombs, and a starving man accepts the suggestion and blows up somebody with a bomb, so much worse for the starving man, but not for the printer. This is rubbish. The man who applies the match to the brain deserves punishment as much as the man who lights the fuse.

* * *

There has lately been much ado about egoism and altruism, and most of it has proceeded from ignorance of the meaning which ethical writers give to these words. The word "altruism," invented by Comte, and much used by Herbert Spencer, means "consideration for others," while "egoism" means "consideration for self." Our primordial ancestors, being sexless and unsocial were absolute egoists; not merely indifferent about others, but ignorant that others existed. Few changes have been of such world-historic interest as the change from the pure egoism of the protozoon to the partial altruism of such creatures as the dog and man, which is often strong enough to make them give their lives for others.

* * *

There are some writers, however, like Oscar Wilde and Frederick Nietsche, who quite understand what altruism is, but think it has been overdone. They think that if we looked after each other a little less, and were a little more selfish, the virtue of self-help would be more developed. But I maintain that, in the interests of the weak, the altruistic movement has not gone nearly far enough. There is still much to improve in the treatment of women and children, while our behavior towards the lower animals is positively outrageous. So long as little boys cannot look at a cat without picking up stones to throw at it, and so long as our streets are full of lean and weary cab-horses with the bones sticking almost through their skin, there will be much need for the apostles of altruism.

* * *

Such unscientific expressions as "natural right" and "inalienable right," which have been handed down from the revolutions of the eighteenth century, continue to deface modern literature. They belong to the time when the universe was supposed to be governed according to some established moral order. Rights are merely social conventions, and a man who says he has a right to do a thing means either that his neighbors allow him to do it, or that he thinks they should allow him.

Chicago Society of Anthropology.

Jonathan Mayo Crane will deliver an address on "The Evolution of the Family" on Sunday, Dec. 24, 1899 at 3 p. m., in room 309 Masonic Temple. Admission free.

VARIOUS VOICES.

David Overmeyer, Topeka, Kan.:—A record of your life wil be very interesting reading to a wide circle of friends of liberty, even though they may not agree with you in all things. I consider that you have suffered martyrdom for the cause of a free press.

A. A. Caswell, Pasadena, Cal.:—I herewith enclose fifty cents for the continuance of the best publication on earth. I want it to come, and I will ever strive to make myself a worthy temple for Lucifer to rise and shine in. Many times would like to speak but I have no time for combat or criticism. Am improving my daily and minute heaven by living together in peace and harmony with all mankind. An ideal home would be best in Southern California than most any other place, for it is tropical and temperate and thus 999 out of 1,000 would like it here.

Robert C. Adams, Montreal, Canada.—I am glad to hear from you away down south and I heartily wish I was there too instead of away up north in gloom and cold, but I try to keep brightness and warmth within. I have never seen any good reason advanced for the change of name of Lucifer, expressive, time-honored and endeared as it has become, and I do not believe a particle of good will come from "monkeying" with it. If a monthly Lucifer can exist, all the better. New Humanity's effort suggests doubt but you and Lillian are the best judges and in the multitude of counsellors is—perplexity. Your friends will value the paper under any name and its fragrance will be as unchanged as that of the rose. I am glad you are writing the autobiography. I shall want at least five copies.

Sarah S. Rockill, Alliance, O.:—I think Aurora is a good name but I think the parent should name his own child—it is more to him than to anyone else; and yet without other's co-operation there would be no paper to name. I write now to ask if you or any of your readers have the poem the first verse of which is herein enclosed. A friend is very anxious to get it, and I know of no better way to find it, than to ask among Lucifers readers.

> "Child of my love, I never yet have looked upon thy face
> I never yet have clasped thee in a mother's fond embrace,
> As yet, close nestling to my heart.
> Of my own life thou art a part."

H. Houghton Chaapel, M. D., Palmetto, Fla.:—I have always liked Lucifer for the name of your valuable little paper, but have no objection to having it changed if thought advisable. As regards a monthly, if you publish one we shall take it, always paying in advance, of course. I question, however, with your health, if it is best to take such an onerous task upon yourself. You can write books and pamphlets—and if you have special times of ill feeling you need not be kept up to the very hour and day. A periodical is a different consideration. You have to be there, feeling well or ill. You should also consider this before taking up a greater task. Think whether your work spread over more years will not be of greater use to humanity than crowding it into a shorter period. I feel glad you are so pleasantly situated for your present labors. I presume you will hardly come this far south; if you do so we shall be glad to have you spend a few days with us.

Lucy N. Coleman, Syracuse, N. Y.,—There are no active reformers here, not one, so far as I know, who is broad enough to take the "Truth Seeker." The name Lucifer—if they understood it, or did not—would condemn it; nevertheless it is your paper and you have marvelously sustained it, and should yourself decide its name. If you have encouragement sufficient to feel that it will live, why then, publish a monthly and call it Lucifer. I liked the "New Humanity," but it died. But that is no reason why a new Lucifer, monthly should not prosper.

I knew you as a prisoner for "conscience sake," as I knew Mr. Heywood for the same, and D. M. Bennett. It was through the prison that the introduction came—and also to Lillian and Mr. Walker. When I think of the noble army of reformers who have been behind prison doors for conscience sake I feel very insignificant, but I have done what I could.

I will send the dollar for your book soon. Take care of your health, give my love to whomever is caring for you, and believe me yours for humanity's sake.

H. E. Allen, Berwick, Ill.—I fully concur in the views you have given concerning the change of name for Lucifer. I now say, for one, let the name stand just as it is. It is a question with me if the person who would be frightened by the name is really worth saving, that is, sexually and economically.

In regard to the proposed monthly, I am considerably in doubt. We are now commencing a presidential campaign year and such years are invariably disastrous to business. The experience with "Our New Humanity" does not perhaps warrant such a venture at this time. I fear it might even endanger the life of Lucifer. Would it not be better to put the extra effort in Lucifer and if possible double and treble its circulation? Besides the autobiography will require a great deal of extra work and expense and I anticipate that this will serve to arouse a great deal of new enthusiasm along the lines of sex ethics and race culture.

If I were to make any suggestion as to change of name (the form is now all right) it would be this; Lucifer the Light Bearer A Journal of Sex Ethics and Race Culture.

But whatever change is made, let us all begin the new year with a determination to make Lucifer far more successful than it ever has been. Let us if possible engraft some of the prevailing socialist enthusiasm into the propaganda, and let us reach the 1000 mark with the autobiography in the year 1900.

How it Grew

First somebody told it.
Then the room wouldn't hold it.
So the busy tongues rolled it
Till they got it outside;
Then the crowd came across it,
Till it grew long and wide.

This lie brought forth others,
Dark sisters and brothers,
And fathers and mothers,
A terrible crew;
And while heedless they hurried
The people their flurried,
And troubled and worried,
As lies always do.

—Selected.

For the Holidays.

"A Persian Pearl," and other essays by Clarence S. Darrow. Any lover of the literature of freedom would be proud of such a present as this. The book comprises:

1—A Persian Pearl.
2—The Skeleton in the Closet.
3—Walt Whitman.
4—Realism in Art and Literature.
5—Robert Burns.

The publishers have given this work a dress in keeping with the high quality of the text. The book is printed on rough-surface English "Boxmoor" paper, rubicated side leaves and initials. Edition limited to 980 copies, each book numbered. Price, in boards, $2. In limp green chamois, silk lined. $2.40.

PROSPECTUS

Of the Life Historyof Moses Harman.

I. Ancestry. Early Life and Struggles to get an Education

II. "Travels in Faith." From Methodism to Universalism and thence to Rationalism.

III. Experiences as a Heretic and Abolitionist in a Slave State—Religion, War and Politics.

IV. Experiences as Teacher, Preacher and Magistrate—or "Justice of the Peace."

V. Experiences in Journalism—A Ten Years' Fight in the Courts. Reflections on our Judiciary, State and Federal.

VI. Prison Experiences. A "Third Term." Letters from and to the Prisoner.

VII. Reflections on Prison Discipline. "Crimes Against Criminals."

VIII. The Movement for Freedom of Womanhood and Motherhood, and for the Right of Children to Be Born Well.

IX. Relation of this Movement to All Other Reform Movements.

X. Present outlook for this Movement. "Duty of the Hour."

This book will comprise about four hundred pages; printed on good paper, new and clear type and good binding, with portrait of the author and of his daughter and helper, Lillian Harman. Price one dollar. Life and health permitting, the book will be ready for delivery to subscribers on or before June first, next. Subscriptions solicited, so that we may know how large an edition to issue.

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races." Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III., Co-operation; Chapter IV., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, ten cts.

793.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

Books for the Holidays.

The publishers' price of the books in the following list is forty cents each. We bought them at a little less than half of that. The postage averages about four cents on each book. Half the publishers' price with postage added is twenty-four cents. We will send any book in the list, postage prepaid, for twenty-five cents, the extra cent going to pay for the work of wrapping and mailing. Send in your order at once if you want them before the holidays and the books will be sent promptly.

Every book in the list is handsomely bound in cloth and is printed in clear type on good paper. The number following the name of the book indicates the number of its pages:

Bracebridge Hall, by Washington Irving. 288. With 110 illustrations designed by Randolph Caldecott.

Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, by Lord Byron, complete and unabridged. 270.

Crown of Wild Olives, by John Ruskin. 282. Consists of four lectures on work, traffic, war, and the future of England, with an interesting appendix.

Dolly Dialogues, by Anthony Hope. 202.

Dreams, by Olive Schreiner. 128.

Lalla Rookh, by Thomas Moore, 327. With copious notes.

Master and Man, by Tolstoi 117.

Sartor Resartus, by Thomas Carlyle, (with notes and index.) 344.

Sketch Book, by Washington Irving. 464. This book contains the famous story of Rip Van Winkle.

Samantha at Saratoga, or "and" After Fashion, by Josiah Allen's wife, (Marietta Holly), profusely illustrated, 372.

Tanglewood Tales, by Nathaniel Hawthorne, 284.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint: A solemn protest against the present demoralising management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduce from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

Government Analyzed. By John R. Kelso. The chapter headings are: "Derivations and Definitions of Political Terms; Various Forms of Government; General Principles of Government; Functions of Government; Origin of Government; Declaration of Independence; Articles of Confederation; Defects of the Confederation; Formation of the Constitution of the United States; Constitution of the United States; Taxation; Tariff or Protection: War; Punishments; Marriage; Religion: Prohibition; Money; What a Government Should Be." 120 pages. Price reduced to $1.00.

With Lucifer one year to a new subscriber, $1.50.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES.

BY E. C. WALKER.

No man is wise enough to foresee the secondary results of any proposed restriction, and no history is copious enough to record the evils that have ensued upon denials of liberty.—George E. Macdonald.

CONTENTS:

Love and the Law,	3
The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal,	12
The Continuity of Race-Life; and Tyranny,	16
Food and Sex Fallacies, a criticism,	17
When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varietists,	26
The New Woman: what is she? what will she be?	31
The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes,	44
Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce,	45
Love: Its Attraction and Expression,	51
Is She an Honest Girl?	53
Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts,	54
Social Radicals and Parentage,	57
Anthropology and Monogamy,	59
Love and Trust Versus Fear,	60
Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life,"	61

Price 15 cents. For sale at this office.

CULTIVATION OF PERSONAL MAGNETISM.

A TREATISE ON HUMAN CULTURE. BY LEROY BERRIER.

This treatise reverses the common belief that Personal Magnetism, Life Force and Mind Force can not be cultivated and acquired. It is a Complete Course of Instructions that will enable all who possess them, to become powerfully magnetic. Price, $1. Postage, 5 cents.

Sent on receipt of price. Address Moses Harman, 507 Carroll Ave. Chicago, Ill.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.
This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Women in Marriage Slavery

Will find in HILDA'S HOME a story exposing the horrors of their condition as faithfully and as fearlessly as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" exposed the horrors of Negro slavery in the South. The story is more entertaining than many modern works of fiction and the plain truths it tells will find responsive echoes in the aching, bursting hearts of many women who know the galling effects of marriage thralldom.

The book contains 425 pages. Price handsomely bound in cloth, $1. In paper cover 50 cents. Send in your order NOW—especially if you want extra copies for distribution among your friends.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Persons Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 20 cents. Address Moses Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. E. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.

"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.

"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.

Sample pages free Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Missing Link Modern Spiritualism. By A. Leah Underhill. A book for all spiritualists and investigators. "Hear all sides, then decide." 22 chapters; 478 pages; 16 illustrations, including portraits of the Fox family. History of the Hydesville rappings, as given by eye-witnesses, the threats or mob violence; remarkable and well-attested manifestations; the "exposures" disposed of, etc. Handsomely bound in cloth. Publishers price, $1.50. On receipt of $1.27, and 13 cents for postage, we will send the book to any address.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be FREE; must enjoy the full privilege of satisfying the love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrially."—Page 263. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CITYLESS AND COUNTRYLESS WORLD", by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 4 0 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of communism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Free Love: A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of conscious love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 1874, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence 180 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave. Chicago.

Price 5 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 51. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, DEC. 30, E. M. 299. [C. E 1899.] WHOLE No. 794.

The Siren and the Toiler.

In whilom days, 'tis said, the siren's song
Lured to perdition and to evil ways,
Today another siren charms the throng—
The politician of these modern days.

At election time the siren tunes the lyre
And breathes a roundelay of love intense
For those who toil. And with an ardent fire
She coos and woos—makes promises immense.

The toiler, with his own importance pleased,
And dreaming of the glorious times to come,
Flocks 'round the siren—though he's cuffed and squeezed
In halls and squares—where'er her footsteps roam.

Then when her fondest hopes are realized
And she is mistress of the post she sought,
If not despised, at least unrecognized
The toiler stands—his wants and claims forgot.

But when election time comes 'round again
The siren sings the same old song of love,
And begs the toiler with all might and main
For one more chance her loyalty to prove.

'Twould seem that he'd now loath the false one's charms
And from her presence rather leap than jump—
Not on your life! He rushes to her arms,
Then casts his vote, and is the same old chump!

—C. Stettenpohl in the Typographical Journal.

Catherine de' Medici.

BY C. L. JAMES.

My present heroine appears to me, on the whole, about the least understood woman in history. No doubt she deserves as much obloquy as has been given her, but not for the causes ordinarily assigned. She was born at Florence in 1519. Her father, Lorenzo de' Medici, was not the famous usurper of that name, who on his death bed refused Savonarola's condition that he should "restore the liberties of Florence;" and whom the great preacher, accordingly, left to die unabsolved. This happened in 1492, the year of the discovery of America, and of Margaret of Navarre's birth. In 1494, ensued the French conquest of Italy, foretold by Savonarola; the Medicis were driven away by the people, whom the invaders found it expedient to conciliate; the management of a short-lived republic fell to Savonarola and Machiavelli. The secular government, in which Machiavelli was the ablest man, sealed its own doom when it gave up the prophet in 1498 to the vengeance rather of the pope (Borgia) than the Medici's, whose craft was usually gentle. In 1512 the despotism was restored, and Michiavelli ruined.

Lorenzo, father of Catherine, was grandson of his name sake, and perhaps the ablest politician in the restored tyranny. Its other great representatives, the popes Leo X., son of the "magnificent" Lorenzo, and Clement VII., (his nephew); were signally unlucky rulers. But Lorenzo II. though he did not actually reign in Florence, showed ability enough to command homage from the prematurely aged Machiavelli; who dedicated to him that manual of king-craft which has blackened his own name. In the ruin of Italy, enslaved and plundered a second time by all the barbarians of the north, the republican statesman had become willing to support even a native tyrant who might restore the national independence. Vain were such hopes, as they deserved to be.

Lorenzo had, besides Catherine, only one child, Alessandro, whose mother was a mulatto slave. Their father died in 1519. Alessandro's cousin, Pope Clement VII., designed him to inherit Florence. But in 1527 occurred the most awful blow which Italy had yet sustained—the sack of Rome by Bourbon's army. The people of Florence again expelled their tyrants. Two years later the pope had come to terms with the emperor (Charles V., employer of Bourbon against him) who now took Florence for Alessandro. During the siege, the rebels threatened to hang Catherine on the walls for both armies to shoot at.

In 1533, his Holiness, according to that miserable policy by which successive pontiffs ruined their country, had again joined the French against Charles, and arranged for the marriage of Catherine, who was only fourteen, to Henry, son of his new ally. Francis I. of chivalous reputation. From such a school, she emerged with ambition disproportioned to her opportunities. Her family is an almost unique example of merchants raised by talent for intrigue to royalty; she had already learned of Machiavelli; been the protege of Leo and Clement; imbibed the full intellectual stimulus of the Renaissance; shared in the struggles and sufferings imposed upon church and monarchy by the reformation.

It was with bitter mortification she found that her youth, her plainness (for she had no beauty), and the weakness of her decayed state, excluded her from all means by which power might be attained at the still half-barbarous court of France. For ten years after marriage, she had no children. A divorce was talked of; and the first recorded exhibition of her Italian tact, is that she threw herself at the feet of her father-in-law; declared her submission to the public interests; and vowed, if her husband took another wife, to be the humblest of her attendants. The generous heart of Francis was touched by this appeal to his sensibilities; and before long she bore several children, of whom five are disgracefully celebrated, as Francis II. Charles IX. Henry III., the Duke of Alencon, and Margaret of Valois. During the reign of her husband, Henry III. (1547-59), she was, however, eclipsed by his mistress, Diana of Poictiers; and after he was slain in one of the last French tournaments, she was eclipsed by her oldest son's wife, Mary, (Queen of Scots), who, with most characteristic judgment, insulted her as a "merchant's daughter."

But, in one year, Francis II. died, of ear-ache, a disease now seldom considered dangerous. Mary, whose position in France had become unpleasant, quitted that country, to work out her destruction in her own. She left, for guardians of her interest in France, the Duke of Guise, and his brother, the cardinal of Lorraine (now a German province, but then an independent state), whose sister was her mother.

During the reigns of Henry II. and Francis II. momentous events had taken place. The chronic war between France and the German (nominally Roman) Empire, was the salvation of growing Protestantism. The Guises, whose increasing power, as lords of an intermediate state, had been much dreaded by Francis I. under his successor, heroically defended Metz against the Germans, just after Charles V. had concluded a treaty with the Protestants. Thus the artful nobles of Lorraine strengthened themselves at once with the French monarchy and the church. They also took Calais from England, which was allied with Charles. Boundlessly powerful under Francis II. they persecuted the French Protestants with ruthlessness which gave rise to the first Huguenots insurrection (March, 1560). The Guises crushed this with merciless severity. But Catherine, who, of course, hated them, had also been getting on. She had endeared herself to her husband by managing the free people of Paris during his wars (1537). The arbitrary government of the Guises had set many Catholics against them; and she had formed a party of her own, made up from these mal-content Catholics and the Protestants. At the head of the latter were the King of Navarre, (husband of Margaret, wife of Francis I.) his brother, the Prince of Conde, and the great general Coligny.

Dynastic complications aided personal and religious. The house of Navarre and Conde represented the Bourbon branch of the royal family, which would succeed to the throne if that of Valois became extinct. And this actually happened, though it did not then seem very probable. The death of Francis made Catherine, head of this mixed party, supreme, as regent for her second son, Charles, who was only ten years old. Of herself, we observe, that she was over forty; plain as ever; fat, addicted to hunting, the fashionable amusement of her day, and to the pleasures of the table; reputed chaste, but versed in the use of other person's unchastity, and surrounded by gay ladies, who were called "her flying squadron." The plan of Catherine was to maintain Catholicity as the state religion, but to tolerate the Reformers. It was wholly impracticable in a feudal monarchy. The Guises massacred the Protestants, at Vassey; their friends employed by the government as peacemakers, did likewise elsewhere; the Protestants, wherever they were strong, retaliated. Coligny, who had hitherto advocated passive resistance, appeared as the Huguenot leader. The weak government was tossed backward and forward during eleven years of civil war, and mutual atrocities inflamed the animosity of both parties. The aged Catholic general Montmorency was killed after having surrendered at the battle of St. Denis, November 10. 1569. The Protestants excused it by alleging that he tried to kill the Scotch mercenary Stuart, to whom he had given up his sword.

Guise, the victor at the first action of Dreux, had been assassinated February 18, 1563. He bequeathed to Henry his son and successor inveterate hatred of the Reformers. Conde and Stuart were murdered by order of the Duc d' Anjou, subsequently Henry III. after they had surrendered at Jamac, 13th March, 1569. Coligny slaughtered whole Catholic garrisons in retaliation for a breach of the laws of war; and when some of the mercenary ruffians whom he employed, after the fashion of that time were killed by the peasants whom they harried, he shot half a dozen boors for each, without caring whether they were from the same village or not.

Meanwhile new and formidable powers were making the French war an European one. Scotland, hitherto a dependent ally of France, had become Protestant, and joined her old enemy England. Mary was an exile, imprisoned in England. Charles V. had bequeathed the throne of Spain to his son Philip II. whose ultra Catholic bigotry had driven the Netherlands into the Reformation and rebellion. England was aiding them. Henry of Guise had formed in France a purely Catholic party which was daily showing itself more plainly as Philip's tool. Among the Huguenots, ascendancy was passing to the young heir of Navarre (afterwards Henry IV. of France) who inherited extreme Protestant tenets from his mother Jeanne and his grandmother Margaret.

Thrice the government of which Catherine was head patched up a hollow peace among the nobles inflamed by religious and personal animosity and having estates large enough for military bases. The last treaty, August 1570, appeared the most hopeful. Henry of Navarre was to marry the king's sister Margaret—a decided blow to Guise, who had been courting her; his cousin the young prince of Conde married the princess of Cleves, thus uniting the French Protestants with those of the Netherlands; Queen Elizabeth, it was thought, would actually consent to marry the king's brother, Alencon, with whom she had been coquetting characteristically, for a long time.

With so much Protestant backing, it should have been possible for the crown to keep down Guise, and secure the Huguenots while retaining that form of Catholicity which public sentiment required. But though Elizabeth might have managed a task so delicate yet strenuous, it was beyond the abilities of Catherine. Coligny, naturally, would be satisfied with no such thing. His program was to drive Philip from the Netherlands; which would have put France at the head of Europe; but almost necessarily set her Catholics and Protestants to war again. A plan so bold, ambitious, and for the moment hopeful, was very alluring to the king. On the other hand, the whole Catholic party considered, as a matter of course, that if an opportunity ever were found to destroy all the Huguenot chiefs at one stroke, it must be taken. As early as 1565, Catherine and her son had talked of such a possibility to Alva, Philip's representative. The Marshal de Tavannes, who, among the Catholic warriors, was most in sympathy with Catherine's purely secular plan; and who always, on grounds of honor and policy, discountenanced any small treachery; declared during 1571, that the Protestant leaders seemed about to put themselves in the government's power; and, if they did, the moment was too precious to be lost. It was Catherine who brought them to do so. She had no such difficulty with any one else as the Queen of Navarre, who however died at Paris, reconciled to her cousin of France, June 8. 1572, just before her son married Margaret of Valois. Thus all the future was in Catherine's power. Of course the Catholics and Protestants were quarreling. There were words between Coligny and Tavannes. Some partisan of Guise fired at Coligny on August 22, and wounded him in the hand. But Catherine held the helm which all would have to turn with. Coligny, who saw this better than most people, was in favor of taking her into council with himself and the king. But the king said:

"I see you do not know my mother; she is the greatest meddler in the world."

She was, accordingly, left out; and this was what decided her. Often disappointed ambition had made the subtle Italian terrible. First Diana of Poictiers had stood between her and power; then Mary Queen of Scots; then, for a long time, Guise; and now it was Coligny. Some time before the fatal August 22, she and her favorite son, Henry, had talked with a partisan of Guise, about assassinating Coligny; but found him too weak and cowardly. Now that some one else had tried it and failed Catherine conceived the "necessity" of extreme measures.

The king, his mother, and his brother Henry, all visited the wounded Coligny, who insisted on talking with Charles alone. Catherine and Henry soon got out of the weak king what Coligny said; and found it to be mainly this, that the queen must be excluded from their counsels. Her thirst for personal ascendancy at once trampled over the wiser and further reaching plans which she had previously entertained. On this same day, August 23, Catherine, Henry, Tavannes, and some prominent Catholics held a private council. During the afternoon and night they three times visited the king, who, at length, yielded and the murder of Coligny was actually planned by his mother and brother, who were henceforth committed to the cause of Guise.

An hour before daylight, the dismal tolling of the bell of St. Germain's l'Auxerrois gave signal for the massacre of St. Bartholemew, which was executed by the troops under Tavannes, the original contriver of the crime, and Guise at the head of his partisans, intent on vengeance for his father's murder. As this was the great sin of Catherine's life, so it was the great blunder.

Though the massacre of St. Bartholomew was not the first of its kind, it was the last. Nothing could have turned out worse. As the moment of its perpetration a peal of jubilation filled the Catholic world. Philip laughed heartily on hearing of it—the only time he was ever guilty of such undignified conduct.

The Protestant coalition appeared to be shattered in the moment of its maturity. But a few weeks dispelled all these prospects. The French Protestants, though sorely smitten, were not destroyed. They defended Rochelle successfully; and extorted fresh concessions. They gained for their leader, Henry of Navarre, who saved his life during the massacre by becoming a Catholic, but returned to his party and his dominions at the right time, disregarding all the allurements which Catherine's "flying squadron" brought to bear on the most amorous of princes.

Catholic Germany seized the opportunity to repudiate the dishonor of Catholic France. England, of course, was aroused to mortal enmity. The French government, thus hopelessly isolated was at the mercy of its inveterate enemies Philip and the Guises. The king died, of pneumonia or bronchitis, May 30, 1574, and religious enemity related that his Huguenot nurse bore witness to his exclaiming:

"Oh, nurse, what blood! what murders! what evil counsels have I followed! I am lost, I see it well."

His brother Henry had meanwhile been chosen King of Poland. On learning the French throne was open to him he fled from this undesirable country, and made a leisurely progress home, stopping some time at Venice, where he offered to her patron goddess the irrevocable sacrifice of the Phrygian boy.

As adviser of another imbecile son, Catherine appeared more firmly seated in power than ever. But on May 8, 1588, just when Philip was launching the supposed invincible Armada against England, Guise, who, under this weak reign, had steadily upheld the national and Catholic banner against the Germans and the Protestants of Navarre, suddenly appeared alone in Paris. He was at once joined by the populace of that city; which was then fanatically Catholic, and as brave as it showed itself under Charles VI., Henry IV., and Louis XVI. The king and his mother found themselves prisoners of the Catholic League, which proceeded to call the states general or national parliament, at Blois, October 16.

Bold and energetic as Guise was, he had made a fatal mistake in leaving Paris, where he would have had the support of an energetic democracy, which his aristocratic temper undervalued. The king had a resource whose importance the daring rebel did not know. This emasculated sensualist was personally beloved by a circle of mignons (pederasts), every one of whom was a brave soldier, a desperate duelist, and on occasion a fearless murderer. On December 23 Guise was assassinated by these modern Spari and Harmodii in the very chamber of the king, who went in triumph to his mother with the words:

"I am King of France again. The King of Paris is dead.'

"Take care," she replied, "that you be not king of nothing. The cut is good, but I am not sure of the sewing."

These were her latest recorded words. Disappointed to the last, she died January 8, 1589, of rheumatism, with which she was ill at the time of the bold deed done without consulting her. Her prophesy proved true. Henry III. was assassinated by a fanatical monk while besieging Catholic Paris, August 1, following. His namesake of Navarre, who had divorced the childless and profligate Margaret, carried out his mother's program, with all the ability of Catherine, and without the fatal handicap of her crimes. He made it practical by destroying the feudal system, and establishing absolute monarchy, for which, perhaps, in her day, the time was hardly ripe. Among all Catherine's numerous children, not a single one proved able to perpetuate the line of Valois, "for sad shall be the end of a wicked race."

Lois Waisbrooker, the veteran writer of advanced literature, expects to soon begin the publication of a monthly paper, the title of which will be "Clothed with the Sun." Applications for sample copies, terms, etc., should be sent to Lois Waisbrooker, 1501½ Market St., San Francisco, Cal.

Notes and Queries.

BY EDGAR D. BRINKERHOFF.

To secure assent to good principles is a comparatively easy thing, but to secure the good practice demanded by these principles is a more difficult matter. An example in point is the teaching of reading to the little beginners in the schools. Horace Mann pointed out a half century ago the lack of philosophy in the alphabet mode of presenting the subject. Many schools then made a brave beginning with the word method. Soon educators realized that the principle upon which that method was based would logically require that the sentence be taken as the unit as the child necessarily thinks in sentences not in words. Before the sentence method had been in use many years, some one discovered that the parts of words are of some use after all and so Phonics was introduced. The great difficulties presented by our rather unphonetic written language led to the invention of a Phonetic Method and Dr. Leigh's books came into use here and there in every state from Maine to California. The teachers have always adhered to some correct principles, but as other equally good doctrines have at the same time been neglected, the practice has been abominable. Even to-day the best primary schools are teaching reading in ways that cultivate helplessness in the learner, and what shall we say of the average school? The condemned A. B. C. device is still generally in use the world over. Even when the book shall have been printed that will furnish a key enabling the young pupil to be self-helpful from the outset, the patrons of the schools will hanker after the good old way, and school-mistresses will continue to teach letters for bread and butter.

* * *

Present interferences prevent women from being actually master of the situation, but this does not disprove that she is naturally master of it. She has it in her nature to be able to protect and support herself and her children. She is so constituted that she would be able to hold her own in a community in which every one is guaranteed the right to possess his body and the product of his labor. Women's primitive state has not proved to be the most natural one. When we say that woman is naturally master of the situation, we mean that she is by nature able to secure a full share of the good things of life in a society that has become natural by the elimination of the less natural elements one after another. It is folly to assert that nothing is natural to society except what obtained while man was "in a state of nature." Civilization is more natural than barbarism.

* * *

Gold may be coined by stamping the metal as in the case of United States eagles. There is a way also effectually to coin gold by depositing it with the Treasury Department and stamping a note instead of the metal. Our gold certificates are an example of this method except that the metal deposited is also already coined; but gold bullion would do just as well. The gold certificates are kept at par by being receivable by the government for all public dues. There is a provision making the certificates redeemable on demand, but this is not necessary to sustain them at par. A house could be coined in substantially the same way; for although the house can not be deposited, it can be mortgaged for one third of its value and the mortgage deposited. The note or notes representing the house would pass at par if the public were convinced that the government (or the parties, for that matter) stood ready to receive them at par. Provision must of course be made that the whole transaction be settled up before the property has time to deteriorate enough to affect its value much and the building must be insured. All other kinds of wealth could be coined on the same principle, care being taken to issue notes for only a small proportion of the value of those forms of property liable to decrease rapidly in selling value. If the monetization in this way of wealth of every form other than gold were not forbidden by statute, the people could readily furnish themselves with an abundance of safe and sound circulating medium and would no longer be compelled to pay tribute to those rich enough to manipulate the precious metals to their own unfair advantage.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper which has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

Close of the Year--The Brunonian Era--Anno Domini--Christmas.

This issue of Lucifer the Light-Bearer is the last for the year 1899 of the Gregorian Calendar—Christian Era—or the year 299 of what some of us think should be called the Brunonian Era; sometimes called Era of Man; and also Era of Science; the era of demonstrated and applied sciences, as distinguished from the era of ignorance, the era of gods, of myths, of fables, of creeds, of traditions, of legends and of barbaric superstitions.

The common and popular custom of beginning the year ten days after the passing of the winter solstice is not scientific; also the division of the year into twelve calendar months of varying length, instead of into thirteen lunar months (moonth) of equal length, as indicated by the number of moons in the year—is equally unscientific and irrational.

But the difficulties that stand in the way of reform of these and other crudities of our popular methods of computing time are so numerous and formidable that few thinkers give thought enough to the matter to ask themselves seriously whether any thing can be done to reform the calendar. Very few seem to be aware that the superstitions that cluster round Anno Domini—"Year of Our Lord," have anything to do in holding back the car of progress, and with keeping the minds of men and women in slavery to the dead past. A noted "Christian evangelist" once said to me:

"You infidels acknowledge the truth of the Christian religion almost every day in the year."

"How? In what way?" said I.

"Every time you date a letter; every time you sign a promissory note, or execute a legal document or instrument of writing you confess that Jesus is the Christ. By the date you sign to these you acknowledge the truth of the Christian chronology, and in so doing acknowledge Christ, the Savior of mankind."

In answer I pointed my challenger to the dating of Lucifer, the Light-Bearer, in whose office this conversation took place. I explained to him that while, for convenience' sake, and to avoid perpetual misunderstandings, we accept the unscientific method of computing time by calendar instead of lunar months, and accept also other incongruities of the popular chronology, we do not accept Anno Domini. That we prefer an historical date to a mythical one, as a starting point for our calendar—a scientific date to a legendary one for the beginning of our era. That so far as authentic history knows the Nazarene was "without beginning of days or end of years;" no one knows when he was born or when he died; consequently it is impossible to make a scientific dating from either his birth or his death.

I explained to him the reasons that induced us to prefer the time of the death of the martyr to science, Giordano Bruno,—the fearless defender of the Copernican system of Astronomy, and of the right of private judgment in religious matters, as the date from which to compute years. I explained that it so happened that the date of this martyrdom was nearly coincident with the beginning of the seventeenth century of the so-called Christian era, making it easy for the centuries of the two eras—that of science and that of superstition—to run concurrent to each other; as for example, the fourth century of the Brunonian era corresponds to, and runs concurrent with the twentieth century of the Christian era.

It seems to me that this is a matter of sufficient importance to command the attention of all who would help to break the chains of superstition, of ignorance and of priest craft, that we all agree have so long enthralled mankind. For nearly twenty years our little journal has been almost alone in making a weekly protest against the superstitions incarnated in the popular or Christian chronology. We have frequently explained our reasons for thus carrying the reformed or Brunonian date at our mast head, and now once more, at the beginning of the new year, the last year of the century—would respectfully call attention of all freedom-loving people to what some of us think a matter of very great significance and of far-reaching educational influence.

Let us as Rationalists declare our independence of Anno Domini!—and let us resolve "to fight it out on this line" even though it takes all the summers and all the winters of the next century!

* * *

The festival now called Christmas is older by many thousands of years than Anno Domini. No one knows how old, or among what people it originated. In high northern latitudes the sun disappears entirely for more than twenty-four hours, at the time of the winter solstice, and when it reappears, what could be more natural than that ignorant people should rejoice in its rays, and make its return an occasion of feasting and of sending gifts to friends?

Those who reject the superstitions that are inseparable from Anno Domini need not give up the time honored festival now named Christmas, or "Yule tide." Whether another name can be substituted to advantage I know not, but if the old name be retained we should be careful to explain that we do not accept the superstitions that for the past thousand years or more have been associated with this name.

And now, with this protest—with this explanation—I would once more send the customary old-time annual greetings:

"Merry Christmas and happy New Year" to all the readers of Lucifer the Light-Bearer, and "many happy returns!"

Hammond, La. M. HARMAN.

Review of Discussion.

The close of the current year admonishes us that it is time to close the discussion in regard to name and in regard to plans concerning enlargement of the business of our publishing plant, for the ensuing year.

Briefly reviewing this discussion there is found much cause of satisfaction and gratulation in the fact that it has been so generally participated in, by our friends and patrons everywhere. Very few, comparatively speaking, of the letters sent us have been published—partly for lack of space and partly because the writers preferred that their communications should be treated as strictly "private." These numerous responses prove that there is widespread, a deep and abiding interest in the work of our various publications, and especially in the life and work of the weekly journal, now called Lucifer the Light-Bearer.

Another cause of congratulation is the fact that nearly if not all those who have participated in the discussions have shown the very best of temper. Only one, so far as I now recall, expressed the intention of refusing further co-operation in case her views were not complied with, and her words were not very positive. She said, "I do not say this as a threat, but this is the way I feel about it." All, or nearly all, have been careful to say that they recognize the right of the senior editor and publisher to decide whether the name shall be changed, and whether the publication of two papers instead of one shall be attempted.

Some of the writers—as per example Mr. Borthwick, whose letter appears in this issue, have expressed their determination to redouble their efforts in behalf of the work, even though the decision should be contrary to what they themselves believe to be best for success.

For the first few weeks of the discussion the consensus seemed to be greatly on the side of change of name. This was to be expected. Only those who favored change would be likely to speak their minds unless or until, there seemed a prospect that a change would really be made. For the past few weeks the opinions expressed have been very decidedly against dropping the name Lucifer. At least such has been the tone of the great majority of letters sent to me direct, to Thayer, Miss. Two days ago I received twelve letters at this office in one day, nearly all expressing the opinion that the name should not be changed. A half dozen letters a day, of the same general tenor, have been a common experience for the past week or two.

A noteworthy fact in regard to these later letters is that they are mostly from subscribers that have been with us a dozen years or more. Another noteworthy fact is that a large proportion of those who oppose change request that their letters be not published. From some of these I venture to make a few brief extracts, notwithstanding the expressed desire of their writers to stay out of public controversy.

A New York friend who leads all competition in the way of financial aid in keeping the flag afloat, and to enable the editor to spend his winters in a warmer climate, writes:

"Lucifer, singly, impresses me as a very appropriate name for your paper to those who are classically educated, understanding the derivation and full significance of the word. But there are many who are not so educated, are more enslaved by tradition and ignorance and would naturally associate the word with the arch rebel whom Milton and his followers imagined. This important class who depend on the thoughts of others more than on their own—the class that may most need light is liable to prejudice, and even to be misled by their fanatical advisors only too ready to answer inquiring doubt—'Why yes, that is the very old Devil himself, how well they named it! Don't read it or you will be lost.' Whereas, as it looks to me, if the words, 'The Light Bearer,' follow the word Lucifer, giving the English translation and full meaning that it seeks to convey, there can be no mistake and the requirements of both classes are met. The additional words which you give to Lucifer at the head of its editorial page, to wit:

"'The name Lucifer means Light-bringing or Light-bearing, and the paper which has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege' also impress me as in good judgment.

"While I believe in the freedom of discussion, the exposure of sham and the spreading of intelligence, still I would urge no one to think as I do. Let the facts be known and all think for themselves. Therefore I had rather that you decide the matter irrespective of my views, and that I be not introduced."

Another, a Kansas friend who has been a faithful and, very generous helper almost ever since the paper has been published, says:

"I am sure you have the best of the argument by far, in favor of retaining the name Lucifer. It seems to me unless you have very good encouragement to help you bear the additional expense of the monthly it will hardly be wise to undertake it. Would rather see Lucifer improved and enlarged under its present name."

* * *

Another, and one of the most earnest and able of the free-thought writers living south of Mason and Dixon's line writes as follows, prefacing her letter "personal:"

"I have carefully read all the discussion on the change of name, as I always read every word in each issue of Lucifer. My humble opinion is not worth anything I know, in comparison with those so much more competent to decide this question. As for myself, Lucifer for either paper or magazine, is not only a peculiarly appropriate name but a grand one. To me that name seems to bring an aura of light about each issue. It is only dense ignorance in regard to the meaning of the word Lucifer that could cause any objection to it, but of course ignorance rules the vast majority of people, even of the so-called educated. To me the name is of little import compared to the cause, the object for which its editors are striving. I would not have you tax yourselves, either mentally or financially, and you know all the conditions. Personally I would be glad to have both the weekly paper and the monthly magazine. I count my few copies of 'Our New Humanity,' as among my treasures, and if you conclude to start the monthly I will subscribe and remit my subscription in advance. I wish also a copy of your "life" you are now writing, and I will send the dollar if you will drop me a postal card where to send it; or in case I do not hear from you will send it to your daughter, whom I consider one of the grandest women of modern times. I hope you will improve in health and strength every hour, and live long to bless your fellows who are now the helpless victims of those arch tyrants and robbers, church and state. Accept my gratitude, and extend the same to your daughter."

* * *

And still another letter, designed as the writer says "for you and Lillian, and not for publication," is to me all the more valuable, because not written for the public eye. This letter comes from an old-timer in the business of publishing reform literature, both books and magazines. This veteran author and publisher says:

"I have followed with interest the discussion as to the change of name of Lucifer, and read your articles when they appeared. If I have not written on the subject it is because the older I get the more I become convinced that it is very difficult to give advice. As I look at it you have successfully managed your paper for about twenty years, are best acquainted with its constituency and are a thousand times better qualified to judge of the advantages or disadvantages of a change than I can be. I give you credit for good judgment, and in such a question would not want to intrude my opinion against yours.

"However, I recognize the advisability of feeling the pulse of those interested in Lucifer's work, and as you ask for the opinions of your readers I will give mine to you with the understanding that it rests upon very slim foundation.

"Personally, I have never liked the title of the paper. At the time you made the change I thought you had made a mistake, especially because it seemed to me it was placing a chip on your shoulder, daring your enemies. But you have carried the chip for a good while, have been hit pretty hard and it is an open question for me if it is good policy to take it down. I do not like the name any better than I did at the start, and it may be a hindrance to your work, but if I was to give advice it would be: do not change the name until you see good and sufficient reasons for it. A rule I have found a good one to follow is: If you are in doubt, do nothing.

"I appreciate your position because I once received a long letter from Helen Wilmans advising me to change the name of a publication I was running which was too much like 'socialist,' a regular bug-bear at that time. My answer was that I did not care for readers who were afraid of a name; that was not the class of people I was writing for. Probably the same feeling actuates you. Since that time I have lost much of my aggressiveness, but I believe you are as full of fight as ever. As to the support of the paper, your experience will probably agree with mine. The support of milk-and-water people does not amount to much.

"As to the double publication, my impression is that you have your hands about full now. Personally, I am much more in favor of pamphlets. If you have more articles and more radical articles than you can publish, I would put them in pamphlet form, and advertise them in Lucifer. But remember, I do not know anything about your ability to carry two lines of publications, and of the demand there would be for a magazine. But your proposition as I read it in Lucifer sounded to me like an attempt to compromise, which is a mistake. If there is a demand for both, a real, lasting demand, and you and Lillian feel that you can supply it, go ahead; but do not embark in an enterprise that your judgment does not approve for the sake of pleasing two sets of persons.

"Your idea of writing your biography is a good one."

* * *

Another prominent public worker and earnest helper of Lucifer, expresses her gratification that the name is not to be dropped, and adds: "I would not have named the paper Lucifer, but now that its record has been made under that name I would not have it changed for anything. I would not have named you Moses, nor my father the name he bears, but would not now change either for anything."

* * *

One more quotation only from private and personal letters can be given here: An officer of the "National Defense Association"—an organization that has done much and very efficient work in defeating the plans of the suppressors of freedom of speech, and in defending the victims of the oppressive and tyrannical postal laws—writes me in part as follows:

"I do not care to say anything about change of name. I have an attachment to and a fondness for the old name which ten years ago stood for so much of progress. I doubt if change of form would be an improvement. Why not let well enough alone—why putter with trivialities? Of course there is always some one who thinks he can improve upon things as they are. When you were fresh from your contest with the black-mailers I urged you to write a biographical sketch, especially narrating the story of your persecution. It would have been timely then. I hope it is not too late now. I will take three copies of such a book if you write one."

From these letters and many more like them, written by those who have stood side by side with us when to do so required much more of courage and self-sacrifice than is now needed, I gather that a very decided majority of those who have earned the right to advise in the matter of change of name and change of form, are not in favor of such change. While many of these agree with the advocates of change in thinking it a mistake to adopt the name Lucifer at first, they think it would be very unwise to drop the old cognomen and pull down the flag in "mid career," as Mr. Walker expresses it.

And now, in conclusion, as it seems to be the general desire that I should decide the question as to change of name, change of form and also the question of issuing a monthly magazine in addition to the weekly paper, I will say what seems to me to be best for the incoming year.

* * *

First. The evolutionary plan,—suggested by myself—of issuing a monthly Lucifer and a weekly Light Bearer, while receiving quite a considerable number of favorable responses, has not yet met with sufficient favor to justify its adoption. Perhaps the time given for consideration was, or is, too short.

Second. The writing and publishing of the long-promised autobiography will require the greater part of what energy, physical and mental, I may reasonably hope to possess for the next five or six months. This fact would seem to be a very potent reason for postponing all other plans and labors requiring time, money and the expenditure of anxious thought.

Third. The maxim already quoted from a veteran author and publisher,—"When in doubt, do nothing, is applicable and appropriate in this present case as I think.

Perhaps by the close of another year, that is to say, in the closing days or hours of the present century, and in the dawning light of the Fourth Century, of the Brunonian Era, these doubts will be dispelled, and we shall then be enabled to see more clearly what is best to do for the greater good of the work that lies nearest to the hearts and minds of all who now labor and wait for the "Good Time Coming."

Meantime we can adopt the advice of those friends who have spoken in favor of printing "supplements" to the weekly paper, or of those who recommend printing monthly or quarterly pamphlets—with or without a serial title, as occasion or demand may seem to require, or to encourage.

In thus deciding, can I hope to be met by the cheerful acquiescence, and by the happy co-operation of all who have taken part, either as writers or as interested spectators in this somewhat extended, but as I sincerely hope and believe, very useful discussion concerning change of name and of form of the old yet ever young, healthy and vigorous Lucifer, the Light-Bearer?

Hammond, La., Dec. 22, '99. M. HARMAN.

The lecture by Jonathan Mayo Crane before the Anthropological Society last Sunday in this city is pronounced one of the best the society has yet enjoyed. The subject, "The Evolution of the Family," served to bring out some startling important facts along Lucifer's lines, and the authorities quoted were so numerous and convincing that Mr. Crane fairly captured his audience. We hope to be able to give our readers a full reprint of this admirable lecture in pamphlet form.

We regret to announce the death of one of Lucifer's workers and friends, Jas. Vincent, Sr., of Shenandoah, Ia. Mr. Vincent was a co-worker with Brown, Greeley, Garrison, Phillips, Lovejoy and Giddings in the anti-slavery movement. He founded the "Non-Conformist," and later published "Krishna." He was in his seventy-eighth year and died of pneumonia. Mr. Vincent has been a leader in reform thought through a long and eventful life, and will be remembered by a large circle of friends. He has added to the intellectual wealth of the world. Such workers are all too few.

Love and Marriage.

BY C. L. JAMES.

Variety in love is not "promiscuity." No woman ever lives in promiscuous intercourse unless she is either compelled or hired to do so, which are conditions entirely foreign to love. And in the language of the great Wellington, I would not "give a two penny tinker's damn" for the difference between a woman who can be hired to live promiscuously and one who looks out for a chance to sell herself monogamously. When I published my Law of Marriage (1870) I was for abolishing marriage, and ther since is perceiving that those whom jealousy or something else causes to antagonize variety cannot be counted on to stand firm against marriage and prostitution. They prefer dualism to the liberty of woman. Her true champions always put that first.

* * *

Lucifer, of course, is not answerable for a selection from "Brann's Iconoclast." Otherwise, I should strongly protest against "Francesca's" praise of women who can "sink their own Ego finding their heaven in serving" men of any kind. The gods forbid one of my daughters should be a woman of that sort. Such women are decidedly back numbers. In these days when literature is passing into the grasp of Anarchists, I must also enter a feeble caveat against rhetoric of the "Francesca" kind. George Eliot's "personality towered as Colossi above the thorn path of steeples that tore her skirt to tatters." Why the devil didn't she wear bloomers? A woman tall enough to have her skirts torn by steeples should. "Jane Eyre fed on celestial snowballs." Good heavens, what a diet! No wonder "the mote of her own quaking personality filled the scope of her vision." If I knew a woman who had been living on celestial snowballs, I would offer her hot coffee. "The glory of affinity," explains these appalling tropes. A varietist, who does not believe in forty day's affinities will never write like that.

A NEW BOOK by Albert Chavannes. "Magnetation, its Relation to Health and Character," contains invaluable information upon the relation of the sexes. Price, 25 cents. Address, Albert Chavannes, 308 Fourth Ave., Knoxville, Tenn.

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races." Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III., Co-operation; Chapter IV., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, ten cts.

VARIOUS VOICES.

H. E. A., Berwick, Ills.: I think this fact is worth calling attention to: During the few weeks the discussion of the name of this paper was running think how many opinions were given in favor of a change. After the plaintiff's argument was exhaustively completed then the defendant comes out in his peculiar convincing style, and makes us all ashamed of ourselves to think that we ever thought for a moment a change was necessary. I think we have all met with a change of heart, and are satisfied now to sail on under the same old colors. Does it not show how powerful are well-put arguments?

J. P. Borthwick, Ontario, Cal.:—I agree with all you say favorable to the retention of the name Lucifer from an ideal standpoint; but this is so far from being an ideal world, that, in a question where there is no moral principle involved, I am willing to make such adaptations as I think will best gain the object desired, therefore if an idealistic conception of the name of a paper is, in the opinion of many, an obstacle to its wider diffusion and mission of good to mankind, wisdom it seems to me would dictate an unimportant concession. In this world of ignorance and its concomitants, ideals and idealists are too often misfits, and a misfit is a failure. On these grounds, if you decide to preserve the name of Lucifer I will, in admiration of your heroism, but not of your practical wisdom, double up my subscription.

Prof. Joseph Rodes Buchanan, San Jose, Calif.:—I have just read your eloquent appeal—article Luciferism—which has more life than anything I ever saw in your writings. I sympathize with everybody who sees from different standpoints, and I agree with you, if there is backbone and strength to carry out your suggestions, which are excellent.— and I think there is.

When one's forces are weaker than the enemy's it is well to stand behind a tree, or get into a rifle pit; that is brave and honorable fighting; nothing to be ashamed of; but if you can stand out boldly on a naked plain, do so. But your feeble reformer can seldom do that at the start. You must judge your status and progress, not I.

I see and think a great deal that I would like to send you which your cause needs, but you have no room for it.

Your aim admits of a great deal of elevated literature that would command respect; that is more important than any title. To get such literature from good brainy men, and leave out the inferior class, is necessary, and you need to be critical as to grade of contributions.

Yesterday was my eighty-fifth anniversary and we had a good celebration in my new fashion.

PROSPECTUS

Of the Life History of Moses Harman.

I. Ancestry. Early Life and Struggles to get an Education

II. "Travels in Faith." From Methodism to Universalism and thence to Rationalism.

III. Experiences as a Heretic and Abolitionist in a Slave State—Religion, War and Politics.

IV. Experiences as Teacher, Preacher and Magistrate—or "Justice of the Peace."

V. Experiences in Journalism—A Ten Years' Fight in the Courts. Reflections on our Judiciary, State and Federal.

VI. Prison Experiences. A "Third Term." Letters from and to the Prisoner.

VII. Reflections on Prison Discipline. "Crimes Against Criminals."

VIII. The Movement for Freedom of Womanhood and Motherhood, and for the Right of Children to Be Born Well.

IX. Relation of this Movement to All Other Reform Movements.

X. Present outlook for this Movement. "Duty of the Hour."

This book will comprise about four hundred pages; printed on good paper, new and clear type and good binding, with portrait of the author and of his daughter and helper, Lillian Harman. Price one dollar. Life and health permitting, the book will be ready for delivery to subscribers on or before June first, next. Subscriptions solicited, so that we may know how large an edition to issue.

WOMEN and ECONOMICS,

A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women. By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Here are a few of the page headings of this remarkable work "Economic environment; The dependence of women; No inherent disability of sex; Marriage not a partnership; House service as a livehood; Motherhood and economic production Modification to maternity; The usefulness of sex; Differentiation of sex; Sex and humanity; The peacock's tail; Sex distinctions; The eternal feminine; unreasoning devotion; Women as persons; Race-attributes and sex-attribute; The normal child; Personal profit and sex-relations; The influence of heredity; The young man and the young woman; The effect of custom: The sex relation personal; Innocence and ignorance; Marriage with independence; The increasing difficulty of marriage; Supporting one's family; Virtue and vice; The results of repression; The harm that women do; The development of love; The hope for the future; The martyr and the pioneer; The dropping of the bars; The meaning of the new woman; Motherhood in education; A criminal failure; Marriage and the family; Love's young dream; The heart and the stomach; Socializing the household industries; The stomach-as a family tie; The servant wife; World-servants and house-servants; A wider maternity; Between the old and the new; "The vices of the slave;" The outgrown stronghold. Printed on strong, heavy paper; 350 pages, bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale by M. Harman, 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

For the Holidays.

"A Persian Pearl," and other essays by Clarence S. Darrow. Any lover of the literature of freedom would be proud of such a present as this. The book comprises:

1—A Persian Pearl.
2—The Skeleton in the Closet.
3—Walt Whitman.
4—Realism in Art and Literature.
5—Robert Burns.

The publishers have given this work a dress in keeping with the high quality of the text. The book is printed on rough-surface English "Boxmoor" paper, rubicated side leaves and initials. Edition limited to 980 copies, each book numbered. Price, in boards, $2. In limp green chamois, silk lined. $2.40.

A FEW GOOD BOOKS FOR YOU.

Love, Marriage and Divorce. A discussion between Horace Greeley, Stephen Pearl Andrews and Henry James.	$0 25
The Rights of Women and the Sexual Relations. By Karl Heinzen. In cloth, $1; paper covers,	.50
The Sexual Enslavement of Women. By E. C. Walker.	.05
The Woman Who Did. A Novel. By Grant Allen.	1 00
The British Barbarians. A Novel. By Grant Allen.	1 00
The Red Heart in a White World. An Outline of Principles and a Plan of Organization. By J. Wm. Lloyd.	10
Wind Harp Songs. By J. Wm. Lloyd.	1 00
The Revival of Puritanism. By E. C. Walker.	05
Bible Temperance. Showing that the Bible encourages the use of intoxicants. By E. C. Walker.	.10
Woman, Church, and State. By Matilda Joslyn Gage.	2 00
Church Property. Should it be Taxed?	.15
Prohibition and Self Government: Their Irreconcilable Antagonism. By E. C. Walker.	.05
When Love Is Liberty and Nature Law. By John Badcock, Jr. A remarkably clear, convincing work.	.10
Liberty. Political, Religious, Social and Moral. By A. F. Tindall.	.10
Diana. A Psycho-Physiological Essay on the Sexual Relations. Sixth edition. Revised and improved.	.25
Perfect Motherhood. By Lois Waisbrooker; cloth,	1.00
Helen Harlow's Vow. By Lois Waisbrooker; paper,	.25
Wherefore Investigating Co. By Lois Waisbrooker; paper,

794.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

Books for the Holidays.

The publishers' price of the books in the following list is forty cents each. We bought them at a little less than half of that. The postage averages about four cents on each book. Half the publishers' price with postage added is twenty-four cents. We will send any book in the list, postage prepaid, for twenty-five cents, the extra cent going to pay for the work of wrapping and mailing. Send in your order at once if you want them before the holidays and the books will be sent promptly.

Every book in the list is handsomely bound in cloth and is printed in clear type on good paper. The number following the name of the book indicates the number of its pages:

Bracebridge Hall, by Washington Irving. 288. With 110 illustrations designed by Randolph Caldecott.

Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, by Lord Byron, complete and unabridged. 270.

Crown of Wild Olives, by John Ruskin. 252. Consists of four lectures on work, traffic, war, and the future of England, with an interesting appendix.

Dolly Dialogues, by Anthony Hope. 202.

Dreams, by Olive Schreiner. 128.

Lalla Rookh, by Thomas Moore, 327. With copious notes.

Master and Man, by Tolstoi. 117.

Sartor Resartus, by Thomas Carlyle, (with notes and index.) 241.

Sketch Book, by Washington Irving. 464. This book contains the famous story of Rip Van Winkle.

Samantha at Saratoga, or Men's Fashion, by Josiah Allen's wife, (Marietta Holly), profusely illustrated, 372.

Tanglewood Tales, by Nathaniel Hawthorne, 284.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduce from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

Government Analyzed. By John E. Kelso. The chapter headings are: "Derivations and Definitions of Political Terms; Various Forms of Government; General Principles of Government; Functions of Government; Origin of Government; Declaration of Independence; Articles of Confederation; Defects of the Confederation; Formation of the Constitution of the United States; Constitution of the United States; Taxation; Tariff or Protection; War; Punishments; Marriage; Religion; Prohibition; Money; What a Government Should Be." 320 pages. Price reduced to $1.00.

With Lucifer one year to a new subscriber, $1.50.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES.

BY E. C. WALKER.

No man is wise enough to foresee the secondary results of any proposed restriction, and no history is copious enough to record the evils that have ensued upon denials of liberty.—George E. Macdonald.

CONTENTS:

Love and the Law,	3
The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal,	12
The Continuity of Race-Life; and Tyranny,	16
Food and Sex Fallacies, a criticism,	17
When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varietists,	26
The New Woman: what is she? what will she be?	31
The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes;	44
Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce,	45
Love: Its Attraction and Expression,	51
Is She an Honest Girl?	53
Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts,	54
Social Radicals and Parentage,	57
Anthropology and Monogamy,	59
Love and Trust Versus Fear,	60
Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life."	61

Price 15 cents. For sale at this office.

CULTIVATION OF PERSONAL MAGNETISM.

A TREATISE ON HUMAN CULTURE. BY LEROY BERRIER.

This treatise reverses the common belief that Personal Magnetism, Life Force and Mind Force can not be cultivated and acquired. It is a Complete Course of Instructions that will enable all who possess them, to become powerfully magnetic. Price, $1. Postage, 5 cents.

Sent on receipt of price. Address Moses Harman, 507 Carroll Ave. Chicago, Ill.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.

This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Women in Marriage Slavery

We find in HILDA'S HOME a story exposing the horrors of their condition as faithfully and as fearlessly as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" exposed the horrors of Negro slavery in the South. The story is more entertaining than many modern works of fiction and the plain truths it tells will find responsive echoes in the aching, bursting hearts of many women who know the galling effects of marriage thralldom.

The book contains 425 pages. Price handsomely bound in cloth, $1. In paper cover 50 cents. Send in your order NOW—especially if you want extra copies for distribution among your friends.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Persons Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 30 cents. Address Moses Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. E. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.

"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.

"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.

Sample pages free Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Missing Link Modern Spiritualism. By A. Leah Underhill. A book for all spiritualists and investigators. "Hear all sides, then decide." 22 chapters; 478 pages; 16 illustrations, including portraits of the Fox family. History of the Rochester rappings, as given by eye-witnesses, the threats of mob violence; remarkable and well-attested manifestations; the "exposures" disposed of, etc. Handsomely bound in cloth. Publishers price, $1.50. On receipt of $1.37, and 13 cents for postage, we will send the book to any address.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be FREE; must enjoy the full privileges of soliciting the love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrially."—Page 264. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CITYLESS AND COUNTRYLESS WORLD," by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 400 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Free Love: A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of conubial love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 1874, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence. 160 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave. Chicago.

Price 2 cents

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., No. 52. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, JAN. 6. E. M. 299. [C. E 1900.] WHOLE No. 795

A Desire.

Let me not lay the lightest feather's weight
Of duty upon love. Let not, my own,
The breath of one reluctant kiss be blown
Between our hearts. I would not be the gate
That bars, like some inexorable fate,
The portals of thy life that say: "Alone
Through me, shall any joy to thee be known;"
Rather the window, fragrant early and late
With thy sweet clinging thoughts, that grow and twine
Around me like some bright and blooming vine;
Through which the sun shall shed his wealth on thee
In golden showers; through which thou may'st look out,
Exulting in all beauty, without doubt
Or fear, or shadow of regret from me.

Susan Max Spaulding.

The Couvade.

BY J. M. CRANE.

In an address on "The Evolution of the Family," which I delivered before the Chicago Society of Anthropology, on Sunday, Dec. 24, I gave some account of the matriarchate, or mother-rule, as it existed in primitive societies in many countries. The limited time then at my disposal prevented me from describing in detail the process by which the matriarchate was superceded by the patriarchate, or father-rule. Mention of one remarkable and grotesque custom which marked that transition was omitted altogether. I refer to the custom known as the "couvade."

The custom still prevails among some of the savage tribes, but when travelers reported its observance a few generations ago the reports were received with incredulity. Later investigation, however, not only proved that the absurd custom still prevails in some countries, but that it was in former times widely prevalent, and was found in countries so remote from each other as to preclude the possibility that it was carried from one country to another in every instance. In fact it seems to be a ludicrous phase of family evolution and the natural accompaniment of the transition from mother-rule to father-rule.

It is not an uncommon thing for the humorist who edits a rural newspaper to conclude his announcement of the birth of a "bouncing" boy or girl baby with the words "The father is doing as well as could be expected." Doubtless, in every instance, that remark is regarded by many of the paper's readers as being "highly original." But there was a time when such a statement could have been made in newspapers—if newspapers had then existed—and there would have been nothing either funny or incongruous about it. That was the time when the couvade was generally prevalent.

The following account of the couvade is taken from "The Evolution of Marriage," a book written by Ch. Letourneau:

"There is a custom, at first sight extraordinary but still common enough, which must have arisen during transitional epochs, when, polygamic or monogamic marriage having become stablished, the husbands have exerted themselves to affirm heir parental rights, and to substitute masculine filiation for the ancient uterine filiation. In the same way as in certain countries, Abyssinia,* for example, in order to proclaim an adoption, the adoptive father simulates some maternal practice, sometimes goes so far as to offer his breast solemnly to his adoptive son, so, in very different countries, the husband has found no better way to prove his paternity than to simulate childbirth; and hence the very singular custom of the couvade.

"At first sight, it seems very foolish for the husband to take to his bed immediately after the delivery of his wife, and for a certain number of days to be nursed and tended by the mother herself.

"The existence of the custom has often been questioned. It will not be out of place, therefore, to quote authentic facts which put all doubt to silence. These facts are numerous enough, and have been observed in various parts of the globe; in America, Asia, and Europe.

"In New Mexico, among the Lagunero and the Ahomana, when a woman is delivered of a child, the father goes to bed for six or seven days, and scrupulously abstains from eating fish and meat.† The Choctaw Redskins formerly had an analogous custom. Brett and Im Thurn have observed this 'lying-in' among the Indians of Guiana. The father, Brett says, goes to his hammock quite naked, and he remains there some days as if he were ill, receiving the congratulations of his friends and tended by the women of the neighborhood, whilst the mother of the new-born infant goes about her cooking without receiving any attention.‡

"The testimony of the Jesuit Dobritzhoffer, in regard to the Abipones, is not less explicit: 'Among the Abipones of South America,' he says, 'as soon as the wife has given birth to a child, the husband is put to bed, and carefully tended; he fasts for a certain time. You would swear that it is he who has just been delivered. I had formerly read of this and smiled at it, not being able to credit such folly, and supposing that this barbarous custom was related more as a joke than seriously, but at last I have seen it with my own eyes amongst them.'§ More recent testimony confirms what I have just quoted. In 1842 M. Maze, Commissioner-General in French Guiana, himself proved the custom of couvade among the Indian tribes on the river Oyapok. In 1852 M. Voisin, justice of the peace in a commune of French Guiana, ascending in a canoe the river Mana, received hospitality one night in the hut of some Galibi Indians. On awakening he learned that during the night, and behind a partition of foliage which separated his hammock from the household of his hosts, a child had been born. The mother had uttered no sound, and at daybreak M. Voisin saw her go to the river-side and make her toilet, then take her new-born child and throw it several times into the water, catching it as it rose to the surface, and then wiping it with her hands. The husband, on the contrary, remained all the while in his hammock, acting

* D'Abbadie, "Douze ans dans la haute Ethiopie," p. 272.
† Bancroft, "Native Races," etc., vol. i, p. 561.
‡ Giraud-Teulon, "Orig. du Marriage, p. 128
§ Historia de Abiponibus (1784) vol. ii, page 272.

the invalid, and receiving with the greatest seriousness the attention lavished on him by his wife.*

"The couvade comedy is not always so complete. In certain tribes it is attenuated, and becomes more symbolic.

"Among various tribes of South America the husband of the woman limits the practice to a few hygienic precautions: this is the couvade reduced to its simplest expression.†

"This custom was found in Asia, among the Tartars, by Marco Polo. It still exists in Bengal, among the Larkas, although attenuated; on the occasion of a birth the parents quit the house, the wife and husband are both declared unclean for eight days, and during that time the husband cooks the food. After which the masculine filiation of the child is proclaimed by solemnly giving him the name of his grandfather.‡ We shall be mistaken if we imagine that the couvade is special to very inferior races. The Greco-Roman writers have quoted a certain number of examples observed among the barbarians of the ancient world. Strabo relates that the Iberian women, after the example of those of the Celts, Thracians, and Scythians, quit their beds as soon as they are delivered, and give them up to their husbands, whom they tend.§ Diodorus tells us that in Corsica, after a woman has given birth to a child, the husband goes to bed as if he were ill, and he remains there an appointed number of days like a lying-in woman.¶

"In his Argonautica Appollonius of Rhodes speaks of a people of Tibarenedes, on the north-west coast of Asia Minor, who had the custom of the couvade: 'As soon as the married women are delivered, their husbands groan, lie on beds, and cover their heads. All this time their wives give them strengthening food, and prepare baths for them suitable for lying-in women.'‖ It is probable that more than one trace of this 'lying-in' still exists in Europe, in superstitious and popular practices. Quite recently a Russian has informed me that it is still in use in the Baltic provinces, but naturally in a form of survival in which the meaning is lost. It is, however, complete enough; the husband goes to bed, utters groans and cries, and his neighbors hasten to his side. And lastly, M. Leon Donnat told me lately that he had discovered the couvade still practised in the little Island of Marken, in the Zuydersee."

George Macdonald on "Social Guesses."

G. B. M. in "Truth Seeker."

One of the "fatal errors" men are perpetually falling into and never climbing out of is the delusion that a given custom which may have been conducive to human happiness at some time in the past is bound to be a blessing to-day if faithfully observed, and that to-day's institutions must necessarily be adapted to the needs of the future. Exhaustively argued, this proposition would fill a book, but I have not time to write a book at the present moment. Anybody who feels like going to the root of the matter may call to mind any of the customs "crystallized into law" which, after a defense not unattended with martyrdoms, have lapsed into the innocuous.

I rarely ask the reader to go back with me as far as we can penetrate with the eye of history, but I will here invite attention to the fact that ever since misguided man first set up a government he has been compelled to devote the profoundest thoughts of his mind to devising ways to beat it. At the same time he has found it so useful as a receptacle wherein to salt down his mistakes that he would not part with it for considerable. He disposes of his errors by pickling them in a statute book, and he supports legislatures at vast cost in order that they may do this disburdening of his mind and take the responsibility for its defects on themselves.

When a person of large self-possession discovers that a notion which he holds is rationally indefensible and unsupported by experience, he seldom endeavors to bring his theories into harmony with the facts by revising the former. He does not seek to agree with those who think otherwise by abandoning his error. He makes his government earn its salary by embodying his defective concept in a statute, and leaves it to the legislators to invent another statute to repair the mischief done by the first. Customs that do not so commend themselves to the favor of the intelligent as to secure universal observance among that class are pickled in the same brine; the citizen who has indorsed them regards nonconformity as a reflection upon the soundness of his own judgment, and asserts that the dissenters are religiously or morally deformed. From this has arisen all of that kind of deviltry known as persecution, which even in our day makes good men scarce. Mr. E. C. Walker has discovered a phrase that covers the whole evil. It is "Our worship of primitive guesses." We are largely governed by guesses. Somebody once guessed at the existence of an Almighty Individual, and having sufficient political influence, he cut off the heads of those who doubted it and mounted them on the pickets of his fence. By this means many were convinced. Religious creeds consist of guesses sanctified; statutes are guesses codified. There are, besides these, guesses, moral, economic, and social. Mr. Walker has written a pamphlet on "Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses," in which particular attention is paid to moral problems. He holds that the practice of the highest morals is prohibited by our marriage laws, which come under the head of what I have defined as mistakes codified. He is one of those unreasonable persons who desire to be more virtuous than the law allows. Marriage that can be dissolved only by the courts of the land he does not approve. The question—

> And must poor man with one continuous wife
> Play the long rubber of connubial life?

would be adversely reported upon by Mr. Walker. His answer would be "Not necessarily." He, seems to follow Humboldt in repudiating the offices of the law in the tying and untying of the connubial knot, and unless I am double-sighted he proves that the question has two sides.

"Whoso findeth a wife findeth a good thing" is a sentiment attributed to Solomon, who, although he carried the domestic virtues to extremes, was an authority not to be lightly set aside. I am a steadfast adherent of the continuous wife system, and never knew any good to come from a change of partners. As, however, said changes have not to my knowledge done any harm, I cannot now see why I introduced the foregoing remark. But let us proceed. We know that whether a man marries or not he will regret it, and that the remorse of the man will be trifling compared with that of the woman, for which reason it is respectable to be either married or single.

There are two reprehensible ways of expressing the instinct here concerned which, outside of wedlock, are pronounced felonious. One is accompanied by the use of physical force, and the other is won by purchase. That both may be and are practiced under the sanction of marriage laws, and that marriage rights or privileges are often either enforced or bought, is as well known if not as extensively advertised as that they exist at all; but the man cannot be lynched by his fellow-citizens without provoking hostile criticism, nor can any justice of the peace lawfully impose the fine upon the woman. Orthodox moral philosophy sanctions marriages the considerations of which are wholly pecuniary, and also those which, affection being absent, only submission on one side, and undiscriminating impulse on the other, can render connubial. Of course if Mr. Walker has discovered how these objectionable features may be eliminated, and can sell the secret for fifteen cents, which is the price of the book, it is noble and philanthropic for him to do so. I am sure that we all want to see subsidized affections replaced by those that are genuine, and every man and woman to whom the thought of liberty is not repugnant will be happier to feel that dark deeds of violence are not habitually perpetrated in their midst.

* "Bull. Soc. d' Anthrop." (July 1881).
† A. d'Orbigny, "L'homme Americain," t. i. p. 295.
‡ Dalton, "Ethnology of Bengal," p. 190.
§ Strabo, iii. 16. ¶ Diodorus, v. 14. ‖ Argonautica, ii.

Were I to frame a marriage statute, I should endeavor to so compile the same that it would place its ægis, provided upon examination it was found to have one, between the stronger and the weaker, the designing and the innocent, of the parties to the unions it might be invoked to cement. I should be disappointed in my law if persons who kept it should find their fate harder than that of those who broke it, as is the case with such marriage laws as now adorn our statute books. And should experience show it to be a failure in these respects, I would move its total repeal, because where we cannot abolish an abuse we can at least stop providing the surroundings that make it respectable. For that contented state wherein a husband and wife live forgetful of the law and their marriage certificate, there appears to be no arrangement that can profitably be substituted. On the state that is marriage only by virtue of the ceremony performed at its inception, almost anything illicit would be an improvement. Marriage bonds are not different from other bonds, and they are bound to gall wherever they touch. The cry that the modifying of marriage laws will destroy our happy homes would be more alarming if the happiness of said homes could be traced to within forty miles of the accident that the father and the mother are clamped together. There must have been happy homes before the law was passed or it would not have been enacted. The sapient law-smiths who legislated on the matter made the mistake of attributing the happiness they beheld to the custom rather than to the amiability of the individuals who illustrated it. They reached the further erroneous conclusion that unhappy marriages only needed to be made perpetual by law in order to become blissful. And they crowned the whole towering monument of blunders by not taking Mr. Walker into account.

A Plea for Sexual Reform.

This message is not to the contented or the selfish; it is to those who in the full vigor of life are feeling the galling restraints of the world of struggle and custom and who are beginning to question why they are debarred the full satisfaction of their desires, and are denied the joy of living.

Many there are who at the end of each year feel they have only existed and who have made no advances towards abiding comfort. Precious youth ebbs slowly away while preparation doubtfully is made for domestic joys. Many single women and men, unsuccessful in attaining more than a lender income, see life passing from them without romance or variety and without any promise of better things in store,—the dreary years succeeding each other with a dull sameness which makes memory an added cause of depression.

Happiness to each individual is of supreme moment, and if happiness comes not in youth and early adult life, there is poor prospect of its attainment afterwards when the capacity for it is almost lost through atrophy and worldly cares.

We feel ourselves naturally prompted by affections and desires, and we see an opposite sex capable of satisfying our natures, but rendered by social convention useless to us and generally unapproachable. Youths and maidens, each suffering from the need of the other, are condemned to wretchedness with the means of cure really within their grasp. Nor is this all. Through a cynical hardness and want of sympathy, combined with false and degrading views of sex and its deep and tender social pleasure, the attention of many is diverted from a principal cause of misery, and reform in this direction is cruelly and ignorantly opposed on the lines of conventional morals which take no account of the sexual sufferings of the young. The attitude of general society on this great question of sexual instinct is profoundly hypocritical. There is the pretence that it is unimportant in life, yet on all hands it is working misery and destruction. Illicit intercourse of men is general and of women is common, yet no steps are taken to regulate this necessity of our nature and make the conditions of temporary unions harmless and morally elevating as all degrees of love should be. It is a cruel wrong that those who are honorable and kind, but unfortunate, should be denied sexual pleasure, while the deceitful and selfish may take as much of it as they want in the bad conditions of seduction and prostitution freely permitted by society.

Hunger and love rule the world. We see ourselves surrounded by all the means of life, yet we mostly are prevented from using them. Like Tantalus we live ever in view of the cup we cannot take. The situation is exasperating. The chains are intolerable. Liberty is essential. The question cries for utterance:—

"Young men and women, are none of you brave and good enough to rise above the harmful customs of the time and claim for yourselves such happiness as is possible?"

Let us remember, happiness does not necessarily come with riches. It is a common remark with those who have attained wealth, that they are no happier for it, though habit makes them cling to it. If this be the case why should not youth take account of this experience and cease to defer the joys of life until fickle fortune smiles.

"Marriage is a lottery," so say the worldly-wise, and we know there is truth in the saying. People then exclaim,—"Oh if couples could only live together for a year on trial, there would then not be so many unhappy marriages." Is there no truth in this?

There is every reason why love should be free to all, to the young, especially, in the hey-day of their ardent passions when permanent ties are undesirable and variety of experience must be very useful.

The poor degree of satisfaction arrived at in ordinary vulgarised sexual unions is no guage of the happiness possible where the sexes meet in perfect social equality with deep and refined sexual sympathy, and mutual desire to adapt the sexual caresses to meet the needs of each, and get from the tenderest passion the greatest happiness possible. Sympathetic physicians are aware that a large amount of marital unhappiness of women and men is due to ignorance and want of sympathy.

There is great need that earnest men and women should meet together and study how to make happiness a little less rare than it is at present. Around us we see the ruin caused by the present system of chaotic and detested puritanism. Prostitutes filling our streets,—young men and women ministering to mutual degradation. Puritan and profligate alike treat with dishonor our common human nature and drag in the dirt the token of tenderest approach of one human being to another There is urgent need for social reform in which consideration for others shall be an abiding force, and true refinement shall make possible the most gracious liberty in love. It is acknowledged that the sexual nature is of supreme importance in social life, yet the conditions are not rational to suit it. Is it not time for men and women, strong in their respect for inalienable human nature, to associate with a view of increasing the happiness of each? Love must no longer be partaken of at the expense of woman. There must be no enforced maternity and no unwelcome children. Reason must govern parentage.

A Card.

To whom it may concern: I expect in February, my seventy-fourth birth month, to commence the publication of a small monthly under the heading: "Clothed with the Sun," PUBLICATION SECURED FOR ONE YEAR. All those who believe that woman should occupy a higher place than man now occupies; and that she should be free that she may lead him out of the sphere of force into the sphere of love; that she should demand the conditions in which she can do this, are requested to send in their subscriptions. Terms, thirty cents a year, or four copies for $1. If woman can be made to understand that nature as nature has given into her keeping the highest power known, her mother heart will prompt her to learn how to use that power for the benefit of the race.

Those desiring to correspond with me in reference to the paper can do so by enclosing four cents in stamps to cover expense of reply. Fraternally, LOIS WAISBROOKER.

1501½ Market St., San Francisco, Cal.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN. EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper which it has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

Respectability Again.

Our good friend and contributor, R. B. Kerr, mildly criticizes my remarks, in a late issue, upon the "respectability" question. See his article, "Miscellaneous Observations" in No. 793.

"Faithful are the wounds of a friend," saith the proverb. The difference between my critic and myself on this question, is probably one of definition, mainly. The words respect, respectable and respectability are from the root words re, "again," and spectare "to see," "to look at." Hence to respect a man is, by etymology, to look at him again, or a second time. In process of time, and naturally enough, the man—or woman—who possessed characteristics that were desirable, pleasing or right, in the estimation of others, was considered respectable.

Bro. Kerr asks, "Is not a respectable man one whose words and deeds seem to ordinary people conducive to the welfare of society? And is not a disreputable man one who is supposed by ordinary people to wish to do something injurious to himself or others?"

Yes; but here again we need a little definition. What does our friend mean, and what does the average man mean, by "society"? Does he mean simply the people?—the women, men and children, or a majority of them, to be found in any particular community, state or nation?

On the contrary, if I mistake not, the word society means the "social machine"—including the institutions, the customs, the conventionalities, laws, rites, ceremonies, traditions and legends—whether religious or civil—by the aid of which these women, men and children are separated into classes; graded up, and graded down, into castes or orders, professions, "sets," cliques, rings etc., etc. And it is the man or woman who has a reverent regard for this social machine; for these social institutions; for these artificial conventionalities, that is commonly reckoned to be a "respectable" man or woman, and not she or he who has most solicitude for the welfare of the individual persons who happen to be the subjects, often the victims, of the said social machine. This machine, these institutions, must be preserved at whatever cost to flesh and blood persons. The machine must live though all the people perish.

Men, women and children were made for society; for the institutions, the laws and customs of society; says the code, not the social machine for men women and children. To yield obedience to, to acknowledge allegiance to, the requirements, the conventionalties of artificial human society is the first condition, the indispensable condition to being admitted into the ranks of "respectability." Many transgressions, many sins, of act or deed, may be forgiven, but avowed infidelity to the divinity, the authority of the machine itself, can never be forgiven. It is the one unpardonable sin. Hence the outspoken rebels against this social divinity are reckoned "disreputable;" they are labeled "anarchists," "socialists," "free lovers," etc., with the crude and vile interpretations or definitions to these epithets that ignorance and bigotry alone can give.

Take for instance our societary institution called the land-holding system. A system that enables the landholder—aptly and rightly called landlord—to be the holder of slaves, of human chattels, without the trouble and responsibility of caring for his slaves in sickness and old age. It is respectable to be a monopolist of land; to advocate and defend, by precept and example, a system that makes land a merchantable commodity to be bought and sold as though it were a product of men's hands or brains. The larger the landholder, that is, the more people he can deprive of their equal opportunity to use mother earth, the more respectable he is. Whereas, to denounce this land system is to be disreputable. To demand that there should be no title to land except that of occupancy and use, is to be an "agrarian," a "revolutionist," an "instigator of crime," and an "enemy to society.

Take our money laws and customs. It is respectable to be the owner of a privileged class or kind of property called legal tender money, government money, government bonds, because privileged property makes its owner a privileged man!—an aristocrat, a slave holder. Like the landlord the money-lord is a slave owner, without the trouble or responsibility of caring for his human chattels in sickness or old age. It is even more respectable to be a money-lord than a landlord because money, government money, means the power to take for debt, land and every other species of property. Ownership of money means ownership of the constable, the sheriff, the magistrate, the judge and jury, the army and the navy; all the machinery of government.

On the other hand to oppose our inherited money system, our traditional, our superstition-bred money system, and to advocate a rational system, a system that would do away with interest-taking—such as the "Labor Exchange" or "Labor Check," is to be very decidedly "disreputable." All the respectable classes,—the educated and professional classes, such as the lawyers, the clergy, the physicians, the salaried government officials and the pensioners,—are banded with the professional money-lords—the bankers and brokers, in a conspiracy to perpetuate our present money system, our privileged, gold-basis money system, because the adoption of the "labor check" would mean a blow at the big fees of the professionals, and the enormous salaries of government officials as compared to the pittance accorded to the toilers in field, in mine and work-shop.

Yes, the money-lord is the prince of respectable men, but do "ordinary people" think his "words and deeds conducive to the welfare" of themselves?—the people, the common people?

Perhaps so; but if so it must be because their minds are so very "ordinary" that they cannot see the irrationality, the absurdity as well as the injustice and despotism, of such a societary institution as our present money system.

* * *

"On the great majority of questions respectability is in the right and it has done an infinite amount of good," says my friendly critic.

Let us see about this. "Let us be honest, let us be just," even to the "devil," whether he be of the orthodox or heterodox breed. Is it not just possible that there is some confusion of ideas here? Or is it simply a question of terminology—of naming?

Is it not with this question of respectability much as it is with orthodoxy in religion? We all know that the heresy of one age becomes the orthodoxy of the next. And so likewise, does not the disreputable of one age become the respectable of the next? But the question arises, "who or what is it that brings about the change?" It was once both orthodox and respectable to burn religious heretics and those accused of witch-craft. Was it due to the efforts of orthodox and respectable people that these burnings were abolished and the right of private judgment in religious matters established? Did the respectable and orthodox Cotton Mather and Jonathan Edwards, of New England; the respectable and orthodox John Calvin, and the respectable and orthodox Popes of Rome lead the way in this reform?

It was once orthodox and respectable to sell men, women and children on the auction block, and to drive them to the field at daybreak with whips, as so many cattle, and to catch them with blood-hounds when they ran away from their cruel task-masters. Who was it that set in motion the rebellion against this form of slavery and at last compelled the adoption of a slave code a little less repulsive and shocking—though it must be admitted none the less cruel and unjust? Did the respectable slave-holders and slave-traders themselves make the change? Was it not due mainly to the efforts of the despised and disreputable anti-slavery agitators, such as the Garrisons, Fosters, the Phillipses, the Quakers and other unorthodox church people?

Our friend mentions "drunkenness and gambling," and thinks respectability has greatly reduced these vices. The first I knew of the public agitation in favor of total abstinence from alcoholic drinks was a public "temperance" convention in Missouri, in which the principal speaker in defense of alcohol was a very respectable Baptist minister, and the chief speaker in favor of abstinence therefrom was a comparatively disreputable "infidel," or agnostic in religion. It is on record that the bill paid for the entertainment of a certain convention of orthodox and very respectable New England divines showed that the liquors provided for these godly men cost considerably more than the bread and other more substantial edibles.

But why particularize and enlarge upon a point so well known as that all humanitarian reforms begin with, and are carried forward by, comparatively disreputable and unpopular agitators, while the whole weight of the respectable and conservative classes is cast into the balance against the movement for change, until change becomes inevitable; then the aforesaid respectable conservatives come forward and claim all the credit of the advance, the improvement, coolly asserting that they had always been in favor of the principles involved in the change.

As to gambling—I would like to ask our friend whether it be really true that gambling is any less prevalent and any less respectable than it was a hundred or a thousand years ago. As in all things else, methods have changed, but when we think of the respectable gamblers in grain and other necessaries of life—the "Board of Trade" of Chicago, for instance, and the doings in their two-million-dollar gambling house,—by whose gambling deals millions are lost and won every day, and thousands and hundreds of thousands of honest producers and consumers are swindled and robbed—often driven to the poor house or to suicide by the artificial fluctuation of prices thus produced; and when we remember the money that yearly changes hands as the result of betting on elections; on horse races; on yacht races and on boxing matches; not to mention the "slot machines;" the "Louisiana lotteries;" the licensed and the unlicensed "gambling dens" of all large cities, the church-fair raffles, etc., etc., it seems to me a little risky to say that gambling is any less prevalent or respectable now than it was a thousand years ago.

And when we remember the reports of liquors drunk at the banquets of the bankers' conventions, at the feasts of the elect "four hundred"—setting the pace, as they do, for all other respectable people to follow—and when we recall that President McKinley, posing as the "glass of fashion and the mold of form" as a churchman and statesman, takes his wine in public; and when we note the statistics of imports and exports of liquors, and of the interstate commerce in the same; when we remember all this, there is certainly cause for doubt as to whether, after all the efforts to make liquor drinking disreputable, it is less prevalent or even less respectable today than it was one hundred or one thousand years ago.

I say this not as an advocate of liquor-drinking but as a life long abstainer—practically so—from alcoholic beverages, and as one who would gladly help to secure rational reform in this regard.

If I am correct in these statements as to the part played by respectability in reforming the vices and preventing crimes in general, the same views will hold good in the matter of "wife-beating," to which reference is made by Bro. Kerr. If there has been improvement in this respect it is not because of but in spite of respectability. The respectable leaders of church and state, in the past, have regarded women as chattels, to be used and abused by their owners, their husbands, and it is contrary to all human experience to suppose that these respectable lords and masters voluntarily abandoned their time-honored privilege of wife beating. The historian Ridpath says:

"The iron jaws that close upon the marrow-bone of privilege were never known to relax their hold till broken."

It must therefore have been the disreputable rebels against the authority of the respectable church and state that set in motion a crusade for freedom for woman, including the right to own and control herself, which, of course, means abolition of wife-beating as well as freedom from all licensed and unlicensed invasion.

Respectability, as I see it, is indissolubly allied to conservation and unalterably opposed to radicalism or innovation. Hence always opposed to progress, unless progress be in line with the privileges already enjoyed by the respectable, the aristocratic class or classes. Wendell Holmes said of the college professor—himself one:—"The green apple does not cling to the bough that supports it with greater tenacity than does the college professor to conservatism."

With equal truth we can say, the green apple does not cling to the bough that supports it with greater tenacity than does respectability to the old, the established, the customary, the traditional, the non-progressive and the reactionary.

Friend Kerr thinks it possible that Lucifer may some day become a "respectable paper." Judging from the history of all reform movements there is great danger that such prediction may prove true. But before that day shall dawn I sincerely hope and pray that Lucifer may die! die as it has lived, the fearless, the uncompromising foe of Grundyism; and that another paper with sufficient backbone, sufficient virility and enterprise to keep ahead of the procession, may take its place.

There will probably never come a time when there will not be need of a paper so unconventional, so revolutionary, so iconoclastic, so disreputable, that respectability will not want to burn it, and try to imprison or hang the editor.

My article is long but not nearly so long as it would be if I should notice all the points in "Miscellaneous Observations" that seem to call for a brief reply. In closing will repeat what has often been said in these columns, that truth is many sided and that it is impossible for any of us to see all the lines and angles of truth from any given standpoint; hence the need that all sides be heard, patiently, candidly heard. The greatest danger of controversy is that it will degenerate into a trial of dialectical skill and that the real object—the discovery of truth will be lost sight of. For this reason I seldom reply directly to those whose arguments to me seem faulty, preferring that arguments shall stand or fall upon their merits, rather than upon personal or other extraneous considerations.

I wish also to say that the articles of no writer for Lucifer's columns are read with greater interest by me than are those of our earnest and faithful British Columbian friend, Robert B. Kerr, and that I sincerely hope his pen will never grow weary of well doing.

M. HARMAN.

Hammond, La., Dec. 30, 299.

Our Work for the Ensuing Year.

It may be that many of our friends feel, with Mr. Thierry (see Various Voices), aggrieved because their opinions of the name of our paper have not appeared in print. If every such person should follow his example, Lucifer's list would probably be diminished by more than a hundred. On the other hand, if we should, in the interest of what Mr. Thierry considers equity give space to the opinions of every one who has written us on the subject, the paper would be filled for several issues with such letters, which would probably cause many other subscribers to "drop" the paper because of its lack of interest to those to whom the name of the paper is not the most absorbing possible topic of discussion. Mr. Thierry's communication was sent to the editor and was one of the "rays" from which the decision was made. Personally, I agreed more nearly with Mr. Thierry than with some others whose letters have appeared in Lucifer. I have been tempted to express my opinion, but I think enough has already been said on the subject. So far as the circulation of Lucifer is concerned, the name appears to make little difference—at least very few have promised any extra exertion in the way of increasing it, whatever the nam e may be

* * *

We are entering on a new year. The question of the name has been settled, so far as the editor is concerned, and all, no matter what their personal preference, will agree that he is the one to decide what the name of his own paper shall be. I think it time to drop the discussion, and shall publish no more letters on the subject, unless by express order of the editor. There is much work ahead for all of us, and means and strength and time are limited. Lucifer will continue with the same name and form. The autobiography of the editor will require much thought and labor before June next, when he hopes to have it ready for the readers.

In addition to this work we expect to resume the publication of the" Light- Bearer Library." This will comprise small pamphlets issued monthly.

About two years ago we started the publica tion, and "Variety vs. Monogamy," by E. C. Walker, price three cents, and "Ruled by the Tomb," by Orford Northcote, price ten cents, were issued. My absence in England, and the publication of the book, "Hilda's Home," caused us to discontinue the publication of the Library. We shall soon issue No. 3 of the series. Subscribers at the twenty-five cent rate who have not had their money refunded to them will receive the ten numbers to complete their year.

The regular subscription price will be fifty cents a year. Retail price will be from three to ten cents, according to size o pamphlet. Among manuscripts on hand ready for publication in the Library are "The Evolution of the Family," by Jonathan Mayo Crane; "Judgment," by William Platt, and "Marriage and Morality," by Lillian Harman.

We want to have a good subscription list to enable us to obtain second class rates for the publication. To secure this we will accept up to Feb. 1, twenty-five cents for a year's subscription. After that date fifty cents a year will be the price. Back numbers will be supplied to subscribers at the regular subscription rate.

L. H.

An editorial on "The Old and the New," received too late for insertion this week will appear in next week's Lucifer.

"A Plea for Sexual Reform" was handed to me, together with other typewritten articles of a similar nature, when I was in London. I do not know the author's name; but it is no less valuable because of that. It will be found on page 411.

I have had but little cause of complaint for some weeks, in the matter of typographic errors, but in No. 794 in 2nd line 2nd column of page 406, the word "happy" should be helpful—a most provoking blunder.

M. H.

M. Florence Johnson is wanted in Ohio in March. If "calls" are sufficiently numerous she may extend her trip to Chicago or even farther west. She should be kept busy. She is well qualified, in every way, as lecturer and entertainer. For terms, dates, etc., address M. Florence Johnson, 17 W. 99 st., N. Y. City.

A Card of Thanks.

I desire in this public way to thank, most sincerely, all who have written me since I left Chicago in November last. So very numerous have these letters become of late that it is simply impossible to answer them all without taking so much of my time and energy that I would have little left for any other purpose. But, please, do not infer from this that I wish these letters to cease. Every letter is carefully read and appreciated, but it is much more easy to read letters,—if plainly written—than it is to answer them. Till further notice my address will be Hammond, La., care Hewett Bros.

M. HARMAN.

Word Sketches.

BY HENRY E. ALLEN.

In a quiet New England village a few years ago a druggist lived an unhappy married life. A young lady, a graduate of a college in the locality, was teaching the village school. She was handsome, amiable and accomplished. Finally, the always-to-be-expected happened;—what village has not had its scandals?

In an unguarded moment the pretty teacher had ventured beyond society's life-line, and the billows of venomous attack swept her out as an outcast. Even the good ladies of the village—of its two churches—failed to apply the life lessons of the Tramp of Gallilee—that even he was a wine-bibber and associated with harlots. But this was not to be expected.

The pretty "outcast" teacher wandered to the west. At Geneseo, Ill., a capitalist provided her with means to reach Chicago and equip a "disreputable house." She is now one of the richest and most notorious "scarlet women" in the world. Her success and influence (not acquired by one in a hundred thousand) throughout a career of several years, have unfortunately attracted scores of young women—wage slaves—into that vortex of dishonor from which society permits none to escape. Reader, you will doubtless turn this little word sketch with its "face against the wall." But the sketch though poorly drawn possesses the essential merit of truth. I wish all such sketches were only fiction. I wish that society was brave and wise enough to understand that virtue can never consist in repression of natural law or appetite—that this "scarlet woman" and all the other women of her kind who have followed in shame's gilded train, are the victims of a monstrous, cruel, unjust social tyranny founded upon ignorance and aggression.

* * *

In one of the female wards in the Jacksonville insane asylum a woman of about thirty years of age keeps repeating these words: "What will I do with Tommy and Johnny? What will I do with Tommy and Johnny?" She is the wife of a farmer, and the mother of eight children, all born within ten years. Her insanity began shortly before the birth of her last babe, and the anxiety for its care, when already overburdened beyond her strength, induced insanity.

The human animal seems to be the only one that overburdens itself with a numerous progeny to the point of insanity and death. But does not the government through the Comstock law practically declare that the insanity of this woman and the premature deaths of thousands of others, similarly situated, are defensible and just? Is this sketch a pleasing one to contemplate? If you believe in the golden rule is it not your bounden duty to protest against any institution that commits woman to such outrage? I say yes.

* * *

In a filthy den in West 13th Street lives a cigar-maker with a large family. His precarious wage for many months has not been sufficient for decent livelihood, and the older children, are driven out to make a few pennies to add to the miserable family store. My informant asked the man this question: Then you believe in the forcible annexation of the Philippines? We have now 250,000 cigar-makers—you think it will make times better for you by adding 250,000 Filipino cigar-makers to our ranks? As he was getting ready to make his 'imperial' reply his landlord appeared with a notice for him to quit the premises.

VARIOUS VOICES.

J. A. Ashworth, Minneapolis, Minn.:—I am very glad that the readers of Lucifer are assured of the history of the life of the editor and hereby subscribe for two copies of the book.

Mrs. L. L., Mich.:—Drop my name from your list. I regret this, but to continue to burden you with my beggarly conditions will never advance any cause. I am seventy-one years old and a back number; but O, to be gradually compelled to give up and drop old friends and counsellors—is worse by far than Jonathan Edwards' ideal description of a Christian Hell. Wish me as well as I wish you and if you should ever come our way, remember the latch string hangs out.

C. S. W., S. D.—Have received through my father a number of Lucifer publications that were new to me, among them, "Hilda's Home," which is the very best book I ever read. I told my sweetheart of it and gave it to her to read. The light has begun to shine! Ours is a love of common sense and reason.

Elsie Cole Wilcox, Lawrence, Wash.—That "Life of Moses Harman" is the one thing I must have if it is published. I shall have to furbish up a hat already two years old and make it do for another summer, but that is better than losing the chance of reading a book such as I am confident that will be. The struggle is hard to get even the necessaries of life, and I hardly know where the money is coming from to renew my subscription to Lucifer, which expires soon. But it must come. Don't drop me if I am not quite on time. But I'll try to be. I want the magazine too, if it materializes.

C. P. Hunt, Chicago:—Mr. E. D. Brinkerhoff says "gold certificates are kept at par by being receivable by the government for all public dues." "At par" means equal in value to the metal represented by the certificate. As the metal may be had on demand it is difficult to see how a gold certificate could be anything but "at par." A gold dollar is always worth itself. This term "at par" becomes mysterious when applied to the house, which Mr. B. says can be "coined," and the paper representing it will pass at par. At par with what? with the legal unit of value? This being the gold dollar, coining houses would not add to the currency per capita.

Caroline de Maupassant, Otter Lake, Mich.: I approve of your plan of giving the name Lucifer to a monthly magazine for which I enclose one dollar. If the magazine is not issued I would thank you to apply it to my subscription to the Light-Bearer, I lend Lucifer to my next neighbors who are too poor to subscribe but appreciate it. Thus the good seed is not entirely wasted. Mr. Thierry says he can only subscribe for your biography and has sent you the money. I hope that it will succeed whether the magazine does or not. The matter to be handled must surely interest every body, orthodox as well as heretics, Republicans, Democrats or Anarchists.

W. C. Faye, Box 986, Lincoln, Neb.,—Please continue my Lucifer for a year. Will remit for same Jan. 16. Will want some books pretty soon too. I have long been interested in the principles laid down in Lucifer but have never been in a place where I could do as much good for the cause as I would like, but from now on will be found ready to do all I can to forward the cause of right living and personal liberty.

There are none of our people here who live in accord with our ideas, openly and frankly, so am alone. If any of our people pass through or stop here I would be glad to have them call on me. I am going on the road again in the spring and will be able to do some work for you in subscriptions and books. I hope the loved editor of Lucifer will recover his usual health soon and live long to push his good work.

James Thierry, Otter Lake, Mich.—The discussion of the name of Lucifer made me suppose that the suggestion of an old subscriber, who has taken much interest in the welfare of said paper, would be equitably considered. My motto, in such matters, is: "A pure white light is the result of a combination of rays of various colors; meaning that to find the truth we must give all a bearing, without exception. I am sorry you did not think of that when you threw my letter into the waste basket and that I cannot, consistently, contribute to the support of a paper denying equity, even to the humblest of its subscribers. My subscription has just expired and I do not wish to renew, so please stop sending Lucifer to me and oblige.

J. B. Elliott, Philadelphia, Pa.:—The following is an account of the marriage of the romantic litterateur, George Lippard and Miss Rose Newman, which occurred on May 14, 1847, on the banks of the beautiful Wissohickon. The two noble, gentle, loving souls who rose above the conventions of their day entered into matrimonial relations "without pastoral bleat or sacerdotal bill" believing that the affinities of mind transcended all idle restrictions. It is safe to say that for romance this marriage was unequaled even in the Chronicles of Froissart. It was a beautiful moonlight evening when the couple approached Indian Rock where the loving pair pledged their troth by a simple Indian ceremony which was as follows:

They stood on opposite sides of the stream; the bride stooped down and taking some water in her hands gave it to him to drink. He then in like manner gave her some water to drink from his hands, pouring part of the water on her head. He then handed her a small hoe and an ear of Indian corn. Then she handed him a deer's foot and a bow and arrow, and after receiving it, stepping across the running stream he caught her by the waist and lifting her over the stream took her hand in his and dramatically exclaimed, "By the Great Spirit that created me I am thy husband forever." And she replied, "By Maito's edict I am thine forever."

This simple Indian rite solemnized on the banks of the romantic Wissohickon under the mellow light of the May moon, was a fitting expression of the dreamy, poetic nature of the man and the tender, worshipful character of the woman. This couple lived a brief but happy and contented life, and were blessed with two children, both of whom together with the loving wife preceded him to the grave.

He was an intimate friend of the poet Edgar Poe, and delivered one of the most dramatic eulogies of Thomas Paine ever written by man. This together with his life may be had of Lucifer. Price, twenty cents with postage.

PROSPECTUS

Of the Life History of Moses Harman.

I. Ancestry. Early Life and Struggles to get an Education

II. "Travels in Faith." From Methodism to Universalism and thence to Rationalism.

III. Experiences as a Heretic and Abolitionist in a Slave State—Religion, War and Politics.

IV. Experiences as Teacher, Preacher and Magistrate—or "Justice of the Peace."

V. Experiences in Journalism—A Ten Years' Fight in the Courts. Reflections on our Judiciary, State and Federal.

VI. Prison Experiences. A "Third Term." Letters from and to the Prisoner.

VII. Reflections on Prison Discipline. "Crimes Against Criminals."

VIII. The Movement for Freedom of Womanhood and Motherhood, and for the Right of Children to Be Born Well.

IX. Relation of this Movement to All Other Reform Movements.

X. Present outlook for this Movement. "Duty of the Hour."

This book will comprise about four hundred pages; printed in good paper, new and clear type and good binding, with portrait of the author and of his daughter and helper, Lillian Harman. Price one dollar. Life and health permitting, the book will be ready for delivery to subscribers on or before June first, next. Subscriptions solicited, so that we may know how large an edition to issue.

A NEW BOOK by Albert Chavannes. "Magnetation, its Relation to Health and Character," contains invaluable information upon the relation of the sexes. Price, 25 cents. Address, Albert Chavannes, 308 Fourth Ave., Knoxville, Tenn.

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C. Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races." Chapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III., Co-operation; Chapter IV., Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, 10cts.

Personal Readers of Lucifer who live in Cleveland or Toledo especially, or along the Lake Shore Road in general, and who are disposed to make the acquaintance of an earnest Luciferite will confer a favor upon humbly sending an introductory note to E. D. W., care of Lucifer, when they will receive a reply either by note or visit as they may designate 795.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

WOMEN and ECONOMICS,

A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women. By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Here are a few of the page headings of this remarkable work "Economic environment; The dependence of women; No inherent disability of sex; Marriage not a partnership; House service as a livehood; Motherhood and economic production Modification to maternity; The usefulness of sex; Differentiation of sex; Sex and humanity; The peacock's tail; Sex distinctions; The eternal feminine; unreasoning devotion; Women as persons; Race-attributes and sex-attribute; The normal child; Personal profit and sex-relations; The influence of heredity; The young man and the young woman; The effect of custom: The sex relation personal; Innocence and ignorance; Marriage with independence; The increasing difficulty of marriage; Supporting one's family; Virtue and vice; The results of repression; The harm that women do; The development of love; The hope for the future; The martyr and the pioneer; The dropping of the bars; The meaning of the new woman; Motherhood in education; A criminal failure; Marriage and the family; Love's young dream; The heart and the stomach; Socializing the household industries; The stomach as a family tie; The servant wife; World-servants and house-servants; A wider maternity; Between the old and the new; "The vices of the slave;" The outgrown stronghold. Printed on strong, heavy paper; 350 pages, bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale by M. Harman, 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

CULTIVATION OF PERSONAL MAGNETISM.

A TREATISE ON HUMAN CULTURE. BY LEROY BERRIER.

This treatise reverses the common belief that Personal Magnetism, Life Force and Mind Force can not be cultivated and acquired. It is a Complete Course of Instructions that will enable all who possess them, to become powerfully magnetic. Price, $1. Postage, 5 cents.

Sent on receipt of price. Address Moses Harman, 507 Carroll Ave. Chicago, Ill.

OURWORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES.

By E. C. WALKER.

No man is wise enough to foresee the secondary results of any proposed restriction, and no history is copious enough to record the evils that have ensued upon denials of liberty.—George E. Macdonald.

CONTENTS:

Love and the Law,	3
The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal,	12
The Continuity of Race-Life; and Tyranny,	16
Food and Sex Fallacies, a criticism,	17
When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varietists,	26
The New Woman: what is she? what will she be?	31
The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes,	44
Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce,	45
Love: Its Attraction and Expression,	51
Is She an Honest Girl?	53
Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts,	54
Social Radicals and Parentage,	57
Anthropology and Monogamy,	59
Love and Trust Versus Fear,	62
Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life."	61

Price 15 cents. For sale at this office.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduce from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hun reds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid di se than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.

This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Women in Marriage Slavery

Will find in HILDA'S HOME a story exposing the horrors of their condition as faithfully and as fearlessly as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" exposed the horrors of Negro slavery in the South. The story is more entertaining than many modern works of fiction and the plain truths it tells will find responsive echoes in the aching, bursting hearts of many women who know the galling effects of marriage thralldom.

The book contains 425 pages. Price handsomely bound in cloth, $1. In paper cover 50 cents. Send in your order NOW—especially if you want extra copies for distribution among your friends.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Persons Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 20 cents. Address Moses Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. E. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the questions. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.

"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.

"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.

Sample pages free Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Missing Link Modern Spiritualism. By A. Leah Underhill. A book for all spiritualists and investigators. "Hear all sides, then decide." 28 chapters; 478 pages; 16 illustrations, including portraits of the Fox family. History of the Hydesville rappings, as given by eyewitnesses, the threats of mob violence; remarkable and well-attested manifestations; the "exposures" disposed of, etc. Handsomely bound in cloth. Publishers price, $1.50. On receipt of $1.27, and 13 cents for postage, we will send the book to any address.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be free; must enjoy the full privilege of soliciting the love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrially."—Page 205. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CITYLESS AND COUNTRYLESS WORLD," by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 500 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Free Love; A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of conjugal love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 1875, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence. 160 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave. Chicago

RBR
E
f# 808
v.4 no.1
3rd ser.
1900/01

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. IV., No. I. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, JAN. 13, E. M. 300. [C. E 1900.] WHOLE No. 796.

One of Many.

"Be true to me." This ever is love's plea.
And yet, "Be true to me," I do not say
To thee, my love, who loveth truth alway,
More, even, than love's supremest ecstacy.
For sweeter songs than mine are sung to thee;
And fairer lives, flower-like, unfold each day.
My bloom but helps to make the summer gay:
My voice but serves to swell life's harmony.
The channels of thy soul are deep and wide,
And fed from many streams. Ah, poor indeed
The shallow love that would deny thy due
To all sweet streams save its own narrow tide!
I know thy needs; and so I do not plead
As one who loveth less. "To me be true,"

Susan Man Spaulding.

Peasant Marriage in Russia.

Here is a story of compulsory marriage in Russia in 1850, given by Prince Kropotkine in his "Reminiscences." General Kropotkine was a worthy precursor of our Governor of Guam in marrying off people by wholesale and against their will. Is it any wonder that Prince Kropotkine, gentle, refined, liberty-loving, as he is, should revolt against a system which makes such cruel outrage both possible and common? Probably every one who reads these lines knows something of the story of his life—how he rebelled against the system, was imprisoned, escaped, and has devoted his life to work for the emancipation of mankind. He lives, with his wife and little daughter, in a suburb near London. His means of existence are supplied by his scientific articles. Even now he could return to the possession of his estates, luxury and power, by renouncing his libertarian views and professing allegiance to the Czar. But he prefers poverty sweetened by his work for liberty. L. H.

"A landowner once made the remark to another: 'Why is it that the number of souls on your estate increase so slowly? You probably do not look after the marriages.'

"A few days later, my father, General Kropotkine, returned to his estate. He had a list of all the inhabitants of his village brought to him, and picked out from it the names of the boys who had attained the age of eighteen, and of the girls just past sixteen—these are legal ages for marriages in Russia. Then he wrote: 'John to marry Anna; Paul to marry Parashka;' and so on with five couples. 'The five weddings,' he added, 'must take place in ten days; the next Sunday but one.'

"A general cry of despair rose from the village. Women, young and old, wept in every house. Anna had hoped to marry Gregory; Paul's parents had already had a talk with the Fedotoffs about their girl, who would soon be of age. Moreover, it was the season for plowing, not for weddings; and what wedding can be prepared in ten days? Dozens of peasants came to see the landowner; peasant women stood in groups at the back entrance of the estate, with pieces of fine linen for the landowner's spouse, to secure her intervention. All in vain! The master had said that the weddings should take place at such a date, and so it must be.

"At the appointed time the nuptial processions, in this case more like burial processions, went to the church. The women cried with loud voices, as they are wont to cry during burials. One of the house valets was sent to the church, to report to the master as soon as the wedding ceremonies were over; but soon he came running back, cap in hand, pale and distressed.

"'Parashka,' he said, 'makes a stand; she refuses to be married to Paul. Father (that is, the priest) asked her: 'Do you agree?' But she replied, in a loud voice: 'No, I don't.'"

"The landowner grew furious. 'Go and tell that long-maned drunkard (meaning the priest; the Russian clergy wear their hair long) that if Parashka is not married at once, I will report him to the archbishop as a drunkard. How dares he, clerical dirt, disobey me? Tell him he shall be sent to rot in a monastery, and I shall exile Parashka's family to the Steppes.'

"The valet transmitted the message. Parashka's relatives and the priest surrounded the girl; her mother, weeping, fell on her knees before her, entreating her not to ruin the whole family. The girl continued to say 'I won't,' but in a weaker and weaker voice, then in a whisper, until at last she stood silent. The nuptial crown was put upon her head; she made no resistance, and the valet ran full speed to the mansion to announce: 'They are married.'

"Half an hour later, the small bells of the nuptial processions resounded at the gate of the mansion. The five couples alighted from the cars, crossed the yard, and entered the hall. The landlord received them, offering them glasses of wine, while the parents, standing behind their crying daughters, ordered them to bow to the earth before their lord.

"Marriage by order was so common that amongst our servants, each time a young couple foresaw that they might be ordered to marry although they had no mutual inclination for each other, they took the precaution of standing together as godfather and godmother at the christening of a child in one of the peasant families. This rendered marriage impossible according to Russian church law. The stratagem was usually successful, but once it ended in a tragedy. Andrei, the tailor, fell in love with a girl belonging to one of the neighbors. He hoped that my father would permit him to go free, as a tailor, in exchange for a certain yearly payment, and that, by working hard at his trade, he could manage to lay aside some money and to buy freedom for the girl. Otherwise, in marrying one of my father's serfs, she would have become the serf of her husband's master. However, as Andrei and one of the maids of our household foresaw that they might be ordered to marry, they agreed to unite as god-parents in the christening of a child. What they had feared happened. One day they were called to the master, and the dreaded order was given. 'We are always obedient to your will,' they replied, 'but a few weeks ago we acted as godfather and godmother at a christening.' Andrei also explained his wishes and intentions. The result was that he was sent to the recruiting board to become a soldier. Thus Andrei had now to face for twenty-five years the terrible fate of a Russian soldier. All his schemes of happiness had come to a violent end."

X
Per gL937
3rd ser.
v.4
1900/01
no.1

A New England Wife.

From "Norwood," by Henry Ward Beecher.

Agate Bissell was the stern child of a severe experience. Her father was poor, and would have been industrious but for an unfortunate habit of drinking. Her mother was a woman of decision, of pride of character, of high moral feeling, but subject from childhood to hard work, with only a little education. She grew up a kind of patient warrior against trouble. She had known trouble from childhood. Poverty before and poverty after her marriage, were but minor evils. She had seven children. The third child, but first-born daughter, was Agate. Nowhere except in New England could she have been called Agate. Her mother was an earnest reader of the bible. In her continual troubles she resorted to it literally as to a refuge. Isaiah above all writers had fired her imagination. . . . .

Here had she read, till they mingled with her waking and sleeping thoughts, those words of sublime consolation! Naturally high-minded and sensitive, every aspiration had been almost crushed. Her husband, a good-natured man, could not be redeemed from his cups, and to her proud spirit it seemed as if she were bound to a dead body. Awful thoughts sometimes rose up in her, a horror of temptation, which sent her flying to her chamber for prayer and scripture, like a dove flying from before a swift-pursuing hawk. Then she would read: "For thy maker is thy husband, the Lord of Hosts is his name. . . . For the Lord hath called thee as a woman forsaken and grieved in spirit. . . . For a small moment I have forsaken thee, but with great mercies will I gather thee."

On some days the clouds came low down, and there was no horizon of hope. Her little children were hungry, her husband drunk, her own strength giving way, and all the future like an on-coming storm. Then she would read, "For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed, but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee! O, thou afflicted! tossed with tempest and not comforted, behold! I will lay thy stones with fair colors, and lay thy foundations with sapphires. And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones. And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children."

This touched to the quick. For her husband there remained only the sentiment of duty. But all her garnered and wounded affections were poured forth upon her children. If by a living death she could save them, and gain a firm foothold for each of them in honorable life, she would willingly have died deaths daily.

In her poor little dwelling, it may be supposed, were no luxuries. No picture, no print so big as her baby's hand, hung on the wall. She knew no rest, no amusement. Her whole being was a concentrated purpose to bring up her children so that their life should be happier than hers had been. For that, the sun shone—for that, summer and winter came—for that, the Sabbath inserted a seventh golden link in the iron chain of toil—for that, the whole world existed to her, and time itself drew on its train of days and nights! On her feet, in work, wrestling against poverty;—on her knees, in prayer, wrestling against temptations and despair, she reared her children, hoping in them at last to find an end of sorrow and a beginning of joy.

When Agate was just born, she looked upon the babe with anguish. She seemed to see all her own miseries stored up for this child. She almost felt a pang of guilt for bringing another woman into life to take a place in that long procession of sufferers, of which women have constituted the largest proportion. She hardly wished to look in her face. Long before the minister sprinkled this little new-comer, her mother had baptized her with tears.

As soon as she could sit up, (and the poor recover from the birth of children sooner than the prosperous. A rigorous nurse art thou, oh Poverty!—a stern physician, and, though skilful, bitter cruel!) weak, sad, alone, except her little children, her days were darker than anything but the nights. There was little difference in the twenty-four hours, except that the night was darkness plagued with dreams, and the day was darkness plagued with gloomy thoughts. The first day that she could read, her eldest boy brought her well-worn Bible to her. It opened of itself to her favorite chapter. The leaves there were like a travelled road. Let the book fall open a hundred times, and every time it would open at the same place. Then she read: "I will make thy windows agates." A window is that by which light comes through upon our inward darkness, or by which we look out of darkness into light. If a window of God is made of agate, then, she thought, an agate must be something more clear and beautiful than glass. What agate was she knew not, but it must needs be something glorious and hopeful. "And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord." That was the very anguish-longing of her heart! She seemed to have it borne in upon her that her children are the Lord's windows, through which mothers look forth, out of pain and darkness into hope and happiness! She seized the happy thought: "I will call her Agate. Perhaps the Lord will make her like a window to my darkness." Thus was the child named. . . . .

Growing up in such circumstances, it may well be supposed that Agate's life was one which would bring her to more acquaintance with work and vigor of duty, than with those lighter graces which commonly belong to prosperous childhood.

With as much natural conscience as her mother, she had a less intense pride. She could not sympathize with that shuddering horror at her father's presence, which her mother, with all her struggles, could never subdue. Agate stood between them, loving both, and was indeed a medium—a window—through which each looked upon the other, colored with the hues of the medium.

When at thirteen years of age, her father died—unreformed, stupefied—Agate really mourned. Her mother saw the turf placed upon his grave without a tear. Her soul said, God hath avenged me! For years the mother and children struggled on. Agate, besides daily work, had, as it were, carried away captive a certain amount of education. No one but he who has tried it knows what power of learning there is in a mind every faculty of which is tensely strained with desire and necessity. She read with eyes that pierced. What she read was as if it had been burned in. At seventeen she taught the summer-school in her neighborhood. Her brothers were her care at home as well. At twenty-two the mother went to her rest. On the last day of her life her mind wandered back to her brief hours of early joy. She half-spake and half-whispered some fondling words, as if she were a girl in the days of courtship and love. Then, after a little, the life-long grief seemed again to overshadow her. "Agate—Agate—He's come. Put him to bed. Oh God!" She dozed for an hour. When, after a time, Agate looked upon her mother, her eyes were opened wide, as if she beheld new and strange things. In a low and sweet voice she said: "Yes—I am coming." Before the sun went down, she had departed, and her troubled day was over.

The Gospel of Self-Help.

A. Z. Mahorney in "Freedom," Sea Breeze, Fla.

It does no one good to carry his burdens for him, and more than that, it weakens both parties. It keeps one from developing self-reliance and it exhausts the vitality and nerve-force of the other.

Almost every one can recall instances of a mother sacrificing herself for a son, or of a sister for a brother, or simply of one friend foregoing his own best development for the supposed happiness of another. It does not pay. Happiness is not in it for either party.

Each person's first duty is to himself. After he is strong, he can help others to gain his position by the positiveness of his wishes for their growth. But to allow one's self to become devitalized and mentally impoverished through sympathy with others' weakness, is to put one's self beyond the possibility of helping even himself for a time.

You will say perhaps, "How can I help worrying, when all my thought is centered in the person that needs my help?"

In the first place it is a mistake [illegible] in a way that will invite a demand of one's very life-blood from the object of that interest.

I knew a woman so "wrapped up" in her grown son that he treated her as a slave. Her own attitude invited the condition. He was a worthless, drunken loafer, and his mother worked day and night to furnish him with money. He accepted her devotion as his right, and the more she did for him the more he wanted done.

It is hard to say that she deserved such treatment, but she did in the sense that she brought it on herself by first usurping his authority over himself. He could know nothing of the pleasure of a self-dependent manhood when he had been "babied" all his life.

Another instance of mistaken effort that came under my observation was this: A mother on her death-bed exacted a promise from the eldest daughter to always take care of "the baby." When "the baby" was a man his sister still put his wishes and interests before her own. He used whisky and tobacco, but his sister made excuses that he had been influenced by bad associates. She would pay his bills "because he was of such a gentle, refined disposition and tried so hard to reform."

Now is it not patent to every one that she was binding him in her thought and stultifying his self-respect?

A man who had grown out of such conditions said, "What fools mothers are to thus prevent their children from becoming individualized from the basis of self-hood! How can they expect a child to develop judgment if it is given no freedom?"

The trouble is that reason has not yet dominated the emotional nature. The affections get the best of one, in spite of the judgment.

This is a great source of mistakes in our growth; i. e., allowing ourselves to be blinded to the best interests of ourselves or others by the affections. Our love for a person will prompt us to do things that will be a hindrance to growth. But intelligence to understand the situation will be born of the experiences of these mistakes, and then the love nature will express itself from a basis of pure justice to every individual. The time we formerly spent binding ourselves and our associates to limitations will be used to build ideals of perfection into outward expression.

Notes and Queries.

BY EDGAR D. BRINKERHOFF.

The sentiment is often expressed and seldom or never denounced that no love is worthy the name unless it be mutual. And yet who can say that it is possible for love to be mutual? Love is first choice, is it not? Would second preference be love? Does fashion permit the affianced maiden to avow that she is engaged to her third or fourth choice? Does the state of public opinion allow the betrothed youth to admit that he is about to be united to the object of his fifth preference? Matches made in heaven are always examples of mutual love the parties to which hold each the other in first love regard. But the mystery deepens in the case of the millions who do not consult heaven. After a woman has selected her highest preference among men, will the preferred one find that she is also his first choice? Can this often happen? Can it happen once in a thousand instances? Then how is it possible for love to be mutual? Would it be a case of mutual love when the man loves in the third degree and the woman in the fiftieth? Must we not consign this dogma of mutual love to the depths of lowest infamy when we know that in practice nearly every one who secures a mate of his or her first (or even third or tenth) choice is necessarily matched with one who cannot possibly return the love in more than the thousandth or ten-thousandth degree?

* * *

Education would regenerate the world, but it cannot be applied on account of sexual superstition. Good sex practices would form mankind anew, but they cannot come into play because of government. Freedom from government would open the [illegible], but freedom cannot be obtained by reason of the opposition of religion. The destruction of religious superstition would clear the way for improvement in general, but religion cannot be destroyed so long as there remains a belief in a God. Distrust of God would give man faith in himself. By the loss of God, humanity would be in a fair way to gain science in the place of religion, freedom in place of government, love in place of bondage, and education in place of stupidity. While reformers do well to keep up a bombardment all along the line, they should not forget to undermine and explode the God idea, which supplies ammunition to all the reactionary forces.

* * *

England does well to follow up the Boer with the injunction: "Thou shalt not own slaves." And better still is her requirement, "Thou shalt not own even one slave." Let the American government be as consistent toward the disciples of Joseph Smith. Following the Mormon from pillar to post, the United States has steadily and wisely insisted, "Thou shalt not own wives." But when shall we be prudent enough to say, "Thou shalt not own even one wife"? With the Kaffir who voluntarily assumes the duties of a slave or with the woman who elects to perform the services of a wife we have no quarrel, but when either changes his or her mind and desires the annulment of the contract, shall we stand idly by and allow Boer or Mormon to enforce the sorry bargain?

The Story of the Oneida Community.

"The Oneida Community; a Record of an Attempt to Carry Out the Principles of Christian Unselfishness and Scientific Race Improvement," by Allen Estlake, member of Oneida Community. London: George Redway. Bound in red cloth, 158 pages. This book is written from a religious viewpoint, contending that the Oneida Community, as its founder contended, was but carrying out the principles of primitive Christianity. Of course the most violent opponents of the community were the orthodox Christians and their antagonism is not surprising, in the light of the following extract from Mr. Estlake's book:

"Many men were ready to give up everything but the petty authority they had been accustomed to exercise in their family circles; one may have been ready to have an enlargement of affectional happiness himself, but could not concede the same freedom to other members of the family. Another could not cease to be the little autocrat and listen to his wife while with others she joined in criticising him. . . . . The founder, John H. Noyes knew wherein the curse of selfishness asserted itself most generally in the civilization of the nineteenth century, and he applied the test: 'That they who have wives should be as though they had none.' Men must leave women to be as free as they desire to be themselves. This was the crucial test of man's love to his fellowmen; without that love he was unfit for community life. No matter what his other qualifications may be, if a man can not love a woman and be happy in seeing her loved by others, he is a selfish man, and his place is with the potsherds of the earth."

Those who knew John H. Noyes could not doubt his sincerity, his resoluteness of purpose and his utter disregard of public opinion when he believed he was in the right. He seemed inflexible and his subsequent renunciation of complex marriage seems almost inexplicable. But Mr. Estlake says:

"John H. Noyes, who was the first to lead his followers out of loyalty to the marriage institution, was the first to call a halt and to propose a return, not to the principle, but to the practice of monogamic marriage." His proposition was "That we give up the practice of complex marriage, not as renouncing belief in the principles and prospective finality of that institution, but in deference to the public sentiment which is evidently rising against it." Think of a man who started a community to educate public sentiment deliberately renouncing the very feature of that community to which public sentiment gave the strongest condemnation, and still maintaining that public sentiment was wrong in that regard!

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN. EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper in t has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

The Old and the New—The Outlook.

When a lad in my teens I sometimes expressed the wish to live to see the close of the nineteenth century. I wanted to see what changes would be made, what discoveries and inventions —in science, in the arts, in methods of living. Especially I wanted to see what improvements would be made in methods of treating our fellow human beings, in the latter half of the century in which it was my lot to be born.

By inheritance a friend and earnest advocate of peace and amity with and for all nations and peoples, I hoped to live to see the day when wars should be no more, and when standing armies, iron-clad ships and forts and arsenals would be things of the past, and remembered only as nightmare dreams of the brutal stages of human evolution.

An abstainer from alcoholic liquors, I hoped to live to see the day when the manufacture, the sale and the use of alcoholic beverages would be reduced to a small minimum, if not entirely abandoned.

By inheritance an "abolitionist," I hoped to live to see the day when men, women and children would no longer be bought and sold like cattle, and beaten, half-starved and kept in enforced ignorance simply because of a difference in color of skin and texture of hair.

By inheritance a great lover of books and of learning, I hoped to live to see the day when all people, of whatever race or color, should have the advantages of scholastic training and of broadly liberal culture in art and science.

These and other like hopes and aspirations were particularly dominant in my young mind about the years 1848-49. About that time the very air seemed impregnated, redolent, as it were, with the spirit of unrest, of change, of progress, of revolution. The wonders of steam and of electricity as motor powers and as distributors of intelligence, had then just fairly begun to be brought into general notice.

The discovery of gold in California was just then giving an impetus to the spirit of adventure and of desire for wealth, such as had not been known since the time of the early discoveries of gold in Mexico and South America by the Spaniards in the sixteenth century.

In medicine, Hahnemann, Preissnitz, Thompson and other innovators were seemingly stabbing medical orthodoxy to the heart, by showing to the world that the sick could get well without the aid of the lancet, and without the administration of poisonous drugs.

In religion, the doctrine of "Universal Salvation," as taught by the Ballous, the Chapins and many others; also the "Transcendentalism" of Channing and Parker; the Deistical Unitarians, of whom Thomas Paine, George Washington, Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jefferson had been the advance guard, or prototypes in this country; not to mention "Modern Spiritualism," as taught by Andrew Jackson Davis, the Fox Sisters, S. B. Brittan, Hudson Tuttle, Prof. J. S. Loveland, and thousands more—Spiritualism, the doctrine of spirit return, which doctrine Wendell Holmes in 1858 declared would prove the Nemesis of Orthodox Christianity as Hahnemannism had already proved itself the Nemesis of orthodox medication—all these and more were, just at the time of which I speak, shaking the very foundations of our religious creeds, as they never had been shaken before.

In Europe the Revolutionary spirit was rife everywhere. Thrones were tottering; dynasties seemed crumbling; the democratic and socialistic spirit seemed more nearly universal among the masses of people than at the time of the French Revolution, fifty years before.

In America the chattel slave system, the "peculiar institution" of the southern half of the United States, was "in the saddle;" was in the prime of its strength; was the dominant power in American politics, and also to a very large extent a dominant factor in the financial and commercial world. The civilization of the time, such as it was, seemed to have adjusted itself to the back of the negro slave, as the "mudsill," the basic foundation of the entire structure. So firmly fixed was this peculiar institution, in the estimation of the great majority of people, friends and foes as well, that he who would have dared to predict its early downfall would have been regarded as little better than a lunatic.

And yet, as we all know, in less than two decades from that date, 1848, the chattel slave owner had ceased to be the autocrat of American politics; the negro slave had ceased to be "legal tender" in business transactions, and the product of his toil—cotton—had ceased to be "king," or chief adjuster of balances in the markets of the world.

* * *

The fifty years to which I then looked forward with such eager anticipations have come and gone, and the evening of the last day of 1899, common calendar finds me still an interested observer of the march of events. Looking back over the experiences, the impressions, the memories, of these fifty or fifty-one years, I can, with a little effort of the imagination, cause the leading events of those years to pass before the mind's eye as a continuous panorama.

* * *

That the panoramic retrospect of these years is not an altogether pleasing and reassuring one needs not to be said. That my dearest hopes have been deferred, and my fondest anticipations disappointed, is simple truth concisely stated. Take the first of the hopes mentioned—that in regard to the elimination of wars and the inauguration of universal peace and brotherhood.

During the first decade of the second half of the current century there were at least two great European wars, that of the Crimea and that of Austria with Italy and France, not to mention the short but terrible East Indian war, called the "Sepoy Rebellion." The two first of these wars provoked the "Autocrat of the Breakfast Table" to say through the Atlantic Monthly, that our European cousins were behind us in the evolutionary scale; that while they were still playing with kindergarten toys, such as swords, bayonets, fifes and drums, we had done with all these and were devoting ourselves to such manly occupations as building railroads, laying telegraph wires under the ocean, building up gigantic industries, cultivating science and the arts of peace in general.

We all know what sort of comment the first years of the next or second decade of the half century made upon the self-complacent comparison thus drawn by one of America's brightest scholars and most honored sons. Within five years of the date of this rose-colored picture the soil of our country was trembling under the tread of armies vaster in numbers and more formidable in equipment than were those that overran Europe under the great Napoleon. One of the most interesting of the stories of this most destructive, most unexpected and most inexcusable of all civil wars of modern times, is the said "Autocrat's" account of his "Hunt for the Captain"—said captain being his own son who had been terribly wounded in the great battle of Antietam, which battle occurred almost within gunshot of the capital of the nation whose people had so lately been lauded as having outgrown the provisional or undeveloped stage in which wars were a characteristic feature incident or condition.

MOSES HARMAN.

From My Point of View.

BY LILLIAN HARMAN.

"What will become of the children?"—the children of impecunious parents who cannot pawn their marriage license for even as much as it cost them. This question was answered by Willis Spalter, aged thirteen, when he hanged himself in a barn near Willimantic, Conn., one evening last week. His father died when the boy was six years old, leaving the mother helpless and penniless. He was "bound out" to a farmer. "What it is to be 'bound' in this state," the newspaper correspondent comments, "those who know Connecticut thrift will be able to judge. Willis tried it until he was getting on toward fourteen, and decided that the best thing he could do was to kill himself. . . . . He had five cows to milk, besides caring for a horse, a number of hogs, and a large stock of poultry, all through the bitter depths of New England winters. The laws compel the sending of children to school, so Willis went to school during a few months of the year. But the chores had to be done just the same."

A few years ago another "bound" boy hanged himself in a barn near the same place. Until the State provides better for homeless children than it does at present, its representatives need not fear that we, who do not believe in the power of a simple ceremony to furnish sustenance for our little ones, will bring them into life to throw them on the tender mercies of the State. We prefer to take care of our children ourselves.

* * *

Mr. Brinkerhoff seemingly thinks the alleged fact that two lovers rarely love with equal intensity should receive serious consideration. In my opinion the persons immediately concerned ought to be able to settle that matter to their own satisfaction. It is probably true that two people rarely feel equal intensity in any emotion. Two friends may not feel exactly equal pleasure in each other's companionship. Their enjoyment of a play, of a sunset, of a view of Niagara Falls, may, and probably would, differ in degree. But should the one whose enjoyment is mild in comparison with his friend's receive material compensation for his lack of appreciation? I should say, Yes, if that is their mutual desire and agreement. But my private opinion—expressed if requested—would be that such arrangement would be absurd. Imagine a state of society in which every emotion had to be placed on the spiritual scales, and made to balance by the placing of gold and silver on the "light-weight" side. Why, the old Puritanic regime in which our ancestors watched their consciences as the mariner watches the compass, would be mild in comparison with the vigilance with which we would have to scrutinize the fluctuations of our emotions. But in this, as in all other matters, the great solvent is Liberty. Under freedom, those who desire to invent and experiment with emotion scales will be free to do so, and those of us who are happy in the good old way will not be obliged to submit our emotions to the test, nor be compelled to pay tribute to those of inferior sensibility to happiness.

* * *

The insolence of our self-vaunted "superior race" in arrogating to itself the ability and the right to regulate the lives of the "inferior races" is illustrated in the press dispatches every day. The governors of our new "dependencies" are constantly requiring changes in the customs of their subjects quite as absurd as the clothing of the Fijian babies in woolen garments, by the missionaries in the interest of their morals. This sentence may seem obscure, but it is not really so. The morals of a missionary who sees immodesty in the natural form of a child must be in a state requiring heroic treatment. It is assumed that the soldiers and politicians who are sent to regulate the lives of these heathen peoples are competent to teach the morals and refinements of civilization at the bayonet's point. Only a short time ago the governor of the island of Guam, shocked beyond expression by the mode of life of the natives, ordered them brought up and married off by wholesale—in the interest of morality of course. An illustration of the ignorance of the soldiers in regard to the customs of the country is given in a letter from a South Carolina soldier in Cavite to his father, M. P. Bassett, of Fairfax.

"There was one girl," he said, "who appeared to reciprocate the kind attentions I showed her, and without meaning to throw bouquets at myself, she fell in love with me. It was a mad infatuation and seriously I did not particularly fancy the idea. When I told the fair damsel that I could not marry her as I was going to return to my old country, she offered, and in the presence of her family agreed, to make the obligation binding, to marry me for life, a year, six months, or three months, just as I would prefer. There was no great objection from the family on this, but I said I did not desire to enter such contract, and I was indeed fortunate when my command was moved from her neighborhood shortly afterwards."

This young soldier thought it interesting to amuse himself by paying "kind attentions" to the girl, but was surprised and dismayed when she took him seriously and desired what was to her a respectable marriage. Probably when the "rebels" have been conquered they will be required to change their customs to suit the convenience of their governors, and will be expected to enjoy the system of theoretically permanent monogamy with its attendant blessings of prostitution, seductions, etc., which is characteristic of this country.

A copy of "The Godly Women of the Bible" is wanted. Who has one for sale? Please address this office, stating condition and price.

The editor promised a continuation of his article on "The Old and the New" which appears in this issue, but it has not appeared, owing doubtless to a slight illness caused by taking cold during the first week in January. He now reports that he has almost recovered his usual health.

The Future of the Family.

From "Evolution of Marriage," by Letourneau.

What will marriage and the family become in the future? For one who is not a prophet by supernatural inspiration, it is hazardous to make predictions. The future, nevertheless, is born from the womb of the past, and, after having patiently scrutinised the evolution of bygone ages, we may legitimately risk a few inductions with regard to the ages to come. Doubtless the primitive forms of marriage and the family will persist, if not for ever, as Herbert Spencer believes, at least for a very long time among certain inferior races, protected and at the same time oppressed by climates which the civilized man cannot brave with impunity. These backward prehistoric races will continue to subsist in unwholesome regions, as witnesses of a distant past, recalling to more developed races their humble origin. But with these last the form of marriage and of the family, which has incessantly been evolving, cannot evidently remain immutable in the future. The little human world knows no more repose than the cosmic environment from whence it has sprung, and which encloses it. Among peoples, as among individuals, vital concurrence and selection do their work. Now, when it is a matter of institutions so essentially vital as marriage and the family, the least amelioration is of the highest importance; it has an influence on the number and quality of fresh generations, and on the flesh and spirit of peoples. All things being equal, the preponderance, whether pacific or not, will always fall to the nations which produce the greatest number of the most robust, most intelligent, and best citizens. These better endowed nations will often absorb or replace the others, and always in the long run will be docilly imitated by them. Ethnography and history show us the true sense of evolution in the past. Societies have constantly advanced from confusion to distinction. Monogamic marriage has succeeded to various more confused modes of sexual association. So also the family is the ultimate residuum of vast communities of ill-defined relationships. In its turn, the family itself has become restricted. At first it was stil a sort of little clan; and then it was to be essentially no more than the very modest group formed by the father, the mother, and the children. At the same time the familial patrimony crumbled, just as that of the clan had been previously parcelled out; it became individual. What is reserved for us in the future? Will the family be reconstituted by a slow movement of retrogression, as Herbert Spencer believes? Nothing is less probable.

Institutions have this in common with rivers, that they do not easily flow back towards their source. If they sometimes seem to retrograde, it is generally a mere appearance, resulting from a sort of sociologic rhythm. In truth, the end and the beginning may assume a superficial analogy, masking a profound difference. Thus the unconscious atheism of the Kaffirs has nothing in common with that of Lucretius, and nothing can be less analogous than the anarchic equality of the Fuegians and American individualism. If, as is probable, the individualist evolution, already so long begun, continues in the future, the civilized family—that is to say, the last collective unit of socities—must again be disinterigated, and finally subsist no longer except in genealogy scientifically registered with ever-increasing care; for it is, and always will be, important to be able to prejudge how "the voice of the ancestors" may speak in the individual.

New Pamphlets.

"Occult Stories," by Charles W. Close, Ph. D., S. S. D.; bound in boards; forty-three pages. This is a handsome little book of short stories written by Prof. Close, a well known writer on mind healing and publisher of the "Free Man;" a monthly magazine, and numerous books on occult subjects and on the philosophy of health. Price fifty cents.

* * *

"Hindu Wedding Bells," and "Taj Mahal," by Dr. Alice B. Stockham. The first part of this pamphlet of 30 pages treats of the marriages of the Hindus. The second part gives a description of what Edwin Arnold calls "the wonder of the Agra, and the crown of the world—the Taj, the peerless tomb, built for the fair dead body of Arjamund Banoo Begum by her lord and lover, the Emperor Shah Jehan." Price 50 cents.

* * *

"Food of the Orient," and "Artistic Living," by Dr. Alice B. Stockham. This handsomely bound and illustrated pamphlet of twenty-eight pages is by the well known author of "Tokology" and "Karezza." The first part of the pamphlet is an address delivered by Dr. Stockham at the World's Congress in Chicago in 1893, giving an account of her observations while traveling in the Orient. The second part is an interesting essay on artistic living. Both are arguments in favor of vegetarian diet.

Word Sketches.

BY HENRY E. ALLEN.

A nervous young lady with hollow eyes and cheeks called at the office of a prominent physician in Chicago recently for consultation. The doctor being an old friend of mine I ventured to ask his opinion of the young lady. "That young lady," said the doctor, "is a sexual starveling. Suppression of natural, sexual appetite is just as certainly taking that girl to her grave as consumption could do. Nature brooks no interference from man and visits her awful penalties upon all alike."

The doctor then explained at some length what he meant by "a sexual starveling." Every human being in health is possessed of sexual vigor and desire. Such desire can no more be repressed with safety to health than the desire for food. It may not appear to be as imperative as the demand of the body for food, that is we may disregard sexual appetite for a longer time perhaps without a noticeable impairment of health. But the final effects of the one will at last prove as fatal as the other. During the time that sexual appetite is being starved the victim is constantly suffering. It is an ever-present craving that simply amounts to torture, stronger in some than in others. Magnetic currents are a part of every human organism just as certainly as muscle and bone. These magnetic currents must find their polarity, their complement. Failure to do this often results in derangement of the system in various ways, and the cause is seldom placed where it should be. When we become wise enough to avoid disobedience to all natural law then the doctors will be obliged to seek some other avenue for a livelihood.

* * *

A lady recently related an experience in London in these words: "I was going to one of the suburbs. There is an underground tramway in London with a circle about four miles in circumference, over which the suburban trains run. I had supposed a train on this road would take me to my destination. Imagine my surprise when I found I had been traveling for some time on a train which only ran around the circle, and was no nearer my destination." How many of us are traveling in a circle—no nearer the goal we started for than when we first set out. We constantly deal with effects instead of causes, and so reform continues to move at a sluggish pace.

* * *

In the Labor Commissioner's report for July last is an extended write-up, by a young lady of Atlanta, Ga., of the "Black Belt of the Cotton District." She gives some accounts of the fecundity of the colored people in this belt. There are many families with twenty children, and some with even a greater number. These large families usually leave the table stand between meals, and when all are at the table they eat with no more decorum than would so many animals. The government through the Comstock postal law favors just such an increase in population. Is it wise? Will we not reap the whirlwind sometime?

We have more power than will; and it is often by way of excuse to ourselves that we fancy things are impossible—Rochefoucauld.

I used to think there were a great many dishonest people in the world, but I was mistaken. It's only the difference in people's code of morals.—Labor Voice.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Arbeiter Lesehalle, 129 E. 83 St, N. Y.:—Enclosed $1 as a contribution for Lucifer. Kindly send us a receipt and for our file the the missing numbers 780, 784, and 787. We hope to be able to have Lucifer bound and therefore wish to have a complete file.

R. Anderson, Cooperstown, N. D.:—I herewith enclose $2 towards the life of Moses Harman of which, if published, I should be glad to take six copies, as I think that a record of his life and work should be preserved. If however the funds do not come in, kindly keep the two dollars for Moses Harman's benefit.

F. T. L., Cal.:—Enclosed find $2 for the renewal of my subscription to Lucifer and for Moses Harman's new book. I think there are more hen-pecked husbands than there are wives who are so tyrannically ruled; i. e., there are more men trying to please and advance women than there are women trying to advance themselves.

Lucy N. Colman, Syracuse, N. Y.—I inclose the dollar for your father's book. Am glad that he is able to live in the south through the winter. How uncomfortable it makes our rulers at Washington feel to have a man come there who is so chaste that he satisfies himself with three lawful wives. They were not shocked to be fellow-rulers with Breckenridge, but then Roberts is a Mormon.

J. W. A., Minneapolis, Minn.:—Can you send me Nos. 4,

8 and 9 of the present volume? If so the favor will be greatly appreciated as I have Vol. II. nicely bound in green cloth and Russia leather and desire to bind Vol. III. also. I missed so many numbers of Vol., I. that I could not bind that but would gladly pay a reasonable price for the missing numbers if they are to be had. Wishing you a happy and prosperous New Year and trusting your good father is resting under the influence of a warmer climate than this and that we shall speedily see his new book.

[We can fill orders for any number printed in '99; and can supply many of '97. We will soon have bound volumes of '99. Price, $1.50 each.]

J. W. A., Lake Bay, Wash.:—I sincerely hope and believe that while I remain in this, the primary school of life that my mentality will not be so sluggish as to fail to realize the need of education upon the vital subject of sex, for upon the knowledge or ignorance of its use, as well as its abuse, hangs the weal or woe of every child of earth. In recognition of the work so faithfully performed, and as an incentive to continued usefulness, it is a pleasure to look back to the day that a copy of Lucifer came to me—and to it I owe much of the sunshine that makes the closing days of a prior turbulent life the brightest and best. True, I did not read it until after several ineffectual attempts to do so. For three days a battle raged, and becoming passive I read every line in the paper—read and re-read numbers of paragraphs, and to my astonishment could not offer the semblance of dissent. Here was a new field of thought and I entered it with alacrity. If asked for a single reason why I would reply: because I had been constrained to take both a retrospective and introspective inventory and the results were far from satisfactory. In this connection it is well to say: prior to that time my mind was not receptive to the sentiments couched in Lucifer language—and had the same words been presented a month sooner or at any previous time they would have failed to appeal to my reason. In the words of a Luciferite:

"Before the ground is ready
To receive the goodly seeds
It must be plowed and harrowed
And freed from poisonous weeds.
Then do not be discouraged
When you see the soil upturned,
And the clods look cold and barren
While your soul for beauty yearns.

"For beneath that seeming desert
A world of beauty lies,
And to him who sows arightly
It will yield a glad surprise.
Then in our daily duties
Let us sow the precious seed
Tho' the field seems cold and barren
And desolate indeed.

"We may sow in deepest sorrow,
And water with our tears
The golden grain of truth and love
Through many weary years.
But they will spring up into beauty,
And gladden many hearts
In the not far distant future
If we only do our parts."

This little poem was written one day while I was at the home of the author, Mrs. Andrews, and expressed my regret at being of so little help in spreading the light. I was farming then, hence the appropriateness. Anent your biography and a monthly or quarterly, a consensus of Lucifer articles will say I consider the latter indispensible—as in it could be preserved, in book form, many invaluable articles that could not be clipped out of Lucifer and transferred to a scrap book. Keeping a file is not only bunglesome but preserves much that is of little value to any one. The former should become a part of Lucifer's paraphernalia and will be of more than passing interest to its friends.

A NEW BOOK by Albert Chavannes. "Magnetation, its Relation to Health and Character," contains invaluable information upon the relation of the sexes. Price, 25 cents. Address, Albert Chavannes, 308 Fourth Ave., Knoxville, Tenn.

PROSPECTUS

Of the Life Historyof Moses Harman.

I. Ancestry. Early Life and Struggles to get an Education

II. "Travels in Faith." From Methodism to Universalism and thence to Rationalism.

III. Experiences as a Heretic and Abolitionist in a Slave State—Religion, War and Politics.

IV. Experiences as Teacher, Preacher and Magistrate—or "Justice of the Peace."

V. Experiences in Journalism—A Ten Years' Fight in the Courts. Reflections on our Judiciary, State and Federal.

VI. Prison Experiences. A "Third Term." Letters from and to the Prisoner.

VII. Reflections on Prison Discipline. "Crimes Against Criminals."

VIII. The Movement for Freedom of Womanhood and Motherhood, and for the Right of Children to Be Born Well.

IX. Relation of this Movement to All Other Reform Movements.

X. Present outlook for this Movement. "Duty of the Hour."

This bookwill comprise about four hundred pages; printed in good paper, new and clear type and good binding, with portrait of the author and of his daughter and helper, Lillian Harman. Price one dollar. Life and health permitting, the book will be ready for delivery to subscribers on or before June first, next. Subscriptions solicited. so that we may know how large an edition to issue.

A FEW GOOD BOOKS FOR YOU.

Love, Marriage and Divorce. A discussion between Horace Greeley, Stephen Pearl Andrews and Henry James. $ 35

The Rights of Women and the Sexual Relations. By Karl Heinzen. In cloth, $1; paper covers, .50

The Sexual Enslavement of Women. By E. C. Walker. .05

The Woman Who Did. A Novel. By Grant Allen. 1 00

The British Barbarians. A Novel. By Grant Allen. 1 00

The Red Heart in a White World. An Outline of Principles and a Plan of Organization. By J. Wm. Lloyd. 10

Wind Harp Songs. By J. Wm. Lloyd. 1 00

The Revival of Puritanism. By E. C. Walker. 05

Bible Temperance. Showing that the Bible encourages the use of intoxicants. By E. C. Walker. .10

Woman, Church, and State. By Matilda Joslyn Gage. 2 00

Church Property. Should it be Taxed? .15

Prohibition and Self Government; Their Irreconcilable Antagonism. By E. C. Walker. .05

When Love Is Liberty and Nature Law. By John Badcock, Jr. A remarkably clear, convincing work. .10

Liberty. Political, Religious, Social and Moral. By A. F. Tindall. .10

Diana. A Psycho-Physiological Essay on the Sexual Relations. Sixth edition. Revised and improved. .25

Perfect Motherhood. By Lois Waisbrooker; cloth, 1.00

Helen Harlow's Vow. By Lois Waisbrooker; paper, .25

Lucifer's Clubbing List.

Truth Seeker, N. Y.	Retail Price	3.00	With Lucifer		3.25
" " England,	" "	50	" "		1.30
Free Society.	" "	50	" "		1.25
Appeal to Reason,	" "	50	" "		1.2
Coming Nation,	" "	50	" "		1.25
Suggester and Thinker,	" "	1.00	" "		1.60
Discontent,	" "	50	" "		1.25
Cosmopolitan,	" "	1.00	" "		1.75
Youth's Companion,	" "	1.85	" "		2.40
Our Little Ones,	" "	1.00	" "		1.50
Century Magazine,	" "	4.00	" "		4.50
Freedom, England,	" "	50	" "		1.30
Freedom, Washington,	" "	50	" "		1.25
Arena	" "	2.50	" "		3.52
Open Court	" "	1.00	" "		1.75

These prices apply only to PAID UP or new subscribers who send in the amount for both papers at the same time. If other papers, not in this list, are desired, please drop us a card and we will give clubbing rates with them

Government Analyzed. By John R. Kelso. The chapter headings are: "Derivations and Definitions of Political Terms; Various Forms of Government; General Principles of Government; Functions of Government; Origin of Government; Declaration of Independence; Articles of Confederation; Defects of the Confederation; Formation of the Constitution of the United States; Constitution of the United States; Taxation; Tariff or Protection; War; Punishments; Marriage; Religion; Prohibition; Money; What a Government Should Be." 520 pages. Price reduced to $1.00.

With Lucifer one year to a new subscriber, $1.50.

Ladies: A well educated, liberal gentleman, age 32, whose relatives and acquaintances are all orthodox, wishes to correspond with ladies who are willing to discuss the doctrines of Lucifer. Object comradeship. Will answer all letters. Please address Jefferson Thomas, 507 Carroll Ave. Chicago Ill.

796.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

WOMEN and ECONOMICS,

A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women.
By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Here are a few of the page headings of this remarkable work "Economic environment; The dependence of women; No inherent disability of sex; Marriage not a partnership; House service as a livehood; Motherhood and economic production Modification to maternity; The usefulness of sex; Differentiation of sex; Sex and humanity; The peacock's tail; Sex distinctions; The eternal feminine; unreasoning devotion; Women as persons; Race-attributes and sex-attribute; The normal child; Personal profit and sex-relations; The influence of heredity; The young man and the young woman; The effect of custom: The sex relation personal; Innocence and ignorance; Marriage with independence; The increasing difficulty of marriage; Supporting one's family; Virtue and vice; The results of repression; The harm that women do; The development of love; The hope for the future; The martyr and the pioneer; The dropping of the bars; The meaning of the new woman; Motherhood in education; A criminal failure; Marriage and the family; Love's young dream; The heart and the stomach; Socializing the household industries; The stomach as a family tie; The servant wife; World-servants and house-servants; A wider maternity; Between the old and the new; "The vices of the slave;" The outgrown stronghold. Printed on strong, heavy paper; 350 pages, bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale by M. Harman, 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

CULTIVATION OF PERSONAL MAGNETISM.

A TREATISE ON HUMAN CULTURE. BY LEROY BERRIER.

This treatise reverses the common belief that Personal Magnetism, Life Force and Mind Force can not be cultivated and acquired. It is a Complete Course of Instructions that will enable all who possess them, to become powerfully magnetic. Price, $1. Postage, 5 cents.

Sent on receipt of price. Address Moses Harman, 507 Carroll Ave. Chicago, Ill.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES.

By E. C. WALKER.

No man is wise enough to foresee the secondary results of any proposed restriction, and no history is copious enough to record the evils that have ensued upon denials of liberty.—George E. Macdonald.

CONTENTS:

Love and the Law,	3
The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal,	12
The Continuity of Race-Life; and Tyranny,	16
Food and Sex Fallacies, a criticism,	17
When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varietists,	26
The New Woman: what is she? what will she be?	31
The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes,	44
Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce,	45
Love: Its Attraction and Expression,	51
Is She an Honest Girl?	53
Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts,	54
Social Radicals and Parentage,	57
Anthropology and Monogamy,	59
Love and Trust Versus Fear,	60
Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life."	61

Price 15 cents. For sale at this office.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduce from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hun reds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid di se than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.
This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Women in Marriage Slavery

Will find in HILDA'S HOME a story exposing the horrors of their condition as faithfully and as fearlessly as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" exposed the horrors of Negro slavery in the South. The story is more entertaining than many modern works of fiction and the plain truths it tells will find responsive echoes in the aching, bursting hearts of many women who know the galling effects of marriage thralldom.

The book contains 425 pages. Price handsomely bound in cloth, $1. In paper cover 50 cents. Send in your order NOW—especially if you want extra copies for distribution among your friends.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Persons Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 20 cents. Address Moses Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. E. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.

"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.

"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.

Sample pages free Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Missing Link Modern Spiritualism. By A. Leah Underhill. A book for all spiritualists and investigators. "Hear all sides, then decide." 23 chapters; 478 pages; 16 illustrations, including portraits of the Fox family. History of the Hydesville rappings, as given by eye-witnesses, the threats or mob violence; remarkable and well-attested manifestations; the "exposures" disposed of, etc. Handsomely bound in cloth. Publishers price, $1.50. On receipt of $1.27, and 13 cents for postage, we will send the book to any address.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be FREE; must enjoy the full privilege of soliciting the love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrialy."—Page 265. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CITYLESS AND COUNTRYLESS WORLD", by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 4 0 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Free Love; A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of consubial love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 1875, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence 140 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave. Chicago

RBR
E
f#808
v.4, no.2
3rd ser.
1900/01

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. IV., NO. 2. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, JAN. 20, E. M. 300. [C. E 1900.] WHOLE NO. 797.

The Law of Love.

Make channels for the stream of love,
Where they may broadly run;
And love has overflowing streams,
To fill them every one.

But if at any time we cease
Such channels to provide,
The very founts of love for us
Will soon be parched and dried.

For we must share, if we would keep
That blessing from above;
Ceasing to give, we cease to have—
Such is the law of love.

—Richard Chenevix Trench.

Orders For Babies.

BY ALBINA WASHBURN.

One of my experiences while a member of the W. C. T. U., in Loveland, Colo., a few years since, was an official visit as local superintendent of "Cottage Home" work to the "Cottage Home" in Denver.

I called on Mrs. Lykens, the matron at the City Hall, who was also the official head of the "Cottage Home." Mrs. Lykens accompanied me to the "Home" and gave me general information which I afterwards embodied in my report to the state superintendent. I saw the neat little bedroom which the Loveland and Berthond Unions had jointly furnished.

It was evening and in the sitting room were eleven girls, most of them seemingly from sixteen to twenty years of age; all evidently near confinement. Some were busy with needle-work, a few were reading, more were idle. A few were foreign born—all were of course ignorant of the true uses of life.

While Mrs. Lykens was talking with the matron in the hall in whispers (and I saw that there was something exciting—something unusual had occurred), I stood in the open door of a room up-stairs where a young girl sat quietly by her window in the fading twilight. She was but a few feet from me. A great pity for these poor wronged ones was in my heart. To my "good evening" she responded pleasantly and invited me to a seat near her. I accepted and we entered into conversation. She seemed an intelligent, modest, educated girl. I could not see her features very clearly and of course did not ask her name or home. Evidently she, too, was near her time of trial and would soon become a mother.

"I shall not give away my baby" she said simply. "I don't think it is right—my mother is going to take care of it for me."

I made some kind answer and, finding my guide was ready, said "good-bye" and joined her again.

We crossed the hall and entered a good sized room where on a large bed lay a young woman in an uneasy sleep. Her long abundant black hair was brushed by another girl (also enciente) and laid across the other white pillow. Another young prospective mother was seated by her, tenderly fanning the sleeping girl, and I have a dim sense that one or two more were sympathetically hovering near. This girl, I found, was the center of the excitement now quieting down. Awakening from her sleep she had missed her week-old baby—found it had been given away, she knew not to whom, and of course could not know—took a dose of poison, which it was supposed she had concealed in her trunk, had been "pumped out" by the hastily summoned physician, given an opiate—and there she was!

On our way home I was told that all the babies—with rare exceptions—were given away, as the trouble and disgrace must be avoided. I mentioned the one who had told me her mother would care for her child.

"Yes, she thinks so," was the reply, "but her mother just walks the floor and wrings her hands when she comes here; she tells her that to pacify her, but she would no more take that child and acknowledge it before the world than she would fly.

"We give them away because that is best, for what could these girls do with them? In fact," she added, "we have orders ahead for more than we have—from those who have lost a dear child or never had any.

"I know a case where a rich young couple who had been married a few years and to whom no babies came, spoke for a blue-eyed boy—and they got a fine one by the way. The husband's mother in the east was very wealthy and anxious they should have an heir. After the order was placed, they hinted to the mother in letters that the young wife would bear an heir. Great rejoicings came from the wealthy mother who sent an elegant layette. The child came duly and now the mother-in-law is out here on a visit and all are happy. Of course she don't know but it's their own."

I was dazed. I saw that the way was thus opened for the sale of children; temptation might come in that way as it did in other ways to the producers of these children. I have no evidence whatever that any price was set or any presents given or any official influence used as a compensation. Probably these good women actually believed they were doing good deeds; but somehow it seemed to me like the seamy side of charity.

How much kinder to inform these girls that nature had entrusted to them a high commission—to train an immortal soul—which thus would lead them along paths of peaceful duty, and much more that might be said if these W. C. T. U. women knew it themselves! Speaking of those girls in the lower parts of the city who are periodically arrested and fined (when the city is low in funds) and are in her care for a few hours or over night, the matron of the city hall said:

"They often put their heads in my lap and cry and say they do not want to live such lives—where can they go and work and be free? I cannot tell them! For all I have a large acquaintance in the city and among the W. C. T. U. women, I don't know one who would take in one these fallen women and give her a chance. They have some son or husband or brother they are afraid of. or that they cannot trust."

As before stated I briefly embodied in my report a few of these fact and what I deemed necessary reforms, citing Miss

x
Per 91937
3rd ser.
v.4
1900/01
no 2

Willard's own words that "every child of love is legitimate.' At a subsequent meeting of the Loveland Union reports came back from our delegates to the state convention which had been held, I think, at Pueblo. Among other things the statement was made that there had been "no report" from the "Cottage Home" superintendent of our union. I calmly rose and begged leave to state that I sent a report but evidently it had been suppressed, as it contained some criticisms.

I afterwards sent some of these statements which it seemed to me should be known to the public who believe that baby farming should be exposed, to the "Rocky Mountain News." The article never appeared. The conspiracy of silence was complete—but, if Lucifer will give this article room, the truth will "rise again."

The editors of Lucifer may remember also that this same Union,—dear good sisters of mine, who have been so miseducated that they modestly look the other way when the naked truth appears—deposed me (with many apologies) from an office in their organization because I had circulated a "free love paper" called Lucifer! When the de(com)posing committee—the president of the union, and a dear charitable personal friend, also a member, visited me (the latter for the purpose evidently of softening the blow—) I rose to the occasion and cheerfully assured them it was all right and took the opportunity to give them light in the dark places of their imagination.

"By the way" said I to Mrs. Abernathy, the president, "have you ever seen Lucifer?"

She admitted pleasantly that she had not. "Here are some copies," I responded, picking up two or three from a stand near, "Look them over—a paper ought not to be condemned unseen." She took them with thanks, and as I was afterwards informed by another unbiased member, said that she "saw no harm in them!" After that I sometimes amused myself by going to their "mothers' meetings" when every rocking chair was simultaneously vacated for me and there was every evidence of regard shown because, as one said, I had acted in a "true Christian spirit!" And did not they, too, act up to their light?

Joseph Rodes Buchanan.

The necrology of the year just closed chronicles few names, if any, more worthy of a high and honorable niche in the temple of fame than that of the man whose name heads this paragraph On December 11, last part, he celebrated the eighty-fifth anniversary of his advent into mortal life, as he himself stated in a letter to the writer of these lines, the greater part of which letter was printed in our issue of Dec. 30—No. 794. This letter, also the address made by him to the friends who met to help celebrate the anniversary just mentioned, showed that notwithstanding the weight of years he still retained his wonted mental vigor.

A physician by profession, Joseph Rodes Buchanan was not content to follow in the footsteps of his predecessors, but struck out new paths for himself and for those who, like himself, refused to believe that all knowledge was or is bound up in the writings of men long since numbered with the dead.

Dr. Buchanan was one of the discoverers of what is now known as the science of Psychometry. Whether his researches in that department of psychic lore antedate those of William Denton and others in the same line I am unprepared to say, but am inclined to think they did.

Having seen only the bare announcement of the demise of this truly grand and noble friend, this generous patron of every movement for the betterment of the race to which he belonged, I can give no adequate synopsis of his life and labors, and so will close this brief notice by expressing the hope that his surviving partner, Mrs. E. S. Buchanan, will soon give to the world a biographical sketch of one to whom I feel personally indebted for many substantial tokens of fraternal regard—one who, almost from its first issue, showed that he felt a very deep interest in the work of Lucifer, and who from time to time was an honored contributor to its columns.

A CONTRAST

Between Principles and Conditions of Free Love and Bond Love of the Highest Orthodox Type.

BY AN ENGLISH SOCIALIST.

FREE love is unrestrained love towards one or more persons of the opposite sex. Love up to any point of affection, without consummation, or with consummation, at the will of the lovers. If with consummation, then the purely amative act, unless reproduction is desired and desirable.

BOND love is restricted love towards one person of the opposite sex in fortunate marriage. Love up to constant consummation. Always the reproductive act, though the greatest evil may follow to the wife from excessive child-bearing and to the children from poverty.

FREE love recognizes that the sexual instinct is not an instinct for reproduction, but for sexual union, that the organs concerned in the act are not reproductive but amative. Consequently the passion of love must be (as it always is) considered apart from procreation.

BOND love confuses the amative with the reproductive. It makes offspring the accident of passion. It refuses to bring reproduction under the dominion of reason and morality. It denies the exercise of the purely amative function, and thus brings misery through sexual abstinence.

FREE love accounts love to be entirely worthy and dignified. It knows no shame or blemish in the exercise of natural functions. Modesty and purity consist in reverence for human nature in its sexual aspect. The sources of life and love are to be kept clean, sweet, and devoted to good. Man or woman unclothed is as worthy of respect as clothed. The nude human form in its best examples is an object of admiration and honor.

BOND love accounts the physical union to be unclean. It is ashamed of the exercise of natural function and persistently ignores it. Modesty and purity consist in dense ignorance of the function of sex, and in the absence of all appearance of having natural animal passion. The human body is accounted a thing of shame and not to be seen unclothed. The most beautiful man or woman publicly nude is accounted worthy of punishment.

FREE love condemns parentage during immaturity (age up to twenty-three and twenty-five) as injurious to the mother and socially inexpedient.

BOND love permits parentage during immaturity to the detriment of health and society. By condemning harmless association of the young it compels the passionate to have recourse to disastrous illicit connections and promotes the appalling evil of prostitution and degradation of women. Bond love through its utter neglect in teaching youth on sex and love, leaves boys and girls a prey to pruriency and secret bad habits, leading even to clandestine unions. Thus in early years love is degraded to mere animality.

FREE love requires an absolute recognition of social equality between the sexes. No privileges to a particular sex. Actions and expressions that are proper to one sex are proper to the other. Proposals and expressions of love can come freely from either sex.

BOND love requires subjection of woman to man, because maternity makes the wife dependent on her husband. The man has privileges in courtship, marriage and adultery which the woman has not. The woman may not show her love unless invited.

FREE love implies free thought and free expression of thought. No subject is improper of discussion between the sexes. All facts and theories require the frankest consideration by men and women that the truth may be made clear.

BOND love implies thought fixed to the prejudices of the past, and expression of thought disallowed between the sexes on sexual topics. Examination of sexual phenomena and theories accounted unnecessary, as custom is assumed to be right.

FREE love sanctifies the fondest caresses of love. It may express itself in simple fondlings, kisses and loving words. It may satisfy itself in the close and prolonged magnetic embrace of "Dianism." It may seek the rapturous joys of complete union. Free lovers stop at any point in caressing and in that they find their freedom.

BOND love only permits close caresses to the married. It requires great restraint among the unmarried on the most harmless desires. It implies that kisses and loving words mean advances towards closer union. Consequently the social intercourse of the sexes is rendered cold and distant.

FREE love enjoins unselfishness and the most scrupulous care that the love be harmless. It requires that lovers of weak and diseased constitutions should not go beyond the amative act and become the parents of children whose lives must be more or less miserable. It gives health and dignity to the sexual relation.

BOND love does not require unselfishness, because the bond is secure in any case. It requires no care that the love be harmless, and the wife may be forced to have children against her will. The wife's health may be ruined, and the children may be given diseased constitutions, the parents being held blameless.

FREE love requires the suppression of jealousy and exclusiveness. Jealousy implies a feeling of property in another and is subversive of personal freedom. Subjective freedom consists in liberty to exercise one's own functions, faculties and emotions in harmless way uncontrolled by others.

BOND love is exclusive and condones jealousy. Each partner has property in the body and mind of the other. The selfish, violent passion of jealousy opposes the social passion of love. There is liberty for jealousy but not for love. Love is repressed and limited, and made into a crime.

FREE love is constant if the conditions are favorable, but not necessarily exclusive. Love is a free gift and must be treated as such. Affection given to a new object does not imply affection withdrawn from other objects.

BOND love may happen to be constant, but if the marriage be unfortunate and the love be flown, there is no liberty to love another and the tie becomes a curse. Also variety in love is condemned and love is made monotonous in consequence.

FREE love in a socialistic state, where the sexes are socially equal, and all have equal opportunities of work and living, implies life so far made harmonious with nature in accordance with the law of evolution.

BOND love in a competitive social state where individuals have no assurance of getting livelihood or work, and the workers are crushed by low wages implies a constant disharmony of life with conditions.

FREE love broadens the bases of love. It tends to make the human being more impartial in his affections and more general and social in his personal devotion to others. He is freer of exclusive ties.

BOND love promotes partiality in love and dual selfishness. It concentrates affection on single objects who stand in the way of consideration for others who equally require consideration.

FREE love exalts love in all its manifestations, from the lowest physical to the highest spiritual. It allies love with all that is unselfish, refined, noble and pure, and becomes thereby he great educer of the social emotions.

BOND love takes the romance out of love. It drags love down o the sordidness and littleness of every day life. It gives love a common aspect of trivial familiarity. It destroys the charms of freshness, courtship and success.

FREE love necessarily allies itself with virtue; for those who desire love from others must make themselves always worthy of being loved; else the fire of love may flicker and die away, and there is no bond to hold but that of love.

BOND love relaxes the efforts of lovers to be at their best. It tempts the selfish to take advantage of the weak and yielding. It promotes inequality of attitude within the partnership. It tends to make life feel a failure.

FREE love means much love and no evil. In it love is always accounted good and precious, never wrong and unworthy.

BOND love means little love and much evil. In it love is only good within limits; beyond those limits love is a crime.

Child-Life in the Days of the Puritans.

From Review of "Child-Life in Colonial Days," by Alice Morse Earle, in Book Buyer.

One has usually thought of the Colonial children with a certain mild sadness. The life was so hard for their elders, with the rigors of the climate, the terrors of the forest, the foe, the wild beast, and the still darker terrors surrounding the Supreme Being that answered the incantation of their imaginations, that it has seemed as if the children might have fared far worse, with their repressions, and self-denials, and disciplines, and the still wilder terrors following the rampant superstitions of the day.

. . . .

The children of that time were sure of playmates, for they were usually part of an immense family, Sir William Phipps, for instance, having twenty-five brothers and sisters, and Ben Franklin being one of seventeen. They had, it is true, singular names to carry. "Fathergone" one little orphan was called, and "Seaborn" was the romantic appellation of a child born on the ocean; but, apart from such collocation of harsh and hideous sounds as "Zurishaddai," such names as "Preserved," "Unite," "Truegrace" and "Hopedfor," and as those the wretched little Gridleys bore—"Return," "Believe" and "Tremble"—seem to rob the babies of their very babyhood. . . . .

All along the way the study of the catechism, the Westminster, and others, was ordained as the chief end of children. The value of some of these catechisms as vehicles of learning may be measured by that of one which explained the use of comets by saying that "some judge them the seats of punishment where sinners suffer the extremes of heat and cold. Mr. Whiston says a comet approaching the sun brushed the earth with its tail and caused the deluge, and that another will cause the conflagration."

There seems to have been a phenomenal precocity in these early days. We read here of a little boy entering the Latin school at the age of six and a half, and of another fitted for college at eleven. The terrors of their fathers' faith hung over these children, nevertheless, even in their sleep, the religious atmosphere reacting upon their precocity. The little girls seem to have been peculiarly susceptible, as we learn by many instances, especially that of the terrible little Elizabeth Butcher, who, "when two and a half years old, as she lay in the cradle, would ask herself the question, 'What is my corrupt nature?'" What else could be expected when Michael Wiggleworth's "Day of Doom" was printed broadside, wherein for a slight sin it was said

"therefore in bliss
You may not hope to dwell,
But unto you I shall allow
The easiest room in hell."

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Persons Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 20 cents. Address Moses Harman, 107 Carroll Ave., Chicago.

THE SOCIAL QUESTION. A discussion between Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. The opposing principles are herein stated clearly and briefly. Valuable to those who want to possess the arguments of both sides of the question. Price 15 cents. "Life and Health, or How to Live a Century," by the same author. Price, 10 cents. "A Lecture on Religious, Political and Social Freedom." Price, 5 cents. A set, one of each, for 25 cents.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper in t has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

The Light Bearer Library.

The first number of the Light Bearer Library (new series) will be issued next week. It will contain "The Evolution of the Family," an address delivered before the Chicago Society of Anthropology Dec. 24, 1899 by Jonathan Mayo Crane. This address was said by many members of the society to be the most interesting ever delivered at any of its meetings. It is a comprehensive condensation of the history of the social instinct in living organisms. Compiled from the writings of the most famous biologists, ethnographers and sociologists, it shows that marriage is a phase of evolution which exists in the lower animals as well as in man, although man alone seeks to regulate it by state and ecclesiastical authority. The causes of promiscuity, polygamy, polyandry, monogamy and prostitution are discussed and the absurdity of attempting to fix an unchanging standard of morality is clearly demonstrated.

Following are some of the subjects discussed in the address: "Morality among the Savages," "Variability of the Ethical Standard," "Opposition to Investigation," "Erroneous Ideas of Society," "The Curse of Maternity," "Necessity for Sexual Attraction," "Courtship of Birds and Animals," "Persistence of the Maternal Instinct," "Varieties of Sexual Association," "Endogamy and Exogamy," "Wives Secured by Capture," "Causes of Infanticide," "Polygamy and Polyandry," "Monogamy Among the Savages," "Monogamy of Birds and Beasts," "The Matriarchate or Mother-Rule," "Incestuous Marriages," "Cause of Woman's Subordination to Man," "Economic Slavery of Women," "Motherhood in Freedom."

This little pamphlet contains information of great value to all who are interested in the study of economics in its relations to the home and the family. Fair consideration is given to the question, What would become of the home, the family and the children if legal marriage were superseded by free sexual unions? The pamphlet is excellent for propaganda. It answers many of the questions so frequently asked by those who see the evils of indissoluble marriage but regard it as necessary for the protection of women and children.

The first number of the Library will contain about forty-eight pages, each page three and one half inches wide and five and one half inches long. This makes a pamphlet which can be easily carried in the pocket and can be sent by mail in an ordinary envelope.

The article entitled "A Contrast Between Principles and Conditions of Free Love and Bond Love of the Highest Orthodox Type," which is published in this issue of Lucifer is particularly valuable as a clear and condensed statement of the advantages of freedom over compulsory restriction of the sex relations. It is just what you need to aid you in giving a prompt and effective answer to the objections those who oppose the sexual enfranchisement of women. This article will also be printed in Light Bearer Library No. 1, in addition to the address on "The Evolution of the Family."

The second number of The Light Bearer Library, which will be issued in February, will contain the address on "Marriage and Morality" delivered by Lillian Harman Nov. 19, 1899, in Cincinnati before the Ohio Liberal Society. The third number will contain "Judgment," a drama by William Platt, author of "Do We Love? Do We Love?" "Love Triumphant" and other books which protest against the prurient Grundyism which seeks to degrade affectionate demonstrations into vileness. This drama has never been published.

It is our intention to make each number of "The Light Bearer Library" a missionary pamphlet which should be widely circulated among those persons who have given little attention to the necessity for reform in prevalent notions of sex relations. Each issue will be a strong champion of the rights of woman to ownership of her person. The Library will be issued monthly. Our aim is to distribute it at the bare cost of publication. The subscription price for a single number each month is fifty cents a year; three copies of each issue for $1 a year; twelve for $3 a year; twenty copies $5 a year.

The very low rate for extra numbers is made for the purpose of inducing friends of the propaganda to aid us in distributing this literature as widely as possible. Those persons who take a dozen issues a month can easily distribute them where they will certainly do a vast amount of good for the cause of the sexual enfranchisement of women. Hence we urge those who can afford it to send at least $3 for a dozen copies of each issue for one year; or to send $5 for twenty copies of each issue if the money cannot be more usefully spent in some other way.

We renew the offer to send one copy of each issue for one year to each person who sends us twenty-five cents before Feb. 1. After that date the price for a single issue will be fifty cents a year.

Then and Now--The Outlook.

Continuing my review of the events of the last half of the century, the closing year of which has just begun, let me repeat that I was by no means singular or alone when, fifty years ago or less, I expressed the belief and the hope that, so far as the United States of America is or was concerned, the era of wars and of bloodshed was nearing its close.

With Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, whose very optimistic and self-gratulatory utterance has already been substantially quoted, and also with Horace Mann, the great American apostle of the free public school system, and with many others whose well known names might be cited—with some of whom I had the pleasure and the honor of personally meeting and hearing—I then believed that the general diffusion of knowledge among the masses of people—through the agency of the free school system, then for the first time coming into popular favor; through the agency of the cheap newspaper; through the agency of cheap and rapid mail facilities; through the agency of free libraries, free lectures, etc. etc.,—acting through all of these agencies I believed that the diffusion of knowledge, of general intelligence, would abolish wars and would also reduce vice, crime and poverty to a very small minimum as compared to the state of things then everywhere prevailing.

Another potent factor promotive of the same general result was believed to be the newly introduced steam railway system, penetrating, as it promised to do, every part of the vast territory of the United States, and bringing its most distant communities into comparatively near association with, and knowledge of, each other, thereby breaking down sectional prejudices, sectional hatreds, by means of better mutual acquaintance.

* * *

Besides the general diffusion of knowledge and more rapid and cheap inter-communication by rail and otherwise, there were reasons of a political and geographical nature that seemed to point to a long reign of uninterrupted peace and amity for the people of the United States of America. Our method of settling political differences,—and almost everything else in fact, by means of the ballot-box—by majorityism,—seemed to preclude all need of resort to the cartridge-box, so far as domestic or interstate disputes and differences were concerned.

Then, as to any possible disputes with other nations: If the general diffusion of intelligence, the cultivation of the arts of peace, the interests of commerce etc., should not prove sufficient to protect us from danger of foreign invasion, it was believed that the brief but very decisive war with Mexico had sufficiently demonstrated the hopelessness of hostile invasion from our Spanish American neighbors, and also that the two signal failures by England—mistress of the seas—to subjugate us, had averted for all time any possible danger from Transatlantic or Transpacific powers; unless, indeed, we should take it into our heads to meddle with the affairs of Europe or Asia, and this possibility was thought to be precluded by the reciprocal action of and the general acceptance of, the "Monroe doctrine."

Our Canadian neighbors were then believed to be in such close sympathy with us and our governmental institutions that they would soon apply for "annexation"—a movement which it was not thought probable the mother country would seriously oppose.

* * *

And these were not the only reasons that conspired to promote a general belief in the permanence of peace for the United States. "Peace" societies, benevolent societies, co-operative aid associations, etc., were everywhere popular and influential. The code duello had ceased to be a reputable method of settling personal quarrels, except among the southern "chivalry," who were elsewhere looked upon with disfavor if not abhorrence. America was then, as now, sending missionaries to the ends of the earth to teach the doctrines of peace and good will to the heathen, who were supposed to know no better than to fight and kill each other because of differences of religious opinions, or because they had never heard of the "Golden Rule."

* * *

The question then occurs, or rather recurs, and continues to recur, How was it possible that we, the professed champions of the Golden Rule; we, the exemplars and exponents of civil and religious liberty as taught by the Declaration of Independence; we, the self-styled representatives of the most advanced civilization the world had ever seen—how was it possible that within the first century of our national life we could so far relapse into barbarism as to wage a four years' civil war, at the expense of the direct loss of a million lives and of several thousand millions of money?

To say nothing of the loss of property destroyed, of which no account was taken or could be taken.

To say nothing of the murders and suicides that came in as incidentals.

To say nothing of broken health, blasted hopes and ruined lives that no statistics attempt to chronicle.

To say nothing of the effect, by prenatal impression, upon the lives of the then unborn, or upon those born while the conflict was raging.

To say nothing of the effect upon the world at large, of our failure to practicalize our principles of brotherhood, and our assertion of the right of all to choose their form of government, or to change it when they find it does not promote their welfare or happiness.

* * *

The answer to these questions, and to many more like unto them, seems to be this

In all our calculations for the future; in all our optimistic planning for peace and fraternity between the nations and races of men; in all our golden-hued dreams of the millennium soon to dawn, we forgot the most important of all the factors that enter into the solution of the problem. The paramount element was left out. In plain language we failed, and, as the event proved, most disastrously failed, to take into our counsels the interest taker, the money-loaner, the usurer, the coupon-clipper, the bond-holder,

THE MONEY-LORD!

We forgot to reckon with the king of the world—Gold!

We did not know then, as we know now, that the bond-holder, the coupon-clipper, the money-lord, is the cannibal of our modern civilization, but a cannibal that has improved vastly upon the methods of his ignorant and clumsy prototype. The cannibal of the good old times, a few thousand years ago, fatted his victim with good nourishing food, then killed him; caught his blood in a calabash and drank it steaming hot; devoured his quivering flesh; cracked his bones with a stone and sucked the marrow, and then—could do no more! What was left of the carcass the dogs and jackals could have.

The victim had at length escaped. Not so with the victim of the modern cannibal. He does not so easily escape the clutches of his tormentor. The modern cannibal does not kil his victim. His methods have evoluted. He has learned better. He now knows how to eat his man and still have him.

In a clearly written book called "The Kewhonkus People," a story of the North Pole, a very ingeniously written tale, we are told of a monstrous manlike vampire who keeps his human victims in confinement and periodically sucks their blood, then leaves them alone for a season till their veins are replenished with fresh blood.

This monstrous bloodsucker is none other than the modern bond-holder, the modern banker, the modern money-lord. His interest in the rest of mankind is measured by the amount of blood he can draw from their veins without wholly destroying the source of supply.

The social condition most favorable to the money lord is that which puts his victims most completely in his power. That condition is supplied by war, war among the victims themselves War lessens the value of all kinds of property except money—gold and silver, and especially gold, as being more easily concealed and transported, in time of danger.

When nations make war with each other or with their own subjects, they must have money. To get money they must go in debt, must issue notes or bonds. The money-lord's interest is to make money as scarce as possible so that the bonds will sell at a low figure. Then when he has bought up the bonds at a low price he knows from experience that he can easily buy up the men who make the laws, and thus induce them to make his bonds payable in gold, and as there is not gold enough in the world to pay its war debts the result is the perpetual debt of the people to the money-lords and the payment only of the annual interest—which is all that the money-lord wants; for if the principal were paid he would immediately seek to reinvest it in the same way—in government bonds.

No form of indebtedness suits the money-lord so well as government bonds, because governments cannot run away and the "patriotism" of the tax payers will neither let them die, nor go into bankruptcy.

Then, the government bond is the most available basis for a circulating medium which can be controlled, limited, contracted and expanded alternately, so as to enable the holders of money to absorb all other forms of property—real estate, railroads, manufacturing plants, the output of mines, the fruits of agriculture and grazing, etc., etc.

So then, it is easily seen that while the preservation of peace is to the interest of nearly all other members of the social compact, the interest of the money-lord is in the direction of war. War is the greatest of all social calamities—for all except the lender of money. The calamity of all others is the money-lenders opportunity.

Behold then, the chief cause of failure of the prophecies o peace, such as that of Wendell Holmes in 1858, and also of Horace Mann in 1856, when I had the pleasure of hearing him speak at an Interstate Teachers' Convention in St. Louis, Mo.—a city that became, within five years of the date of these optimistic utterances, one of the chief centers of the greatest civil war of modern times.

* * *

That there were other causes, other very potent factors that conspired to bring on this war, and helped to keep it going for years after it might easily have been closed, is freely admitted. Those of us who lived before and contemporary with this most deplorable, most disastrous event of the century, know only too well the part played therein by military ambition; by political rivalry and jealousy; by religious prejudice and hatred; by caste distinction and sectional feeling, and above all, perhaps, by "patriotism," by "loyalty to the flag," etc., etc., but we now know that all these were simply the tools, the marked cards, the loaded dice, with which the Shylocks of those days played their deep-laid but sure game, the game which their successors of today are playing with such success that the reign of the bondholder, through a self-perpetuating government debt, promises to be "durable, as time and boundless as the waves of the sea," and with the working men of two hemispheres bonded forever to pay the semi-annual coupons!

* * *

One of the very worst features of the outlook, to some of us "old stagers," who have observed the course of events during the half century now under consideration, is the fact that these workingmen, the men who work for all,—who pay all interest, all debts, all taxes, all incomes, all salaries, and yet are denied the enjoyment of their earnings except the mere husks—the fact that these workingmen look upon the money king as a necessity is most deplorable. The most pitiable of all spectacles and the most discouraging is that of "labor" forever on its knees to "capital," begging, not for an equal share of the earth and its opportunities but simply for a little larger dole of money; a little better assurance that it will not be turned out to die of starvation on the "commons," as a worn-out horse, when no longer able to fight for a chance to work for its lord and master. We often hear the phrase, "the dignity of labor"! Can anything be less dignified than this attitude of labor, bowing in abject submission before the product of its own creation—capital?

And yet there is nothing in this to be wondered at when we remember the power of education, of example and of authority. From infancy upward the workingman has known nothing else than to bow the knee to capital; to accept as settled for all time that money is master and labor the servant. Our entire social structure,—religious, political, and especially our high-school and collegiate educational system, is built on that model, and apparently designed by its leaders, its managers, to make perpetual our present money system.

Time and space permitting I will try to give a few of the proofs of the existence of such conspiracy, in future issues. For the present I close this long installment of my review of the events of the last half of the current century, by requesting all readers to remember that I blame no one who has been or is now an interest-taker. It is the system I am fighting, not persons. As in all things else, it is the environment, the conditions that give moral character to actions, not the names by which these acts are called.

MOSES HARMAN.

Hammond, La.

A Correction—A Withdrawal.

To err is human; to correct one's mistakes, when shown to be such, is simple justice, simple duty, especially when others besides ourselves are concerned.

In No. 795, under the head, "Respectability Again," occur these words: "When we recall that President McKinley takes his wine in public, etc." For the following among other reasons I wish here and now to correct, or rather to withdraw or recall, the words quoted.

First. The statement was made on insufficient evidence; that of newspaper report only. Now I learn that this report has been denied by Mr. McKinley and by his friends. Our present chief ruler has sins enough to answer for—real sins; sins that rise mountains high and that darken all the sky for the American people, and hence the unwisdom of diverting attention from these patent, these towering offences to such venial or doubtful ones as would be the taking a glass of wine at a public banquet—as was charged.

Second. The statement of fact, if true, would be of little or no value in settling the question at issue between Mr. Kerr and myself, which question was whether drunkenness is less "respectable" now than it was a thousand years ago. The rejoinder to this fact, this argument, if it be used as such, would naturally be:

"Is there any necessary connection between taking a glass of wine at meals—in public or in private—and the excess known as drunkenness?"

A candid answer to this question would seem to be No! Not any more necessary than would be the connection between taking a plate of roast turkey with plum pudding and the kindred vice known as gluttony. Gluttony no less than drunkenness, is a crying evil, a national sin. Quite as many lives are shortened by excess in eating rich food as by excess in drinking fermented, or even distilled, liquors. Perhaps not so much of poverty and insanity is caused by gluttony as by drunkenness, but this difference is due largely to the extraneous and artificial elements known as revenue laws, high license, prohibitive enactments, etc., enhancing, as they do, the cost many times to the consumer, and tempting to poisonous adulterations.

The cure for the evils of drunkenness and gluttony is to be found, not in exaggerated statement; not in vituperative declamation; not in high license nor in prohibitive and sumptuary legislation; not in the taking of "pledges," nor in any other curtailment of personal initiative, whether by autonomistic, communistic or paternalistic authority; but rather in an increase of knowledge—of scientific information, coupled with a better recognition of the truth that Liberty and Responsibility for one's acts is the only basis of morality in human conduct.

That is to say, the cure for the evils, the mistakes, of liberty in eating and drinking, as in all things else, is more liberty, not less liberty. The right to make fools of ourselves at our own cost, is, perhaps, one of the first and most inalienable of all rights,—if the phrase "inalienable rights" possesses any real meaning, any ethical value.

In extenuation of my reference to the alleged wine drinking of William McKinley, I will just add that the custom of drinking wine at public banquets is so well nigh universal among "society people," that I took it for granted our president would feel obliged to conform, whatever may have been his own personal convictions or personal habits, in regard to that custom, and hence I inserted the newspaper report without taking the trouble to write to those having personal knowledge of the truth or falsity of such report.

* * *

Another correction:

The last paragraph but two in my reply to R. B. Kerr should read, "There will probably never come a time when there will not be need of a paper so unconventional, so revolutionary, so iconoclastic, so disreputable, that respectability will want to burn it, and try, as now, to imprison or hang the editor." Too many nots [knots!] in this somewhat tangled skein of thread caused the trouble. N. B. An editorial (not a typographic blunder this time.

M. HARMAN.

Hammond, La.

The Pontiff and the Lovers.

From "When Love is Liberty and Nature Law."

By way of a summing up of the arguments of those who uphold bond love, I beg to quote from a drama by Felix Pyat It is a scene near the end of the story, when the young couple Camille Berville and Marie Didier (be the son of a rich banker, she the daughter of a poor clerk), in spite of the hundred ways in which the emissaries of Church and State and other governors have tried to wreck their lives, have at last reached an impregnable position and can defy their enemies. But Mother Church cannot bear the thought of being a stranger to such a wealthy house as the Berville's; so the Archbishop calls upon the young couple.

"Yes, my children," said the Pontiff, in the unctuous and oily tongue of Holy Church, "God has seen fit to restore to you, Monsieur Berville, your immense fortune, and to you, Mademoiselle Didier, your good name. It is a great blessing to you, Monsieur: a great honor to you, Mademoiselle. You are engaged to each other. The Church congratulates you through my ministry. When wealth unites with virtue it becomes purified thereby. Be, then, as pious as you are generous. It is for you to prove your gratitude towards God; to thank Providence for his signal goodness in uniting you according to his law, his order, and the holy commandments of his Church. Thus you will deserve the benefits of heaven, and keep its favor upon earth. Upon this depends your common happiness in this world and in the other. For you cannot be happy unless you lead a Christian life. The woman who honors God esteems her husband, of whom she is but a half. If woman does not fulfil her duties towards God, how can she fulfil them towards man? If she believes in nothing, how can she believe in him? Lacking divine faith, the seal of all union and the restraint of all dissolution, what will hold her to conjugal faith? Believe me, young people, and marry in the grace of God and under the blessing of his minister."

Camille thanked the prelate for his advice and his offers, saying to him:—

"Monsieur, I thank you for the good will of your counsel. Unfortunately, my convictions are absolutely contrary to yours, and prevent me from accepting that which you offer. . . . The innocence of Marie Didier must be manifest in the nature of things, without the direct intervention of God. I do not believe he disturbs himself about our little affairs. . . . You call love commands, authority, obedience, force, order, and law; I call it attraction, passion, devotion, and gift. Free thought, free morality, free love, these are my dogmas, contrary to your own. We cannot, then, agree. As for Marie, she will tell you her opinion. What say you, Marie?"

"I say," she answered, "that your sentiments are my own; that I wish no more than you the honor that is offered us. There is no need of any bond, religious or other, even civil, to make me yours entirely and forever. I am your wife because you desire it and I desire it, and not because law and religion desire it; not because others than ourselves desire it."

"Permit me, Mademoiselle," interupted the prelate; "those whom you call others are God and the Prince, the sacrament and the code."

"And what is the good," she cried taking Camille's hand "of the will of God and men, if you cease to love me? The day when I shall no longer please you, of what importance will be codes and sacraments, the laws of earth, and the blessings of heaven? You are heaven and earth to me. No, dear Camille, I do not wish you to be forced to love me. The day when it shall be my misfortune to displease you, fortune, honor, and society all will be at an end so far as I am concerned. I shall resume my needle and my attic."

"But your children?" said the priest.

"Our children," rejoined Camille; "there we find our sacrament. the bond and the curb. When the human heart is neither forced nor falsified by authority, nature substitutes in it, in an orderly fashion, one passion for another. We shall love each other in the children of our love."

"Ah," said Marie, again pressing Camille's hand, "even though he should no longer love the woman, I know very well that he will still love the mother of his child. Yes Monseigneur, I wish him to be free, always free to leave me as he has been to take me. Believe me, this is, perhaps, more designing, less disinterested than it seems, for it is the surest way to keep him."

VARIOUS VOICES.

J. F. Miles, Ashland, Wis.:—Find enclosed one dollar to extend my subscription to Lucifer, as I see it expires with the next number. Also put my name on the list for one copy of the autobiography of Moses Harman, our patron (pattern) Saint, and revered Father.

E. H., New York:—Enclosed is $1; please send me "Worship of Primitive Social Guesses," and do what you wish with the remainder. A friend of mine told me the following story: A young married woman returned from a two weeks honeymoon, and at once went to her married sister and wished to know when the "beastly" part of marriage was to end. The sister referred her to her mother; her mother did not answer but left the room. My friend regarded it as rather a "funny" story. Probably the young wife did not think it so humorous.

Robt. M. Carrons, Washington, Pa.:—I noticed in the last number of Lucifer, a communication in which it is stated that the life of George Lippard and his eulogy of Thos. Paine can be had at your office. Inclosed you will find twenty-five cents for which please send me the book. I would also like to know if you can furnish me with a list of Lippard's writings and where they can be obtained with their prices. I heard my mother speak of his novels thirty years ago.

[Perhaps some reader of Lucifer may be able to give the desired information.]

Mrs. P., Phila.:—Please find enclosed $1 to renew my subscription to Lucifer. It has been a stranger to me for some time now, as the young men at the store where I am employed carry it off as soon as it arrives, and I seldom see it again; however, I say nothing, as they are almost all of them professing Christians and would not have it said of them that they got such a paper, yet like to read it when they can without being responsible for its being there. I notice with a great deal of pleasure that their ideas on some subjects are undergoing a change, but I seldom say much as they are the kind of men who like to think they have not been interfered with but have thought things out themselves. I am not very rich in filthy lucre but will try to send you a few dollars before long.

L. E. B., Dale, Id.:—The August number of Lucifer came into my hands a few days ago and I wish to obtain the January and February numbers. I also enclose one dollar for which please send me "Karezza." Have you any of the "Leaflets" by Austin Kent left and if so what is the price of each? What is the price of "Our New Humanity," Nos. III and IV?

[Of Leaflets by Austin Kent we have "An Open Letter to Andrew Jackson Davis, or What I Call Connubial Love;" "My Creed, or What I Believe and What I Know," "To My Atheistical Brothers, or How I Became Assured of the Existence of Unseen Intelligence," and "Conjugal Love, the True and the false.' The price of these leaflets is one cent each; ten cents a dozen. We have "Our New Humanity" from No. 2 to No. 7 for sale at twenty-five cents each. We have a few copies of No. 1 but we do not sell them unless a complete set from No. 1 to 7 is taken.

Government Analyzed. By John E. Kelso. The chapter headings are: "Derivations and Definitions of Political Terms; Various Forms of Government; General Principles of Government; Functions of Government; Origin of Government; Declaration of Independence; Articles of Confederation; Defects of the Confederation; Formation of the Constitution of the United States; Constitution of the United States; Taxation; Tariff or Protection; War; Punishments; Marriage; Religion; Prohibition; Money; What a Government Should Be." 320 pages. Price reduced to $1.00.

With Lucifer one year to a new subscriber, $1.50

Ladies: A well educated, liberal gentleman, age 32, whose relatives and acquaintances are all orthodox, wishes to correspond with ladies who are willing to discuss the doctrines of Lucifer. Object comradeship. Will answer all letters. Please address Jefferson Thomas, 507 Carroll Ave. Chicago Ill.

797.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

WOMEN and ECONOMICS,

A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women.
By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Here are a few of the page headings of this remarkable work "Economic environment; The dependence of women; No inherent disability of sex; Marriage not a partnership; House service as a livehood; Motherhood and economic production Modification to maternity The usefulness of sex; Differentiation of sex; Sex and humanity; The peacock's tail; Sex distinctions; The eternal feminine; unreasoning devotion; Women as persons; Race-attributes and sex-attribute; The normal child; Personal profit and sex-relations; The influence of heredity; The young man and the young woman; The effect of custom: The sex relation personal; Innocence and ignorance; Marriage with independence; The increasing difficulty of marriage; Supporting one's family; Virtue and vice; The results of repression; The harm that women do; The development of love; The hope for the future; The martyr and the pioneer; The dropping of the bars; The meaning of the new woman; Motherhood in education; A criminal failure; Marriage and the family; Love's young dream; The heart and the stomach; Socializing the household industries; The stomach as a family tie; The servant wife; World-servants and house-servants; A wider maternity; Between the old and the new; "The vices of the slave;" The outgrown stronghold. Printed on strong, heavy paper; 350 pages, bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale by M. Harman, 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

CULTIVATION OF PERSONAL MAGNETISM.

A TREATISE ON HUMAN CULTURE. BY LEROY BERRIER.

This treatise reverses the common belief that Personal Magnetism, Life Force and Mind Force can not be cultivated and acquired. It is a Complete Course of Instructions that will enable all who possess them to become powerfully magnetic. Price, $1. Postage, 5 cents.

Sent on receipt of price. Address Moses Harman, 507 Carroll Ave Chicago, Ill.

OURWORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES.

By E. C. WALKER.

No man is wise enough to foresee the secondary results of any proposed restriction, and no history is copious enough to record the evils that have ensued upon denials of liberty.—George E. Macdonald.

CONTENTS:

Love and the Law,	3
The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal,	12
The Continuity of Race-Life; and Tyranny,	16
Food and Sex Fallacies, a criticism,	17
When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varietists,	26
The New Woman: what is she? what will she be?	31
The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes,	44
Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce,	45
Love: Its Attraction and Expression,	51
Is She an Honest Girl?	53
Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts,	54
Social Radicals and Parentage,	57
Anthropology and Monogamy,	59
Love and Trust Versus Fear,	62
Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life."	61

Price 15 cents. For sale at this office.

The Sanctity of Marriage. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint' A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work, Price reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents, for sale at this office.

A FEW GOOD BOOKS FOR YOU.

Love, Marriage and Divorce. A discussion between Horace Greeley, Stephen Pearl Andrews and Henry James.	$0 35
The Rights of Women and the Sexual Relations. By Karl Heinzen. In cloth, $1; paper covers,	.50
The Sexual Enslavement of Women. By E. C. Walker.	.05
The Woman Who Did. A Novel. By Grant Allen.	1 00
The British Barbarians. A Novel. By Grant Allen.	1 00
The Red Heart in a White World. An Outline of Principles and a Plan of Organization. By J. Wm. Lloyd.	10
Wind Harp Songs. By J. Wm. Lloyd.	1 00
The Revival of Puritanism. By E. C. Walker.	05
Bible Temperance. Showing that the Bible encourages the use of intoxicants. By E. C. Walker.	.10
Woman, Church, and State. By Matilda Joslyn Gage.	2 00
Church Property. Should it be Taxed?	.15
Prohibition and Self Government; Their Irreconcilable Antagonism. By E. C. Walker.	.05
When Love Is Liberty and Nature Law. By John Badcock, Jr. A remarkably clear, convincing work.	.10
Liberty. Political, Religious, Social and Moral. By A. F. Tindall.	.10
Diana. A Psycho-Physiological Essay on the Sexual Relations. Sixth edition. Revised and improved.	.25
Perfect Motherhood. By Lois Waisbrooker; cloth.	1.00
Helen Harlow's Vow. By Lois Waisbrooker; paper,	.25

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.
This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. E. B. Foote's time-tried hand-book, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.
"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.
"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.
Sample pages free Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Missing Link Modern Spiritualism. By A. Leah Underhill. A book for all spiritualists and investigators. "Hear all sides, then decide." 23 chapters; 478 pages; 16 illustrations, including portraits of the Fox family. History of the Hydesville rappings, as given by eye-witnesses, the threats or mob violence; remarkable and well-attested manifestations; the "exposures" disposed of, etc. Handsomely bound in cloth. Publishers price, $1.50. On receipt of $1.27, and 13 cents for postage, we will send the book to any address.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be FREE; must enjoy the full privilege of soliciting the love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrialy,"—Page 265. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CITYLESS AND COUNTRYLESS WORLD", by Henry Olerich. Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 4 0 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Free Love; A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of conubial love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 1875, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence 140 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave. Chicago

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races. hapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III., Co-operaton; Chapter IV Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, tects.

RBR
E
f1505
V.4, no.3
3rd ser.
1900/01

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. IV., No. 3. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, JAN. 27, E. M. 300. [C. E 1900.] WHOLE No. 798

The Man Without the Hoe.

An artist made a picture for all time,
A peasant, workworn, bending o'er his hoe,
Above, a gray discouraged sky, around
A sullen, barren moor. The painter's hint
A poet caught and his immortal verse
Exalts the theme. His clarion call awakes
The conscience of the world when he declares:
"There is no shape more terrible than this,"

Yet there are shapes whose protests are as deep
As are the stifled curses of this man—
Through which the stunted minds and hopeless souls
Look out upon the maddening maze of things.
The unemployed! the one who, chained without,
Like Tantalus, must view life's feast in vain
He sees that toil's reward is oftimes want,
That those who sow are not allowed to reap.
Then chooses he the highways for his home
Instead of slaving for another's gain;
Canopied by the boundless blue and cradled
Within the arms of night—companioned by
The wandering stars—can we condemn his choice?
What though he pilfer, beg, and lean upon
The latent generosity of all?
What though in drunkenness or crime he try
To drown those hopes the world will not allow?
Still is he victim! sinned against! oppressed!
And unto those who censure let us quote
The master's words "Judge not lest ye be judged"

Another man without the hoe is he
Whom birth has placed above necessity,
His life's force in perverted channels flows,
He stands at last with all his talents rust,
Unscarred by noble conflict and without
The laurel crown which wreathes the victor's brow.
Another is the man of high ideals
Who cannot catch the spirit of the age
And work with it. He, too, is doomed to stand
Apart, and view the rugged heights of thought
He had not strength to climb, or, having climbed,
Lacked power and mastery to stand upon.

More pitiful than these is she to whom
The hoe of honest purpose is denied.
"Such dainty fingers were not made for work,"
Men say; "On dew and sunshine should she feed"—
As household drudge those dainty fingers wear
And wrinkle, or, if in the world of men
They do a man's full part, they earn but half
Their dew and sunshine oftimes is the bread
Bought by the bitter sale of self and soul
Alas! that half the human race should be
A slave, a plaything, and a parasite!

Throughout the starry realm of boundless space
The myriad systems move in perfect time;
On earth, the miracle of life and growth
Answers that same majestic, deathless law;
Above, the panorama nature spreads,
Which whispers of immortal life—all, all
Exist in harmony and beauty. Man
Alone must err and suffer, strive and fail.
Is it the spark that stirs within the clod?
Does it portend what man has never guessed?
We do not know, and yet when art forsakes
The Elysian fields of beauty to portray
A weary peasant bending o'er his hoe—
Perhaps the universal conscience stirs
And shows us that, beneath its seeming sins,
Humanity's great wayward, better heart
Is pulsing in the rhythm of the right.

Perhaps it is the dawn of unity
And by its growing light the day will come
When wrong and anguish shall have disappeared
And all the moldering strings of earth's rude harp
Will swell into a major harmony
To match the music of the morning stars,
The seers of old have dreamed this dream, and in
Its most exalted moods the soul of man
Has thrilled a deep response—It must be so!

—Barton Pittman in "Inter Ocean."

The Quintessence of Harmanism.

BY R. B. KERR.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox reminds us that "the secret of success is concentration." Moses Harman, however, like most energetic men of genius, is apt to forget this truth, and, inssead of sticking pretty closely to the important theory for which he will be remembered by posterity, undertakes to correct all mistakes ever made in the world. As these corrections necessarily occupy a good deal of space, the important theory often gets crowded out of Lucifer for many issues at a time. I had read Lucifer for many months before I discovered the editor's main object in publishing it; so now, for the benefit of others who may be in same predicament, I shall try to explain what is really the principle of all the life works of Moses Harman.

Moses Harman was brought up in an age when all kinds of new reforms to make the world perfect were springing up. All however, had one characteristic in common; they were simply proposals to alter man's environment in some way. Some thought they would revolutionize the world by giving men more to eat, while others thought that the great thing was to give them less to drink. Many believed that if people had only a greater knowledge of reading, writing, and arithmetic, the millennium would not be far off. The vast majority in America and some other countries probably thought that little more was required than the universal adoption of the Republican form of government.

To Moses Harman, however, it occurred that the most unsatisfactory thing in the world was the human race itself. He reflected that the condition of society is entirely determined by the condition of the individuals that compose it. Perceiving that the world was bad, he justly inferred that the people in the world were bad. Accordingly, he concluded that the greatest of all reforms was to abolish the present human race and get a better one its place. But to accomplish this it was necessaryto use the present human race as parents of the future human race. How then was the transition to be brought about? Simply by contriving that only the best people should be parents In short, Moses Harman was the first great social reformer who saw that the greatest social problem is not the problem of environment, but the problem of heredity; and unfortunately he still remains almost the only one.

But how was he to manage that only the best people should have children? In order to solve this problem he doubtless ob-

X
Per g1937
3rd ser.
v.4
1900/01
no.3

served how the lower animals are bred. Taking first the case of domestic animals, he noted the fact that horses and cattle are reproduced by careful human selection, the worst females being rejected, and all but the very best males. By this method the breed of horses and cattle has been improved by leaps and bounds during many centuries, while the raw material of humanity has remained all but stationary in quality. This was evidently the method which would produce the best results in the shortest time, but it was open to one objection. To apply it to man was thoroughly impracticable.

Turning next to wild animals, Moses Harman probably considered first the method of reproduction among his own relations, the mammals. Among these the males usually fight for the exclusive possession of the female, the weaker males being either killed or deprived of feminine society. This is also an admirable method of promoting progress, but like the last it has become impracticable as applied to man.

Driven to despair by beasts, Moses Harman turned for consolation to birds. Observing the habits of these creatures, he found that the most advanced of them had arrived at almost exactly the same stage of progress as Shelley, John Stuart Mill, and other humane men of the nineteenth century. Instead of fighting each other for the exclusive possession of the female the males of the most civilized races of birds gather round the female and sing to her, and spread their feathers and strut about to show off their magnificence. The female then selects the one with the finest voice, or the most handsome clothes, and rejects the others. Thus from age to age the finest voices and feathers have been sexually selected, and the inferior rejected, until at length evolution has given us the song of the nightingale and the plumage of the bird of paradise. After the selection the parties usually form an exclusive alliance for the season, and sometimes for life, but it seems to be a case of free monogamy, no coercion being applied to the female.

"Eureka!" said Moses Harman: "I have found it." Having observed that women are very aristocratic and prefer the handsome, tall, resolute, able, and courageous, and sometimes even the good, to those who lack these qualities, he concluded that the best way to improve the species was to leave women absolutely free to select the fathers of their children without restrictions of any kind, and to try to improve on their choice as often as they please; justly assuming that what free sexual selection has done for the voice of the nightingale and the feathers of the bird of paradise, it may also do for the bodies, minds, wills and characters of the human race.

A Dean on Marriage and Divorce.

I have just been reading, with much interest, a "History of Marriage" by Herbert Mortimer Luckock, Dean of Lichfield. In this work the author gives the history from the Jewish and Christian standpoint, showing to the Christian world the evil tendencies of the times, and argues for the indissolubility of marriage and in favor of the legislation prohibiting marriage with a deceased wife's sister.

Our author approvingly quotes Tertullian:

"If man cannot separate by divorce those whom God hath joined, it is equally congruous that man may not conjoin by marriage those whom God has separated by death; the joining of the separation will be as contrary to God's will as the separation of the conjunction would have been."

What puppets we are! We are to believe that, no matter how great mistakes may be made in our marriages, God has joined us, and even death must bring no relief, for God has done the killing, and the remaining conjugal partner is in no sense released.

Of God's designs, with which our Dean is of course perfectly familiar, he says:

"It is almost impossible to study the opening pages of God's revealed Word without having the thought suggested that He designed the marriage bond to be indissoluble, save at least through the interposition of death. The first suggestion of it springs from what He said about His purpose in creating man; it was so to create him that he should reflect the image of his Maker: 'Let Us make man in Our Image, after Our Likeness.' Man would certainly have fallen short of the Divine resemblance, and that in a very important feature, had he been left in solitude, with no companion to hold communion with his intellectual and spiritual nature; and it would seem that God at once recognized this, for no sooner was man's creation completed than He said: 'It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him an help meet for him.'"

From which it would appear that in the Dean's opinion, God must have been married, and had a companion—or companions.

Our author summarizes the position of woman among the Hebrews—God's chosen people—as follows: L. H.

The inferiority thus established was exemplified in many ways. Men claimed, without any to dispute the right, to be free to sever the marriage bond and put away their wives on the slightest pretext; but under no conceivable circumstances was a woman permitted to take the initiative in divorce.

A betrothed wife was visited with the heaviest penalty for a breach of chastity,* but the husband transgressed, as often as he liked, with complete impunity. A woman's subjection to the ordeal of bitter waters was a further and forcible proof of her humiliating position.†

In the matter of property, too, she was placed at a disadvantage, for she could only inherit provided she had no brother;‡ and in the choice of a husband she was restricted within the limits of her tribe.‖ Even her covenants with God were not held sacred; for if she made a vow, "wherewith she bound her soul," it might be nullified at the will of her husband.]

The idea of woman's inferiority was kept constantly befor the Jewish mind by the daily prayer in which a man was taught to bless God because He had not made him a Gentile, a slave, or a woman.

But it is unnecessary to multiply illustrations; it is all gathered up into a single yet startling summary, in which the son of Sirah delivered his verdict in the expressive sentence: "Better is the baseness of man than a woman's goodness."††

It is only, the Jews say, when we recognize this distinction in the status of men and women that we can rightly understand the Levitical Code of Marriage. Parity of reason or analogy, he argues, are out of the question in interpreting its enactments; because it is forbidden for a man to marry his aunt, or a brother his brother's widow, it by no means follows that a niece may not marry her uncle,‡‡ or a sister her sister's widower. Indeed, the converse is deliberately rejected as wholly inapplicable, and for the following reason. A man is naturally bound to look down upon his wife and hold her in lesser honor and esteem from her inherent inferiority; but he is equally bound to look up to and respect his father and mother, and also his aunt, because she belongs to their generations.‖‖ To marry an aunt, therefore, would create a serious anomaly; for her claims on her husband's respect as one with his parents, and her recognized subjection as his wife, were quite incompatible. Such a contingency, therefore, was provided against by legal prohibition.

An uncle, however, is perfectly free to marry his niece, though the relationship may appear to be the same, because her posi-

---

*Deut. xxii. 21
*Numb. xxvii. 8
‖Ibid. xxx. 8
‡ Numb. v. 11-29.
‖ Ibid. xxxvi. 6-8
Taylor's Pirke Avoth. p 29.
††Ecclesiasticus xlii. 14

‡‡Nevertheless in the Kur'an, in whose enactments are largely based on the Jewish Code, the niece is specified in the category of those whom a man is not allowed to marry.—Sur. iv. 26.

‖‖This was strongly urged by one of the French Jurists, Emmery, who gave evidence before the Council of State in France against allowing marriage with an aunt in the Code Napoleon. He was of a Jewish family, and clung to his people's belief. "It was difficult," he said, "to reconcile the idea of the respect which was due to an aunt from her nephew with that which she ought to feel for him if he became her husband."

tion as his wife and her status as belonging to the generation below him, in no way clash with Jewish prejudices.

The same rule, it is asserted, applies though less obviously, to marriage with a brother's wife or a wife's sister. It is forbidden in the former case, because the woman by marrying his brother has become one with him, and is raised to his level; "Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy brother's wife; it is thy brothers nakedness." But the wife's sister has not been so raised; her inferiority remains, therefore a brother-in-law is free to marry her, if he will.

The Shadow on the Farm.

Ernest H. Crosby, in "Food, Home and Garden."

Over the quiet afternoon pasture where the cows are browsing with their leader at their head, each knowing the place to which her courage and character entitled her,—

Over the flock of sheep on the other side of the rough stone wall where the grey fleeces cluster thick to keep out the November north wind,—

Over the peaceful barnyard yonder where the calves are waiting for the tardy pail and the chickens are scratching for their supper,—

Over it all (as I gather nuts under the clump of hickory trees in the corner of the cow-pasture where the sluggish brook winds its way, and the sun's rays slant brightly through the trunks),

Over it all I see the dull, inevitable shadow of the butcher's knife.

All nature round me is beautiful and suggestive and full of interest.

The narrow path of the woodchuck in the grass leading to his back-door and looking almost as if it had been made by a single wheel,—

The whisp of hay still clinging to the stray apple-tree where the hay loads passed four months ago,—

The half torpid bees haunting the sunshine in the garden and kissing the chrysanthemums a last good bye,—

The great procession of cawing crows pursuing their regular avenue in the sky to the southwest, with bands of stragglers behind,

How full it all is of life and mystery and romance and solace!

But it cannot conceal the butcher's knife looming above the farm and every farm.

The black cow is lowing uneasily toward the barn-yard, and her calf, taken from her after a few hours of wonderful common life, answers in a high note.

The calves are sucking each other's ears for want of their dams and one of them has already one ear sucked to half the size of the other.

The pig-sty e, in enforced filth and idleness, the pigs will pass a wintry night in two inches of freezing slime, without a dry spot to lie on.

Visions of cattle trains, foodless and waterless, in frigid cold and torrid heat for weary days,—of cattle ships in storms, the maimed and dying thrown together,—of herds of steers benumbed and starving in the snows of the Northwest,—of huge abattoirs with hardened men and boys in bloody aprons and noble animals crazed with fright,—of little slaughter houses in the country with their heaps of offal and vile stenches polluting the meadows,—visions such as these hang over the farm.

Death is natural, I own, and without it this world would be cursed with life, but when it comes at the edge of the cold and sharpened steel, at the behest of man's perverted appetite and cruel will, and strikes the young and lusty and vigorous,—when death is made the chief end of life, and life becomes the handmaid of death, and nature is prostituted to the express manufacture of fattened corpses, then is death hideous indeed,—

And over all the autumn beauties of sight and scent and feel broods lowering the shadow of the needless butcher's knife.

PROSPECTUS

Of the Life History of Moses Harman.

I. Ancestry. Early Life and Struggles to get an Education

II. "Travels in Faith." From Methodism to Universalism and thence to Rationalism.

III. Experiences as a Heretic and Abolitionist in a Slave State—Religion, War and Politics.

IV. Experiences as Teacher, Preacher and Magistrate—or "Justice of the Peace."

V. Experiences in Journalism—A Ten Years' Fight in the Courts. Reflections on our Judiciary, State and Federal.

VI. Prison Experiences. A "Third Term." Letters from and to the Prisoner.

VII. Reflections on Prison Discipline. "Crimes Against Criminals."

VIII. The Movement for Freedom of Womanhood and Motherhood, and for the Right of Children to Be Born Well.

IX. Relation of this Movement to All Other Reform Movements.

X. Present outlook for this Movement. "Duty of the Hour."

This book will comprise about four hundred pages; printed in good paper, new and clear type and good binding, with portrait of the author and of his daughter and helper, Lillian Harman. Price one dollar. Life and health permitting, the book will be ready for delivery to subscribers on or before June first, next. Subscriptions solicited, so that we may know how large an edition to issue.

Note on Respectability.

BY R. B. KERR.

As the editor points out, his difference with me about respectability is only one of nomenclature. But it happens that nothing in the world is more important than nomenclature, and nothing can be made more misleading.

In all western towns the population tends to divide into two classes, the wide-open element and the respectable one. Municipal elections are often run on these lines. The one party favors nickel-in-the-slot machines, black jack games, and other things of the kind. It is supported by the saloon element, to which it brings custom; and largely by the ladies of easy virtue, and their parasites. The other party is supported by the tradesmen, because gambling often deprives the laborer of the power to pay his store bills; by the wives of the workmen, for whom a night of gambling often means a month of poverty; and by the religious organizations.

Now suppose that the editor of Lucifer appeared in a western town, and said that he had no use for respectability, and that he was the editor of a disreputable paper in Chicago. How many people would understand him? The report would go round that he was standing in with the saloon keepers, and that he was a great advocate of black jack. The women would at once set him down as an enemy, and would utterly scout the idea that he wanted to befriend their sex. The mere idea that a disreputable man could have any philanthropic aim would appear too absurd to be entertained.

What is the use of always trying to bamboozle good, simple minded people? Why spend nine-tenths of the time in creating verbal misunderstandings and then explaining them away? Why not stick to the language of the common people, and use it as the common people use it?

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Persons Rights Association of England. Also, four fine full page portraits of Ezra H. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound boards. Price, 20 cents. Address Moses Harman, 167 Carroll Ave., Chicago

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

PUBLISHED AT 507 CARROLL AVE., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Entered at the Chicago Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.
European Representative, William Duff, 9 Carfin St., Glasgow Scotland.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper in 1 has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months twenty-five cents

Why an Autobiography?

Most people like to read biography, and especially autobiography.

Why?

The answer seems to be, because we are all interested in the thing called life! More so than in all things else; and, naturally enough, more interested in human life than in the life of beasts and plants.

Except to a very small minority, life is interesting because we all want to live, and want to make the most of the life that falls to our share.

Autobiography is more interesting than biography because each individualized personality is supposed to know more about his or her own life than any one else can know; and could, if she or he would tell more than any one else can tell.

But just here trouble begins.

Will she tell? Will he tell all that she or he knows about herself or himself?

We are all such slaves, such miserably abject slaves, to Grundy—conventional morality—that the saying is doubtless a true one that no real life of a real human being has ever yet been written.

Or, if written and published, it has been speedily suppressed.

Or, if not suppressed, it has been tabood, ostracized, as something unclean, contaminating, demoralizing, as witness "Rousseau's Confessions," a book I have never yet read; because warned in youth that it was not fit to be read.

In every life-history there are episodes, escapades, that no biographer, and especially no autobiographer, cares to relate, honestly, or just as they occur, and yet in their effect upon the happiness or misery, the success or failure, of the individual most concerned, these suppressed or minified incidents have had a much more powerful and lasting influence than have other incidents that are told with realistic or magnified particularity.

The meaning of this preliminary is that to write a true autobiography is to set one's self up as a target to be shot at. "Every egotist is hated by every other egotist," saith the proverb. Every autobiographer is necessarily an egoist. He or she must talk of himself, or herself, and to do so is to invite criticism—ill-natured criticism,—and especially so, if the life of the autobiographer has not been lived in conformity to the conventional rules laid down by "respectable society"—so called.

Why, then do I write an autobiography? Why set myself up as a target? If my questioner will tell me why I live, I will tell why I purpose to write the story of my life.

So far as is known I live because I want to live! Because to live is easier for me than not to live. For a similar reason I purpose to write the story of my life. Because it is easier to do so than not to write it. Because I feel that the writing will give pleasure to my own personal ego, and will also give pleasure to the larger ego, of which I am an integral part—the race of human kind.

"Happiness is the only good." To do good and to get good is the only rational object of human actions; the only rational object or raison d'etre of human life.

Hammond, La., Jan., 16. MOSES HARMAN.

Fakes and Fakirs—The Outlook.

These two words fake and fakir, have come into general use quite recently. They seem to be closely allied to, if not derived from, the Latin root word fac, to make or do; from which also we get the very common words fact, factor, factory, manufacture, etc.

By the process called specialization the words fake and fakir are now used in a sinister, or bad sense, only. A fakir is one who deceives people; one who for selfish purposes uses tricks; uses occult forces or magic arts that none but the initiated can use or understand.

I have often thought the terms fake and fakir might justly be used to characterize the methods of many people who would be surprised and indignant to hear the words applied to themselves. But if I do not greatly err some of the most respectable and most highly honored members of modern society—in politics, in religion, in education, as examples and exponents of morality, etc., etc., are neither more nor less than fakirs—consciously or unconsciously—such; men and women who deceive and rob the people, the ignorant, the confiding, the stupid and gullible masses, to an extent vastly greater than it is possible for the professional juggler, the avowed magician or conjuror to do.

* * *

Take, for instance, the leaders, the honored "statesmen," of the great political parties, and the editors of the great political dailies. Are they not all fakirs?

And what is the whole machinery of government—of man by his fellow man—but one enormous fake?

A fake so gigantic, so far-reaching, so all-inclusive; a fake made so respectable by age and by high-sounding titles, that the gaping multitudes never think to examine what it is made of.

Or whether those who manipulate the machine are doing it for the welfare of the people at large, or only for their own personal advantage.

* * *

Is it not apparent to every one who honestly and fearlessly examines the matter that these political leaders deceive the masses of people as to the need of the vast army of office-holders, each with a salary many times larger than any man can earn by honest productive labor?

And is it not apparent to every real thinker that there would be little or no occassion for this army of office holders if it were not for the class laws that enable the few to rob the many of their equal opportunity to help themselves?

How many of us give more than a passing thought as to the amount of wealth taken from us, and the means by which we are robbed, by this greatest of all modern fakes, the United States general government?

How many of us take time to ask ourselves seriously what the tax-payers of this country have to show for the billion-dollars that each biennial congress costs them?

Let us say that of the seventy million people in the United States twenty millions are real tax-payers (a large estimate). This would mean that each biennial congress costs the tax payers fifty dollars each.

This is saying nothing of state, county and municipal taxes which probably equal in amount the national bill for government expenses.

But even this is not all, nor even half that we pay for the privilege of being governed.

After all the other items in the bill have been footed up, there still remains the uncounted and uncountable sums we pay to the protected barons of industry, the "chevaliers d'industrie," as the Frenchmen would say, namely, the men into whose pockets flow by far the larger share of the benefits accruing from "tariffs," sometimes also called "protective" tariffs.

The only really plausible excuse for these tariffs which mainly go to swell the unearned revenues of the privileged barons, is that given by Alexander Hamilton, the avowed aristocrat and monarchist, namely,

"The government should take care of the rich, and the rich can then take care of the poor."

The great art of governing people,—that is to say the great art of robbing people, is to do it so adroitly that the robbed cannot feel or see the hand of the robber. It is here that the governing fakir shows his skill. It is here he so far surpasses his brother, the professional conjurer, in dexterity that, to use a slang phrase, the latter is "not in it."

The hand of the governing fakir is forever in the pocket of the taxpayer, and yet the simple-minded victim knows it not.

The victim feels that something is wrong! He knows that, struggle as he will; get up early and work late; economize in all possible ways as he may, still the end of the year finds him, usually, deeper in debt than at the beginning.

Year by year, as the records of the fake machine tell him, fewer and still fewer families own their homesteads; and harder and harder becomes the payment of interest on the mortgage of those homes that still nominally belong to the occupants.

If the victim suspects that the bank director is in collusion with the political fakir, and that together they run the money machine for all it is worth, and regardless of cost to others, he is referred to the learned University doctors, the Professors of Economics in the University of Chicago, the North Western University, Vanderbilt, Yale, Princeton, Cornell, and other leading universities and from these doctors he gets the comforting assurance that our national banking system is "the best in the world."

He is told by them that if the United States would hold an honorable place among the nations of the world it must have a "sound currency."

That a sound currency means an "honest dollar."

That an honest dollar means "a hundred cents to the dollar."

That since 1873 in this country the only dollar that stands for a hundred cents is the gold dollar.

* * *

There is certainly nothing strange or wonderful in the fact the college professor learns to juggle with the two distinct values of gold, or of gold and silver—their commodity value and their currency or money value.

Outside the professor's chair the University doctor is the most helpless man, and the least practical we can well imagine, and hence he dreads losing his place, above all things else.

He knows that in the outside world he would be like a sailor cast adrift on a desert island. Who then can blame him when he meekly obeys his employers and becomes a fakir among fakirs as to "government and wealth."

Hear what Mr. Raymond, a member of the board of directors of the Chicago University, one of the richest educational institutions in the United States, has to say in regard to this matter. In the Chicago "Tribune" of September 8, 1897—as quoted by Geo. H. Shibley in the "Arena," January 1900, Mr. Raymond said:

"A professor is not a mere parrot to repeat and fairly explain to his students the diametrically opposite premises, arguments and conclusions of the writers of the ages upon any given subject. He must of necessity be an advocate; but his advocacy must be in harmony with the conclusions of the powers that be, with the animus and main purposes of the institution, and with the teachings of his co-laborers."

When it is remembered that the boards of directors of the universities are clothed by law with absolute power as to the employing and dismissing of professors therein, it is easily seen what this quoted paragraph means.

It means that no professor will be employed in that university to teach the "science of government and of wealth," who is not in harmony with the "powers that be."

It also means that if at any time such professor should so far forget his duty to his employers as to teach doctrines at "variance with the animus or main purpose of the institution," he must expect the penalty of dismissal.

The author of the article from which I quote, tells us that he "interviewed, or had interviewed, one or more members of the boards of directors of" ten of the leading American Universities, and that in "almost every instance the director either expressly agreed with Mr. Raymond, and therefore was against academic freedom, or he refused to tell his opinion—thereby impliedly agreeing to the principle of 'advocacy in harmony with the powers that be.'"

* * *

Under the working of the financial system whereby the majority of American colleges and universities are founded and supported, their directors are not to be blamed when they make such rules for the guidance of the professors, as that laid down by Mr. Raymond. The money that pays the salaries of the professors is usually raised from interest on "endowment" funds, and when we remember that from 1873 to 1896 the purchasing power of money was increased one hundred per cent, under the operation of the narrower base or standard of currency, we cannot expect a university director to refuse to accept the advance, or the appreciation in the purchasing power of the university's funds. Hence he favors the gold standard.

What is true of our educational institutions is true doubtless of all other institutions whose prosperity has money for their basis, such as church, schools and colleges; such as the common or free schools; also church organizations whose pastor wants his salary paid in dollars that mean "a hundred cents" each; our charitable institutions—hospitals, asylums, etc., etc.

To all of these influences and social forces must be added the government pensioners, the old soldiers, and all the friends of the old soldiers.

Also the employes of the Post Office department, and all who ever expect to be employes of that department, or of any other department of the national government service.

Also all whose income is derived from interest on notes, bonds, mortgages, etc.

Also all who now draw salaries under state governments; under county or municipal governments; and all the families and friends of such officials.

Also all who ever expect to hold office of any kind to which a fixed salary is attached.

All of the people, all the classes of people, mentioned in these paragraphs may be relied upon to forgive the inconsistencies, the apostacies of the Shermans, the Clevelands, the McKinleys and other great manipulators of our national fake machine under which and by which we now begin to know that "we the people"—all who pay the taxes and support the privileged classes—are robbed, systematically and scientifically robbed.

We all know that these leaders in political life at some t me in their career denounced the contraction of currency as a great crime; denounced the class laws by which the property of the privileged classes was to be appreciated and that of the masses depreciated; that is to say, these great political fakirs were the friends of the people while seeking office and power for themselves, but so soon as they found themselves numbered with the elect—"presto! change!!", as the street conjurer would say.

Now that their interests are with the privileged classes they find abundant reasons for changing their views in regard to the basis of currency and they confidently rely on the selfish interests of the classes just mentioned, the vast majority of the voting population, to re-elect them to their present position at the helm of state, and to make permanently successful their very clever fake—the change from a broader to a narrower basis of money!

* * *

THE OUTLOOK.

What, then, of the outlook?

We are now entering upon another presidential election year. Already we are told that the leaders of the two great political parties are marshaling their hosts—their dupes and victims, for another national "battle of the ballots."

Four years ago the currency question was the main issue. "Sixteen to one," and "free coinage of silver," was the banner cry of the "Silver Democrats" and Populists, while the Republicans and Cleveland Democrats championed "sound money," the "honest dollar,"—the dollar that was so honest that during twenty years of "contraction" it depreciated by half the wealth of the laboring classes,—the debt-paying, the tax-paying and salary-paying classes, and doubled the wealth of the salaried classes, the creditor classes, the tariff-profiting classes.

Well, the "sound money" fakirs won the last national battle of the ballots, as we all know; and if the present outlook is a correct augury they will win in the next national contest. In fact the question is no longer an open one, at least for many years to come.

For, are we not officially informed that a free silver president would find his hands tied by previous legislation and by the complexion of the United States senate, in such way that the national financial policy cannot be changed during the next four years?

This being the accepted situation it is announced that the friends of Mr. Bryan are in favor fo withdrawing the free silver plank from their platform, and making the fight on anti-imperialistic lines.

* * *

Again I ask, what then?

Is there no hope of financial salvation for the workers?

Is our bondage to the gold lords to be perpetual?

As I see it there is but one hope.

That hope is in two words,—

SELF HELP!

"Put not your trust in princes"—said one of old.

Put not your trust in political leaders, nor in political parties, nor in any kind of voting fake, say I.

Instead of looking to parties, or to government, for help I would say,

Organize your own financial system.

The "gods help those who help themselves," and they help none other.

Boycott, now and forever, as far as possible, the money fakirs and their fakes; their national and their international "sound money" fake; their prince of robbers, the aristocratic, the imperialistic god dollar!

Organize at once, in every town and township,

THE LABOR EXCHANGE!

Also in every state a Confederation of Exchanges, and in the United States, a National Labor Exchange, with the "labor check," the plebeian, the common-sense and inexpensive labor check, as the circulating medium

The system known as the Labor Exchange has already passed the experimental stage.

Its entire feasibility, its complete practicability, has been proved in a multitude of instances.

In some places, as I have been credibly informed, even the banks, the greatest of all enemies of self-help in finance, have been compelled, by the march of events, to handle the labor checks.

There is a way out of the Egypt of financial fakirdom, if only we have sense enough and courage enough to see it and to adopt it.

* * *

If the closing year of the now expiring century could witness the general adoption of the Labor Exchange, instead of the plutocratic, the time-dishonored financial system based upon gold, or gold and silver, it would be for mankind the greatest event, the most beneficent event of this century of wonders.

M. HARMAN.

Hammond, La., Jan. 20, E. M. 300.

Moses Harman will address the Spiritualist Society of New Orleans on Sunday evening, Jan. 28. Subject, "Why Have Reformers Failed to Reform the World?" He will probably make a short visit in New Orleans. His health is fairly good, and he thinks the southern climate has been of considerable benefit to him.

M. Florence Johnson will lecture and give Freethought dramatic readings in Cincinnati two Sundays in March. At Lima, Ohio, she will teach physical culture and elocution, and at Buffalo, N. Y. will give a popular dramatic entertainment. She will also be at Mechanicsburg, Ohio, and Rochester, N. Y. Persons living in the vicinity, or line of travel of these cities, who desire entertainment or instruction in Mrs. Johnson's line cannot do better than to engage her. She will also come further west if she obtains sufficient engagements. Address M. Florence Johnson, 17 W. 59 St., New York City.

LOIS WAISBROOKER has just published a small pamphlet entitled "The Temperance Polly, or Who's the Worst?" dedicated to the "Wrecks, and So-called Sinners of a False Civilization." This pamphlet shows a side of the so called temperance question that is wholly ignored by the average lecturer and writer on that subject. Her argument is clear and very convincing. It is an excellent missionary document. In it is shown that "all who sustain land monopoly, interest, rent and profits are not only driving men into the [saloon] business, but helping to prepare the victims, and thus are as bad as those they con demn, or worse." Send ten cents to the author, 1501½ Market St. San Francisco, Calif., for a copy of this thought stirring pamphlet, and for terms to agents. M. H.

The first number of the Light Bearer Library (new series) will be issued this week. It will contain "The Evolution of the Family," an address delivered before the Chicago Society of Anthropology Dec. 24, 1899 by Jonathan Mayo Crane. This address was said by many members of the society to be the most interesting ever delivered at any of its meetings. It is a comprehensive condensation of the history of the social instinct in living organism compiled from the writings of the most famous biologists ethnographers and sociologists. It shows that marriage is a phase of evolution which exists in the lower animals as well as in man, although man alone seeks to regulate it by state and ecclesiastical authority.

The first number of the Library will contain about forty-eight pages, each page three and one half inches wide and five and one half inches long. This makes a pamphlet which can be easily carried in the pocket and can be sent by mail in an ordinary envelope.

It is our intention to make each number of "The Light Bearer Library" a missionary pamphlet which should be widely circulated among those persons who have given little attention to the necessity for reform in prevalent notions of sex relaitons. Each issue will be a strong champion of the rights of woman to ownership of her person. The library will be issued monthly. Our aim is to distribute it at the bare cost of publication. The subscription price for a single number each month is fifty cents a year; three copies of each issue for $1 a year; twelve for $3 a year; twenty copies $5 a year.

Twelve numbers of the Light Bearer Library will be sent to those who mail twenty-five cents to us before Feb. 1. After that date, the price will be fifty cents a year.

Our Governor of Guam.

Hail, the Governor of Guam!
Calls his people round to view 'em,
Reads a proclamation to 'em,
Says they must keep hens and shoo 'em,
Tells the girls the men must woo 'em,
If they don't they'll have to sue 'em,
To the wedded rite he'll glue 'em,
As for laws they must not pooh 'em,
If they've coops they mustn't hew 'em,
Otherwise he'll have to do 'em—
In the pail he'll likely stew 'em,
Talks as if he really knew 'em,
Does our Governor of Guam!

—Cleveland "Plaindealer."

VARIOUS VOICES.

L. A., Newbury, Mass.,—I shall be glad to take one copy of the "Life of Moses Harman," when published. I am quite interested in the case of Roberts and wonder it does not stir up the question more. Perhaps it will make more noise later. It seems like a test. You doubtless noticed how in the old Bay State, we are nothing if not respectable. What would you think of the children of the Quakers persecuting Puritans? I am glad I have not a drop of Mayflower blood in me.

Robt. Mitchell, Guelph, Ont.:—I am glad to see that the Lucifer Library is to be continued and I send herewith a silver quarter dollar which I hope you will receive before the first of February. I hope soon to receive "Variety and Monogamy" by Mr. Walker and "Ruled by the Tomb" by Mr. Northcote and the others as they are issued. The enclosed coin has the four words 'In God we trust" in capitals on one side of it; but what god is meant, or who is meant by "we?" They are not in a very conspicious place but rather the opposite. I suppose the "we" means the people of the United States so that it cannot refer to me.

Albina L. Washburn, Ft. Collins, Colo.:—I see by a dispatch in the Denver "Post" from some place in Michigan, that a "wealthy farmer" and his wife, advanced in years and childless, engaged a child of a mutual friend—this child to be fathered by the aforesaid farmer. A lawyer was engaged and contract drawn so that all should be legal, but Dame Grundy interfered and the court appointed an $800 guardian, for the prospective child "lest it become a public charge." They were forgiven, as it seems they had not "realized the gravity of their offense"—told to go their separate ways and (supposedly) to "sin no more." How far the $800 will go toward mollifying Dame Grundy or healing the wound to society's virtue deponent sayeth not.

Martin N., Laurium, Mich.:—Enclosed find a dollar to pay the subscription of Mrs. L. L., Mich., who, as I see in "Various Voices" in No. 795 of Lucifer wants you to stop sending her the paper on account of her inability to pay for it. It does me good to learn that persons of even so advanced age, (she says she is seventy-one years old) hold radical views; that is, I mean, so radical minded as to be readers of so revolutionary a paper as Lucifer. I wish her health and happiness for many years to come, and I will promise to pay her subscription for Lucifer if she will only keep right on living and if she reads and enjoys its reading, as long as she stays here on this planet. I will send you money later on for the "Life of Moses Harman." I thought it would be better, to use the dollar in this way this time.

J. Scott, Franklin, Ill.:—I enclose a circular of a little farm paper I have taken for years. It is about the size of Lucifer only has a great deal more advertising in it. I think it would be of great advantage to your paper to adopt some of his plans in regard to long time subscriptions. As you well know I have taken Lucifer the past ten years and always tried to pay in advance, but fall behind occasionally because of trouble in sending in subscription. If you could make a cheap long time term of two, three and five year's subscriptions you would save your patrons expense as well as yourselves. I would like to have your father's book and hope the journey south may prove beneficial to his health.

[Possibly others of our subscribers would like to subscribe for Lucifer at a long term rate. We will send Lucifer for three years for $2.25; five years, for $3. This will save our subscribers the trouble of remitting and some money, and will save us the time and expense of sending out so many statements.]

L. R., Colo.:—Last summer I wrote asking you about your prices on "Hilda's Home" and received your very kind reply. I intended to send for some books but something happened to prevent me. I have read several times the circulars you sent me, on "Karezza," and it is just the book I want. Also that of "Tokology." I am only a young girl but I have experienced a good deal more than most girls of my age. My dear mother is very broad minded and liberal, but she was quite old when I was born and has not kept up with the times. She does not understand the young people of today. She was brought up in a country where all the young people were "models." I was brought up in the city and have mingled with all kinds of people. I am the only child and so am very much alone.

I often wish I had some one that I could talk to as I want, some one to understand and sympathize with me. If I had the talent to write, I could tell some heart rending stories. The man I loved and still love I found not worthy, at least not up to my standard. I am free now and will not tie myself to one who wants to rule me and who does not regard sexual relations as sacred. I have been engaged to three young men and I find them all alike in one respect. At times they are more like beasts than men and then are brutal. I believe there are good, noble-minded men but the majority are not.

My one hope of future happiness is of the time when I will have children. I love them better than anything on earth and I am going to do all I can to mould them perfectly. This is the main reason I want to read the books by Alice Stockham. I have read a great many books on these subjects but have never talked upon them and it does me good to write a little although it may not be interesting to you.

798.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

---

WOMEN and ECONOMICS,

A Study of the Economic Relation Between Men and Women. By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Here are a few of the page headings of this remarkable work "Economic environment; The dependence of women; No inherent disability of sex; Marriage not a partnership; House service as a livehood; Motherhood and economic production Modification to maternity; The usefulness of sex; Differentiation of sex; Sex and humanity; The peacock's tail; Sex distinctions; The eternal feminine; unreasoning devotion; Women as persons; Race-attributes and sex-attribute; The normal child; Personal profit and sex-relations; The influence of heredity; The young man and the young woman; The effect of custom: The sex relation personal; Innocence and ignorance; Marriage with independence; The increasing difficulty of marriage; Supporting one's family; Virtue and vice; The results of repression; The harm that women do; The development of love; The hope for the future; The martyr and the pioneer; The dropping of the bars; The meaning of the new woman; Motherhood in education; A criminal failure; Marriage and the family; Love's young dream; The heart and the stomach; Socializing the household industries; The stomach as a family tie; The servant wife; World-servants and house-servants; A wider maternity; Between the old and the new; "The vices of the slave;" The outgrown stronghold. Printed on strong, heavy paper; 350 pages, bound in cloth. Price, $1.50. For sale by M. Harman, 507 Carroll ave., Chicago.

CULTIVATION OF PERSONAL MAGNETISM.

A TREATISE ON HUMAN CULTURE. BY LEROY BERRIER.

This treatise reverses the common belief that Personal Magnetism, Life Force and Mind Force can not be cultivated and acquired. It is a Complete Course of Instructions that will enable all who possess them, to become powerfully magnetic. Price, $1. Postage, 5 cents.

Sent on receipt of price. Address Moses Harman, 507 Carroll Ave Chicago, Ill.

OURWORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES.

By E. C. WALKER.

No man is wise enough to foresee the secondary results of any proposed restriction, and no history is copious enough to record the evils that have ensued upon denials of liberty.—George E. Macdonald.

CONTENTS:

Love and the Law,	3
The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal,	12
The Continuity of Race-Life; and Tyranny,	16
Food an d Sex Fallacies, a criticism,	17
When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varietists,	26
The New Woman: what is she? what will she be?	31
The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes,	44
Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce,	45
Love: Its Attraction and Expression,	51
Is She an Honest Girl?	53
Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts,	54
Social Radicals and Parentage,	57
Anthropology and Monogamy,	59
Love and Trust Versus Fear,	60
Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life."	61

Price 15 cents. For sale at this office.

A FEW GOOD BOOKS FOR YOU.

Love, Marriage and Divorce. A discussion between Horace Greeley, Stephen Pearl Andrews and Henry James.	$0 85
The Rights of Women and the Sexual Relations. By Karl Heinzen. In cloth, $1; paper covers,	.50
The Sexual Enslavement of Women. By E. C. Walker.	.05
The Woman Who Did. A Novel. By Grant Allen.	1 00
The British Barbarians. A Novel. By Grant Allen.	1 00
The Red Heart in a White World. An Outline of Principles and a Plan of Organization. By J. Wm. Lloyd,	10
Wind Harp Songs. By J. Wm. Lloyd,	1 00
The Revival of Puritanism. By E. C. Walker,	05
Bible Temperance. Showing that the Bible encourages the use of intoxicants. By E. C. Walker,	.10
Woman, Church, and State. By Matilda Joslyn Gage,	2 00
Church Property. Should it be Taxed?	.15
Prohibition and Self Government; Their Irreconcilable Antagonism. By E. C. Walker.	.05
When Love Is Liberty and Nature Law. By John Badcock, Jr. A remarkably clear, convincing work.	.10
Liberty. Political, Religious, Social and Moral. By A. F. Tindall.	.10
Diana. A Psycho-Physiological Essay on the Sexual Relations. Sixth edition. Revised and improved.	.25
Perfect Motherhood. By Lois Walsbrooker; cloth,	1.00
Helen Harlow's Vow. By Lois Walsbrooker; paper,	.25

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE.

A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer.

This book is up-to-date in every particular.
It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills.
It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies.
It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs.
It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods.
It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure.
It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell.
It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases.
It has 16 colored plates, showing different parts of the human body.
The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women.
The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read.
It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines.
It contains valuable information for the married.
This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address for $2.50. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Health Hints and ready recipes. Dr. E. B. Foote's time-tried handbook, comprising information of the utmost importance to everybody, concerning their daily habits, together with many useful suggestions for the management of various diseases; recipes for relief of common ailments, including some of the private formula of Dr. Foote, and directions for preparation of delicacies for invalids as pursued in the best hospitals of this country and Europe. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity.

"Union Signal": Thousands of women have blessed Dr. Stockham for Tokology, thousands of men and women will bless her for Karezza.

"Arena": Karezza is worth its weight in gold.

Sample pages free Prepaid $1.00. Address this office

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 172 pages. Price 25 cents.

Religion and Rationalism The relation of each to human liberty The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. Price 5 cents. For sale at this office.

The Missing Link Modern Spiritualism. By A. Leah Underhill. A book for all spiritualists and investigators. "Hear all sides, then decide." 23 chapters; 478 pages; 16 illustrations, including portraits of the Fox family. History of the Hydesville rappings, as given by eye-witnesses, the threats or mob violence; remarkable and well-attested manifestations; the "exposures" disposed of, etc. Handsomely bound in cloth. Publishers price, $1 50. On receipt of $1.27, and 13 cents for postage, we will send the book to any address.

"A WOMAN, in order to live the purest life, must be FREE; must enjoy the full privilege of soliciting the love of any man, or of none, if she so desires. She must be free and independent, socially, industrialy."—Page 265. This is only one specimen of the many radical and vitally important truths contained in "A CITYLESS AND COUNTRYLESS WORLD", by Henry Olerich Bound in red silk, with gold lettering on side and back; nearly 4 0 pages. Read it and you will see the defects of paternalism as set forth by Bellamy and others. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Free Love; A philosophical demonstration of the non-exclusive nature of connubial love; also a review of the exclusive feature of the Fowlers, Adin Ballou, H. C. Wright and Andrew Jackson Davis on marriage. By Austin Kent. Published in 1871, and "O. P." for years. Only a few copies now in existence 140 pages, four by six inches. Neatly printed. Price 50 cents. Address M. Harman, 507 Carroll Ave. Chicago

---

HUMAN RIGHTS: By J. Madison Hook. With an introduction by E. C Walker. "Liberty is the guiding star of all lands, all races. hapter I., Rights; Chapter II., Invasion; Chapter III., Co-operaton; ChapterIV Individualism; Chapter V., Liberty. Price, tects.

RBR
E
f#808
v.4, no.4
3rd ser.
1900/01

Price 2 cents

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. IV., NO. 4. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, FEB. 3. E. M. 300. [C. E 1900.] WHOLE NO. 799

The Absent-Minded Beggars.

When you've killed your fellow "Christians" till but few are left to kill,
Or have compromised this quarrel in your fear,
Shall you shout that "God is love" again, and praise his name, until
You have a chance to fight another year?
You are absent-minded beggars and your weaknesses are great;
But we and God must take you as we find you,
You, Boers and English, killing there—your prayers should set things straight!
Don't you think you've left the Christian faith behind you?

Baptists, Lutherans, faithful sons of the Church,
(Two hundred thousand horse and foot eager to smite and slay!)
All of you doing the Devil's tasks. "We must get out of the lurch."
It's before the war and after the war that you pray! pray! pray!

Is Jesus clear forgotten now, with "Turn the other cheek?"
Your enemies you love with Maxim blaze.
Forgiveness of all injuries with Lyddite shells you speak,
And the Dum Dum "Good for Evil" swift repays.
"Resist not Evil," Jesus said; but where is Jesus now?
Oh! absent-minded beggars we must find you.
You've ceased to pray. You'll bribe your God; you'll square him some way! How?
Is it true, you've left the Christian faith behind you?

Methodists, Catholics, Congregationalists,
(Two hundred thousand horse and foot eager to smite and slay!)
All of you killing instead of loving, eager to enter the lists;
It's when there isn't a chance to fight, that you pray! pray! pray!

You're breaking that commandment, which declares "Thou shalt not kill;"
But God would better wink at this awhile,
If he only will be patient till your hate has had its fill,
You'll repent and pray for pity till he smile.
You are absent-minded beggars; this, God should understand,
He and we are forced to take you as we find you,
You'll trust in him and praise him when this work is out of hand:
But now you've left all thoughts of God behind you.

"Christians, Saved of God," Christ's Anointed Ones,
(Two hundred thousand horse and foot eager to smite and slay!)
To "trust in God" is all right in peace, but now you trust in your guns.
Boers and Britons choose their time to pray! pray! pray!

—W. F. Barnard in Truth-Seeker, London.

The Matriarchate, or Mother-Rule.

It seems somewhat remarkable that a social institution which attained so wide prevalence as the matriarchate, or Mother-rule, should have escaped the observation of almost every other ethnologist until the latter half of the century now closing. When Prof. Bachofen of Basel published his book, "Das Mutterrecht," in 1861, it was a practical revelation. But the facts he cited in support of his contention that descent was in primitive times reckoned through the mother exclusively, could not be disputed. Since his book was published many other ethnographers have investigated the matter and have proved not only that the mother-family was generally prevalent in primitive times, but that it even exists today among some tribes Elie Reclus, in "Primitive Folk," says:

Since the memorable works of Bachofen and MacLennan have opened new horizons to social science it is know that mankind has emerged from its primal promiscuity under the influence, not of the paternal, but of the maternal family. For a long while paternity was ignored, for a long while the part of the man in the function of generation passed as of secondary importance or as impossible to determine. It was under the influence of the tangible fact of maternity that the notions of race, of family, of division and inheritance were elaborated and developed.

In the beginning all the women belonged to all the males of a tribe without distinction. Impossible to distinguish otherwise than by the mother amongst children who had no other father than the whole of the warriors, whence the maternal clans which so long existed without a rival. They are still in existence amongst most savage or semi-barbarous peoples: they were the rule amongst the ancient Etruscans, Campanians, Athenians, Argives, Arcadians, Pelagians, Lycians, and Carians, not to mention others. In the thirty-third year of Ptolemy Philadelphus, metronymy was still the law of Egypt; parties to a suit appeared in public documents as the sons of their mother, the father's name not being mentioned. The newly married man even dropped his own name to take that of his wife,* gave up to her all he possessed to provide for her future family, and reserving nothing for his own private use, only asked to be supported until the end of his days, and then suitably interred.

As is the family, so is property. When property assumed form and consistence, its transmission was arranged for the benefit of the maternal lineage. "Matrimony" preceded "patrimony." Needless to recount the "custom of Bareges," or that of the ancient Iberians. Let us confine ourselves to British India

"The Nicobarians prefer to have daughters rather than sons It is not for the man to choose his companion and lead her to his hut, but for the woman to take a mate and bring him home with her. Parents who have only sons spend a dreary old age. Their boys leave them one by one, and they end their days in solitude; those who are fortunate enough to have daughters become the center of growing families."†

"Amongst the Khassias of the Garro Mountains, possessions pass from mother to daughter. The woman, directress of the community, superintends her property and her own household; she chooses a husband at her pleasure, and thinks little of divorcing him. It is true that the women work more than the men; it is they who carry travelers across the country in great panniers."‡

"The Pani Kotches" (neighbors of the above) "give a privileged position to women, a position due to their greater activity and intelligence. It is their business to dig the soil, to sow and plant, as well as to spin, weave and brew the beer: they refuse no task, and leave only the coarsest labor to men. The mother of the family marries her offspring at an early age; at the feast of betrothal she dispenses half as much again to the bride as to the bridegroom elect. As for the grown-up girls and the widows, they know very well how to find husbands; the wealthy never lack partners. The chosen one goes to reside with

*Revillion, Papyrus demotiques,
†Vogel, Vom indischen Ocean bis zum Goldlande.
‡Steel, Journal of the Ethnological Society, vii. Campbell,

For
gl 937
2nd ser.
v.4
1900/01
no.4

his mother-in-law, who both reigns and governs, with her daughter for prime minister. If the consort permits himself to incur expenses without special authorisation, he must meet them as best he can. Fathers of families have been known to be sold as slaves, the wife refusing to pay the penalties they had incurred. Under these circumstances it was lawful for her to marry again."[1]

No people have more fully appreciated the maternal family nor developed it more logically than the Nairs, despite the accumulated obstacles thrown in its way by a race admirably intelligent, and moreover victorious.

Emma Hamilton.

BY C. L. JAMES.

The life of an unconventional woman has scarcely ever been written in that spirit of sympathy which is necessary to penetrate its true significance. As, in the case of Aspasia, appreciative study must contend with profusion of absurd fiction and paucity of authentic fact; so, in that of Lady Hamiliton, it is embarrassed by conflicting criticisms or statements which Philistine authors, unable to harmonize them, have preferred to dispute. Her birth was so obscure that we need not wonder at the dates' varying by a year: but it occurred in 1763 or 1764. Her extraordinary talent turned to account the most inauspicious circumstances. She was first a nursemaid and servant-of one sort or other in several families. From this humble employment she extracted that proficiency in domestic arts which is so often represented as a woman's happiest qualification; and in her case, as we shall see, it actually served a very important purpose. Among her employers was a fashionable lady who awoke in her the consciousness of possesing rare abilities. She was a sweet singer; she learned to play exquisitely on the harp, an instrument more used then than the piano, which was at a very defective stage of evolution; she possessed in a high degree the gifts of an actress, and especially excelled in posing. Such merits pointed towards a theatrical career, in which an unfortunate turn for dissipation might have done her no great harm, but money was doubtless necessary to carry her through the educational stage, and a patron was not immediately forthcoming. Instead of a professional actress she became a sort of "waiter girl" at a tavern frequented by actors, whence higher remuneration drew her to attitudinize as a nude Hygeia in the then famous quack institute called Graham's Temple. She next appears as mistress to a man of some rank, Sir Harry Featherstonehaugh, and afterwards to Sir Charles Greville, nephew of the famous Hamilton whose wife she was afterwards.

It is at this period of her life (1783) that she became acquainted with the great portrait painter Romney, who besides preserving her natural appearance has introduced her into his works no less than twenty-three times, as Magdalene, Joan of Arc, Circe, a Bacchante, Cassandra, etc. He proclaimed her the inspirer of what was most beautiful in his art. To the day of his death, in 1802, she was always, for him, "the divine lady." This is easily explained by the mere power of physical beauty which we see in Romney's pictures. But that is not enough to explain her conquest of a man like Sir William Hamilton, from 1764 to 1800, British embassador at Naples. He was no Bohemian artist like Romney, but a staid widower of fifty-four and an old politician, owing advancement to his connection with that model of Tory respectability, King George III, whose foster brother he is said to have been.

